Directly a column of flame shot upward, first in fine quivering flashes, then in long, curling wreaths of fire, that the wind seized upon and tore into hot red tatters, laughing and wrangling among them with fearful grotesqueness.

North retreated from the blaze and ran back into the woods, hiding himself, for he feared to be seen from the tavern below. But now and then he would start forth, toss a handful of fuel on the flames, and plunge back into the darkness, where he listened greedily for some token to come out of the storm and prove that his work was well done.

It came at last—a gun booming out from the tempest. The man started and began to tremble. Still he listened. Another gun, with loud cries cutting sharply through the storm, and a tumult upon the shore, as if men were gathering in haste.

North was not surprised at this. When a vessel struck in those days on the Long Island shore wreckers appeared in dozens, not eager for death, for they would rather have avoided that, but keen for plunder. Now the cries of these men made the storm terrible. Blue lights from the stricken ship revealed her struggling fiercely among the breakers, which were rending her like wild beasts.

Then North trampled out his deathfire and went down to the beach, among the crowd of wreckers that stood waiting, with horrid patience, for the ship to go to pieces and give its treasures into their greedy keeping. No boat could have lived among the breakers. They said this to North when he heard such terrible cries from the wreck and was seized with a sudden fit of relenting. He would have undone his work then had it been possible, for the last faint light that went up from the wreck revealed a woman, with outstretched arms and hair streaming, look on the storm, pleading so wildly for help that a fiend would have pitied her. It was this woman's life he had sought, but with the sight of her his heart failed.

But an evil deed once written in the eternal book of God cannot be recalled. While this man stood in dumb helplessness on the beach the ship sunk, and out of the whirlpool which it made that wretched woman was tossed back among the breakers, which seized upon her, fiercely hurled her to and fro against the rocks, then gave her over to a great inheaving wave, which left her in a drift of seaweed almost at her murderer's feet.

Daylight had broken on the wreck before it went down. Leaden and cold it fell over the corpse of that poor woman as it was borne up to the tavern, with the seaweed trailing with it and the wet garments clinging to the limbs like cerements. Two rude seamen carried her away, for North fled from the first sight of his work and plunged madly into the water, where many a poor wretch was buffetting with the waves. He called on the wreckers to help him, and dragged two or three helpless creatures to the beach, for he was ready to brave death in any way rather than look upon that cold form again.

They carried the lifeless woman up to the tavern and, careless of ceremony, laid her on the bed in North's room. Here they left her, with the salt seawater dripping in a heavy rain from her garments, soaking the bed and forming dreary rivulets along the uncarpeted floor.

Deep in the morning North came up from the beach pale and staggering from exhaustion. He went into his chamber and was about to cast himself on the bed, when, lo, that white face on the pillow met his gaze, ghastly and cold. The heavy dropping of the water struck upon his ear like the fall of leaden bullets. He stood paralysed and yet fascinated. A shudder worse than spray from the dripping coldness of his garments shook his form from limb to centre, and, turning away, he fled down the stairs again out upon the beach, and helped the wreckers to haul in their plunder till he fell utterly exhausted on the sands.

THE RETURNED LETTERS.

How she strives her grief to smother!
  Tears fall on the snowy page;
To a daughter writes the mother,
  Calls her home to cheer her age.
Weary then with looking—longing,
  Weeks and weeks pass sadly by;
All the past to mem'ry thronging—
  Hoping on, but—no reply.
Till at last there comes a letter:
  'Tis her own, she traces there—
Better she had died—far better—
  "Gone away and not known where."

From her home across the ocean,
  Blotted with repentant tears,
Writes the daughter her emotion—
  How she turns to earlier years;
Prays that Heaven may bless her mother,
  Tells her of her wedded joy,
How she left her for another—
  Sends the picture of her boy,
Then she waits to be forgiven,
  Till another year has fled;
Back her letter torn and riven,
  Comes—and on it written—"DEAD!"

The Floating Hat.

VICKSBURG had not been taken, because the Fourth of July had not arrived; but it was only a delay, a premeditated delay—a delay of a few hours, when but a few miles away from this Mississippi centre of warlike operations, just on the outskirts as it were, of the area of Grant's command, there was noticed a conflagration supposed to be from its particular locality, a plantation under the process of destruction by the incendiary rebel torch. The rebels were known to have been in force at no great distance and recently; they were known to have determined to make an exodus of niggers and an annihilation of plantation agents, and so it was supposed that the firebrand of their designs had been made lurid for destruction, and that the conflagration that now illumined the point of general observation, was the first bitter fruit of their vile purpose. It was rumored that one, two and three hundred dollars in Confederate pulp dried into the disguise of currency, were equivalent terms for child, woman and man, should their color be the same as the ace of spades, and should they be successfully run through—not with the bayonet or sabre—but the swamps, fields, roads and pathways that led to Dixie. The sable heroes of Milliken's Bend had built up a sort of Waterloo revenge in the hordes of lurking rebels; they wanted to do something with a clear eye to the main chance that would frighten the failing remnants of plantation hands; the fat and feeble, the young and old, with every soul that was under Federal protection, were to be made to skedaddle, either on their own account to the Father of Waters, or on the rebels' account towards the Land of Promise of Headmoney; it was planned that the Southern chattel was to play Moses, while the chief raider took the character of Pharoah. It was well planned, well timed and well executed. The buildings of one plantation were hardly at the fulness of their consuming strength, when from another issued the smokey evidence of its doom, and soon seven beacon lights of lawless destruction marked the passage of those dogs of war, which spared not in their fiery course aught but what they might more leisurely devour. As may be imagined, on the river the greatest activity prevailed. Gunboats belched forth their mortar loadings, steamers were improvised as places of refuge, the different station guards were turned out, marched and countermarched. Sutlers, commissaries and quartermasters thought of the "lost in action" item of Government account; the paymaster's iron safe was made safer aboard gunboat No. 6, and the unoffending but responsible master of the iron chest, with his clerk, were hurried inside the fort, a quadrangle of cotton bales, whence the two proceeded as soon as possible to a steamer, to be out of harm's way, in case of any attack upon the little garrison.

On arriving on board, the saloon was almost deserted, the interest of the moment was on deck in the medley of refugees; almost every interest connected with cotton culture, steamboat navigation and war was represented, yet but one interest moved the white—it was the issue. All eyes were directed to a hat and log of wood, evidently under human guidance. What could it be? The captain, already annoyed with his colored refugees, pronounced it "only a nigger!"

"Nigger, or no nigger," said a gentleman in the anxious group, "he shall be saved." "Not by me nor my boat," remarked the captain. While the captain was muttering his obnoxious vetoes, a practical interest in the safety of hat and log was awakened, a dash was made for the long boat, it was soon manned, and the great moment of "heaven approved" rescue arrived. The gentleman who had led the movement in opposition to the captain's wishes, had command of the long boat; the boat and the log ground their sides together, the hat was lifted by his friendly hand—he had saved his brother!

On the bosom of the Father of Waters, the two who had breakfasted in peace on their plantation in the morning, met in the afternoon, one as savior, the other as the saved. A blanket was thrown over the exhausted but heroic man, and soon, by the aid of restoratives and a warm bed, he was able to give his rescuers an outline of his story.

We will name the brothers George and John Minturn. When the rebels surrounded the plantation, and while engaged in securing as many negroes as possible, the two brothers managed to get away. George reached the steamboat in safety, and as we have seen, afterwards rescued his brother from a watery grave. John, who had been the financier of the plantation, had returned to secure some twelve thousand dollars, which he remembered, though safely out of discovery, might be consumed if the rebels set the house on fire. While John was securing his twelve thousand dollars, the rebels were closing in upon the homestead; the money was hardly buried and covered up out of reach of any possible fire, when he was so hemmed in that escape seemed impossible; he, however, noticed a rebel private without his musket, and making a dash at him with a revolver in his hand, found means to get outside the raiders, and had he not fired his revolver at the man and wounded him, he might have been allowed quietly to retire; as it was, he was pursued. Athletic, self-possessed and brave, John Minturn outran his pursuers; they tried a flank movement, but he changed his course; he knew every inch of the ground—they did not. Unexpectedly he was fired at with a double shot; two rebels had headed him. Fortunately the shots missed, and as he had four charges left in his revolver, he gave them in reply to his would be-assassins, with what effect he knew not; all he knew was they dropped the pursuit, and he reached the river's bank. Here he stripped off his clothes, hid them in the crumbling earth, concealed his watch and pistol in a hollow stick of wood, rolled a log into the water, and with only a hat on to avoid a sunstroke, committed his life to the running waters of the Mississippi. It was thus the ruined brothers met; and who shall describe the emotions of their reunited hearts? Alas! for human events. In one short week, John Minturn the saved, followed George Minturn the savior, to that bourne from whence no traveller returns. George Minturn laid low with malarious fever, resigned himself to death in the arms of his brother John, and was buried in Vicksburg, then in Federal possession.

THE RE-ENLISTMENT OF VETERANS.

FAITH! Financial tests at last convince the supporters of the rebellion here and in Europe of one great fact, that the people of the North have faith in the United States Government, and that the people of the Southern States have no faith in their Government, set up by a knot of disappointed politicians. The early enthusiasm of woman and lads has sunk, and behind we see the solid men, bearing the scourge, but refusing to trust it. Hence the difference—while Alabama troops are shooting down Kentuckians who refuse to re-enlist, the loyal army almost unanimously re-enlist, with that feeling of earnest men who have been so long in a great struggle that they wish to see the close, now so near at hand, that they may go home with satisfaction. There is no want of faith in the cause, the Government or success.

In some corps the regiments have enlisted almost all; in the 17th army corps for instance, 39 have already taken their stand as veterans. While giving artistically a view of this army enthusiasm, we call upon all to show an appreciation of the noble conduct of these men. They are returning among us successively for a short furlough. Let them not meet any cold or chilling reception. Let us welcome them as bravely as they fought.

STORY OF A LEGACY.

THE University Magazine contains an amusing "Digressive Essay on Wills," in which are related numerous examples of curious wills. The following is a specimen: "In the year 1796 the following strange circumstance occurred in connection with a will. Two gentlemen, who had been left executors to a friend, on examining the property found a scrap of paper on which was written, 'Seven hundred pounds in Till.' This they took in a literal sense, searched his office and all the other apartments carefully, but in vain. They sold his collection of books to a bookseller near the Mews, and paid the legacies in proportion to the sum realized. The singularity of the circumstance occasioned them frequently to converse about it; and at last it flashed across one of them that amongst the books sold, more than seven weeks before, there had been a folio edition of Tillotson's sermons. The probability of this being what was alluded to by the word 'Till' on the piece of paper made him immediately call upon the bookseller who had bought the books, and ask him if he had still the edition of Tillotson which had been included in his purchase On his reply in the affirmative, and the volumes being handed down, the gentleman immediately rebought and carried them home. On carefully examining the leaves, he found the banknotes singly disposed in various places to the amount of £700 But what is perhaps no less remarkable, the bookseller informed him that a gentleman at Cambridge, to whom he had sent one of his catalogues, finding he had this edition on sale, had written and desired it might be sent to him, which was accordingly done, and the parcel forwarded by carrier. The books not pleasing the gentleman, they were returned, and had remained on a shelf in the shop up to the period of this singular recovery."

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A POOR poet desiring a compliment, asked Curran—referring to his recently published poem of that name—"Have you read my Descent into Hell?" "No; I should like to see it," replied the wit.

A prosy member of Parliament having asked him, "Have you read my last speech?" he replied, "I hope I have."

Two old New England ministers were riding by a gallows, when the elder one asked the other: "Where would you be if that tree bore its proper fruit?"

"Riding alone, sir," was the immediate reply.

Two friends meeting, one remarked, "I have just met a man who told me I looked exactly like you."

"Tell me who it was, that I may knock him down," replied his friend.

"Don't trouble yourself," said he, "I did that myself at once"

THE celebrated David Crockett, on visiting a menagerie, was comparing the countenance of a monkey to that of one of his fellow-members of Congress. Turning, he saw the gentleman had overheard his remarks, so to make matters pleasant, he said, "I do not know which to apologize to, you or the monkey."

Two deacons were once disputing about the proposed site for a new graveyard, when the first remarked:

"I'll never be buried in that ground as long as I live."

"What an obstinate man!" said the second, "if my life is spared, I will."

JOSH BILLINGS says that a "man who will chaw turbacker will drink santy kruse rum, and a man that will drink santy kruse rum will go tu the devil, and a man who will go tu the devil is mean enuff tu do enny thing."

A. SUNNOVER GUNN says that there can never be much novelty in chickens for a chicken is a preconceived idea. Speaking of chickens, we heard the "Lay of the last minstrel" as he came to the market yesterday morning, the burden of his song was, "eggs are forty cents a dozen."

THINGS THAT ADAM NEVER KNEW.

Adam never knew what 'twas to be a boy,
  To wheedle pennies from a doating sire,
With which to barter for some pleasing toy,
  Or calm the rising of a strong desire—

To suck an orange. Nor did he
  E'er cast the shuttlecock to battledore,
Nor wear his trousers out at the knee,
  From playing marbles on the kitchen floor.

He never skated o'er the frozen rill,
  When winter's covering o'er the earth was spread;
Nor glided down the slippery hill,
  With pretty girls upon his sled.

He never swung upon his father's gate,
  Or slept in sunshine upon the cellar door,
Nor roasted chestnuts at the kitchen grate,
  Nor spun his humming-top upon the floor.

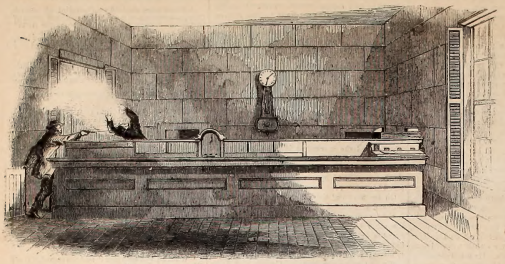
He ne'er amused himself with rows of bricks,
  To see if one fell, all the rest came down;
Nor gazed delighted at the funny tricks
  Of harlequin, or travelling circus clown.

By gradual growth he never reached the age
  When cruel cupid first invokes his art,
And stamps love's lesson page by page
  On the glowing tablets of a youngling's heart.

He never wandered forth on moonlight nights,
  With her he loved above all earthly things,
Nor tried to mount old Pindar's rocky heights,
  Because he fancied love had lent him wings.

He never tripped it o'er the ball-room floor,
  Where love and music intertwined their charms;
Nor wandered listless by the sandy shore,
  Debarred the pleasure of his lady's arms.

For Adam—so at least 'tis said,
  By many an old and modern sage—
Before a moment of his life had fled,
  Was fully thirty years of age.



A HANDSOME young gal in our town was sot up with one night by a noble young specimen of the true American, with scissors in his vest pocket—I mean drygoods clerk—and the young gal's mother hearin' sutnin' pop, arose from her couch under an impression that her oldest boy, who was given to friskyness, was holdin' a wild revel on the root beer in the west room. But on openin' the door she diskivered it was huggin' and kissin' which had awoken her from her peaceful repose. "My daughter! oh! my daughter!" this fond parient did cry, "oh! that I should live to see this doin's in my own house!" "I know, dear mother," this sweet village maiden unto her mamma quickly replied, "that it is quite unproper, but it is orful soothin!"

AUNT ROSY was dividing a mince pie among the boys, and when Jim, who had wickedly pulled the cat's tail, asked her for his share, the dame replied: "No, Jim, you are a wicked boy, and the Bible says there is no peace for the wicked."

CANON GOODALL was proverbially fond of punning. About the same time that he was made Provost of Eton he also received a stall at Windsor. A young lady of his acquaintance, while congratulating him on his elevation, and requesting him to give the young ladies of Eton and Windsor a ball during the vacation, happened to touch his wig with her fan, and caused the powder to fly about. Upon which the doctor exclaimed: "My dear, you see you can get the powder out of the canon, but not the ball."

IT is considered to be cool to take a man's hat with his name written in it, simply because you want to get his autograph.

A POISON RING.—The following story is going the rounds of the French papers: "A gentleman, who had two days ago purchased some objects of art at a shop in the Rue St. Honore, was engaged in examining an ancient ring, when he gave himself a scratch in the hand with a sharp part of it. He continued talking with the dealer for a short time, when he suddenly felt an indescribable sensation over his whole body, which appeared to paralyse all his faculties, and he soon became so seriously ill that it was considered necessary to send for a medical man. The doctor immediately discovered every symptom of poisoning by some mineral substance. He applied strong antidotes, and in a short time the gentleman was in a manner recovered. The ring in question having been examined by the medical man, who had long resided in Venice, was found to be what was formerly called a 'death-ring,' in use in Italy when acts of poisoning were frequent, about the 17th century. Attached to its inside were two claws of a lion, made of the sharpest steel, and having clefts in them filled with a virulent poison. In a crowded assembly, or in a hall, the wearer of this fatal ring, wishing to exercise revenge on any person, would take their hand, and when pressing it, the sharp claw would be sure to inflict a slight scratch on the skin. This was enough, for on the following morning the victim would be sure to be found dead. Notwithstanding the many years since which the poison on the ring had been placed there, it retained its strength sufficiently to cause great inconvenience to the gentleman, as stated."

THE MALDEN MURDER—MURDER OF CONVERSE BY GREEN IN THE BANK.—FROM A SKETCH BY W. T. CRANE.

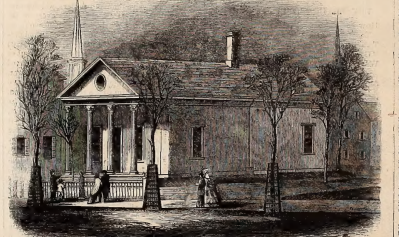
EDWARD W. GREEN, THE MALDEN MURDERER.—FROM A PHOT. BY CHUTE.

THE MALDEN MURDER.

THE murder of young Converse in December last was one of the most atrocious crimes in the annals of Massachusetts. The commission of such a crime in broad daylight, in a bank, was in itself a circumstance so strange as to give the occurrence a prominence in the minds of men; but the whole details, the arrest of the unsuspected murderer, the recovery of the money, all give it an uncommon interest.

On the 15th December last, Frank E. Converse, a young lad, was left alone in the Malden Bank, and was seen about 11 o'clock in the forenoon alive and well. Within three quarters of an hour he was found dying on the floor, and the money of the bank, some 5,000 dollars, was gone. According to evidence the murder was perpetrated at about half past 11 o'clock in the forenoon. The excitement caused by the deed was great. The respectability of the young man, his blameless life, his freedom from all suspicion of having enemies, and the certainty that money alone was the object of the murderer, only afforded and suggested perplexing doubts.

The directors of the bank upon discovering the murder at once notified Chief of Police Kurtz, of Boston, who immediately detailed Detectives Benjamin Heath and William K. Jones to take the matter in charge, and from that hour until the present, working in co-operation with the directors, and gentlemen of Malden, they have given their attention to the discovery of the murderer. The arrest of Mr. George T. Bailey at the instigation of the Count Joannes on the 2d of January is well remembered. Mr. Bailey was only one of nearly a dozen whose names had been whispered.



Suspicion at last fixed upon Green. The evidence was at first shadowy, consisting mainly of such facts that he did not attend the funeral of young Converse, and was debarred from conversation regarding the murder.

Then came the known fact that he had discharged some small pecuniary obligations with Malden Bank bills.

Slowly but surely the evidence accumulated. The possession of a pistol was traced to Green, the fact that he had had ammunition was also ascertained, and the fact that he was making purchases, which his limited income would scarcely allow, and paying for the same with bills, a portion of which were of the Malden Bank, was also certain.

Other circumstances came to add their weight, and he was finally arrested. Green was probably entirely unprepared for such a demonstration and denies the charge, but he subsequently expressed a wish to speak to Mr. Lamson, and went with him into his library, where Mr. L. demanded what he had done with the money. Finding it impossible to confront such evidence as he was told had been secured, he confessed he went into the bank twice on the morning of the murder, and was prevented from carrying out his intentions, first by a conductor bringing in a pair of skates, and the second time by the entrance of Mr. Stone. The third time was at half-past 11 o'clock, when he finally committed the deed of blood. Green stated that he went behind the counter, and shot young Converse in the back of the head. The boy fell on his back to the floor and looked up in the murderer's face. Green then fired the second shot, which penetrated the temple of the poor victim. He then secured the money and returned to the Post-Office, and did not return to the bank, stating, when subsequently asked, a reason for being absent, that it was business hours, though the excitement created by the discovery of the murder caused a general suspension of business. Green then offered to go and show where he had placed the money which he had stolen, but not used, and accompanied by Mr. Lamson, Detectives Heath and Jones, he went to the Post-Office, and there took from an old boot with Malden Bank bills, and then accompanying the party, went to the Volunteer Engine House, which is not frequented, and pointing to a ladder in the shed, had it placed where it led to the hose tower, and ascending it he reached between the flooring and the plastering and took packages containing $3,650, making in all recovered $4,000 of the $5,000 and odd dollars stolen. The pistol with which the deed was done he said was at his house, where it was found. He bought the pistol at Reed's, in Boston, and loaded it two days before the murder, and after the murder reloaded it. In the Tombs he confessed to being the incendiary who set fire to Dawe's Block, the building in which the Post-Office is located, last November, in hopes, it is supposed, of hiding his deficiencies to the Government by destroying all the records.

The record of this murder is full of warning to young men. It was the first deviation, years ago, slight though it may have been, which led him into the path that has brought him to a felon's cell. Year by year his moral sensibilities have become hardened by repeated, though comparatively petty, indiscretions, till he contemplated and attempted to commit the crime of destroying by fire proofs of his dishonesty, and failing in that he sought through the murder of his unoffending friend to gain that which would wipe away his debts, reminded of the damnable crime which has proved his ruin.

THE MALDEN MURDER—THE BANK.—FROM A SKETCH BY W. T. CRANE.

THE SANITARY FAIR AT BROOKLYN—THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, MONTAGUE STREET, WITH THE BRIDGE ACROSS TO THE NEW ENGLAND KITCHEN.

THE ENTHUSIASM OF THE NORTHERN ARMIES—RE-ENLISTMENT OF THE 17TH ARMY CORPS.

A TELEGRAPH TALE.

I THINK the most curious fact, taken altogether, that I ever heard of the electric telegraph was told me by the cashier of the Bucks'd England. You may have heard of it. It may have been in print; I am sure it deserves to be. Once upon a time, this, on a certain Saturday night, the folks at the Bank could see quite the balance come right by just £ 90. This is a serious matter in that establishment—I do not mean it cash, but the matches in the arithmetic—for in those ones a world of scrutiny. An error in balancing is a sum beyond human ken, to keep a delegation of sharps from each office at work sometimes through the whole night. A hue and cry was of course made of ere this £90, as if the old lady in Threadneedle street were at the mercy of the Gazette for want of it. Luckily, on the Sunday morning, search (in the minds of the strong) was over. If the truth were known, felt a sensation of the truth dart through his mind, quicker than the flash of the telegraph itself. He told the old cashier on Monday morning that perhaps the missing sum might be covered in the two boxes of specie for the West Indies, which had been sent to the Bank of Demerara. The suggestion was immediately acted upon. Here was a row: lighting, thunder, storm, and steam with daylight and fiery hours' start given. Instantly the wires asked "Whether such a vessel had left the harbor?" "Just weighing anchor!" was the answer. "Stop her!" thundered the telegraph. It did—to the telegraph. It was done. "Have an open deck cutaway boxes marked so-and-so; open to examine." They were weighed, and one—the delinquent—was found heavier by just one pound! A hundred several as than it ought to be. "Let her go!" said the mysterious telegraph. The West Indies sailed, and were decided with just £100 more, and the error was corrected without ever looking into the boxes or delaying the voyage an hour. How this is what may be called "doing business."

An Irish girl at play on Sunday was accosted by the priest: "Good morning, daughter of the devil," and meekly replied, "Good morning, father."

Literary Agent.

The subscriber will continue his Literary Agency in its object is to assist authors. Manuscripts are critically examined and candid opinion given. They are then, if approved, recommended to publishers. For this opinion, and for further advice, an additional fee is required. This should be remitted by mail or express, together with manuscripts, prepaid. Address

FARR BENJAMIN,
West 40th Street, N. Y.

The Color of your Eyes.

Language of Blue Eyes, Black Eyes, Brown Eyes, Hazel Eyes, Grey Eyes Green Eyes, Children's Eyes, and the Eyes of Married Persons.—Poetry of the Eyes—

The bright black eye, the melting blue,
I cannot choose between the two;
But that is always out of the whole,
Which wears for us the sweetest smile, and much else concerning the eyes, in the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for March, now ready, only 15 cents, or $1 a year. Address

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Economy, Durability & Convenience

The Star No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps, Patented Aug. 11, 1863. Gives a brilliant light, free from smoke or smell. It can be carried and handled freely without burning the fingers. The latest and acknowledged the best invention of the kind. Warranted as represented. Simple sent, postpaid, for 25 cents. Agents wanted.

PETER ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers, No. 2 Platt St., N. Y.

How to tell Fortunes by Cards.—Sent to any address for 10 cents. Address G. K. KNOWLTON, Hamilton, Mass. 438-41

Ten years in the Business.
Patrons counted by thousands in every State of the Union.
A Premium for all!
Evans' New Enterprise, 1864, $500 000 worth of New Goods,
consisting of
Gold and Silver Watches, Jewelry, Vest and Guard Chains, Gold Pens, Pencils, Lockets, Medallions, Sets of Jewelry, &c., &c., together with a large line of goods especially adapted to the wants of our Soldiers, Army and Navy, to be sold in lots at One Dollar Each,
and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive. Premium Orders for above goods, sent to any address, on receipt of 10 cents.
Send your orders to
G. G. EVANS, Publisher,
630 Chestnut Street,
Philadelphia, Pa.

N. B. A classified Catalogue of Books with Price Lists of Photograph Card Pictures and Albums, sent on receipt of 5 cents.

Address,
G. G. EVANS,
Philadelphia, Pa.

We are now offering our celebrated

GOLD PENS
AND EXTENSION
SILVER-PLATED
HOLDERS

At the following low prices for Cash:

No. 1, Magic Gold Pens and Holders per dozen	$ 3 50
No. 2, " " " "	7 00
No. 3, Albertine Fine Gold Pens and Holders	8 00
No. 4, " " " "	11 00
No. 5, Always Ready	11 00
No. 6, " " " "	33 00

The Pens and Holders are all Warranted and will retail from $2 to $5 each.

A deduction of 10 per cent. will be made on all sums of $20 and upwards. Our Pens and Holders have other Fancy Cases containing One Dozen each, and are not sold in less quantities. Sent by mail or express prepaid. Address

SALISBURY, BROS. & CO.
Providence, R. I.

NOW READY COMPLETE.

GROSSBEAK MANSION;
A Mystery of New York.

BY NED BUNTLINE.

ILLUSTRATIONS BY DARLEY.

Mailed free of postage on receipt of price.

FREDERIC A. BRADY, Publisher,
24 Ann Street, N. Y.

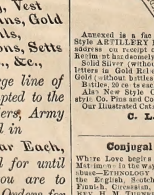
Musician's Omnibus No. 1.

700 pieces of Music, 40 sets of Quadrilles, 100 Dances with Calls, etc.

MUSICIAN'S OMNIBUS No. 2, 850 pieces of Music, 100 Dances, etc., for the Violin, Flute, Clarionet, Flageolet, Accordeon and Fife, each containing 822 pieces of Music, price 50 cents. U. S. Regulation Drum and Fife Book, 50 cents. How to Dance, Violin Duets, Accordeon Dance tune, Fife and Flute, without a master each, contains a very large collection of new and popular Music, 50 cents each. American Dancing Master, with calls and figures for 100 Dances, ancient and modern, 50 cents. Sent by mail, No. 203 Court Street, Boston.

ELIAS HOWE.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 42 Days." Warranted to Engage with ONGUENTS. The GREAT Hungarian Remedy. Sent by mail, free of observation, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1. Address C. HUNTER & Co., Hinsdale, N. H.



10 Card Photographs for $1.

Made of the best material and all different. Sent free by mail on receipt of price in U. S. Currency.
Address J. U. ROLLINS, Haverhill, Mass.
P. O. Box No. 670. 440-1

Whiskers in 42 Days or money refunded. My Ongunent will force them to grow heavily in Six Weeks on the smoothest face, without injury to the skin. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents a package or 3 for $1. Address

440 3 A. R. CHAPMAN, Springfield, Mass.

Artillery Badges.

Annexed is a fac simile design of our Newest Style ARTILLERY BADGES, sent free to any address on receipt of price with Name, Co. and Regiment neatly and elegantly Engraved thereon.

Solid Silver (without bats) $1. Solid Silver, Letters in Gold Relief (without bats) $2. Solid Gold (without bats) $3.

Bat-les, 50 cts to each extra.

Also New Style CAVALRY BADGE and every style Co. Pins and Corps Badges worn by the Army. Our Illustrated Circular sent free. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO.,
208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Conjugal Resemblances,

White Love begins and ends—Woman's Wages—Matrimony to the way—Money—Heaven, use and abuse—Etymology Skulls and national character of the English, Dutch, German, French, Belgian, Spanish, Caucasian, etc. The Colored Chrysalis—Key to H. M. Stanley—Phrenology as the index of character;—to the MARCH No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Ready, or by mail, 15 cts.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers, Something New. The Traveller's Companion; or, Burglar's Fool Proof Trunk & Lock. Samples sent by mail, 30 cents. Retail $5 cts. Send stamp for Circular.

439 4t S. W. RICE & CO., 81 Nassau St., N. Y.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pencils and Steel Pens. Address at once JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Me.

10,000 Agents Wanted

Both in and out of the Army, for
THE NEW ARMY PACKAGE.
Circulars free. Call and see them.
438-41 J. L. G. PIERPONT, 326 Broadway, N. Y.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

THE BUTTER FRUITS OF BAD BITTERS.—Invalid reader do you know what miserable effects of the Fusel Oil Poisons you are called to take, before to accept as universal panacea are composed of? Give heed for a moment. They are manufactured from impurities alcohol, containing a considerable portion of fusel oil, a poison almost as deadly as prussic acid. The basis of the regulate tinctures of the Materia Medica is the same. No amount of "herbal extracts" can overcome the bad tendency of this pernicious oil. The Essence of sound hydrothoroughly rectified, is the only stimulant which can be safely used as a component of a Tonic or Bitters and anti-bilious medicine, and HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS is the only medicinal preparation in the world to which this article is used as an ingredient. Hence its extraordinary effects as this great specific. It gives strength without producing excitement. No other Tonic does this. All the ordinary Bitters flush the face and affect the brain Most tonics BITTERS diffuse an agreeable calm through the nervous system, promote digestion and produce sleep. No other Tonic so quickly revives the exhausted physical energies restores the appetite, and removes the gloom and depression which always accompanies weakness of the bodily powers. Sold by all Druggists and Liberally Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 478 BROADWAY.

The Nile Explorers,

Captain SPEKE and GRANT, with illustrations, including their Arabian—an African Beauty. How he got two wives—THE SCIENCE OF FORCE. Magnetism, Water, Iron Construction, Origin of Vegetation —What Mind is made of—The Breath of Life—WOMENS OF CREATION—Microscope— Human Birds, Physiological and Stellar Wonders, in MARCH No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Ready, or by mail, 15 cts.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Do you wish to Prevent your Hair from Falling Out?

IF SO
IF SO
USE
BARKER'S HIRSUTUS.
BARKER'S HIRSUTUS.
BARKER'S HIRSUTUS.
BARKER'S HIRSUTUS.
BARKER'S HIRSUTUS.

CONTAINS NO GREASE
CONTAINS NO GREASE
CONTAINS NO GREASE

And is positively the only article that will prevent the hair from FALLING OUT.
FALLING OUT.
FALLING OUT.
FALLING OUT.
FALLING OUT.

Prepared solely by BARKER, Capillary Physician, 632 Broadway, New York, and for sale by all respectable Druggists in the United States and Canadas. Price 50 cents.

Stereoscopic Views and Carte de Visites. 1 000 different sizes. Send for a Catalogue.
600 VICTOR DELSO, 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

ARMY BADGES,

Watches, Gold Pens and Cases. Jewelers of all kinds at reduced rates. Send for a Circular.
R. KEITH, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

DIARIES FOR 1864.

From 25 cents to $2 each. All kinds of Writing Paper, Blank Books and Stationery. Cards, Chromatic Background Boards, Dominoes, Expense Books Reversi Spice, Portfolios, Desks, Pocket Books, etc., etc. Please call or send your address.

FRANCIS & LOUTREL, Stationers,
437-40 33 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,

42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office) offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	EACH
150 Gold and Silver Watches	$150 @ $ 100
200 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	75 @ 50
250 Vest and Neck Chains	25 @ 10 00
300 Gold Band Bracelets	10 @ 5 00
300 Gold Band Bracelets	8 @ 5 00
300 Cameo Brooches	8 @ 5 00
3000 Mosaic Gold Brooches	10 @ 6 00
3000 Tuck and Pearline Brooches	10 @ 6 00
3000 Lockets	10 @ 6 00
3000 Gold Lever Pearline Ear Drops	10 @ 6 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	10 @ 6 00
3000 Gold Band Pins	10 @ 6 00
3000 Watch Keys	6 @ 3 00
3000 Pearline Mosaic Slides	6 @ 3 00
3000 Sets of Studs	6 @ 3 00
250 Sets of Buttons	6 @ 3 00
5000 Plain Rings	5 @ 3 00
5000 Stone Set Rings	5 @ 3 00
5000 Lockets	5 @ 3 00
5000 Gold Lever Sleeve Buttons	5 @ 3 00
10000 Gold Pins, Silver Mounted Holders	5 @ 3 00
6.00 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Holders	4 00 to 5 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the neatest and most fashionable styles. Certificates of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, then given out at the counter, and sold for 25 cents each; and on receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to select One Dollar's worth and take the article named in it, or not. Five Certificates, $1; seven, $1; fifteen, $2; sixty-five, $8; one hundred, $10; Circulars money to be enclosed with order. Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow 50 to Ten cents on every Dollar's worth, on their remittance amounts to $1, and more liberal inducements to those who buy large to retail for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in marriage, business, etc., free by mail, together with a guide to the amazement of both sexes —an extraordinary book of startling, yet practical information; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Gold Pens, etc.,

WORTH $500,000!

TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH, without regard to value, and not to be paid until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents and get a printed list of articles, which will show you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our circular, with full list of articles, and terms. Terms to Agents which we want in every regiment and town in the country. Address as follows:

PERRY & CO., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Fifty Methods of Employment—Arts Secrets, etc., etc., in the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for $1-worth $100. Agents wanted.
Address S. R. FRIZZELL, Baltimore, Md. 437-40

The "Jerks," or Convulsions,

When under religious excitement—Wonderful phenomena in France—Causes explained—A change of Heart—Instinct—Reason—Faith—Prayer—Mind or Heaven—which? What we want—Duty growing—MOUNT NANNY, and the Surprise Party—NEW EDITIONS in Great Britain and Ireland, Death Tokens, Sign of Misfortune, Wilkie Collins' Novels Parisian Ball at a Funeral—Trying Fortunes, etc., in MARCH No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Ready, or by mail, or $1 50 a Year.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

"I'm going to Fight mit Sigel."

Look out for this New Song. Now Ready. Mailed free for only Six Cents. Address 439-40 HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

Baker's Rheumatic Balm,

BAKER'S FEVER COOLER.
BAKER'S COUGH BALSAM.
BAKER'S CROUP ALLEVIATOR,

are four remedies which no family should be ever without. Price $1 per bottle each. Also,
BAKER'S HIDDEN AND GREAT REMEDIES, which are invaluable. Price $3.
Principal Depot—No. 198 SIXTH STREET, near fourth avenue. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price. 439 2t

$2,000 A YEAR can be made by the use of the Instructions I send for 20 cents.
Address SHELDON LEAVITT,
438-9 Grand Rapids, Mich.

Card Pictures, Photographs, &c

K. W. BENICZKY,

Having ENLARGED AND IMPROVED HIS GALLERY, No. 707 BROADWAY, Chambers Street, are increased facilities for making Card Pictures and of Photographs. AT THE LOWEST PRICES. 900

Straight Hair Made Wavy.

Without heating it, by using
IVINS' PATENT HAIR CRIMPERS.
For Sale at Variety stores. 434-46

Billiard Balls!

Patent Compressed Ivory, 2¼ and 2⅜ in., $10 per set; 2 in. Bagatelle Balls, $6 per set; 1¾ in. Pool Balls, $5; warranted for six months. WM. M. WELLING, Agent, 309 Centre Street, New York, sign of the Golden Elephant.

New Catalogue of Jewelry sent free. Address THOS. CAFFERY & CO.,
438-41 Providence, R. I.

Soldiers and Everybody!

A great Book for you! Over 2,000 Things Worth Knowing! Mailed free for 25 cents. Address UNION BOOK ASSOCIATION, Box 364, Syracuse, N. Y. Agents, order our unequaled Military Packages. 440-1

Whiskers! Whiskers!

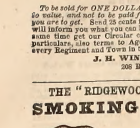
MY ONGUENT will force them to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Price 25 cents, or five packages for $1 by mail. Address
HANDLY & JAGGESS, Calhoun, Ill.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.



Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT

SMOKING CASE!

Most ingenious in its combination of the Meerschaum Cone with Fancy Pipe and Stem, Matches and Pipe Cleaner, with a handsome Tobacco Pouch attached, filling the Pipe by a valve, without use of the fingers or waste of tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor generally peculiar as a Cigar Case. It is made for service, of various and handsome styles, at $1 60, $2, $2 25, $2 50 and $3 to $3 75 and $5; the best tastefully Plated and Engraved. Nothing can excel its Coolness while in use. Remove the pouch and it is A FRIEND TO FRIENDS nothing could be more acceptable.

FOR THE SOLDIER IT IS INVALUABLE.

Also

The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco!

Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fill the tobacco pouch a week; smoking, $2 25 per dozen; and of various Sizes for the general Trade. A liberal Discount to Dealers. Single Cases sent by mail, post, on receipt of price and 25 cents. Also, half round Packages of this fine Tobacco; full weight sent (carefully put up) by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 50.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.
Office 69 Broadway, cor. Howard St., N. Y.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enamelist. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Sun-burn, Freckles, Pimples, Tetters, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 133 South Seventh Street, and 41 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FEMALE CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.

20 cents each, $1 50 per doz. Free by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1614, New York city. Send for circular.

J. G. SCHULL.

MERCHANT TAILOR

32 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGOENT will cause them to grow heavily in six weeks (even the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.

R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

Union Playing Cards!

National American Amusement Cards.

Colonel for Kings, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 56 enamelled cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for Circular. Address

AMERICAN CARD CO.,
000 488 Broadway, or 166 William St., N. Y.

Remington's

Army and Navy REVOLVER!

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Re-Volvers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N.Y.

438-50

Hawkes's Diamond Pointed Gold Pen

Medium	Pen	$0 50	Commercial Pen $1 25
Large	"	0 63	Mammoth " 1 50
Engraving	"	0 75	Leviathan " 2 00

Also, Fountain Pens—one filling will write eight to fifteen hours. Send stamp for Circular.

GEO. F. HAWKES, Manufactory,
438-4 94 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Headquarters for Officers' and Soldiers' Pins of Every Description!

We will send either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, in Solid Silver, with your Name, Regiment and Co, handsomely Engraved upon it, on the receipt of $1. Also, a Kearney Cross in Fine Gold Plate for $1, or a New Style Solid Silver Cavalry Pin, Engraved as above, for $1 50.

☞ Agents sending for 10 or more at one time will be allowed 15 cents on each.

ALSO, THE EMPORIUM FOR WATCHES AND JEWELRY.

75,000 Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils,

Vest, Guard and Neck Chains, Chatelaine Chains and Pins, Engraved Bracelets, Engraved Spring Lockets, Seal Stone Rings California Rings, Enamel Rings, Masonic Rings and Pins, Gents' California Diamond Pins, California Diamond Ear Drops, Beautiful Sets of Jewelry, New Styles Studs and Buttons, etc., etc., etc.,

WORTH $400,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

Certificates naming each article are put into Envelopes, Sealed and Mixed, and sent without regard to choice.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for doing the business 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the request is made to know what you can have After knowing what you can have, then it will be at your option to send One Dollar, take the article or not

Five Certificates can be ordered for $1—four for $2—thirty for $10—and one hundred for $15.

With the information of what you can have will be sent a Circular giving full instructions to Agents and a full Catalogue of articles.

S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.
Box 4876, N. Y.

NEW ARMY WATCHES!

	The great New Army Watch, expressly for Soldiers, in very heavy Solid Silver Hunting Cases. Full Jeweled, with a handsome White Dial and Steel Hands. Every Regiment should be supplied with these Cases. We make a perfect timekeeper for one year, $15.
$15			$15
$15	Gold Composite, same as above, but Jeweled in the finest Jewels. Army Watch, $15.		$15
$25	Fine Double Bottom Silver Engine-turned Hunting Case, Full Jeweled, Chronometer Balance, $25.		$25
$35	OFFICER'S Watch — Genuine American Lever Watch, in a Solid Sterling Silver Case, Full Jeweled, Gold Jewels and Double Bottom Cases, $35.		$35
$45	American Lever, same as above, with Chronometer Balance, $45.		$45
$11	Silver Hunting Watch, English Movement, $11.		$11
$16	Lady's very small Hunting Gold Composite Watch, beautifully Engraved. Magic Spring Sunk Seconds, can scarcely be detected from Gold, $16.		$16
$85	Splendid 18 karat Heavy Gold American Lever Watch, in Hunting Case, $85.		$85
$92	Same as above, with Chronometer Balance, $92.		$92
$38	Gold Hunting English Lever Watch, Rare Jewelled and Screw Balance—St. Louis Model, $38.		$38

Constantly on hand Watches of Every Description

We will send any of the above Watches on receipt of price, free of expense, to any address.

Registered Letters come at our risk if properly sealed.

All Watches Registered 20 cents extra.

Great inducements to Agents.

Send for our Circular

Correspondents will give their address plain.

GEO. A. ELY & CO.,
IMPORTERS,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

FURS!

FURS!!

FURS!!!

Ladies and Misses Fine Furs, in Sable, Mink, Ermine, Siberian Squirrel, etc.

Gents' Fur Caps, Mufflers and Gauntlets, in Seal Otter, Beaver, etc.

Sleigh Robes in variety. Retailed at Wholesale Prices.

BURKE (successor to WATKINS),
210 Broadway, corner Fulton street.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Catalogue.
000 PIERRE BIBON, 35 Ann St., N. Y.

Dr. B. C. Perry,

DERMATOLOGIST,

No. 49 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.
(Formerly of No. 19 Winter St., Boston.)

Treats successfully all

Diseases of the Scalp, Loss of Hair and Premature Blanching;

Also

Removes MOTH, FRECKLES, and other DISCOLORATIONS from the FACE, without injury to the texture or Color of the Skin

☞ NO CHARGE FOR CONSULTATION.☜

For particulars address, enclosing stamp,

DR. B. C. PERRY,
Box 1892, Boston, Mass.

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

Sewing Machines

438-49 No. 625 BROADWAY, N.Y.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!

30,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.

WORTH $150,000,

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

☞ Six Certificates can be ordered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $12.

Address J. C. HOLLISTER,
637-49 188 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All those wanting to marry to Advice on the Laws of Marriage, Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address 88 White Street, New York.

We have furnished our Weapon's Rides as follows:

State of Kentucky	1,366
State of Indiana	760
General Rights	150
Colonel Collins	230
Capt. Buck's Co., Chillicothe, O.
Col. Grant's	Kansas.
Capt. Child's "	Athens, Ill.
Capt. Weyhark's Co.	Rolla, Mo.
Capt. Meeks's "	Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Hunter's "	Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Olds' "	Detroit, Mich.

LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 12, 1862.

DEAR SIR.—The Rifles (31) were put to a severe test on the 8th inst., at Fort Scott, Kansas, for a STAND OF COLORS, in a contest against THREE OF ANY COMPANIES. They were to fire in squads of ten, each man having three shots, and to commence at the word "Fire." We were SHOT-NUMBERED TWO HUNDRED shots by the infantry. Distance 300 yards. We hit the target 85 times out of 100 shots. The greatest number of hits by any infantry company, 17. Thus establishing the superiority of the KITTREDGE (Wesson) Gun.

S. GRANT,
Col. 1st Kansas Cav.

To MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.
B. KITTREDGE & CO.,
433-54 Cincinnati, Ohio.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to produce a healthy hair; to fix its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to produce effects of luxurious use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S COLOGNE FOR HAIR GLOSS unexcelled in keeping the hair in curl.

HOYT'S COLORING CREAM

oils and colors the hair at the same time; changes light red hair into a beautiful auburn or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and prevents chapping or appearance. Sold everywhere.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of AMERICAN PEOPLE,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published in the DR. TROUSE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on Consumption, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Forces, Scrofulous and Bilious Affections, or Pulpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Fail not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

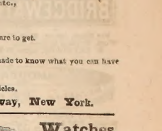
DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 80 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 433-43

The Great Money-Making Article.

Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address

000 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

$75 A MONTH.—I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
439-51 S. MADISON Alfred, Maine



25 Cent Legal Tender Circular.

$15 A DAY AND A WATCH FREE!

Reader, delay not; send at once for our New Free Circular whether you want it or not, and we will return to you the postage on your 1 ttr or its equivalent, as we want every person to have a Circular. It announces everybody, defies competition, and will prove correspondence.

1,000 Agents wanted. Samples $5 each. Address
000 WEIR & CO., 503 Chesnut St., Phila.

Watches FOR THE ARMY.

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travellers."—French Lender, Feb. 21.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest little pieces ever offered."—Illustrated News, Jan. 10.

"Splendidly finished Watches, the beauty of which is only equalled by their cheapness."—N. Y. Weekly, July 23.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADY'S OR GENTLEMAN'S WATCH COMBINED, WITH PATENT SELF-WINDING IMPROVEMENT,

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it, and combined with the machinery, its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The case of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being 18-Karat Gold. It has the improved ruby-action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, including jewelry, per case of half dozen, $264. Sample Watches in neat Morocco cases, $50. By mail the postage is 60 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!

FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIALS, AND ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES MUST TRIUMPH.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer one first quality Sterling Silver, while the inner one is German Silver, it cannot be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, making it not only in appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of SOLID STERLING SILVER in existence.

The sale of these Watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $20 per piece. Many thousand dollars can be made in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact.

☞ At WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy oval engine-turned centre, by the half-dozen, $72; postage, $2 38; registering, 20 cents Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

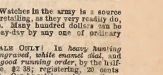
☞ TERMS, CASH! INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No Agents employed; we deal directly with the public. If money is sent us by express or mail in registered letter, it is at our risk after we receive that most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Sole Importers,
438 199 Broadway and 3 Cortlandt St., N. Y.



EMPLOYMENT

At your own Homes.

THOUSANDS CAN REALISE A HUNDRED DOLLARS WEEKLY.—No capitals required except those found in every household; profits 100 per cent.; demand ample as Sun. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage. Address C. MUNRO BROWN, No. 74 Bleecker Street, N. Y. 440-1

Swords, Sashes, Belts.

Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords, 431-56 B. KITTREDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Royal Havana Lottery

81 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information obtained. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 14 Wall Street, N. Y.

$35. WATCHES. $35.

Genuine Full-Jewelled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection or sending.

J. I. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

For Roofs, Outside Work, Decks of Steamers, Iron Work, Railroad Bridges, etc.
R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

AMERICAN METALLIC COLLARS

The only Enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker" to Box 3173, and receive it by return mail.
AMERICAN ENAMELLED METALLIC COLLAR CO., 94 Pine Street, N. Y.

Agents Wanted (Male or Female). Address HALE & CO., Newburyport, Mass. 0000

Great Chance to make Money!

$650,000 Watches, Jewelry

etc., to be sold with the NOVELTY PRIZE PACKET.

Agents can obtain a WATCH free by investing only $15.

We also offer SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS, $10 invested will yield $50. Such inducements have never been offered; full particulars in Circular.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
o 30 Beekman street, N. Y.

Munroe's Edition of Charlotte

TEMPLE'S most affecting Tale ever written, sent postpaid on receipt of price 10 cts.
GEORGE MUNROE & CO.,
o 137 William street N.Y.

The Beard &c.

IN those cases of scanty, retarded growth, when the person is over 18, by he remarkably nourishing and stimulating power, the Tennessee Swamp Shrub Balm and Perfumed Cream will infallible in exciting the Beard, Moustache, &c., to an exceedingly fine and vigorous growth. The history of this Balsam, with a small sample box, will be sent sealed, on receipt of return postage.
JOHN RAWLINS, 815 Broadway, N.Y.

Shaits' Onguent.—Warranted to produce a full set of WHISKERS in three weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 30 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts.,

MAGNIFYING 300 times, mailed on receipt of price. Five of different powers, $1. Address F. S. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass. o

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Send for a Circular. Pens repointed on receipt of 75 cents.
438-470 E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE combining Simplicity with Amusement, is mailed, prepaid, for $2 25; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by
T. STEELE CRAIG,
335 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Reflective, or Opera-Glass STEREOSCOPE, with its sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all eyes, for $1; with 12 assorted Stereoscopic views, $2. A liberal discount to the trade.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry Newport, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates by HARDENG EXPRESS CO., 78 Broadway. Entire charge 10 per cent. 000

Dyspepsia Tablets.

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by N. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. 50 cents per box; sent free on the receipt of 60 cents. Depot, 207 Centre Street, second floor. o

60 FIRST PREMIUMS in 1863

GROVER & BAKER'S
CELEBRATED ELASTIC STITCH
Sewing Machines

Were awarded the Highest Premiums over all competitors at the State Fairs of New York, Vermont, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Oregon, and at every respectable Institute and County Fair held in 1863.

Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, N. Y.

According to the latest news from Dixie, Rebel soldiers on picket duty have to be watched by others to prevent their deserting. The above additional precaution is suggested.

A FINE WATCH FREE,

And $15 Per Day Made Easy,

by selling the GREAT "original and only genuine" EXCELSIOR PISTOL AND STATIONERY PACKAGES, each of which contains "more real valuable articles" than any half-dozen other packages ever sold. Each Package contains Fine Writing Materials, Engravings, Fashion Plates, Fancy Articles, Yankee Notions, Gems, Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Rich Presents of Fine Jewelry, etc. The whole worth several dollars if bought separate. Price 25 cents Wholesale rates to Agents low. Profits large. Sales immense. Every soldier and every family wants them. Agents wanted in every town and camp. $10 per day guaranteed, and a splendid Gold or Silver Hunting-case Watch, genuine English movements, perfect timekeeper, PRESENTED FREE TO EACH AGENT. Beware of imitations. Send for our great new Circulars for 1864, containing "extra premium inducements free."
S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 160 Nassau St., N. Y.,
Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World. 0000

Salesmen Wanted.—Salary Paid. Address (with stamp) to Harris Bros., Boston, Mass. 433-470

Gen. McClellan's Report

Is published entire in Nos. 26 and 27, for February 20th and 27th, of the

ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL.

The Report is reprinted from the official copy, presented to Congress, in a form convenient for publication, and accompanied by a full Index. The two numbers, containing the supplements with the Report, are for sale by all newsdealers, or sent, prepaid, on receipt of the price (40 cents) by
W. C. CHURCHILL, Proprietor,
o 192 Broadway, N. Y.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,

Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,

501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS!

Our Catalogue now embraces considerably over

FOUR THOUSAND

different subjects (to which additions are continually being made) of Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., viz.:

72 Major-Generals, 528 Statesmen,
190 Brigadier-Generals, 127 Divines,
259 Colonels, 116 Authors,
30 Naval Officers, 30 Artists,
207 Other Officers, 113 Stage,
60 Officers of the Navy, 46 Prominent Women,
147 Prominent Foreign Portraits.

2,500 COPIES OF WORKS OF ART,

Including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, etc.

☞Catalogues sent on receipt of stamp.

An order for One Dozen PICTURES from our Catalogue will be filled on receipt of $1 00, and sent by mail, free.

Photographic Albums!

Of these we manufacture a great variety, ranging in prices from 50 cents to $20 each.

Our ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any others.

The smaller kinds can be sent safely by mail at a postage of six cents per copy.

The more expensive can be sent by express.

We also keep a large assortment of

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.

Our Catalogue of these will be sent to any address on receipt of stamp.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY
Manufacturers of Photograph Materials,
501 Broadway, New York.

☞ Friends or relatives of prominent military men will confer a favor by sending us their likenesses to copy. They will be kept carefully, and returned uninjured.

☞ FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER for Congregations to present to their Pastor, or for other purposes, with suitable inscriptions, etc. o

For Veteran, Army Corps, Cavalry and Battle Pins,

Send to Headquarters,
S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway.
o (See Notice inside.

COLLARS

LOCKWOOD'S CLOTH LINED

Paper Collars!

ALSO,

LADIES' COLLARS AND CUFFS,

AT

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

CHAS. L. LOCKWOOD,

No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility are speedily cured by Dr. HOWARD'S new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. o

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, King's Co., N. Y.
0000

Soldiers, to the Rescue!

YOUNG men, rushing into the exposures and dangers of a Soldier's life, should prepare themselves for the fatal Fevers, the Dysentery, the Sores and Scurvy, which are almost certain to follow. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS, used occasionally during the campaign, will ensure sound health to every man.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT are now retailed, owing to the high price of Drugs, &c., at 65 cts., 70 cts., and $1 10 per Box or Pot. o

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, CURED and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
438-470 CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

BALLOU'S
Patented
French Yoke
SHIRTS.
Warranted to FIT, and to be CHEAPER
for the same qualities and make than those of any other Shirt House in this city.
Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.

For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.
BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, New York.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Lever Cap, Double Case, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, sent free, by mail, in neat case, only $7.
A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" Hunting Case Watch—Magic Spring—Genuine English Jewelled Movements—Independent Escape—Solid Balance—a perfect Timekeeper—"Warranted one year"—will stand acid, and is an

Exact Imitation of a $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

The Celebrated English Court Watch

For ladies. "Rich escutcheon designs," thin movements, extra heavy 18 karat gold-plate, in SUBSTANTIAL SILVER HUNTING CASES. "Full dial set feats," Exact timekeeper, a perfect "Bijou Article." Sent free by mail, in richly embossed Turkey Morocco Case, for only $18.

ENGLISH SWEDISH SILVER LEVER WATCHES, engraved Hunting Case, full jeweled movements, massive cases, $25.

Rent English Duplex Gold Watches, in massive Gold Cases. Fine article, from $45 to $100.

Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above styles of Watches. Catalogue of trade prices mailed free.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20, says of the "European Timekeeper," "It is an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper much in use among the British soldiers in the field." Illustrated News says, "Correct timepieces; really in appearance to $100 watches."

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,
o 38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

Patent applied for.

THE GREAT

BATTLE PIN

Of the West!

Made of Solid Silver, $2 50 each; or $2 each with 25 name and Rank engraved on the border. All Grades of Veteran, Co., Corps and Division Pins made to order by the single one, 100 or 1,000, and sent by mail to any part of the country.
Address DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WORCESTER CIDER without apples or other fruit in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
o F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Broker's Stock of unredeemed goods for sale at 1/3 for cash, consisting of a large variety of rich and valuable goods worth from 75 cents to $200 each, any person sending 25 cents we will inform them in advance what articles they will receive. Ten Certificates give to each article in advance for $1 50, 25 for $3, 50 for $5 50, 100 for $10. Address
ANDREWS & CO.,
439o 108 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS.

Ready-Made or to Measure, at $31, $30, $15 per doz

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50 each—all cut one yard long. A single shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 43 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELLED WHITE.

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To military men and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price $1 each; sent by mail to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 15.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,

No. 327 Broadway, New York.

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN

2 Maiden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fine Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brush ts, Merschaum Pipes, etc., etc.
Military and Navy Equipments in every variety. A large assortment of
RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS.
36-70 Constantly on hand.

MUNN & COMPANY,

Solicitors of American & Foreign Patents,

AND PUBLISHERS OF THE ILLUSTRATED "SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN," 37 Park Row, New York.
Pamphlets of information about patents FREE.
Specimen copies of the paper FREE.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 441—Vol. XVII.] NEW YORK, MARCH 12, 1864. [PRICE 8 CENTS.

THE SANITARY FAIR BROOKLYN.

THE Brooklyn and Long Island Fair, to which we alluded in our last, on giving an illustration of the place where it is held, the Academy of Music, opened as announced, and has since been visited by immense crowds.

The street in front of the Academy was each day packed and jammed, mainly with women and children, all day long, who worried and crowded to get into the main building, while many who had got in, after edging their way about for an hour or more without catching more than a passing glimpse of the articles on exhibition, were glad to get out.

In the evening, every portion of the Fair was crowded worse than during the day. The Auditorium, the New England Kitchen, the Manufactures' Department, Knickerbocker Hall and the Taylor House were filled to overflowing, and so dense was the throng that the Managers ordered the gate to be closed at 8:40 o'clock, after which no one was admitted either with or without a season ticket.

Everybody seemed to be in the best possible humor

Granma Downing, Patience her Daughter, Granma Mayflower, Deborah, and Aunt Tabitha.

THE NEW ENGLAND KITCHEN SCENES, AT THE BROOKLYN SANITARY FAIR.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY W. B. JAMES.

—old gentlemen smiled though grimly—when their favorite corns were trodden upon, and the ladies didn't seem to mind in the least having the gathers torn out of their dresses.

The vast throng surged backward and forward, now and then coming to a general standstill, when some little parties halted in front of the tables to buy various articles that had attracted their attention.

The ladies in charge of the stands were continually wreathed in their sweetest of smiles, and their gentle entreaties to the passers-by resulted in the transfer of many greenbacks from the portemonnaies and fat pockets of the latter to the little treasury boxes provided by the management, and in charge of the former.

Among the visitors were many New-Yorkers, and hundreds of people from the Long Island towns.

A concert is given at the New-England Kitchen in the evening by a dozen or more of the Old Folks, when several hymns, old ballads, and other pieces were sung, much to the delight and gratification of the assemblage.

The success of the enterprise may be inferred from the fact that in two days the receipts for tickets were

THE SANITARY FAIR AT BROOKLYN—THE NEW ENGLAND KITCHEN.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

$18 000, and for sales $19,200. On Wednesday evening the Treasurer read his books at the Cooper Institute.

It is undoubtedly the most exciting and grandest Fair ever seen in the City of Churches, and will add in such a degree to the treasury of the Commission as to make Brooklyn ever memorable.

We should be behind our usual enterprise were we to neglect so interesting an affair, and accordingly give accurate and careful illustrations of the General Hall, Knickerbocker Hall, with its rustic adornments and treasured swords, as well as of the Heavy Goods Department.

The New England Kitchen, the unique attraction of the Fair, we illustrate fully, giving a view of the Kitchen itself—with its antique furniture, chairs, tables and other articles treasured in old home-steads as heirlooms; and now, by being collected, producing a most lovely picture at the olden time. We give also portraits of the venerable spinners, who are busily at work, as our grandmothers used to be.

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS—Farren men and one woman, each over eight feet high; two Dwarfs, each less than two feet high—besides a host of other Novelties. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 21 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both Indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turk, Jew, Jewish, Armenian, Greek, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's travels.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every centre table; and the first and the second most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs only $3. Sent free, by mail on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,
No. 37 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, MARCH 12, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 72 Duane street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by DEMAS & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 100 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One year, in advance	$3 00
Two copies " to one address	5 00
Four "	8 00
Volume and paper one year	5 00

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

75 cents a line on the outside or last page.
50 " " on the 14th and 15th pages.

The Conclusion of Vol. XVII.

No. 442 will conclude the XVIIth Volume of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, leaving it in its well-won position as the best, most accurate, prompt and comprehensive Illustrated Paper in the World. It has been and will continue to be the Illustrated News, picturing with pen and pencil the events of the day. To speak of our illustrations of the Great Civil War would be unnecessary: these have been endorsed by the leading Generals in the field and by the illustrated papers in Europe; but our sketches of incidents, scenes, men and manners, from all parts, are no less authentic and lifelike. They are invariably from actual sketches, as we never delude our readers by mere fanciful pictures.

Our literary department is a feature. Our Poems and Tales, finely illustrated, are American, racy of the soil and inspired by all that is best in the society or grandest in the natural beauties of the Great Republic.

Our next Volume will contain new and striking features, and will conclude Mrs. Stephens's admirable novel, "The Gulf Between them," equal to her famous "Fashion and Famine."

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

GUERILLA WAR alone breaks the monotony of the winter lull in Virginia. On the 22d, Capt. Page, of the 150th New York, captured 11 guerillas on the Braddock road and brought them into Fairfax; but on the same day Capt. Reed, with 150 of the 2d Mass. cavalry, pursued on the Danesville turnpike near Vienna, by 300 of Moseby's men, hidden in a wood. Reed was killed, with several of his men, and 75 taken.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Our forces are hunting up the guerillas sharply. A reconnoitring expedition alighted on Tyrrell county, captured 30 guerillas. An excursion up the Chowan captured 30 horses and mules, and destroyed 50 000 pounds of bacon. Another raid to Huntsville captured a number of horses and mules, a quantity of salt and 300,000 pounds of bacon.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Brig.-Gen. Schimmelfenig, with the 41st New York Volunteers, had a skirmish with the enemy at St. John's Island, S. C., on the 12th inst.

GEORGIA.

The great event of the week is the splendid movement of Gen. Sherman. The Richmond Examiner announces the arrival of Gen. Sherman's forces at Quitman, on the Mobile and Ohio railroad. It describes his movement as the boldest of the war, and says that he had nearly 30,000 men with him, marching in close order. He divided Polk's army completely, outgeneralling the Bishop, menaced Mobile, and then struck at Dalton.

On the 22d our troops advanced from Chattanooga under Gen. Palmer, and on the 25th, after a sharp fight, turned the enemy's works at Tunnel hill. They fled, losing many prisoners, and made a second stand at Rocky Faits, in a strong position, from which we have not yet dislodged them.

On the same day a reconnoissance from Hilton head, under Gen. Howell, pushed almost to Savannah, engaged the enemy, and brought off 20 prisoners.

FLORIDA.

The evacuation of Lake city by the rebel Gen. Finegan leaves the entire eastern portion of the State in our hands, and cuts off from the rebel army their last source of beef. Texas and Tennessee had already been wrested from them or cut off.

On the afternoon of the 20th Gen. Seymour, with the 7th Conn., 7th New Hampshire, 40th Mass., 48th and 150th New York, and 8th United States, met a rebel army at Olustee, eight miles beyond Sanderson, on the line of the Jacksonville and Tallahassee railroad. After a three hours fight Seymour fell back, having lost 300 to 1,300 men. Gen. Gillmore has suppressed the details. The rebel Hardee was on the field.

ALABAMA.

Mobile, menaced by sea and land, is in a panic. Gen. Forrest was at Oxford on the 9th, with a Union force of 6,000 infantry and 12 regiments of cavalry from Memphis, under Gen. Sullivan, to join him.

Gen. Smith, keeping Forrest engaged with his infantry, threw his cavalry across the Tallahatchie near New Albany, and entered Pontotoc on the 12th. They have been forced back by a combined rebel force, and cannot join Sherman.

Admiral Farragut's fleet had gone in the direction of Mobile bay on the 18th, and on the 19th was lying in the Sound, without having landed any troops, in consequence of the bad weather.

TENNESSEE.

On the 22d a detachment of cavalry and infantry, under Col. Davis, were surrounded by rebels on the Wartrace road, five miles from Cumberland. Two companies of infantry—the 91st Indiana and 2d North Carolina—cut their way through, with a loss of seven killed. Sixty of Davis's men escaped; the rest were captured. Davis was said to be wounded. At the same time the rebels made an attack on our outposts at Powell's valley, but were repulsed three times, and withdrew.

Longstreet left Strawberry plains on the 20th, and Sevierville on the 22d, and crossed French Broad river. It is supposed that want of forage compelled this step.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

The Indian country on the Canadian river and its tributaries is clear of rebels. All rebel supplies for a movement in Arkansas must come from Red river, where the enemy are more concentrated. The rebel Indians are thoroughly disheartened. Col. Phillips's brigade had a fight with the rebel Indians and Texans on the Middle Boggy river, on the 14th inst., killing 40 of them. The enemy was pursued to Fort Arbuckle. Our forces then retired to the Canadian river. Our loss was one.

NAVAL.

The blockade-runner Bailho, with 74 bales of cotton, was intercepted on the 4th at St. Andrews by the barque Brazillera, commanded by Master Gillespie. He passed a rebel camp of 400 men in his boats, which only consisted of 28 men and boys. The Bailho and her crew of five men, together with two families of Union people, safely under the guns of the barque.

The steamer Columbine, 10 miles below the mouth of Red river, recently captured four rebel officers while attempting to cross the river with a large rebel mail, $200,000 in rebel treasury notes money, 30 bales of cotton, a number of mules, horses and wagons.

On the 18th, at 9 P. M., the Housatonic steam sloop of war, off Charleston, was struck by the rebel torpedo Davis on the starboard quarter, and sunk off Beach inlet. Two officers and three men were lost The United States steam transport Gen. Burnside, grounded on St. John's bar, Florida, and became a total wreck. The Quartermaster's steamboat Harriet A. Weed grounded in the St. John's, and was blown up by the crew.

A fine blockade-runner, the Pet, has just been captured off Wilmington, but Mason and Slidell are supposed to have previously escaped from her to the shore.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 23d February, Mr. Carlile, of Virginia, presented resolutions declaring that the war should be prosecuted for the sole purpose of restoration of the Union, upon the basis of the Constitution, and requesting the President to issue a proclamation granting amnesty and pardon to the people of any rebellious State that may repudiate their ordinance of secession, and return to their allegiance to the Union.

In the House, the report of the Conference Committee on the whiskey tax was presented, and after an interesting debate, in which Messrs. Stevens, Washburne, Fernando Wood, Elijah Ward and others participated, the report was rejected by a vote of 82 against 66. A new Committee of Conference was then ordered.

In the Senate, on the 24th, after discussing several branches of local interest, the Secretary of War was instructed to transmit to the Senate the evidence adduced before the Military Commission which tried the cases of Dr. Wright and others, speculating in cotton. A bill was passed to enable Colorado and Nevada to form State governments. The Senate then took up the joint resolution reviving the grade of Lieutenant-General, and after a very long debate, in which Messrs. Trumbull, Grimes, Sherman, Grant, Hollock and others were freely discussed, the Senate adopted the amendment reported by the Military Committee, striking out the recommendation of Gen. Grant for the position, and the resolution as thus amended passed, yeas 31, nays 6, and the Senate adjourned.

In the House, the chief business was on the Naval Appropriation bill. The proposition to pay the soldiers in gold was rejected. An amendment was adopted raising the appropriation from $22,000,000 to $30,000,000.

In the Senate, on the 25th, the vote adopting the Chalgreen Committee's report was reconsidered, and Messrs. Sherman, Clark and Nesmith were appointed a new committee to investigate it. The Joint Conference Committees are said to be equally divided on the question of raising the spirits on hand. The Military Committee were directed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the time of paying bounties to soldiers to April next.

In the House, the Committee of Ways and Means reported a bill authorizing a loan of $300,000,000, six per cent bonds, redeemable in not less than five nor more than forty years. Five-twenty six twenty bonds to the amount of $100,000,000, to meet subscriptions already made, are excepted. The bill simply is a modification of the act of March 3, 1863, authorizing an issue of $900,000,000 of bonds, which is not less than 10 nor more than 40 years. The Ways and Means Committee have also reported a Deficiency Appropriation bill, embracing nearly $100,000,000. The bill simply provides for the payment of certain claims was also reported. The Naval Appropriation bill was then taken up, and Mr. Pendleton, Mr. Ancona and an animated debate took place regarding the administration of the Navy and the Navy Department. Several amendments to the bill was adopted, and the bill passed.

In the senate, on the 26th, Mr. Wilson introduced a bill providing that re-appointments in the regular army may be for three instead of five years, and that officers who have served two years in the army (since July 22, 1861, may re-enist until the 1st of May next, with rank according to service. Mr. Grimmer, of Vermont, called up the bill to remove the color qualifications for mail carriers, together with the amendment providing that in the courts of the United States there shall be no discrimination on account of color. The bill was discussed at length, without concluding action.

In the House, resolutions of thanks were passed to Admiral D. G. Porter, and Commodore Ringgold, for their valiant services in capturing the Marmora. Mr. Blair, of Missouri, reported a bill providing that persons residing in the rebellious States may vote in any regiment from any State they choose, and on so doing are entitled to the same rights and privileges accorded to other troops, such enlistments to be credited to the quota of any State procuring them. A long debate was had on this bill, when an amendment by Mr. Cox was finally agreed to, providing that the enlistments of soldiers, wherever made, shall be credited to the State to which he belongs. Mr. Dawes, from the Committee on Elections, announced that Hon. Lewis McKenzie was entitled to a seat in Congress, from the Seventh District of Virginia. The Conference Committee's report on the Lieutenant-General bill was called up, and a motion by Mr. Cox was made to lay it on the table. After a spirited discussion between Messrs. Washburne and Cox, the report was agreed to, yeas 75, nays, 87.

In the House, on the 27th, after a variety of routine business, Mr. Cox made a speech against the Administration, especially the radical section of it, and in the course of his invitation to move for an inquiry into the affairs of the Treasury Department, he made a severe attack on the Mississippi river. Some of his remarks on Mr. Chase were very bitter.

THE IDLER ABOUT TOWN.

THERE were two considerable sensations at the Academy of Music last week, which brought out a large amount of the fashionable people, the concourse and gaiety of which made a spectacle of brilliant crowd much feeling, and his admirers were present in abundance. The reception was warm and flattering, and bouquets flew around in profusion. It seems hardly credible, but Brignoli was as nervous as a young debutante, and did not recover his self-possession until the opera was half over. Then his beautiful voice and his exquisite method of using it sang with rare taste, feeling and passion. He is not, as an actor, to be compared to Mazzolini, but in the lyric art he very justly ranks as professional, and far superior, and that will always secure to him a large share of popularity.

The cast of Lucia di Horris was the second sensation, and we are glad to say it was a pleasurable one. The character was a debut, Lucia di Horris di Lammermoor," was the most favorable one she could have chosen, when her physique is considered. She is a small but graceful figure; her face is oval, her hair dark and her eyes blue. Her expression is that of childish simplicity, with nothing of grandeur or strong passions; and we doubt if her face has sufficient mobility for the expression of anything beyond mere grief. Her voice is of considerable compass, the higher notes being clear and ringing, and completely under her control. In quality it is pleasing, but it is very deficient in power. Its essentially a very light soprano, where it is pure, its lack of power is quite equal to the expression of the grand passions which the rôles of a prima donna abound with. She has been well educated, and vocalizes with great facility; indeed her brilliant flights of fioriture called forth repeated bursts of admiration and applause. She sang well, but both in her singing and her acting there is a want of spontaneity, of impulse, to such an extent that we feel that she does in the rivalry of schooling, and not that of an inner art, enthusiasm, which takes hold of the sympathies of the audience by its intense truthfulness and natural force. Still, throughout her whole performance there was nothing to condemn; we could only say that there was something wanting to give reality to the assumed character. Her dramatic naïve is not convincing, and in many of the scenes we could see in advance, for on Saturday night, before the performance began, placards were put up on the ticket-office, announcing that there was only standing-room.

Gottschalk gave two brilliant concerts last week, at which the Academy of Music was filled to crowding on each occasion. He played magnificently, and was received with the most hearty applause that ever fell out. He gives one concert this week and a matinee on Saturday.

Mr. J. R. Pattison's concert at Irving Hall, on Tuesday evening, was graced by a large and fashionable audience, and was a marked success in every respect. Mrs. Anna Bishop, Signor and Mr. S. Campbell sang very charmingly, and were severally honored with encores. But the most remarkable success in the concert, for it established him as a first-class artist and as a musician of the highest instincts, of rare intelligence and of generous appreciation. There are many who play the pianoforte better than Mr. Pattison, but there is a rising recurring popular a pause for the sake of high art. Mr. Pattison has that faith; he sings that which is good and beautiful, with no its merits, commands the attention and interest he has fairly earned, and, strong in this faith, he selected two pieces as the test of his progress among the people—pieces would deem as the least likely to please a miscellaneous audience. One was a Fugue in A minor, by Bach, the minor, by Sebastian Bach; the other, Henselts Concerto, in F minor, which more nearly fills the bill.

Preludes and Fugues are not popular as concert pieces, and rarely, if ever, do they receive the deafening second an encore. The Prelude was played with a quiet, subdued, and with such a fine touching that it secured instant attention. The Fugue which followed was performed in a manner to command every point and answering point was brought out with that delicacy of touching (without which no delicacy marked) that the whole plan and construction was rendered clear to the ear as the written notation is to the eye. No style of composition requires for its intelligent rendering such a delicacy and quality of finger as the Fugue. It is "succession of intricate points," and the player must not only know how to perform, and a weakness in any one of them would destroy the whole. The idea to be true to Pattison's manipulation exhibits no such weakness; each point was distinctly marked, and the whole was finely rendered, and the performance was worthy of sincere respect and cordial admiration. Henselt's Concerto is a fine work; clear and broad in its design, impassioned in its melodies, harmonious in form and well up to the mechanical difficulties which would tax the technique of the most accomplished pianist, though the difficulties are not apparent to the ear, because of the perfection with which they are overcome. Its execution requires the utmost delicacy, precision and quality of touch, and a sympathy with the composer and locality. They are not the mere bravura passages which display the skill of a performer in any style, but they are the connecting links in the chain of thought of the composer, and harmonize with the parts of its intellectual characteristics. It is hardly necessary to speak of the beauty of the composition, that is so generally admitted that we have simply to endorse it. We may, however, say that we must speak, and in terms of the warmest admiration. The orchestral accompaniments were finely and delicately played by many, under the conditions of hard labor, and the whole was most inspiring and grand in its work is re erred for the very few. It has all the characteristics of a composition of a great genius, and he who can interpret it must be in perfect rapport with the composer. In this respect Mr. Pattison was entirely successful. Every phase of sentiment was given its due proportion, and the whole held under in its character, or passionately emotional, or worthy enough to be called grand, and throughout the work with an correctness so absorbing, that no inner appreciation of the work could be more perfect. Its idiosyncrasy but was thoroughly understood and closely appreciated. He had the composition entirely in his heart, and his interpretation was as though the composer himself were present to approve his understand.

In intellectual reading, in passionate expression, and in mechanical execution, his performance left little to be desired. We are glad of the way paid to him our admiration for his devotion to the art, and our appreciation of his ambition to be known as the man above the mountainy glory of the popular applause, and by the accomplishment of the tremendous difficulties, we must add the just praise, that he has fully stood to the test as an artist. Mr. Pattison has, by this performance, won for himself a position among the most eminent of the artists of the classic art. No better proof of the entire success of his performance could be given than the record of the fact, that it was listened to by a miscellaneous audience with unbroken attention and with intelligence, and that the conclusion of each movement was the signal for the most hearty enthusiasm of delighted acquiesce. It was in fact an artist triumph, of which he may be justly proud.

The grand Testimonial Concert to Mr. L. F. Hatton, will be given at Irving Hall on Saturday evening next, March 5th. The artists who will support on this occasion are Miss Kellogg, Mrs. Hatton, Mr. Theodore Wollenhaupt—who is heard too rarely, but who has no peer as a violinist in this country, and but few equals in the old world—Carl Bergmann, Theodore Thomas, Mr. Hatton and the Arion Society. The choruses from the Liederkranz Society, the New York Mozart Association and the Arion Society will also assist; together with a full orchestra. Every lover of music in New York should crowd the concert, for there will be one of musical interest.

The Prince de Joinville and Social Hop of the Eighth Regiment, National Guard, took place at the Academy of Music on the 22d inst., and was a grand success for it exceed d any previous entertainment given by the organization. The Committee of Arrangements Capt. a La Casa Cabos, John Appleton and Robert Brown, were very active and energetic, and to their exertions the great success of the evening must be attributed. The music, by Reisenauer's Eighth Regiment Band, and Grafulla's Seventh Regiment Band, was very well rendered and brilliant. We have rarely passed a more entirely pleasant evening.

The performances at Wallack's and Winter Garden remain the same as last week. The new comedy, of "Taming a Butterfly," by Frank Wood and Augustus Daly, has made a great hit at the Olympic Theatre, and will be succeeded every night until further notice by Miss Richings, with her English Opera company, at the possession of Niblo's Garden this week, and produces Adolph Adam's charming opera, "The Postilion of Lonjumeau." One feature of great interest will be the appearance of the son of Edward Sr., who will be in the interval of new excellence.

Barnum's Museum is full of attractions this week, and the new drama performed in the Lecture Room is not the least of the attractions, for it has made a decided hit.

BOOK NOTICES.

Forms. By HENRY PETERSON. Philadelphia: Lippincott & Co.

A volume gotten up in Lippincott's best style, on luxurious tinted paper, the whole tone of the book predisposing in favor of its contents. The poetry is good throughout, but particularly so where patriotism is the theme, as in the stanza "Lyon" or "Gettysburg Song." "After the Battle," and "The Soldier's Story" are also very fine, but equally meritorious. In "Only a Woman's Hair" the book closes with a tender pathos and lengthy poem in one of the very best pages, entitled "The Rivals," and one of the earliest and happiest efforts of the author.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—Gold remains at an average of 160.

The Tribune says that the Treasurer of the Brooklyn Long Island Sanitary Fair had in hand on the evening of the 26th of Feb. $160,000.

The Connecticut Democratic State Convention have nominated Judge O. S. Seymour as their candidate for Governor.

The Union National Convention will meet at Baltimore on the 7th of June.

The British Commissioner at Halifax has decided that, even if there was a rebel commission authorizing Captain Semmes to cruise against our trade, he did not allow him to authorize others, and that the rebel steamer who fitted out and equipped, and by bringing in Parker with his commission after Parker was committed, there was no protection for the commissioners.

A delegation of New York Republican politicians are in Washington, to urge the President against the removal of Collector Barney.

The Secretary of the Treasury, on Commerce will, it is said, undoubtedly report in favor of the abrogation of the Reciprocity treaty.

The entire police force of St. Paul, Minnesota, has been removed by the mayor for general neglect of duty.

A "Citizens' Association" has been organized in this city for the purpose of taking the necessary steps for municipal offices out of the hands of primary electors, and securing candidates fitted by many considerations worthy.

The increase of crimes against the person in New York and other large cities has attracted the attention of several reflecting minds, and during the year of the war the diminution of these very offences was remarked by all, and attributed to the fact that the greater part of the rowdy population had gone to the war. The conduct of the returned soldiers is so exemplary, that it would be unjust to attribute a part of the present outrages to them; they are committed chiefly by deserters, who, attracted by the large bounties collected, but who, unable to endure the discipline of a regiment, took the first opportunity to desert.

Gen. Butler has issued an order placing the churches and chapels of his Department under the control of Provost Marshal. This is to arrest, it is the polnt all disloyal clergymen. It has caused considerable excitement in ecclesiastical circles. The order is founded upon one issued by Stanton, Nov. 20, 1863.

Recruiting has proceeded during the last three weeks at the rate of about 300 per day.

The German comprise, according to the last census, a large part of the total population of the United States. Wisconsin embraces the largest number by far of any of the States—23.00 per cent., and Maine the smallest—0.06 per cent. Only 7.66 of the population of Missouri are Teutons.

The Government have put off the conscription practically to the 1st of April, by providing that boundaries shall not be paid at that time. Gen. Dodge, Chairman of Military Committee in the House, has so stated.

The House Naval Committee will visit New London, Conn., next week, to examine the boats with reference to its adaptability as the site of a Navy Yard.

The subject of a modification of the revenue laws is still in the hands of a sub-committee of the Committee of Ways and Means. A report will soon be prepared, altering the duties on tobacco.

The current rise in rents in New York has driven many families to the suburban cities of Williamsburg, Brooklyn and Hoboken. The latter is especially a favorite place, chiefly on account of its pleasant walks and freedom from all roughness. Here, in many owing to the excellent administration of justice, which is fearless and prompt. Judges Parker and Pope are great conservators of the peace there—executing the law, which makes no distinction between the wealthy and the poor; he is a terror to evil-doers, both native and foreign. Much also is due to the quiet character of the population, which is mainly German.

Western.—A Dr. Adolfus, who arrived in Cincinnati from Europe three years ago, and represented himself as having been a private tutor in Lord Lyons in Russell's family, has, it is alleged, been swindling the people of that city by means of forged Paris exchange notes, &c., to a large amount. He opened a school in Cincinnati, having a fine address, and good address, gained the confidence of the people generally. He is supposed to have escaped to Europe.

A soldier writes from Chattanooga of an incident that occurred there on Sept. 8. "We are marching Sunday, at 4 o'clock, p.m., with our coats buried and in their black cases, when we perceive about a dozen men rush in one of those very interesting Southern pretty, watching us as we passed. We had just notify by one of our file rangers and stepped out to the front and said: 'Boys, we want to see the end of this.' Oh, sure shouts as well as the men took sides, nits without number went into the air, and the skirmish lasted for a good hour, and the women all cried."

Personal.—Gen. Rosecrans is busy systematizing the military organization of Missouri, and is trying to make a complete tour of the State for that purpose.

Gov. Curtin, of Iowa, passes a proclamation prohibiting persons liable to the draft leaving the State. He has issued 1,000 subpœnas for witnesses to go to Idaho.

Miss Henrietta Sulzer and Signor Hinfelt Bischi were married by Mayor Gunther on the 22nd Feb.

Senator Tulee, although an active conspirator against the Union in the closing part of Buchanan's term, has now no hold on office or consideration during the war; he can consequently claim exemption under Lincoln's amnesty.

Gen. Sigel has been once more placed in active command. Western Virginia have been assigned him.

The New Orleans Era, in describing one of the orators at a Free Soil meeting there, says: "Gen. Shan Jones possesses by hereditary descent and the special gift of Providence, or from constant exercise a most powerful and effective voice. It is handled to a single pair—and has the voice of a Stentor, with no regard to its legitimate use; and on this occasion, when he got fairly warmed up by—whatever it might have been—he spoke so loud it was quite impossible to hear him."

Mr. Buckley, of Goshen, Conn., received a week or two ago a telegramble message, saying that his son, of the 5th Conn. Artillery, was dead. He immediately left to procure his son's body, but found him alive and recovering. He dispatch having been written "no wonder." The excitement and reaction has an effect upon the doctor, that he fell sick and died four days thereafter.

Obituary.—The London correspondent of the New York Courier says: "Mr. Bancroft, the American who will read with regret of the death of Miss Ackers, which took place on Saturday last. She was the daughter of the poet Proctor, who is not only better known under the name of Barry Cornwall, but by some of whose lyrics have a wonderful charm. Miss Proctor died at the age of 40, and was a Roman Catholic a devoted Roman Catholic, and most of her poems for the last 15 years have been specially meritorious. In the most popular of all her poems is the "Question of Baptism," which is a beautiful piece.

—The correspondent of the Independence Belge says: "The decease is announced of Mme. Anne Jeanette Colbert, at the age of over 80. The marquise, whose husband was Sardinian Ambassador to the Court of Napoleon I., was herself formerly reader to the Empress Josephine. She was a distant relative of the family of the Great Colbert. Her immense fortune was almost entirely devoted to charitable purposes. She also founded a refuge for young women; it was also she who erected the statue of Jean Bart during the prison of Spielberg, and who, in order not to humiliate him, raised the statue of Napoleon I. surmounted by victories in his later writings, and gave to them the most prodigious character. She also erected that of Lafayet in the tragedy of 'Romans Moro.' Mme. Colbert left by will to the city of Dunkirk more than 8,00 000 francs to the poor, and to have named after her a street in that city.

—Major-Gen. Randall, New York State Militia, died at Buffalo, Feb. 26th.

Accidents and Offences.—Major Stone, of Chatham, has been found guilty of committing an outrage on Miss Cunningham, in the performance of the high social position of both parties, the trial occasioned the greatest excitement.

Five large ice houses at Fresh Pond, Cambridge, Mass., were destroyed by incendiary fire on Wednesday evening. The property of Mr. Benjamin Hethinger & Co., and contained 100,000 tons of ice, worth $100,000.

Nearly a year ago, or on March 12, 1863, a Swedish sleeper, named Andrew Johnson, in the Grand street, Brooklyn, E. D., committed suicide, endeavoring a crime to conceal, where his wife and a wealthy butcher, Christopher Smith, doing business at Grand street and Union avenue, with whom his family at 258 Lorimer street. Last week, Smith and his widow were tried for murder, convicted and closed, taking with them $25,000 and embarking for California. Mrs. Johnson, a grown-up daughter are left partially unprovided for.

—A Portland paper states, with reference to the destruction by fire of the house of Mr. Deering, has been removed from the dangerous ledge upon which the steamer Lewiston struck, and is now in safe and secure harbor.

—On the morning of the 21st two children playing on the ice in the vicinity of Harlem bridge, broke through and were drowned in the river. One by Mr. R. H. Wunder, doing business on Bleecker street, Mr. Wunder, at the time of the accident, was in his buggy, driving near the bank of the river, and was attracted to the scene of action by the cries of the children. It was with considerable personal danger and great difficulty that he succeeded in the rescue of the shore. Learning the residence of the parents, which was near by, he drove the children home in his buggy, and wrapping the smallest one, a little girl, about six years old, in his own overcoat, carried to their home.

—A young German, named Eichsler, having been jilted by a woman, who married another, went to the lodging house of the latter, and invited them to partake of some wine, which he had prepared. Mistaking the bottle containing laudanum, Eichsler jumped up, and fired at the woman's husband, but missing the object aimed at, the ball from his pistol entered the bill lodged in the wall. He then went to Washington square, and blew out his own room. Next morning he was found dead. The woman is expected to recover.

—A man named John Mitchell was stabbed early Saturday morning, at a fire company ball at the Apollo Rooms, Bowery, by a man named Fox, the affair in ball-rooms this week.

—Benjamin Marks, a druggist in New York, has been arrested, charged with administering oil of vitriol, extract of cotton and laudanum to a man named Kindler. It brought on vomiting fits, which killed her instantly. Marks is in custody awaiting trial.

—The mate of the Victory, Baisley, from Liverpool, has been arrested, charged with killing one of the passengers, named Ryan, by inhuman treatment. Baisley is in custody awaiting trial.

—The testimony before the coroner's jury, in the case of the drowning of the Bohemian girls, for carelessness or want of skill on the part of the officers of the steamship, Cuyler, was to the effect that the vessel which passed the Bohemian before she struck, was going at a high rate of speed, and that the boat made the lights look much further off than they really were.

Art, Science and Literature.—M. Barboux, a manufacturer of Poitiers, is said to have made a discovery which will be of great importance in the manufacture of paper. He has succeeded in manufacturing paper of excellent quality from vegetables such as oak, walnut, pine and chestnut, and from vegetables, such as hemp, flax, straw, &c. Samples of various descriptions of paper are exhibited at the office of the Courrier du Dimanche, and the Bordeaux assets that his invention will cause a reduction of from 50 to 60 per cent. in the price of paper.

—A patent has just been taken out for perfume, by the extract of which the solid pannicles after the manufacture of soap are saved. The perfume can be applied to those who read will rise up and call the inventor blessed, as the present odor of paper-cutters will be removed.

—Improvements are made in France with a new kind of rocket, which is to prevent the enemy from working. The rocket, besides having a most brilliant light, illuminates a distance of 30 metres every 1st. rd. It offers the additional advantage of finally bursting like a bombard, and carrying wholesale destruction among the assailants.

Foreign.—The formidable steam-ram which is now approaching completion in G. Glasgow, Scotland, has been purchased for the Danish Government.

—A musical composition was performed by the Danes. The present is a march, which has been dedicated to the Prince of Wales, her eighty-six of 500 horse power, and we has a crew of 600 men. She will be very fast and fitting for another vessel to come into collision with.

—The Albany Army Relief Bazaar has on exhibition the pistol which burst the first number of the Revolution, presented to John P. Putnam, a grandson of Gen. Putnam. It will be remembered that Major Putnam, riding among the crowd on inspection day, was thrown, shouted, "Disperse, ye rebels! and fired his pistol in their midst. His horse was shortly shot him, cut for managed to escape. The pistol were found in the saddle and became the property of Gen. Putnam, and were worn by him during the Revolution.

—Considerable surprise has been expressed in political circles that the Queen should withhold her patches from the British Government which Mr. Seward laid him to deliver. It would seem, however, that Mr. Seward himself afterwards admitted the prudence of Mr. Adams's action. As it was, the unmoderate of Seward's dispatches drew from Earl Russell the following reply: "There are, however, passages in your letter of the 16th, as well as in some of your former ones, which appear to us to proceed on simply an intimation of how representing to our Great Britain, on the part of the Government of the United States unless steps are taken by her Majesty's Government which they do not anticipate, or say what law, which you consider as insufficient, is at once to be made more stringent, on both of her Majesty's Government, frankly to state to you that her Majesty's Government will not be prepared to alter the consideration either to overstep the limits of the law or to introduce any new law by which they may be enabled to carry out, for reasons of their own, think proper to adopt. Her Majesty will not shrink from any consequences of such a decision."

The Danes have been compelled to retreat before the advance of the Austrians and Prussians, the disparity of force being so great as to render a conflict utterly hopeless. With the usual unreasonableness of barbarians, the inhabitants of Copenhagen had shown their indignation by rioting which had the effect of inducing the King to recall Ten. De Moss, who had abandoned the Danewerk without the slightest resistance. There was a report in Paris that the regular race was so great as to compel the Duke of Dunbarton to withdraw, but it was contradicted in London. Lord Russell, in Parliament, denies that the British Government has given any promise to Denmark. By the execution of the strongly fortified Danewerk, Denmark will not be compelled to take place in Schleswig where they could possibly make a stand, especially as the movements of the Austrian and Prussian troops. It is generally understood in Europe that the Danes have been forced by the Powers, and that if it is to be recovered at all it must be by diplomacy and not by arms. The Emperor Napoleon has proposed as an armistice to the belligerents, on the basis of the Treaty of London of 1852, with the exception of the island of Alsen, by the Danes. This suggestion has appeared to be favorably received by Sweden.

—From Paris, we learn that Miss Adelina Patti continues to be the star of the operatic world. She is supported by Mario, Graziani, Bettini, and the theatre is nightly filled, although all the seats in the lower part of the house are taken at the rate of 20 francs each. Miss Carlotta Patti, who spent the month of January in Paris, left for Italy during the time to visit private, returns here in March to give a series of grand concerts. She will be assisted by Sivori, Rosalal and Meyerbeer at Paris. The latter professes to have left the Opera for ever hearer, and he regretted that her lameness would prevent him from hearing her like a "Lucrezia."

—The steamship Illinois has arrived, bringing Liverpool dates to the 20th inst. By her we have also later information from Nicaragua, Panama and Peru. Minister Dodge has left for Peru, and Minister Cole, from Carlotta Patti, who spent the month of January in Paris, left for Italy during the time to visit private, returns here in March to give a series of grand concerts. She will be assisted by Sivori, Rosalal and Meyerbeer at Paris. The latter professes to have left the Opera for ever hearer, and he regretted that her lameness would prevent him from hearing her like a "Lucrezia."

—The steamship Illinois has arrived, bringing Liverpool dates to the 20th inst. By her we have also later information from Nicaragua, Panama and Peru. Minister Dodge has left for Peru, and Minister Cole, from Carlotta Patti, who spent the month of January in Paris, left for Italy during the time to visit private, returns here in March to give a series of grand concerts. She will be assisted by Sivori, Rosalal and Meyerbeer at Paris. The latter professes to have left the Opera for ever hearer, and he regretted that her lameness would prevent him from hearing her like a "Lucrezia."

—From Paris, we learn that Miss Adelina Patti continues to be the star of the operatic world. She is supported by Mario, Graziani, Bettini, and the theatre is nightly filled, although all the seats in the lower part of the house are taken at the rate of 20 francs each. Miss Carlotta Patti, who spent the month of January in Paris, left for Italy during the time to visit private, returns here in March to give a series of grand concerts. She will be assisted by Sivori, Rosalal and Meyerbeer at Paris. The latter professes to have left the Opera for ever hearer, and he regretted that her lameness would prevent him from hearing her like a "Lucrezia."

Chit-Chat.—The street pedlers in Mexico have peculiarities in their traffic as well as those who in this country. Here is a specimen from the Mexican poultry dealer who offers ducks for sale in probably more musical than the crying out, "Hucks! oh, my darling ducks!"

The Paris Punch, "what is called an agreeable man, and the consequences of enjoying such a reputation. I have dined out 1,456 times in 40 years, at times, and my name is recorded on 1,456 silver mugs, and at every dinner I gave I gave away 85 brides and as many dressing-cases. I have drunk 14,600 bottles of wine, 6,500 times, and in the course of 14 years, 2,375 3s. 6d. for cab hire. I have had 1,456 indigestions, 1,456 fits of the blues, and never received them back again. I gave 1,456 dinners, and was invited to dine 1,456 myself, on an average 26 times during the season. I have had 1,456 nights of sleeplessness, and contracted rheumatism, from consenting to sit in draughts to oblige other people. I have received 1,456 letters to decline bills from friends in Government offices, and I am now going to commence a novel, to endeavor myself an insolvent, preparatory to my departure for Australia."

The following anecdote of Dickens and Thackeray is given in the Cornhill Magazine. It seems that these gentlemen had a quarrel existing between them, and for some length of time they were not speaking. They were accidentally sitting next to each other, both hanging up their coats together at the same moment. Thackeray first noticed and saw each other, and the unrestrained impulse of both was to hold out the hand of friendship and renew their friendship. The hearty grasp the differences which estranged them passed away. Dickens was a great consolation to Mr. Dickens when he saw his great brother laid in the grave. He was a pall-bearer.

—The citizens of Springfield have sold Beecher Island, the scene of the overthrowing of desperadoes and cashiakers, and rushing in to hear him speak.

—A remarkably intelligent young botanist of our acquaintance asserts it as his firm conviction, strengthened by long and careful observation, and then by his private experience, that plants have a sympathetic nature, and are capable of manifesting, in general, and of womankind, perhaps, in particular, the illustrations of this axiom. In accordance with your shrewdness the indisputable fact that many a delicate young plant has withered away in the parlor window from being kissed under the mistletoe, has yet not been fully appreciated, and consequently has not been formed under the rose.

—The first Russian newspaper was published in 1703, and Peter the Great was its censor editor. The principal articles consisted of personal anecdotes of its editorial compositor, but in correcting proofs as to the spelling of words, or the existence, on which are marks and alterations in his own hand.

The New Carpet.

"I CAN hardly spare it, Jane; but as you have so set your heart upon it, why I suppose I must."

The young wife looked with rapture upon the shining gold pieces.

"I knew you would!" she said to herself; "how rich it makes me feel. It seems a great deal to pay for a carpet; but gold is worth gold," as the saying is, "and one pays for what one gets," she added sententiously.

Jane, dashing with eager anticipation, looked her prettiest, and stirring herself in her best, was about to make the long-desired purchase, when a visitor suddenly entered.

"Oh, Jane—dear Jane!" and a pale young creature sat panting on the sofa: "We are in such trouble, such a dreadful trouble! Can you help us? Do you think we could borrow twenty pounds from you, husband? Couldn't you get it for us? You know you said I might always rely upon you when trial came; and poor Charles expects every moment to be arrested, and he is so ill."

"Dear, dear!" said Jane, her good heart suddenly contracting. "Edward told me only this morning not to ask him for only money for three months, and she gathered her purse up tightly in her handkerchief. "I'm sure, I—I only—could oblige you with pleasure, but I expect Edward is really pained. Can't you get it elsewhere? Have you tried?"

"Yes," answered her friend, despondingly, "I've tried everywhere. People know that Charles is ill and cannot repay immediately. Mr. J—— knows our circumstances yet he insists upon that money. Oh, it is cruel! It is so hard!"

Her pitiful voice and the big tears running like rain down her pallid cheeks almost unnerved Jane's resolution; but that resolution was a beautiful carpet she had promised herself so long, and so often, with pleasure, disappointed of its possession, that she could not give it up. She turned away her heart, and that he would urge her to self-denial. But what she would not see him—if she did, it was all over with the carpet.

"Well," said her poor friend, in a desponding voice, rising to go, "I'm sorry you can't help me; I know you would if you could, and it is something to know that. Good-by, dear Jane; I hope you will never know what it is to want and suffer."

Jane's heart smote her as the new carpet looked as the sun streamed in on its wreathed flowers, its colors of fawn, and blue, and crimson, its soft velvety richness, and the poor girl's head fell Jane at the pictures of her neighbors. It was a bargain, too; she had saved six pounds in its purchase, and bought a pair of elegant vases for the window-seat.

"I declare," said her husband, "this looks like comfort; but it spoils all my pleasure to think of poor Charles's misfortune. The poor fellow is ill."

Jane gave a real sharp scream, and the flush faded from her face.

"Husband, husband, I——! For the paltry sum of twenty pounds, he arrested Charles, who ruptured a blood-vessel, and lived scarcely an hour after! Oh, I know he has been weak and ill; this long while."

"And Mary!" issued from Jane's bloodless lips.

"She has a dead child; and they tell me her life is despaired of. Why on earth didn't they send to me? I could easily have spared the money (or borrowed it) and not have spent it on the last guinea they should have had it. Poor fellow—poor Mary!"

And I might have saved it—all!" shrieked Jane, sinking upon her knees on the rich carpet. "Oh, Edward, will God ever forgive me for my heartlessness? Oh, all call have mercy on this tears begged me to aid her—and I—I had the whole sum in my very hand—and coldly turned her away. Oh, what shall I do? What shall I do?"

In the very agony of grief, poor Jane would receive no comfort. In vain her husband strove to console her; in vain he had a hear a word in extenuation of her selfish conduct.

"I shall never forget poor Mary's tears; I shall never forget her sorrowful face—I shall see it when my dying day! Oh, take it away—that hateful carpet! I have purchased it with the death of my dearest friend! Oh, how could I be so cruel? I shall never be happy again, never—never!"

Years have passed since then, and Mary, with her husband, lie together under the green sod of the churchyard, and Jane has grown to middle age in the light brown of her tresses; but she lives in a home of splendor, and none know her but to bless her. Every day the little sprightly Mary or household, dear to her as her own sweet children—she is the orphan child of those who have rested side by side for ten long years.

Edward is rich; but prosperity has not hardened his heart. His hand never tires of giving out money to the needy, and Jane is the ministering angel of the needy. The "new carpet," long since old, is secretly preserved as a memento of sorrowful but remembrance, and many a weary hour serves to its silent influence the prosperity that has turned want's widerness into an Eden of happiness.

A BALLOON DUEL.

PERHAPS the most remarkable duel ever known took place in Paris in the month of March in its tone, and could hardly have occurred under any other than a French state of society. M. le Grandpre and M. de Beaufort had a quarrel at a ball-room concerning a lady engaged at the Imperial Opera. The quarrel ended in a duel to settle their respective claims; and, in order that the best of angry passions should not interfere with the steadiness of aim of the combatants, they postponed the duel for a month, the lady agreeing to bestow her hand upon the victor. On the day fixed on either was killed; or, at all events, this was reported to be the case next day at noon. The duellists were to fight in the air. Two balloons were prepared, and each took up his opponent, De Grandpre and his second entered the car of the balloon, and in the car of the other M. de Beaufort and his friend. At the signal the balloons were cut adrift, and as each one's balloon rose it was pierced through with a sword by M. de Grandpre fired and cast a ball through the ripped balloon. The balloon enlarged the car descended with frightful rapidity, and Lepique and his second were dashed to pieces. De Beaufort continued his ascent triumphantly and remained at his aerial voyage so ceaselessly at a distance of seven leagues from Paris.

A LADY must think she has something valuable in her head; we envy people from the number of locks she keeps upon it.

VIRGINIA FARMER COMING FROM THE MILL.—DRAWN BY E. FORBES.

AN OLD VIRGINIA FARMER COMING FROM THE MILL.

THE picture of Virginia life speaks admirably the exhausted condition of the agriculture of the Old Dominion. Few parts of the world have declined as rapidly as Virginia. Her soil exhausted by tobacco, and unable to recuperate under a system of slave labor, no longer proved remunerative to the farmer. Scanty crops, untilled acres, mortgaged homesteads met you at every step. The ruinous state of the mass of the property holders, whom the constant sale of slaves could not save, was one of the great impulses that led them to rush into the rebellion. Ruin has overtaken most of them now, and the pictures of old Virginia life will, in the new era dawning upon her, be looked upon with surprise ten years hence. With the peace a tide of emigration will flow to her valleys and avail themselves of all the natural advantages to increase her wealth.

THE ARMY OVEN.

THE bake oven which our Special Artist has deemed worthy of sketching is a most useful Western invention. It is capable of baking 700 loaves per day, burning one-third of a cord of wood, and requiring the services of four men. The bread is excellently baked, and wherever flour is available the soldiers are furnished with it fresh. It is conveyed by a horse or mule attached to shafts. Eastern regiments, unsupplied with this invention, have to do-end, even in the presence of flour, on hard tack.

THE ARMY OVEN.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BONWILL.

EXPLOSION OF A PAPERMILL AT SCHUYLERVILLE.

WE give a sketch of the ruins of a papermill at Schuylerville, destroyed by a fearful boiler explosion, on the 25th. A bleach boiler, 7 feet in diameter and 30 feet long, exploded, taking away the upper part of the papermill, and passing through the post office, an oyster saloon and some other buildings in the course of its progress, killing a man and his wife. It did damage to the amount of $30,000.

THE JAIL AT NEWBERNE.

AMONG the interesting edifices at Newberne, which attracted such general attention a short time since, is the jail, of which we give an illustration, from an accurate sketch made by our Special Artist.

ARRANGED in the order of natural age, William, King of Wurtemberg heads the list of sovereigns, having attained the ripe age of 82. Ferdinand, landgrave of Hesse Homburg, aged 80, is the next, and Henry Nicky-zeroski, prince of the junior line of Reuss, stands between him and good, honest Leopold, King of the Belgians, whose age is 73. Next to Leopold, comes the Pope Pius IX., whose age is 71. Napoleon III. (aged 55) has the sixteenth, and Victoria (aged 44) the twenty-sixth place in this list, of which the two lowest places are occupied by young George, King of Greece, and Henry XXII., prince of Reuss of the old house. These two young men are aged 18 and 17 respectively.

EXPLOSION OF A PAPER MILL AT SCHUYLERVILLE, NEW YORK.—FROM A PHOT. BY C. H. CLARK.

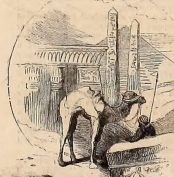
THE JAIL AT NEWBERNE, N. C.—FROM A SKETCH BY F. H. SCHELL.

EGYPT.

BY JENNIE K. GRIFFITH.

WHAT can we guess of those old Egyptians,
And the strange hieroglyphical stones,
Except, as affecting to read the inscriptions,
We dare also label the bones?

Startled, I gaze at the old mummy cases,
Awed, yet so longing to know
How those still hearts and inscrutable faces
Looked on the long ago.



Did the one beat with the loves and the passions
That charm and appal us to-day?
And the other, made fairer by old time fashions,
Sparkle in triumph gay?

Here is a foot, and so beautiful is it,
Daintily holding its place,
With instep so shapely, so arched and exquisite,
No foot of to-day may outgrace.

Here is a hand, too, small, deft and slender,
That dimpling with life, and pressed
By passionate love-kisses, eager and tender,
Thrilled to its mistress' breast!

Did the one step, with the grace of a goddess,
Proudly wide palaces through?
And the other shine out, on the robe or the bodice,
Jewelled and ravishing too?

Ah! all is lost in the silent abysses,
Joy of theirs, sorrow and ill,
God was their Father, and their secret his is,
He has kept, and he keeps it still.

"THE FREEDMAN."—FROM THE STATUETTE BY J. Q. A. WARD, N. A.

A FORTUNATE MISFORTUNE.

By A. Brock.

DID you ever, reader, have either of your little schoolfellows ask you that wonderful query, "Where was Washington when he blew out the light?" If you have, you will, of course, remember the answer given with such a triumphant air, "In the dark." And that was just where Phil Bradford was on the night of the 16th December; most decidedly in the dark.

Warm-hearted Phil had received a note from some anonymous person in the morning of that day, telling him of the destitute condition of a widow and family in ——— lane, and begging his assistance immediately. He had ample means for so doing and a generous heart to urge him on; and now we find him walking up and down the street, searching among the numerous ones for ——— lane. It was in the worst part of the city; filthy and forlorn. The street lamps were never lit, and the houses were piled together as though the daylight, as much as possible, was excluded to keep the pasture-by from discovering the misery and wickedness of the place. The grogshop on the corner was one of the haunts frequented alike by wretched men and women; and now boisterous shouts of laughter, mingled with oaths of the most fearful character, issued from the place. Sabbath and church were alike unknown to them, and as the succeeding months and years rolled by, the vice of wickedness never slackened within that magic circle, for as one disappeared from the accustomed haunts another came to fill his place. The vilest was king, and the others his prime ministers. Almost with a shudder Phil passed the open door of this place. Glancing in, as he did so, he saw one of the men start and touch his neighbor on the shoulder, and then both turn as though coming towards the door. Phil could not for his life have helped the involuntary thrill of fear that rushed through him, and heartily cursing his stupidity in not bringing a companion, he determined to return home, and on the next evening provide himself with arms and a friend, and continue his search, although doubts began to enter his mind as to the truth of the appeal. Glancing back as he turned the street, he thought he discovered the forms of two persons in the darkness following him. With quickened steps he hastened to gain the lighted thoroughfare, but what was his horror on turning the corner to find himself again opposite the old grogshop. He was lost! lost in the den of thieves. But he dared not hesitate for one moment; his two pursuers were gaining upon him silently and with cat-like caution. Rushing down the street opposite in direction to the one he had previously taken, he never slackened his speed until a projecting wall denied his further advance. With a fainting heart he turned to retrace his steps, but the sight of the two ruffians, now boldly rushing towards him, sent the blood flying through his frame, and making a dash to the right he plunged through the open door of the house. Upstairs he went, until at the top floor he paused for breath, and hearing no footsteps following he stopped to think. Where was he to go if they did follow him; upon the roof? No! that would never do. There were voices talking, perhaps he might find friends and assistance in some of the rooms on that floor. Cautiously advancing to the end of the hall he listened, to discover if possible the character of the inmates.

"Mother, dear mother, do not despair, God will surely help us. Does He not say that a sparrow shall not fall without His will? Certainly He will not forget us."

"You are right, my dear child, I will not doubt and though the way seems dark, I will yet steadfastly put my trust in Him, and watch for the light at the end. We will try again to-morrow, daughter, if we cannot find some means of support. Oh! if your father had only never left us, what comfort and happiness we would have known. He was a kind father to you, Lettie."

"Do not let us talk of him, mother," sobbed Lettie; "the remembrance of our former days, when, as a happy family, we sat round the fireside at evening, makes our present lot——" here she paused in terrified silence, as a confused scuffling of feet, with muttering curses outside the door, met her ear. With pallid faces they sat listening for some time, when a loud shriek nearly paralyzed them. A few minutes passed in quietness, except now and then a word from one of the ruffians.

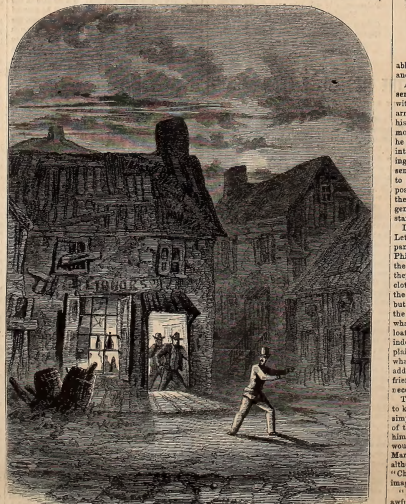
"Dick, just hold him over on his side, while I search this pocket. D—n the rascal, he did not bring so much chink as I thought he would, the soft-headed fool."

"I guess he didn't find the widow, Bill, eh!" and the fellow chuckled; "if he hadn't passed the kid we would have missed him, for I did not think he would get here till later. I say, Bill, there's that ring on his finger, don't leave that."

"Sure enough; but, Dick, I wonder if anybody lives in this bunk. I believe I'll look. It wouldn't do to have anybody to tell tales. I guess there must be; the door is locked, and we had better make tracks rapid. I thought the house was empty, come along—quick time!"

The sound of hasty footsteps down the stairs told of their departure, and the mother and daughter for the first time drew a long breath and began in whispered tones to converse. Presently a low moaning sound caught their ear, and Lettie, with the quick instinct of youthful womanhood, understood directly that the villains had left their prey behind them, perhaps in a dying condition, and started to go to him, but her mother prevented her.

"Wait a moment, daughter, I will go with you; whoever it is, perhaps they will respect my gray hairs."



"Do not be alarmed, mother; did you not hear the ruffians say that he came to help a widow? One who would risk his life in this way to do a charitable act would not certainly harm the defenceless," and she opened the door, followed by her mother.

A cry of horror escaped her lips at the sight presented to her gaze. On the floor lay poor Phil, with the blood settling in pools around him. One arm was bent under him, and the other lay across his face where the assassin had thrown it after removing the ring. As Mrs. Markham reached him he half opened his eyes, but with a half moan sank into insensibility. Lettie ran for water, and bathing his face and head, finally brought him to his senses, but all their united efforts were unavailing to get him in the room. With all the tenderness possible they cared for him that night, staunching the blood from his wounds, and soothing him with gentle words, and early in the morning Lettie started for the doctor.

Doctor Robinson was a kindly man, and on Lettie's telling her tale, he immediately accompanied her home. When he arrived there he found Phil in a high fever and slightly delirious. With the help of the assistant he had brought with him they got him on the bed, and cutting loose his clothes in various places, succeeded in getting at the wounds. They, he said, were not dangerous, but the severe shock when he fell, together with the loss of blood, made great care necessary. But what was Mrs. Markham to do? With hardly a loaf of bread in the house and no money? It was indeed a question. Setting aside all delicacy, she plainly told the doctor her inability to get for him what he needed, and begged him to find his friends, adding, "I will gladly nurse him, doctor, if his friends will only provide his medicines and other necessaries."

Together they searched his pockets for some token to know him by, but only found a note addressed simply to Phil, but bearing the name and address of the writer. Thither the doctor went and found him to be the intimate friend and chum of the wounded man. Together they returned to Mrs. Markham's, but Phil was too sick to recognize him, although in his ravings he continually called—"Charlie! Charlie!" and would then commence an imaginary conversation with him.

"Come, Charlie, come out and take a walk; 'tis awfully hot in here. I feel as though my head was on fire. Now, like a good fellow, come along, don't stand arguing. I say, Charlie, old fellow did you see that girl that went by just now? I like her first-rate; she must be very poor, though, for her clothes are worn and that old shawl she wears is'nt worth sixpence. I wish I knew who she was, I really would make her acquaintance, that's sure. Why, there she comes back again; what eyes, so gentle, and yet they burn right through my head. There, she's going away again; catch her, Charlie," and he made a spring for Lettie, who had been coming and going before the bed, supplying the wants of her mother, who was trying to wash the blood from his hair, at the same time that she cooled his head. Tears rolled down Charlie's face at the pitiable sight of that noble, generous fellow's prostration; and, turning to leave, he left with Mrs. Markham the means for the purchasing of every want for him, promising to come again as soon as business would permit. The next day he called again, and, finding Phil a little easier, he found time to examine the appearance of his entertainers.

The Good Samaritan chased by Thieves.

Listening to the attempted Murder.

Mrs. Markham was tall and slender, and evidently a gentlewoman. Time and trouble had marked her face with furrows and silvered her hair. Her garb was of the poorest quality, but her manners betokened the lady still.

Lettie was about seventeen years old, and had a face that would attract in any place. Black hair, arranged in glossy bands on each side of her face; large blue eyes and a clear complexion; a moderate sized mouth, with ruby lips and very white teeth. She was a little below the medium height, and eminently graceful.

Charlie was rather taken aback on finding such inhabitants of that dreary abode, and on conversing with Lettie made up his mind that poor Phil was not so poor after all, if he only had his senses; and was almost willing to take his place, excepting the delirious part.

Days and even weeks passed before Phil was considered convalescent, and Charlie Manners was his almost constant companion, hovering over him with a brotherly love until he slept, and then hastening to Lettie's side.

Charlie and Lettie were fast becoming victims of Cupid's mesh; but Lettie was shy and gracefully kept at a distance. Charlie, with a lover's ardor, pressed on, and daily lessened the distance between them. It was truly a demonstration of the old song:

> "He, brave as a lion; she, shy as the fawn."

Many were the pleasant conversations the little party enjoyed before Phil was allowed to leave the couch. Books were supplied and read aloud. The papers, each day, must be carefully perused, and politics discussed. Comical anecdotes were related and laughed over, and all seemed well; but Mrs. Markham, she could not but doubt for the future.

Five years previous to the present time her husband had gone with the masses to California, leaving her an annual income for her support until his return. This had been snatched away from her by a villain in the guise of a friend, and now they were destitute. Some word they had received from the absent husband and father, with a hint of a large sum of money forwarded, but as it had never come, and it was three years since a letter had been received, they had given up their hopes.

They had been living in the poorest style on the little they could earn by the needle, and with the departure of their guest must resume their employment. Some of her trouble revealed itself on her face, and Phil, with a view to rendering assistance, begged her to tell him the cause of her trouble.

The tears started to her eyes, but, assured of his earnest sympathy, she began, telling him of the departure of her husband and her subsequent want.

Phil listened, with an eager eye and flushed cheek, until she spoke of the money, when, with a quick cry, he sprang from the couch.

"Thank, God, madam, I have found you! The money is all safe," and he sank back again, fainting with excitement.

Mrs. Markham, with hands uplifted and quivering lips, awaited a further explanation. He gave it as follows:

Mr. Markham had sent money by an intimate friend, Phil's father, who was returning East. He had been taken sick on the road, and obliged to remain several weeks at a small town, with Phil as nurse. Getting better, they proceeded on their journey, but had not gone far when a relapse occurred, and they were obliged again to stop at a town where, after a short illness, he died, giving the money into Phil's care. The delay had been disastrous to Mrs. Markham, and on arriving at her residence he found she had moved; and though every effort was made no trace could be found of her. Six months after, Mr. Markham, having a sudden flow of good luck, returned, and was almost frantic at the disappearance of his wife and child. Another unsuccessful search was made, and then the almost brokenhearted man, giving the money again into Phil's hands, returned to California, from whence he wrote every month, in the hope of receiving information of his family.

The shock was almost too great for Mrs. Markham, but joy, they say, never kills. And so, a few months after, we find them in a retired portion of the city, living in a style suited to their education and refinement. Mr. Markham, to whom they had written immediately, is daily expected home, and in one year Lettie is to become Mrs. Manners. From Markham to Manners is but a small change, and Lettie laughingly tells her young friends that the convenience of not being obliged to alter the letter marked on all her clothes was one reason why she was induced to think of Charlie as a husband (she never tells what the other reason is); but when these same friends quote the old couplet to her:

> "Change the name and not the letter,
> 'Tis change for worse and not for better,"

she only pouts and declares her nonbelief in all old saws and sayings. Folks are wiser now, she thinks. Charlie's parents and sister are delighted with the future member of their home circle, and Lettie thinks Jennie Manners is one of the dearest, sweetest, most lovable girls she ever met. So also (on the sly) does our friend Phil, though I cannot say that he ever told her so, although the other day when Charlie happened to go suddenly into the back parlor, he thought he saw—in fact, he was sure he saw—Phil quickly draw his arm away from Jennie's waist, while she began very earnestly to smooth her hair. Charlie, like a kindhearted fellow, was of course blind to the fact, and made all possible haste out of the room.

One evening, a short time after Mr. Markham's happy return, Phil rushed into the house, all excitement. A notorious burglar and ruffian had been caught, and was in confinement. A superior diamond ring had been found upon his person and the owner advertised for. Phil answered the advertisement, and finding the ring to be his, denounced the fellow as one of his assassinators. He afterwards acknowledged his crime and made known his companions. They had written the note begging for assistance, with the intention of waylaying and robbing him. He had answered it sooner than they expected, and but for the accidental sight of him through the open door of the grogshop would perhaps have escaped. Phil never recovered the watch and chain or the money which was stolen from him, and they might have kept the ring, as it appears he did not want it, for we saw it sparkling on Jennie's finger a short time after.

There was a double wedding in the spring, and both brides were lovely. It was hard to choose between them, it being simply a matter of taste as to whether black hair and dark blue eyes, or light hair and light blue eyes were most beautiful. Probably Phil and Charlie were each satisfied, and that is all that is necessary to make the event of the 15th of December a most Fortunate Misfortune.

WASTING.

Golden days and months are flying,
Golden hopes and loves are dying,
Gory fields and forms are lying
Under this December night;
Bitter tears to-night are falling,
Boldly anguished hearts are calling
Blessings for the scenes appalling,
For one ray of heavenly light.

Oh, this saddest of Novembers!
Oh, this dreariest of Decembers!
Oft my heart thrills, and remembers
Other sunnier, happier days,
When the spirit's prospects gladder,
With its surfeit-joy grew madder,
Winning thus experience sadder,
While in earthly, sinful ways.

Much the need of strength and praying,
Meekness for the truth's delaying,
Meeting justice in his saying,
Hope and charity;
In our wasting life and beauty,
In the silent path of duty,
Is our holiest life and beauty,
Immortality.

Patient bearing now our losses,
Peace and prayer will soothe our crosses,
Poignant grief will, like sea mosses,
Nourish germs of better life;
Calmly let our sacrifices,
Costlier far than ancient spices,
Consecrate the grand indices
Of a noble end of strife.

THE MASTER OF ARAN GARTH.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ABEL DRAKE'S WIFE."

There is a stillness over Aran Garth this Christmas Eve; such a stillness in the air and such a light in the sky as there may have been that night when the shepherds of the East kept watch over their flocks. The moon shines over the house; stars glitter through the avenue trees, and the deer graze among the twisted oaktree shadows with their breath visible in the frosty air. The cascades and rivulets in the little wood are all struck dumb by frost, and have left an unnatural silence through the place. A little white leveret is at play with the shadows on the path, and the fact of her playing there so fearlessly, and the great stillness together, cause one to turn in wonder to the gabled house, to see if there are any signs of human life within, or if those stone lions on the steps and those stone figures on the grand old gate may have got all Aran Garth to themselves, to rule over in their grim frozen silence for ever.

Yes, the chimneys smoke; there is light in several windows—a very bright light from the large one overlooking the court. They were merry in the room awhile since. A deep, gruff but musical laugh incessantly made the windows shake in their frames; and the large shadow of a head covered with crisp curls kept passing across the blind.

But all is quiet in that room now, and the shadow comes up on the blind no more, nor comes it across any other of the lighted windows.

Here, at the side, are two dark windows, and the moonlight pours through them into the most desolate room of the house. It is called the Hunter's Room, because the old masters of Aran Garth used to come here when they returned from the hunt, and sit awhile in muddy boots and pet their favorite hounds, and drink till their unsteady hands let the winejugs fall to the floor, which is still covered with dark stains, and has a sour, faint smell of old wine.

What have we to do with this room to-night? The chimney-place is fireless, the heavy bolt is drawn across the door, there is nothing here, surely, but the antlers on the walls and the rusty guns?

Nay, look again a little lower, almost under the window. Who is it sits in the grim oak chair, with hands clenched and body bent? It is the master of Aran Garth, the same whose shadow was on the blind, whose laugh made the house ring a few minutes since. His hands are clenched, and he is looking down at the stained floor, and the moonlight falls about him, showing threads of silver in the crisp curls.

It is a head that looks little accustomed to bow down as it is now bowed. In the square brows and fair Saxon features there is a strength of will that is almost kingly.

What mystery have we broken in upon, looking with the moonlight through the two dark windows? How comes Sir Stephen Blore to be sitting bowed down in the darkness and the bolt of the door drawn? How comes he to be here and thus to-night of all nights, when every one thinks he must be rejoicing, for to-morrow his son comes home, the son he has not seen for years.

But see, he lifts his head at last, lays his palms on his knees, and raises himself slowly upright in the chair. He has gone through some trial during those minutes he has sat there, for his stony blue eyes stare round the room as though he scarcely remembers having entered it. Presently they rest upon an old silver tankard hanging on a nail and shining in the moonlight; and, as a man just awakened from heavy sleep will try to sharpen his senses by an effort to remember the door, or curtain, or thing his eyes first rest upon when they open, so Sir Stephen seems to feel that it is only by recollecting what that bright thing on the wall is that he can find his way out of the painful stupor into which he has fallen.

After looking at it for some time with those large vacant eyes, with a sort of unconscious curiosity, he strides across the room, reaches it from the nail, and, returning to his chair, sits down with it in his hands.

He turns it over and over in the moonlight in a mechanical, listless way, looking at its bent handle and broken rim, and the armorial carvings dented and chipped. Now he holds it quite still, his attention is attracted by some small old letters, it is the motto of his house:

"A deadly enemy, but never a traitor."

A dark flush slowly rises in Sir Stephen's cheek as he reads, his eye fills with anguish, and he laughs, a bitter, harsh laugh.

"Thou'rt wrong, old mug," he says aloud, flinging it from him. "Get thee to the dust, and tell them there is a traitor in the line at last—a traitor to his own son!"

And once more the large head bows low and the strong limbs tremble.

When he lifts his face again it is changed; it is no longer bitter, but has an expression of passionate self-questioning on it, as if some small voice in his heart pleads against the charge he laid to himself.

He looks back upon his past life for evidence against himself.

Ay, look back, Sir Stephen; look back some eight-and-twenty years, and see yourself, in your early youth again, dreaming of love under the blossoming chestnut trees of Aran. Fair faces came to Aran Garth in those days, but never the face of his dreams. No actual image of an ideal bride haunted him; but he seemed to hear her voice in the early summer mornings calling to him with the birds as he awoke. She breathed on him with the March primroses, and glowed near him in the morning skies. In the storms of April he seemed to see her spirit struggling in the shaken trees, the moaning water and dishevelled flowers, as though she yearned for a human form in which to come to him. Through long June nights, as he lay upon the grass awake, he seemed to hear her footsteps in the silent paths, and to feel ethereal hands ministering to him and fanning him with green boughs, and shaking perfumed dew from the flowers upon his face. She sighed upon him with the roses and and sung to him with the nightingale, and all night he felt eyes gazing down on him with the throbbing stars, tender and serene and full of stedfast love.

He grew heart-sick of looking into every face and finding her not; and sometimes he looked back upon the hours he had wasted in dreaming of her in shame and sadness; and, pacing the solitary avenues by night, he would determine to put away from him this vague ideal, and take some good woman for his wife, and cease from dreams. And at such times, as he strode along the old walk, with the trees rocking and murmuring over his head, he seemed to hear a voice pleading with him and saying,

"Wilt thou cast me off because I am a spirit, and cannot yet come to thee in human form? Fear not for time. I will surely come; and, though thy hair be gray before my coming, my beauty shall renew thy youth."

Pacing the Hunter's Room, Sir Stephen looks back upon that time, and then there seems to come a mist in which he sees himself bringing home to Aran Garth a beautiful woman, with a queenly step and cold, proud eyes; and it hardly seems two years after the marriage that he kisses those cold, proud eyes for the last time, and is left in Aran Garth alone with his sister and his infant son.

Again all is mist. What does he see now? His son grown up and going away from him to India. A little ward of his then comes to live with them at Aran Garth. He remembers, the first evening she came, laying his hand upon her curls, and saying to his sister, half in jest, "Elizabeth, she shall be Hector's wife."

And when, year after year, he watched her nature unfolding purely and radiantly, like the white leaves of a lily showing glimpses of rich gold within, he had still said, but with a deeper meaning, "She shall be Hector's wife."

It became the chief delight of his life to write of her to Hector, repeating her sweet, girlish sayings and picturing her beauty under all its different aspects; and he could but see by Hector's brief, soldierly letters that he must have used some eloquence in doing so; for, brief and soldierly as they were, they showed Sir Hector that she was always in his thoughts, and that his heart often yearned, through the irksome routine of his military life, towards the bride they were cherishing for him at home.

All this Sir Stephen thinks of as he stands in the cold December moonlight in the Hunter's Room; and all this while his stern, questioning eyes see no evidence that proves his charge against himself to be just.

But now! Aye, bend the proud head lower, and look back once again. Hector's ship is on the sea; he will soon be here to claim the bride they have chosen for him and taught him to love. Sir Stephen begins to say to his sister at night:

"Elizabeth, I shall miss the child sorely. She has made it all May Day in the house." Then Miss Blore reminds him that Hector and she will stay at Aran Garth when they are married just the same; but Sir Stephen cannot look forward with any pleasure to sharing her society with Hector, and he is startled and grieved to discover it. Fearful lest she herself should guess such a thought was in his heart, he jests with her about that time, and asks her if he will still be her guardian a little, or if she means to cast him off altogether when Hector comes? But the first time he makes this jest a pair of eyes are lifted to his face with a look that plunges him into still deeper trouble. They rested on his face not more than a second, but he cannot forget them; they haunt him everywhere—blue, humid eyes, full of tears and fire.

Then come nights of wild unrest—of dreams in which he sees a ship bounding to harbor; and he, tossing in the waves, pushes it back with bleeding hands; and the prow drives on, pressing against his heart till the sea foam is stained with his blood; and still at the helm stands Hector, smiling and looking landwards towards his love.

And now—now it is the night before Hector's return, and Sir Stephen has come into the Hunter's Room to wrestle with his own heart.

First, he bids himself look steadfastly at his life—his life as it will be when she has no longer anything in common with it. So he folds his arms, and stands erect, and looks.

What! Begin the day without having touched her hand or met her smile? Sit hour after hour in some strange room and never hear her step upon the stairs? Never again have those eyes lifted to his either in childish mockery or tender, womanly reverence? Never more watch the sweet thoughts flit over her face like cloud-shadows in a lake?

He stands before the window and looks out—far, far out on his future, as one who looks for water over a scorching desert and sees nothing but dead men's bones, and his eyes grow dull and wild; a trembling seizes his whole frame, and he falls down with his arms on the oak chair, and, with a loud cry on his lips—a hoarse, passionate cry, full of tenderness and sharp pain—

"Genevra! Genevra!"

As a martyr, to test his power of endurance, puts his hand into the fire that is to consume his whole body, so Sir Stephen had sent his heart to live a moment in his dark and desolate future, then snatched it back in shuddering agony, blistered and bleeding, but with a fierce joy at finding he can snatch it back—that there is yet a little space to live before the actual torture comes, a little space in which to call her sweet image before him once more and to sob his heart's farewell at her feet.

"Genevra! Oh, my golden-haired! Oh, my life's sole love! My little May flower with the bashful head, who will cherish thee like me? My love! my love! my sweet childlove!"

While the heavy oak chair creaks under the weight of his form, suddenly there comes a look of awe over his face, then a paleness, and his eyes are turned with a listening look towards the door. He hears a footstep and the soft sweep of a dress. Now both are silent—silent but very near, he feels; and his heart throbs with such a dull hard beat that he thinks the listener without must hear it.

A tap at the door—so gentle and timorous!—but he could hear it.

He has risen to his feet, and stands leaning on the chair-back, looking at the door with wild eyes, like some grand but savage animal at bay.

Is it she? Has God, who alone knows the state of his heart, permitted her to come to him now? Now, in this bitter hour, when all the wild passions of his nature are let loose, and the battle that he came to fight unwon? One look of her sweet eyes might turn the tide and bring him certain ruin. One word spoken by him in her presence would betray to her his love—his fierce, passionate love—for the woman he had consecrated from childhood to his son.

She knocks again, and he bends over the chair-back, looking towards the door, irresolute. What shall he do?

Oh, tender little hand, that never crushed a flower or bruised a butterfly's wing, how can it be so cruel now? Go away, Genevra! Go away, and hide your golden hair, that the fight may be fought fairly and the right hand be made honorable that is to give you to your bridegroom to-morrow!

But she taps again, and louder than before. He steadies his voice, and calls out harshly,

"Well! Who is there?"

"Sir Stephen, it is I. May I speak to you a minute, if you please?"

The sweet, timorous voice goes to his heart like music, but at the same time makes him fearful of himself, fearful that in a minute he will be groping to that door, and speaking uncontrolled words to her that will fill her soul with terror and grief.

Oh, if he could only make her go away suspecting nothing! If he could only speak to her in his natural voice! He tries:

"What, ladybird, is it you? Take your troubles to Elizabeth, my child; I am busy."

The words cost him more effort that any words he had ever spoken. Surely he will be repaid for them, and she will go away and sob her wounded pride to rest. No, there is the timid, pleading voice again—

"Oh, please let me come in. I have been waiting for you to come upstairs so long. I cannot go to bed; I cannot talk to Elizabeth. Do, pray, pray, let me speak to you."

Sir Stephen went to the door and set his broad palm against it. Somehow it seemed to him as if that wild yearning within him must draw it open, spite of bolt or bar. So he set his broad palm against it with all the strength of his body, and, with his other hand on his hip, he looked down on the door and felt that those two fierce combatants in his heart, passion and honor, had got each other by the throat, and that before he took his hand from that door one must be conquered.

What he did that moment—whether he invoked some Divine power to his aid, or whether his thought of the helpless babe left in his arms when the coffin lid was closed over his wife's cold, proud grave—he never remembered; but a great hail came over him, and when she called again—

"Sir Stephen, speak to me—you are not ill?" he took his hand from the door, drew back the bolt, and stood before her erect, calm, with a smile on his face.

The doors leading down to the broad court were open, and the hall was flooded with moonlight; she stood in the midst, and you could scarcely tell whether the sweet light about her came from the moon or from her golden hair.

Sir Stephen smiled upon her and took her hand.

"Well, little one, what trouble now?"

"I was afraid you were ill; you have been shut up there so long. I have been walking up and down here and in the garden all the time. Will you come out now?"

Sir Stephen looked beyond her but into the night, and he felt that this newborn strength of his would have more chance of enduring the test in calm stars and swaying trees than anywhere else. So he drew the hood of her cloak over her head, leaving only a pale gold thread to show, and put and took her arm through his, and they passed out into the white, silent court.

"And what is it you wish to say to me, Geneva, my child?" he said again.

Three times they pace the length of the court before she answers; and now they have come again nearly to the steps, and that Geneva stops and draws her hand away, and they both stand still, looking at their shadows on the white ground. Sir Stephen does not look at the exquisite face set in its gold rim, but he knows that there are tears on it, and that the lips are quivering; and he is obliged to face himself standing with his palm set against the door again, and when she speaks there is such a sadness in her voice that all the bright, clear night grows misty to him.

"Sir Stephen," she says, "I have asked many things of you since I have been here, but I have never asked anything yet that has given you pain to grant, have I?"

Sir Stephen is silent, and she is a little afraid of his silence, but goes on with a kind of timorous desperation,

"Because—because I am going to ask you something now that I know will pain you much, and I would not ask it, but that if I did not others may suffer as well as me; it is for his—for his—for Hester's sake—that I speak, much more than mine."

"Speak, then, Geneva?"

She lifts both her little hands and folds them on his arm.

"I will. I will tell you all that I have longed to tell you so many days past, but I could not bear to pain you. Sir Stephen, I cannot love Hester as—as you wish me, and you must tell him so."

"Geneva!"

"Oh, do not speak like that. Tell him I am not worthy of him; tell him while he has been thinking of me as one whom he will try to love for your sake, I have been not forgetting him, but more—have been dreading his coming, because I know I can never—never—never love him!"

The bright night is very misty to him, and below a vague sorrow having lifted up its wings in which her little hands are folded, and kissed them, and wetted them with tears; but now—now that the mist is passed away—he is standing before her with folded arms, and saying, in a hard, stern voice:

"Geneva, you grieve me very much. What you wish said to Hester, you must say yourself, for to me, I can do nothing—God help me! nothing! Go, child, to Elizabeth, and talk with her."

He stands and watches the drooping, hooded figure across the court and into the house; and when it has quite gone he no longer remembers that the night has been one or stars; but ascending the steps, puts out groping hands before him as if he were in the darkness. He goes on through avenue and wood and a space of sward open before him streaked with frost; and there he meets him self down, weary and sick—no longer trembling with stormy passions, but stricken with grief for Hester; and according himself not only the treachery of loving her, but of the double treachery of having—no matter how unwittingly—won her priceless love away from him.

And so all night, his heart crushed down with shame and anguish, he stayed out in the frosty avenue—pacing the avenues, and now stretched upon the dead leaves or the grass. The moon had waned, and there was only one star left twinkling in its cold grave, when something warm and soft touched his stiff, cold fingers as he sat on the root of a tree. It was the lodgekeeper's dog; and in another minute the old man came up himself with a letter, which he gave Sir Stephen, and then passed on without a word to his master, and whistling away his dog.

Sir Stephen rose and leant against the tree trunk, sick at heart with a vague presentiment of some great calamity impending.

What does this letter mean, given to him at such an hour in the morning? It is Hector's handwriting.

He breaks it open with stiff, trembling fingers, and the light of the grey morning is just sufficient for him to read it by. This is Hector's letter:

"MY DEAR FATHER—At twelve o'clock at night in Jasper's lodge, I am sitting down to write to you. My letter must be brief, for I am off before five in the morning. A long time before starting from India I had resolved to be at Aden Garth a boy or no before you came of age. Do you think I can guess why? I wished to see her. As yet I had only seen her through your eyes, and before we met I wished to see if she would be the same seen with my own. This evening I was by the well where she came to walk in the court. Several times she disappeared into the house and returned again. Once, when I was watching her, she came back by the door on the white ground by the steps, two shadows came, and Geneva's disappeared, and she did not follow. That the image which has been before me so long has not been only the experience of one night, let the fact that I banish myself from home for a few years show you. I shall say no more, except that I conjure you not to let your happiness in Geneva's love by thoughts of me. I have only been dreaming a sweet dream, from the effects of which a few years of active life will knock out of me. Remember me to Elizabeth, and thank her for the brave outspeaking which has opened my eyes to-night, and saved us all three from unspeakable wretchedness.

"HECTOR."

Sir Stephen stands leaning against the tree, with the letter in his hand, the small birds hop and twitter in the branches overhead, and the pretty dawn breaks about him, and soon two great drops roll rattling down upon the paper.

In a single minute he is pacing towards the house.

"Elizabeth!" He does not wait to be answered, but pushes the door of his sister's room open. She is dressed, and kneeling at her prayers. Sir Stephen raises her with his arm and kisses her tenderly.

"Elizabeth," he says, giving her the letter, "read this, then take it to Geneva, and if she is sleeping, lay it on her bed."

She is sleeping, and Elizabeth lays the letter on her bosom and leaves her, and the morning dawn and brightens slowly at the window.

Sir Stephen sits in the quaint, old library, watching the sunshine creeping over the lawn. How slowly it comes! Will it touch Geneva's eyes and make them waken?

Hark!—a step—the door opens and closes softly. Sir Stephen does not look up, but feels she is standing there—his spirit-love that he dreamed of under the blossoming chestnuts long ago; standing before him in the darkness of her youth and the glory of her golden hair. But he bows his head; she is so fair, so radiant, can she have love for him? She sees it in the doubt in his eyes, and smiles and kneels before him.

"My guardian, my dear guardian!"

Still his head is bent and his eyes despairing.

She lays her little hands one on each shoulder, and looks into his face, and smiles and weeps.

"My love! Stephen!"

"Oh! Geneva, Geneva!"

By this time the lazy sunshine has crept into the window, and it finds upon Sir Stephen's breast a bright stream of gold that would make even July's sunbeams pale.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR.

THE arrangements for opening the Metropolitan Fair, in aid of the United States Sanitary Commission, which will begin on the 22d inst., are rapidly advancing. The main depot established by the managers for the distribution of articles will be the Armory of the 22d regiment N. Y. S. N. G., on Fourteenth street, near Sixth avenue, the spot formerly known as Jones' Wood, where the regiment has erected a substantial edition. Many societies and associations have been formed of their own. Mr. Elliott, of London, has contributed a large quantity of coal for sale, and other donations are on their way from other parties in Europe. The Government exempts these last from the payment of duty.

VIEW ON THE RAPPAHANNOCK.

FEW points have been the scene of more stirring skirmishes, cavalry charges and artillery duels than the quiet spot which we illustrate, a scene on the Rappahannock river, at the celebrated Rappahannock station. Our armies have repeatedly advanced to, crossed and recrossed the river; Jackson's army fought it; Pope crossed it, Sigel also; finally, not far from this spot, the gallant Gen. Bohlen, of Sigel's corps, in a desperate charge, was killed in attempting to carry the heights which Sedgwick took, Hooker led his army over to meet the rebels at Chancellorsville. To name the cavalry movements on the Rappahannock would need a volume.

OUR VETERANS.

We give portraits of several of the Colonels of our veteran regiments, whose re-enlistment for the war has done more even than their swords to determine the great struggle. It was the confident boast of the rebels and their Northern friends, that the soldiers would not re-enlist; but the heroic men who had for three years upheld the flag of the country, responded nobly to the call again, and our noble Colonels, to continue to the end the heroic history of the regiments.

Col. Krzyzanowski, Commanding 3d Brigade, 3d Division, 11th Army Corps.

Col. Krzyzanowski is a Polish gentleman, whose father was a General of the Polish revolution. He was born on the 6th of August, 1824. When the rebellion broke out in 1861 he was a merchant in New York, and joined a militia company as a private, but was soon after elected Major of the 58th N. Y. Volunteers. In service, he received a commission to raise a rifle regiment in New York, and was given the command of the 58th N. Y. S. V. He has since been in 13 battles, having since July, 1862, commanded a brigade. At Cross Keys he particularly distinguished himself, and was the first to enter Gettysburg. During the battle his horse was shot under him while far in the advance, and he was with difficulty rescued. His brigade was sent to the West after the battle of Chickamauga, and the recent glorious victory added to its high renown; Gen. Meigs saying in his report that he never thought that anything could equal what it did. All his regiments have re-enlisted, saying but one question—whether he was to lead them.

Col. George E. Prescott, 33d Mass. Vol.

Col. Prescott is a native of Middlesex county, Mass., and at the beginning of the war left his business in Concord to take the field as 1st Lieut. in the 6th Massachusetts. After three months service with it, he raised a company for the 42nd regiment, which became the nucleus of the 33d Mass. volunteers, organized at Camp Lincoln, Worcester, in October, 1862. On active duty at Ft. Warren, it was sent to Harrison's landing, July 8, 1863, and attached to the 1st division, 9th army corps. Capt. Prescott was soon made Lieutenant-Colonel, and served with his regiment at Antietam and Fredericksburg. After the latter battle, the commission of Col. Parker, he received the command of the 33d and led it through the battles of the Wilderness and Spottsylvania, losing in the latter bloody fight one-third of his effective force. The regiment's term expired—333 men—enthusiastically re-enlisted for the war.

Col Orlando H. Morris, 66th N. Y. V.

Col Morris is the son of Gen. Wm. L. Morris, an old officer of the U. S. army, and was born in New York and graduated at Columbia College in 1854. Immediately upon the breaking out of the rebellion his father had a ready son distinction; but Orlando began to drill, and joined the 66th Volunteers.

The regiment was assigned to the 3d corps, forming part of the 3d brig. in the 1st division, and well engaged at Fair Oaks, Gaines's Mill, Peach Orchard, Savage Station, White Oak Swamp, Malvern Hill, Bull Run, Chantilly, at Centreville under Pope; at South Mountain and Antietam, under Burnside, at Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, as well as at Gettysburg and Petersburg, since. One hundred and fifty-three officers came back with their Colonel, bearing their battle-torn flags, and greeted as heroes wherever seen around them.

Col Morris has led his men in action, displaying skill, courage and intrepidity. He was severely wounded at Gaines's Mill, and for Major's promotion he has acquired.

Lieut.-Col. Robert Avery, 103d N. Y. V.

In a spacious and pleasing valley, Pa., born Sept. 22, 1810. He entered the service as Captain in Sept. 1861, and with that rank was at first employed in the Pensylvania reserve corps at Washington. After Banks retreated from Winchester, in March, 1862, he commanded a company in the 1st brigade, 1st division, 5th army corps, and fought with his regiment at Winchester, Cedar Mountain, Rappahannock station, Manassas Gap, Thoroughfare gap, Bull Run, Chantilly, Centreville, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg and Petersburg. He was promoted to Major, 19th Dec. 1863, Capt. Avery was made Lieut.-Col. He led his men at the battle of Chancellorsville, receiving a severe wound—a rifle ball passing through his neck, carrying away the muscles of the left side. The effect of this he became paralyzed in the left side, and was for a time confined in the hospital. He and his regiment was ordered to Tennessee he could not leave his bed himself, but was carried on a stretcher to join his tent, took command of the advance line of skirmishers, and fought without flinching. At the critical moment, and just as the battle was won, Col. Avery fell forward upon his horse's neck, and was shattered the bone so badly as to require amputation. He was then compelled to leave his regiment; but on the return of his regiment to New York on furlough after the battle of Chattanooga, he rejoined it at Nashville, and resumed command. It is feared, however, that, from all his wounds, his wounds will prevent further active service.

Lieut.-Col. John McConihe, commanding 109th N. Y. Vols.

Is a citizen of Omaha, and was a graduate of Union College. Having graduated at the Albany Law School in 1855, he removed to the far West, and became himself at Omaha, the capital of Nebraska Territory. He soon became the private secretary of Gov. W. A. Richardson, Governor of the Territory, and subsequently of Gov. Black, previous to which he had been appointed to the position of Adjutant-General of the Territory. He was also the Democratic candidate for Mayor of Omaha, but was overcome by the opposition.

At the first call to arms, in 1861, he was made Captain of a company of cavalry, and assigned to the 1st Nebraska regiment, and commanded it through the campaigns in Missouri and Tennessee in 1861 and 1862, and at the bloody battle of Shiloh was severely wounded, after performing most gallant and nobly throughout the two days' contest.

He was promoted to be Lieutenant-Colonel of the 109th New York volunteers, which gallant regiment he has since commanded, by commission, to the satisfaction of all, since April last, in the campaign in Virginia under Gen. Grant. Before receiving his commission in Troy, N. Y., recently sent him, at fifty minutes' notice, he hurried away to Washington, back mounted in gold and inlaid with jewels, as a testimonial of the appreciation of his fortitude and endurance as displayed throughout the war. For months Col. McConihe has been campaigning, and, if wound yet unhealed, the shattered arm unserviceable, still is a young man of unbending energy, undaunted courage and established ability.

Patrick Kelly, Colonel of the 88th Regiment Virginia Infantry Volunteers.

AND Acting Brigadier-General of the Irish Brigade, was born at Castle Hackett, near Tuam, county Galway, Ireland, in the year 1826, and emigrated to the United States in 1849. He joined the 69th regiment N. Y. S. M. in 1851, and passed through all the grades from private to captain, commanding the company which was called to the defence of the capital of the Nation, and for his gallantry on that occasion was presented with a sword, commissioned as Captain in the 16th regiment U. S. Infantry.

On the return of the 69th regiment to New York, Capt. Kelly was elected Major of the regiment, and the Irish Brigade, and entered the field with it, as Major of the 9th Regiment, and was promoted to the Colonelcy after the celebrated "seven days".

Gen. Meagher having resigned, Col. Kelly was assigned to the command of the Brigade.

A courteous gentleman, a true friend and a brave soldier the Union army has no better representative than Col. Kelly of the Irish Brigade.

Col. Kelly commanded the 88th in every battle which took place on the Peninsula, from Manassas to Gettysburg, and is now actively engaged in recruiting this famous veteran regiment at Tammany Hall.

"THE FREEDMAN," BY WARD.

THE statuette, by Ward, in the last exhibition of the Academy of Design is a beautiful work of art, and typifies a great fact in the American history, which hereafter no slavery in the United States is no longer debatable. Even those who find scriptural, ethnological, agricultural and economical reasons to justify the holding of one race to bold another race in bondage, admit that the question is as dead as any argument can be. The statuette, "The Freedman," comes forth from this war as the statue represents it, with the broken fetters of his shackles, with the aspiration, new hopes and a new future depending on himself in a great measure. The national organization will emerge from the present chaotic condition of the Southern States.

The handsome contribution made by the proprietors of the Universal Clothes Wringer to the Sanitary Fair, Brooklyn, viz.: 500 machines, is realizing $100 dollars per day. They are a useful household article, and will not the commission merchants in Dixie Land speculation yet make one, and we shall be happy to announce any similar donations.—New York Journal of Commerce.

THE DEVIL'S SONATA.

IN a recent work on dreams we find many curious anecdotes illustrating that singular faculty of the animal mind, for it is not confines to the human, since we all see instances in which it may be assumed for granted that cats, dogs and horses dream. As a proof of how intensely a dream may affect the mind, we quote the anecdote of Tartini, the celebrated violinist, the Paganini of his day, who wrote that wonderful theme called the Devil's Sonata under the inspiration of a dream:

"M. de Laland has left us the particulars from Tartini himself, which are worthy of notice. He was a degree the imagination, during sleep, may be influenced. He dreamed, one night in 1713, that he had made a compact with the devil, who promised to be at his service in every thing he could desire. Whatever everything succeeded according to his mind. He thought that one night the devil came into his room, visible in order to discover what kind of a musician he was. He played a first concerto, and he heard him play a solo so singularly beautiful, which far surpassed in its execution and mystery, that it surpassed all the music he had ever heard or conceived in his life. So great was his surprise and so exquisite his delight, that for a time it deprived him of the use of his senses. At length, recovering the violence of his sensation, and instantly relied in fidelity, at the hope of executing what he had just heard, but in vain. He, however, directly composed the piece which he called the Devil's Sonata. What it, however, to be so inferior to what his sleep produced, that he stated he would have broken his instrument and abandoned music for ever if he could have substated by any other means."

ANOTHER WESTERN ROMANCE.

THE Wheeling Register (Va.), gives the particulars of a double elopement, which reads more like a tale in the Budget of Fun, or one of Dumas' novels, than any other reality. We give it in the words of the Register:

"Last week, Mrs. Emma Goodwin, of Noble county, Ohio, started from her home to go to Pennsylvania, to visit some relatives residing in Westmoreland county. She took with her a husband and two small children, aged, respectively, about five and seven years, and a hired girl, to help keep house." Her husband amply provided her with funds to pay her way before departure. Arrived at the house of her relatives, they, who resides in the same neighborhood, and who was also in the habit of visiting the house of a husband, and two little "pledges of affection," started West on business. He, and accordingly set out in the wrong road and arrived in Wheeling about the same time with Mrs. Goodwin. They registered at one of our hotels over night, passing as man and wife, and the next morning took the Parkersburg train. It seems that, after two or three days travel, they separated, the lady taking the cars at one point and the time, after a healthy prepared to the passed to the same hotel and sat down at the same table—Mrs. Emma immediately opposite her husband, but both too full for recognition at the first blush.

It seems that a day or two after Mrs. Goodwin left for the West, Mr. Hite left home, and started to seduce Mrs. Taylor from her "sacred allegiance to her husband, and leave her to mourn the loss of a husband's absence—in which it seems he had not been disappointed, as neither of them were dreaming that their companions were just then comfortably housed.

The scene that ensued after a mutual recognition at the Cleveland supper table was neither tragic nor ridiculous as might be imagined; but like philosophical lovers, they "kissed and made up" and "talked spell" would do, they quietly, and as if moved by the spirit of mesmerism, left the table for private room, when they arranged that each man should take his own wife, and return to their homes with the children, and try and live wiser and better men and women in the future.

A JANUARY STAGE RIDE—AN EFFECTIVE INCIDENT.

A CORRESPONDENT of the St. Louis Democrat gives his experience in a trip by the stage from Sedalia to Springfield, Mo., during the recent cold weather. The thermometer stood at 20 degrees below zero 36 hours. The trip occupied 52 hours. When the coach left Sedalia the thermometer stood at 20 degrees below zero. The sufferings of passengers, drivers and animals were intense. We extract a portion of the letter:

"At the different houses where we stopped, and which were very scanty even on the route, the inmates, men, women and children, were huddled around the chimney corner absorbing every thing—the cold. The second night out was equally as cold as the first, and the night was as dark as charity. My companions in the cold remained with me each night, and we kept each other warm when the driver told me; for, when I awoke at 10 o'clock from a sleep of two hours, I found my feet were frozen—I, I found them gone. I was not alone, however, when I made the discovery. A lady who was with us from Bolivar, where a lady and child took passage for the whole route.

"She was plainly but comfortably clad, and in consequence of the cold was not as much exposed. She has received word that her husband, who is in the army, was shot in the foot, and that he was on sick bed. Her anxiety to reach him was therefore all the greater. Every few miles we stopped to change horses, and at one of these stations, on account of her destination, the mother took the babe, an infant of about nine months old, and left the stage before entering the town.

"I had not observed until the lady to alight, when we entered the dwelling. I noticed that she was not accompanied by the child, and asked her where it was. I have wrapped it up and laid it on the seat, as I was afraid if it came in it would cry and disturb us all," was her reply. I was not she had better bring it in, as it would be frozen to death in the cold. No," he would send will sleep. We remained in the house half an hour, when the driver called for us to come out and help bring in the child, and the mother, after she picked up the babe, left with the utmost speed.

"Not a whimper, not a cry proceeded from that child during the whole ride in the face of the wind moaned piteously. Closely the mother nestled her babe to her bosom. We reached Springfield at 2 o'clock the next day, cold, chilled almost beyond the endurance of human nature. The mother was as composed as another and child. Wishing us the best, she hurried off home, and I have no doubt that she reached it safely and found her child in safety. Such a good heart-broken lady is not often met with. Her devotion to her husband and child was beautiful to behold."

THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

WE give portraits of several of the Colonels of our veteran regiments, whose re-enlistment for the war has done more even than their swords to determine the great struggle. It was the confident boast of the rebels and their Northern friends, that the soldiers would not re-enlist; but the heroic men who had for three years upheld the flag of the country, responded nobly to the call again, and our noble Colonels, to continue to the end the heroic history of the regiments.

Col. Krzyzanowski, Commanding 3d Brigade, 3d Division, 11th Army Corps.

Col. Krzyzanowski is a Polish gentleman, whose father was a General of the Polish revolution. He was born on the 6th of August, 1824. When the rebellion broke out in 1861 he was a merchant in New York, and joined a militia company as a private, but was soon after elected Major of the 58th N. Y. Volunteers. In service, he received a commission to raise a rifle regiment in New York, and was given the command of the 58th N. Y. S. V. He has since been in 13 battles, having since July, 1862, commanded a brigade. At Cross Keys he particularly distinguished himself, and was the first to enter Gettysburg. During the battle his horse was shot under him while far in the advance, and he was with difficulty rescued. His brigade was sent to the West after the battle of Chickamauga, and the recent glorious victory added to its high renown; Gen. Meigs saying in his report that he never thought that anything could equal what it did. All his regiments have re-enlisted, saying but one question—whether he was to lead them.

Col. George E. Prescott, 33d Mass. Vol.

Col. Prescott is a native of Middlesex county, Mass., and at the beginning of the war left his business in Concord to take the field as 1st Lieut. in the 6th Massachusetts. After three months service with it, he raised a company for the 42nd regiment, which became the nucleus of the 33d Mass. volunteers, organized at Camp Lincoln, Worcester, in October, 1862. On active duty at Ft. Warren, it was sent to Harrison's landing, July 8, 1863, and attached to the 1st division, 9th army corps. Capt. Prescott was soon made Lieutenant-Colonel, and served with his regiment at Antietam and Fredericksburg. After the latter battle, the commission of Col. Parker, he received the command of the 33d and led it through the battles of the Wilderness and Spottsylvania, losing in the latter bloody fight one-third of his effective force. The regiment's term expired—333 men—enthusiastically re-enlisted for the war.

Col Orlando H. Morris, 66th N. Y. V.

Col Morris is the son of Gen. Wm. L. Morris, an old officer of the U. S. army, and was born in New York and graduated at Columbia College in 1854. Immediately upon the breaking out of the rebellion his father had a ready son distinction; but Orlando began to drill, and joined the 66th Volunteers.

The regiment was assigned to the 3d corps, forming part of the 3d brig. in the 1st division, and well engaged at Fair Oaks, Gaines's Mill, Peach Orchard, Savage Station, White Oak Swamp, Malvern Hill, Bull Run, Chantilly, at Centreville under Pope; at South Mountain and Antietam, under Burnside, at Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, as well as at Gettysburg and Petersburg since. One hundred and fifty-three officers came back with their Colonel, bearing their battle-torn flags, and greeted as heroes wherever seen around them.

Col Morris has led his men in action, displaying skill, courage and intrepidity. He was severely wounded at Gaines's Mill, and for Major's promotion he has acquired.

Lieut.-Col. Robert Avery, 103d N. Y. V.

In a spacious and pleasing valley, Pa., born Sept. 22, 1810. He entered the service as Captain in Sept. 1861, and with that rank was at first employed in the Pensylvania reserve corps at Washington. After Banks retreated from Winchester, in March, 1862, he commanded a company in the 1st brigade, 1st division, 5th army corps, and fought with his regiment at Winchester, Cedar Mountain, Rappahannock station, Manassas Gap, Thoroughfare gap, Bull Run, Chantilly, Centreville, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg and Petersburg. He was promoted to Major, 19th Dec. 1863, Capt. Avery was made Lieut.-Col. He led his men at the battle of Chancellorsville, receiving a severe wound—a rifle ball passing through his neck, carrying away the muscles of the left side. The effect of this he became paralyzed in the left side, and was for a time confined in the hospital. He and his regiment was ordered to Tennessee he could not leave his bed himself, but was carried on a stretcher to join his tent, took command of the advance line of skirmishers, and fought without flinching. At the critical moment, and just as the battle was won, Col. Avery fell forward upon his horse's neck, and was shattered the bone so badly as to require amputation. He was then compelled to leave his regiment; but on the return of his regiment to New York on furlough after the battle of Chattanooga, he rejoined it at Nashville, and resumed command. It is feared, however, that, from all his wound, his wounds will prevent further active service.

Lieut.-Col. John McConihe, commanding 109th N. Y. Vols.

Is a citizen of Omaha, and was a graduate of Union College. Having graduated at the Albany Law School in 1855, he removed to the far West, and became himself at Omaha, the capital of Nebraska Territory. He soon became the private secretary of Gov. W. A. Richardson, Governor of the Territory, and subsequently of Gov. Black, previous to which he had been appointed to the position of Adjutant-General of the Territory. He was also the Democratic candidate for Mayor of Omaha, but was overcome by the opposition.

At the first call to arms, in 1861, he was made Captain of a company of cavalry, and assigned to the 1st Nebraska regiment, and commanded it through the campaigns in Missouri and Tennessee in 1861 and 1862, and at the bloody battle of Shiloh was severely wounded, after performing most gallant and nobly throughout the two days' contest.

He was promoted to be Lieutenant-Colonel of the 109th New York volunteers, which gallant regiment he has since commanded, by commission, to the satisfaction of all, since April last, in the campaign in Virginia under Gen. Grant. Before receiving his commission in Troy, N. Y., recently sent him, at fifty minutes' notice, he hurried away to Washington, back mounted in gold and inlaid with jewels, as a testimonial of the appreciation of his fortitude and endurance as displayed throughout the war. For months Col. McConihe has been campaigning, and, if wound yet unhealed, the shattered arm unserviceable, still is a young man of unbending energy, undaunted courage and established ability.

Patrick Kelly, Colonel of the 88th Regiment Virginia Infantry Volunteers.

AND Acting Brigadier-General of the Irish Brigade, was born at Castle Hackett, near Tuam, county Galway, Ireland, in the year 1826, and emigrated to the United States in 1849. He joined the 69th regiment N. Y. S. M. in 1851, and passed through all the grades from private to captain, commanding the company which was called to the defence of the capital of the Nation, and for his gallantry on that occasion was presented with a sword, commissioned as Captain in the 16th regiment U. S. Infantry.

On the return of the 69th regiment to New York, Capt. Kelly was elected Major of the regiment, and the Irish Brigade, and entered the field with it, as Major of the 9th Regiment, and was promoted to the Colonelcy after the celebrated "seven days".

Gen. Meagher having resigned, Col. Kelly was assigned to the command of the Brigade.

A courteous gentleman, a true friend and a brave soldier the Union army has no better representative than Col. Kelly of the Irish Brigade.

Col. Kelly commanded the 88th in every battle which took place on the Peninsula, from Manassas to Gettysburg, and is now actively engaged in recruiting this famous veteran regiment at Tammany Hall.

"THE FREEDMAN," BY WARD.

THE statuette, by Ward, in the last exhibition of the Academy of Design is a beautiful work of art, and typifies a great fact in the American history, which hereafter no slavery in the United States is no longer debatable. Even those who find scriptural, ethnological, agricultural and economical reasons to justify the holding of one race to bold another race in bondage, admit that the question is as dead as any argument can be. The statuette, "The Freedman," comes forth from this war as the statue represents it, with the broken fetters of his shackles, with the aspiration, new hopes and a new future depending on himself in a great measure. The national organization will emerge from the present chaotic condition of the Southern States.

The handsome contribution made by the proprietors of the Universal Clothes Wringer to the Sanitary Fair, Brooklyn, viz.: 500 machines, is realizing $100 dollars per day. They are a useful household article, and will not the commission merchants in Dixie Land speculation yet make one, and we shall be happy to announce any similar donations.—New York Journal of Commerce.

THE DEVIL'S SONATA.

IN a recent work on dreams we find many curious anecdotes illustrating that singular faculty of the animal mind, for it is not confines to the human, since we all see instances in which it may be assumed for granted that cats, dogs and horses dream. As a proof of how intensely a dream may affect the mind, we quote the anecdote of Tartini, the celebrated violinist, the Paganini of his day, who wrote that wonderful theme called the Devil's Sonata under the inspiration of a dream:

"M. de Laland has left us the particulars from Tartini himself, which are worthy of notice. He was a degree the imagination, during sleep, may be influenced. He dreamed, one night in 1713, that he had made a compact with the devil, who promised to be at his service in every thing he could desire. Whatever everything succeeded according to his mind. He thought that one night the devil came into his room, visible in order to discover what kind of a musician he was. He played a first concerto, and he heard him play a solo so singularly beautiful, which far surpassed in its execution and mystery, that it surpassed all the music he had ever heard or conceived in his life. So great was his surprise and so exquisite his delight, that for a time it deprived him of the use of his senses. At length, recovering the violence of his sensation, and instantly relied in fidelity, at the hope of executing what he had just heard, but in vain. He, however, directly composed the piece which he called the Devil's Sonata. What it, however, to be so inferior to what his sleep produced, that he stated he would have broken his instrument and abandoned music for ever if he could have substated by any other means."

ANOTHER WESTERN ROMANCE.

THE Wheeling Register (Va.), gives the particulars of a double elopement, which reads more like a tale in the Budget of Fun, or one of Dumas' novels, than any other reality. We give it in the words of the Register:

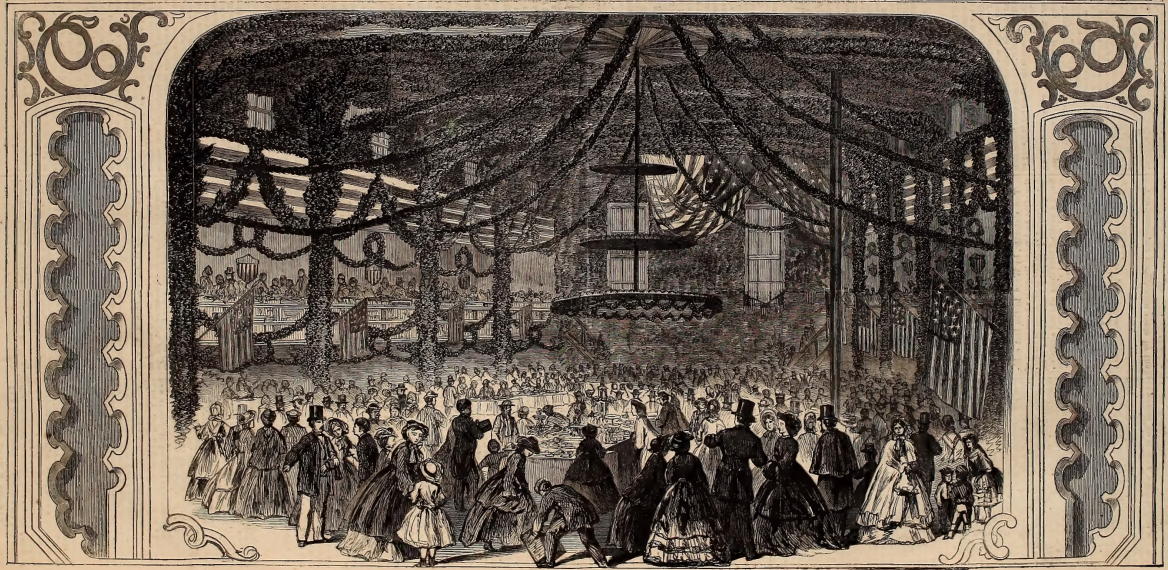
"Last week, Mrs. Emma Goodwin, of Noble county, Ohio, started from her home to go to Pennsylvania, to visit some relatives residing in Westmoreland county. She took with her a husband and two small children, aged, respectively, about five and seven years, and a hired girl, to help keep house." Her husband amply provided her with funds to pay her way before departure. Arrived at the house of her relatives, they, who resides in the same neighborhood, and who was also in the habit of visiting the house of a husband, and two little "pledges of affection," started West on business. He, and accordingly set out in the wrong road and arrived in Wheeling about the same time with Mrs. Goodwin. They registered at one of our hotels over night, passing as man and wife, and the next morning took the Parkersburg train. It seems that, after two or three days travel, they separated, the lady taking the cars at one point and the time, after a healthy prepared to the passed to the same hotel and sat down at the same table—Mrs. Emma immediately opposite her husband, but both too full for recognition at the first blush.

It seems that a day or two after Mrs. Goodwin left for the West, Mr. Hite left home, and started to seduce Mrs. Taylor from her "sacred allegiance to her husband, and leave her to mourn the loss of a husband's absence—in which it seems he had not been disappointed, as neither of them were dreaming that their companions were just then comfortably housed.

The scene that ensued after a mutual recognition at the Cleveland supper table was neither tragic nor ridiculous as might be imagined; but like philosophical lovers, they "kissed and made up" and "talked spell" would do, they quietly, and as if moved by the spirit of mesmerism, left the table for private room, when they arranged that each man should take his own wife, and return to their homes with the children, and try and live wiser and better men and women in the future.

A JANUARY STAGE RIDE—AN EFFECTIVE INCIDENT.

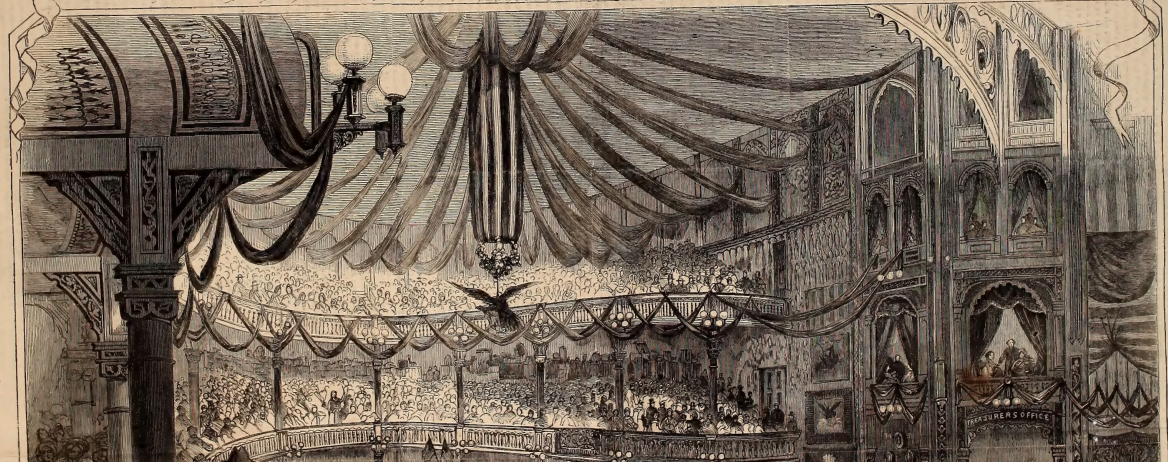
A CORRESPONDENT of the St. Louis Democrat gives his experience in a trip by the stage from Sedalia to Springfield, Mo., during the recent cold weather. The thermometer stood at 20 degrees below zero 36 hours. The trip occupied 52 hours. When the coach left Sedalia the thermometer stood at 20 degrees below zero. The sufferings of passengers, drivers and animals were intense. We extract a portion of the letter:



"At the different houses where we stopped, and which were very scanty even on the route, the inmates, men, women and children, were huddled around the chimney corner absorbing every thing—the cold. The second night out was equally as cold as the first, and the night was as dark as charity. My companions in the cold remained with me each night, and we kept each other warm when the driver told me; for, when I awoke at 10 o'clock from a sleep of two hours, I found my feet were frozen—I, I found them gone. I was not alone, however, when I made the discovery. A lady who was with us from Bolivar, where a lady and child took passage for the whole route.

"She was plainly but comfortably clad, and in consequence of the cold was not as much exposed. She has received word that her husband, who is in the army, was shot in the foot, and that he was on sick bed. Her anxiety to reach him was therefore all the greater. Every few miles we stopped to change horses, and at one of these stations, on account of her destination, the mother took the babe, an infant of about nine months old, and left the stage before entering the town.

"I had not observed until the lady to alight, when we entered the dwelling. I noticed that she was not accompanied by the child, and asked her where it was. I have wrapped it up and laid it on the seat, as I was afraid if it came in it would cry and disturb us all," was her reply. I was not she had better bring it in, as it would be frozen to death in the cold. No," he would send will sleep. We remained in the house half an hour, when the driver called for us to come out and help bring in the child, and the mother, after she picked up the babe, left with the utmost speed.



"Not a whimper, not a cry proceeded from that child during the whole ride in the face of the wind moaned piteously. Closely the mother nestled her babe to her bosom. We reached Springfield at 2 o'clock the next day, cold, chilled almost beyond the endurance of human nature. The mother was as composed as another and child. Wishing us the best, she hurried off home, and I have no doubt that she reached it safely and found her child in safety. Such a good heart-broken lady is not often met with. Her devotion to her husband and child was beautiful to behold."

THE SANITARY FAIR, BROOKLYN—1, THE HEAVY GOODS DEPARTMENT. 2, VIEW OF THE AUDITORIUM. 3, VIEW OF KNICKERBOCKER HALL.

SANITARY FAIR
IT IS EXPECTED THAT EVERY FAMILY WHO HAVE NOT A SEWING MACHINE WILL PURCHASE NOW AS THE PROCEEDS GOTO THE BROOKLYN L.I. FAIR YOUR TRUE WEIGHT GIVEN HERE FOR 5 Cts.

TREASURER'S OFFICE

THE HAUNTED HALL.

BY M. A. E.

Was that a footstep I heard in the hall,
In the dark corner, up close to the wall?
Was it a whisper that fell on my ear?
Strange, weirdlike noises I frequently hear,
Sibilant alone in the dim twilight gray,
Lessening for voices long silent passed away.

Footsteps I hear every night on the floor,
Steps light and buoyant, that pause at my door;
While fingers raising the latch brown with rust,
Forms long since mouldered and crumbled to dust,
Gliding around in the misty-room floor,
Up to the window that looks on the moor.

"Haunted the Hall is," my neighbors all say;
It may be—I'm old and am passing away.
Haunted by birds making their nests and tones,
Haunted by mice that nibble on white marble stones;
Haunted the Hall is by sweet childhood's call,
Floating and swelling throughout the old Hall;

Haunted by steps of the bride blushing fair;
Haunted by voice of the lover and heir;
Haunted by sleepers borne out at the door,
Borne to the churchyard to greet us no more;
Haunted by footsteps that echo my heart beats,
Spectres are watching my every breath!

Counting the strokes of the hammer of life,
Watching the sands with old memories rife,
Numbering the locks fast bleaching with years,
Soothing my heart with the echoes my fears.
Footsteps are pacing, familiar tones call,
Shadows are darkening the old Haunted Hall.

Longer and deeper the shadows have grown,
Grayer and blacker the white marble stone,
Tempered and still is the air of the Hall,
Loud and alarming my heart's throbbings fall,
Flitting and beck'ning the man spectres all,
Slowly and surely I'm quitting the Hall.

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

CHAPTER XIII.

The storm had abated, but still the sea rose tempestuously, and broken clouds filled the sky as with great whirlpools and drifts of smoke. A good deal of rain had fallen, and this calmed the waters somewhat, but other remnants of the tempest made the most experienced seaman look anxious when his face was turned ocean-wards. An assistant pilot, whom a good deal injured in helping to save the crew of that ill-fated vessel. His comrades had carried him up to the tavern, and laid him on a bed in the best room, where he grew worse and worse, till he became incapable of being removed to more comfortable quarters. In this state he found him on the second day after the wreck, when he came up from the village, where he had sought accommodations till the coroner's inquest should be over, and his room cleared of its mournful incumbrance.

Independent of his personal injury, the boatman was suffering from intense anxiety regarding the duties of his occupation. It had been his employer's pride to be always first in the incoming course of the vessels from California, and now his little craft lay with its sails furled in a cove below the house, waiting for a signal to put to sea. The man had been very anxious to intercept the steamers of that month, because it was thought that Mr. Mellen might possibly be on board, and he was sure of a good reward for his trouble, in that case, for bringing a gentleman on shore, while his superior, the pilot, took the steamer into port.

North heard all these muttered regrets as he sat moodily by the bed, and they seemed to affect him far more than so unimportant a subject should have done. It was now drawing towards night, and he became visibly restless, for the pilot was expected every moment, and from a vague conjecture the poor fellow worked his mind up into a strong belief that Mellen would come, and the reward for bringing him on shore be lost.

"If there was only a man about that could take care of the craft," he said, "I'd divide with him a fair half to take my place, but there isn't, and ten chances to one the boss loses his chance with the steamer, because of this confounded foot of mine. I wish we'd let the fellows drown; well, not not quite so bad as that, but it's plaguey hard on a fellow to give up a good lock in this way."

The bar-room happened to be empty just then, with the exception of North and the injured man. North scanned the room, and looked around. Seeing no listeners near, he went up to the grumbler, and began to condole with him.

"Is there no one who can take your place?" he said.

"Not a man. These fellows do well enough in fishing boats that can hug the shore, but sometimes the bar runs his craft clear out to sea. Besides, this weather is enough to frighten a fresh hand," was the impatient answer.

"What if I should make an offer to go."

"You!"

The man laughed in spite of his pain and annoyance.

"You. I like that."

"But I can handle a boat in pretty rough waters, let me tell you, my man."

"But you look too much of a gentleman. The boss would never trust you."

"Oh, a suit of your clothes, which I see they have had sense enough to dry, and a few things I have on hand will make that all right."

"But, how much? how much?" inquired the man, anxiously.

"Why, nothing; I shall go for the fun of it, or not at all."

"That's the idea," answered the seaman, rubbing his hands with sudden delight, "a real gentleman and no mistake, but bear a hand at once. It won't do for the commodore to find you in this rig."

"Aye, aye," answered North, sailor fashion, and in a voice that seemed hoarse from years of seadog service.

The man started up on the settee, aroused to the action by astonishment.

"That's the time of day," he cried in high glee.

North laughed, snatched up the seaman's clothes, and retired with them into a little room back of the bar. He soon had on the pilot-cloth of nonsuch regarding the dead body lying upstairs, but still shrunk from looking on it again with shuddering terror. The remembrance of it, and the did not prevent the contemplation of another equally atrocious, but he did not care to look on that sight again. After a little he came out from the room, so completely changed that the sick man stared wildly at him, and called out,

"Where away, messmate; are you one of the fellows we saved from the wreck?"

North laughed, settled himself in his loose clothes, sailor fashion, and walked with wide steps across the floor, as if it had been a quarter-deck; a dawning conviction of the truth seized upon the man. He fell back upon the settee, uttering broken ejaculations of delight amid his laughter.

"That'll do. It's all right. He'll take you for one of the crew he saved from the wreck, and ask no questions."

"It's going to be a rough-ish night," said North. "I hope Mr. Mellen can swim, if we happen to get into any trouble."

"No, no, don't depend on that, but he knows the coast, and is a man to be relied on; still I should like him to be brought into danger, remember that."

"It's not at all likely that he'll be on board," answered North, carelessly.

"Hush up," cried the seaman, "don't you hear the commodore coming? They've just told him about their confounded foot. Hear him swear."

The pilot came in while his assistant was speaking.

"What the thunder is all this about? just when I wanted you most, too, and a rough night. They'll get ahead of us, and all through this confounded carelessness business. Couldn't you keep out of it for once?"

"Keep a stiff upper lip, commodore. It's all right," called out the man from the settee; "here's a chap I have done a service to, who is willing to take my night's work on himself, just out of gratitude. He's a true blue."

"Let him bear away, then," cried the pilot, casting a glance at North, which seemed to prove satisfactory; "come on, my man, we have no time to lose."

North followed the pilot in silence, only stopping by the sick man long enough to answer,

"Don't mention this to a living soul!"

The man promised and kept his word.

The pilot boat was soon manœuvred and flying out to sea like a sea-gull, and North performed his duty well, and received a word or two of commendation from the superior, which proved the delicacy of his nature, for he had seen this person more than once at the shore tavern.

At last they came in sight of a large steamer laboring heavily with a rough sea and unfavorable wind. She hailed them, and the little boat bore down upon her. She lay to, and the pilot mounted her side with many directions to his man. A crowd of persons met him as he leaped over the bulwarks, and among them North watched with trembling eagerness for one face.

It appeared at last, looking down upon the boat from over the bulwarks. The bad man's heart rose to his mouth; it ached with every movement on deck with keen interest.

The pilot came to Mellen's side, and made a signal for the trunks with the steamer's luggage was lowered and Grantley Mellen came down the side of the steamer, and took his seat in the little craft, which flew away with him towards the clouded shore. The wind increased with every hour of the evening, and not so terrible as it had been when that vessel was wrecked, it gradually rose to a degree of violence that threatened the little pilot boat with destruction. But the wind blew shoreward, and urged the boat on till it fairly leaped over the hissing waves. The pilot managed the little craft with the utmost rapidity increasing to its full power as they drew near the shore. The wind roared among the hills, and lashed the beach with fury. Still the craft leaped heavily and chill as sleet, but Mr. Mellen sat cold and stern on his luggage, neither heeding the storm or the pilot's congratulations or offering to aid him in his difficult task.

It was a position to test the courage of the strongest nerved man. The pilot knew that the rising wind and waves must conquer and swamp the light craft completely; but no matter how rude or reckless the attack, Mr. Mellen neither betrayed any anxiety, nor showed any more sympathy with the toiling boatman than if he had been a wooden machine.

The wind would seize his cloak and send it sweeping out like the wings of a great bird, but he only drew it impatiently about his neck and sat quiet again, looking calmly through the stern sight.

This perilous voyage was a long one, and its difficulties grew into actual peril as they neared the end. The wind seemed to come from every point at once, and tossed the boat about till it fairly leaped in the water, as if trying to escape from its combined enemies.

Suddenly the rain almost ceased, the clouds parted, and the moon cast a frightened glare over the scene. In the distance Mr. Mellen could see his own dwelling, with the broad sweep of woods and waters beyond; then a sharp exclamation from his companion aroused him to the new dangers about them.

The boat had been swept in near the shore, in a spot where a ring of sunken rocks girdled the beach, breaking the waves into whitecloth, and rending the white foam out into the storm. It was in this spot that good ship had gone down, yet the boatman made no effort to veer his little craft from the awful danger. With a furious light in his eyes and a horrid smile on his lips, bore down upon the breakers. True, it required almost superhuman strength to turn the queer fit that light craft, for the blast was dashing it forward like a battalion of fiends. They were close upon the breakers, when Mellen sprang and clutched the boatman back with a violence that sent him headlong into the bottom of the boat, and seized the helm himself. Mr. Mellen struggled with all the power desperation gives a man, but his efforts were futile as those of a child. The boat spun round and round till they were fairly away; another fierce blast; they were blown directly into the breakers. Mellen's agonized cry was answered by a hoarse murmur from his companion that sounded like a malediction. But before either could think or act a more violent blast coming up from the sea struck the skiff and whirled it in among the rocks. Now Mellen's eye kindled, and all the powerful force of his character came out. He knew every inch of the coast for miles each way. Through these boiling white breakers was a channel wide enough to carry them over, and towards that he forced the little craft, which seemed absolutely to leap through the breakers into the calmer waters beyond. He rested one moment, trembling from stem to stern like a great crippled bird hunted to death by the elements.

North saw that he was in possible safety. He had not anticipated a storm so terrible as that, but had intended to swamp his boat in the breakers and swim ashore with it. That, too, could not swim, as he supposed, to his fate. But now everything else was forgotten in a cowardly thirst for life. No man could exist in a moment in that awful riot of waters. He watched Mellen as he kept the boat steadily in the current with the keen anxiety of a man to whom death is the horror of terrors. She was now heaving and recoiling, along the narrow path into comparatively smooth waters. Mellen, still with one hand bearing down the helm, seized his cable and flung it ashore to the disguised boat man, who lifted his wild face for the directions he had not the power to ask.

"Be ready," said Mellen, with the quickness of resolution which marked his character, "jump out as she nears that rock—we are safe then."

He waited for the moment, and they both stood upright in the boat, swaying to and fro, but managing to retain their position.

Again the hope of safety seemed a delusive one; the skiff swooped down on the rock, spun more giddily about and threw both men upon their knees. Another instant that seemed endless—an instant which decided the fate of both—so far as this world was concerned. If the skiff obeyed the counter blast that was upon them and swept towards the breakers, they were lost; still there was a hope, if it veered upon the rock which loomed hopefully out from the shore. The moon gave light enough to show the dangers on one side and see their landing. Again the conflicting blasts struck them; the boat reeled, righted itself and was dashing by the rock, upon which the two men sprang by a simultaneous movement. A few more vigorous leaps and they reached the shore, standing there for a moment in breathless silence. Then they commenced hauling in the crippled boat, which the flood had seized upon and was tearing out to sea.

"Safe!" cried Mellen, in a tone of heart-thanksgiving, "and I did think that the brave little craft would go down."

"Safe and defeated!" muttered North, turning his face from the wind. "The storm that helped me two days ago proves treacherous now."

"Come!" shouted Mellen, lashing the cable to a projecting rock, and making a cleft of the rock, "come up to the house, we shall find a fire there and a glass of brandy. The old man will send some of his people down for the trunks."

North made no answer, but moved off towards the house, which he passed. Then he walked moodily towards the village. Mellen went up to the tavern.

The light shone cheerfully through the uncurtained windows, and the stranger could see the inmates of the room collected about the tea-table and looking comfortable enough to make a strong contrast to the chill and darkness without.

"There is the least change," he muttered, drawing his cloak more closely about him; "I could almost think I had been gone only since morning, instead of two years."

He hastened to the house, and hardly waiting for his imperative knock to be answered, pushed open the door and entered the kitchen. The old servant looked tranquilly up at the intruder, keeping his knife poised in his hand, not easily to be ruffled in his serenity, while the younger members of the family started with all their might to see what the storm might have blown to their dwelling.

"Good evenin', sir," said the old man; "it's a nasty wet night—won't you sit down?"

"I want a horse and a man," said Mellen, closing the door behind him, and betraying by the haste in which he spoke, and his impatient movements, that he was too hurried for much attention to the old man's attempt at civility. "I want to go to the other end of the bay—can you let me have a horse and some one to look after my luggage?"

"Want, to-night?" demanded the old man. "Why you can't want to go round the bay to-night."

"I should not have come for a horse if I had not wished to get home," said Mellen, impatiently. "Let me have a horse at once; I am in great haste."

"Taint a decent night to put a dog out doors," returned the fisherman; "it's a good deal more likely you'd get swamped in the marsh."

"Nonsense!" exclaimed Mellen. "I know this part of the country too well to boll with this. There is no more risk than in this room."

The old man's obstinacy was roused, and he had a full share of that unpleasant quality when he chose to call it into action.

"Maybe you know more about it than I do," he grumbled; "but I've lived here a goin' on thirty years, and ort to be a leetle acquainted with this coast, and I say it's a'n't a-going to be a airthly critter sich a night. If there sin't no danger 'saint fit to send any horse out in this storm.

"I can't stand here arguing here," Mellen began, but the old man unceremoniously interrupted him in order to gratify his curiosity.

"Where do you want to go?" he asked.

"Over to Piney Cove."

"Mr. Mellen's place! Why it's good three mile——"

"Don't you know me, old friend?" exclaimed Mellen, throwing back his cloak.

The old fisherman rose in astonishment, while his married daughter, who kept his house and owned the flock of children, called out:

"Why, pa, if it sin't Mr. Mellen!"

"I thought I knowed your voice," said the fisherman. "So you've got back! Wal, wal! You've been gone a good while. Californy, what's it?"

"So you can't send me on my journey when I find myself so near home," said Mellen.

"In course, in course," replied the old man. "But, dear me, you'll be drowned in that dirty cove in, and I do expect he'll grumble awful at having to start out again."

"I will pay him his own price——"

"Oh, you allays was freehanded enough, I'll say that, Mr. Mellen. But sit down by the stove; Jake 'll come in a few minutes. Mebby you'd try a cup of tea?"

But Mr. Mellen refused the proffered hospitality, and though he sat down by the fire, he neither sat down or paid much attention to the questions the old man hazarded.

As he stood there, though his restless movements betrayed his inward impatience, there was little trace of it visible in his face, whose cold pride seldom revealed the emotions which might be stirring at his heart. He was dressed in his wet sea-cloth, and hung about him in wet masses. His face was bronzed by the exposure of a long sea voyage, but he was still a very handsome and imposing presence, standing so thoroughly all his old haughtiness of manner, that even the old man, in his fever of curiosity, felt the keen rebuke in question at questioning him for that had always awed the villagers when Mr. Mellen formerly dwelt among them.

"I s'pose you've seed a sight sence you went away," said the old man, as he pushed his chair towards the fire. "All them gold mines; though I don't s'pose you went to work at them. People wondered at your going off in such a hurry."

"Do you think that man will be here soon?" interrupted Mr. Mellen.

The fisherman looked piqued and injured at having his gossiping propensities cut short in that manner, but that instant a step sounded on the stone porch without, and he said, grudgingly,

"There he is. I 'spect there'll be a touse about getting him to go."

But Mellen took the matter in his own hands when the man entered, and the liberal offer he made speedily put Jake in excellent spirits for the expedition.

"My baggage must be disposed of first," said Mr. Mellen. "Some one must get it from the pilot-boat."

"Jake and I'll fetch it in here," returned the old man.

"Then I will send for it in the morning," observed Mr. Mellen.

While they went down to the shore and were bringing in the trunks Mr. Mellen stood by the fire, quite regardless of the clutch of curious eyes the children regarded him, or several modest attempts at conversation made by the old man's daughter:

"You're sure we're wringing wet; hadn't you better get some things of father's and start dry?"

"No," answered Mellen, glancing at the waterproof case which he had seen carried in bearing the boat, remembering that it contained important papers. "I have some things in here, and they will send my portmanteau in the boat."

He left the room while speaking, and, knowing the house well, went upstairs, in order to change his wet garments. The young woman ran a step or two after him with a little cry of surprise, but turned back, seized with terror of the dead body, against which she would gladly have warned him.

Mellen found a comfortable room, made when he left the kitchen, and entered the little room upstairs with it flaring in his hand. It did not illuminate the whole apartment, but the figure of a man, crept over the man as he stepped over the threshold, and a shudder, which sprang from neither cold nor fatigue, passed over him.

With a trembling hand he set the light on a little pine table and looked around. A bed stood in the farther corner of the room, a great and coldly white bed, on which a human form was lying in such awful stillness as death alone knows.

Breathless and obeying a terrible fascination, he went up to the bed and drew down the coarse linen sheet. A beautiful face, chiselled from the marble of death, lay before him, with a cold smile on the lips, and the blue of the eyes, that had been like violets, tinging the white lids that covered them. Masses of rich chestnut hair were gathered back from the face, and over the bosom, struck cold as the bloom of life, two white hands were folded in an attitude of solemn prayerfulness.

As Mellen gazed on this cold vision his face grew white with terrible emotions. Moment after moment crept by and he did not move. At last, reaching forth his hand, he touched the woman's hair, then a convulsion of grief swept over him, his eyes filled, his lips quivered and he fell upon his knees, crying out:

"Oh, woman, woman, have they driven you to this?"

The stillness which was his only answer crept to his heart. He arose, covered the face of his false love, and quitted the room, leaving the candle behind. He could not bear to leave her thus alone in grim darkness.

"Oh, sir, I am so sorry. It was dreadful to let you go upstairs to dress and find that," cried the woman, in a tumult of self-reproach.

"When did it happen?" he questioned, in a hoarse voice. "When and how?"

"Day before yesterday. It was washed ashore from the wreck."

Mellen turned away and asked no more questions.

ADVENTURE WITH A HIPPOPOTAMUS.

WE were approaching a deep basin, where the water of the river made up among the trees, when Jot discovered a commotion just ahead of the boat. He stopped paddling and caught up the spear which lay by his side. The water was clear enough to show us a young hippopotamus making off out of our way as swiftly as possible. Harry caught the spear and let drive, striking the animal in the neck. There was a cord of buffalo hide attached to the end of the spear shaft, and as the barbed iron fastened itself in the calf's flesh, old Ben, who stood by Harry's side, caught the coil and began to pay out.

Thus far all had gone very pleasantly, and we were promising ourselves a vast deal of sport, besides a fat morsel of sea-calf, when Abner clapped his hands and uttered an exclamation of terror. I looked in the direction pointed out and saw a terrible commotion in the water just ahead, and to the left; and before we could take any precautionary measures, the head and shoulders of an enormous hippopotamus appeared above the water. Ben dropped the line and started back, while Jot seized his paddle and tried to take us out of harm's way; but his movement was too late. The hippopotamus opened her monstrous jaws and crushed the bows of our boat as though it had been a thing of reeds. We had attacked her calf and she was bound upon revenge. As we started back towards the stern she seized the boat again, this time dragging it completely under and throwing us all into the water, and for a few moments there were such cries of terror as I think I never heard from our party before.

It happened very fortunately for us that the hippopotamus stopped to vent her wrath upon the shattered boat; for, had she not done so, some of our number must have inevitably fallen victims to her fury. One of the thwarts of the boat, a wide board of light wood, had come within my reach; and as I rested upon it I had time for thought.

The nearest point of shore was about 100 yards distant, and towards that my companions were swimming with all their might. Abner was ahead and Ben was in the rear. But where was Jot? I saw him at length clinging to a part of the wreck, behind which he was hiding from the enemy. My pistols were in my belt, and as my board gave me considerable support I had my hands at liberty. The caps of my pistols were waterproof, so I knew they would not fail me in case I had an opportunity to use them.

The hippopotamus left the fragments of the boat and started towards me, and at the same moment I saw Jot leap out upon a plank in her wake. The monster came on, with her head and back out of water, looking like a mountain of moving flesh. If she reached me I was gone; but fear did not make me meek. As she came nearer, and I could see her horrible teeth, I raised myself upon my board, and took deliberate aim at one of her eyes. As I have before remarked, my pistols were of the heaviest hunting pattern, and carried a good-sized ball. I fired, and the hippopotamus was minus an eye. She gave a loud bellow of pain, and plunged under the water, and when she came up again she knocked the board from under me, giving me a shock that for a few seconds completely scattered my senses. I recovered myself, however, and regained my board, and just then I saw Jot coming up with his knife in his hand. He was close upon the hippopotamus, and presently he lifted himself upon his plank, and drove his long, sharp blade into the monster's back, half-way between the hip and the tail.

This movement had a curious effect upon me. My fear was all gone in a moment, and I felt a keen relish for the sport.

"Colonel," cried Jot, as he held on to the handle of his knife, "can't you put out her other eye?"

It was the very thing I had thought of, and directly the opportunity was offered. I was nearer to my mark than before, and fired with perfect coolness, and the result was, that the hippopotamus was utterly blind and roaring with pain. The enormous brute plunged and tore about for a little while, and finally struck out towards the shore, Jot still clinging to his knife, and trying to guide the living mass. Whether his efforts at steering the eyeless monster amounted to anything or not, I cannot say, but the hippopotamus came to the shore not twenty yards from where Harry and Abner had landed, and after this we had no difficulty in dispatching her.

We had lost the boat, but we did not lose the spear, for the calf had struggled to the shore, and was almost dead when we found it. We sent Jot up after some of the natives, and when they came—about a hundred of them—we pulled the dead hippopotamus ashore and measured it. The body, from the end of the nose to the base of the tail, measured thirteen feet; the girth, just back of the shoulders, was thirteen feet and four inches, and the jaws were a trifle over two feet wide. It will be remarked that this was a female. A male of the same age would have been much larger.

THE Hartford Courant relates the following good story: "In a village of more than twenty miles from this city a woman took her infant female child to church to be christened, and had chosen for it the name of Lucy. Unfortunately, as it happened, the mother lisped, and when asked by the minister what name she had selected, replied, 'Lu hy, thir.' Understanding her to say 'Lucifer,' the man of clerical robes was, naturally, considerably shocked; but as he had reached a point in the proceedings where the dignity of his office must be sustained, he controlled his feelings, and not recognizing the horrible name given him, but supposing the child to be a boy, announced, in loud tones, the name of the little one to be 'George Washington!' The feelings of the mother may be imagined."

REMINISCENCE.

THE south wind wars against the cold
With spears of silver rain;
The trickling mountain steeps have rolled
Their garments on the plain.

With thousand thousand violet eyes
Awakening earth surveys
The long unwonted light that lies
On all the woodland ways,

And blithe the chanting waters haste
And sparkle to the deep;
But what, O earth! repays the waste
And ravage of thy sleep?

'Twas morning; from the chill, dead sky
Faint gleams of lustre broke,
Like last gold leaves hung tremblingly
Upon a haggard oak.

Like ghosts by tombs, the willows white
Stood weeping by the yew;
Her dark and pinching mantle tight
The moody cypress drew.

There, bowed between the gravestone flat
And column-crowning urn,
We loth and lingering gave thee that
Thou never wilt return.

Then prophesy with blade and bud
The blossom and the grain;
Recall thy singer to the wood,
And bid him build again;

Thou canst not charm us to forget
The captive of thy mould,
Or pay us with a violet
For aught thou hast in hold.

COUNSELLOR SAM NEVINS.

THERE is a great unwritten history, that of the establishment of judicial authority, and the bar, in the West, as emigration stretched out towards the setting sun. There is a great fund, not only of wonderful humor, but of great knowledge of human character embodied in the record, written and unwritten, of the early lawyers of frontier courts; many of them men of a high order of talent, perhaps graceful backers-out from Eastern courts, to keep from being thrown over the bar; and others, natives of the soil, self-educated, and trusting alone to their knowledge of the people and of human nature for success.

It is hard to tell of which of these styles Sam Nevins, or as he insisted upon being called, "Counsellor Sam Nevins," was. He had made his appearance in Southern Illinois, from nobody knew where, a bit of information the counsellor never afforded, and sticking up a shingle, gave out that he stood ready to practise in all the courts of that State, for a moderate consideration. In those days neither court, bar or people were disposed to be over fastidious, and as Sam was a good fellow, never flinching at a drink, or in a fight, he was soon doing up a rather clever business, and could Sam have managed to conquer his affection for "old bald face," every political and judicial honor might have been at his disposal. Under its influence, or in his courtship with it, Counsellor Sam was continually getting into scrapes, one of which I will relate to show the average.

The counsellor was acting for the prosecution in the Criminal Court of Jackson county, in the absence of the regular operator, who had gone East for a short spell. There was a murder case on, a very aggravated one, in which the perpetrator, a stout, brutal Irishman, had, for a small amount of plunder, beaten an old man to death. Upon this the counsellor had determined to spread himself, and had, as all the bar knew, made great preparations for a crushing speech. The stick, a short, hickory cudgel, about an inch and a half in thickness, was in Sam's possession, and at the right time he had determined to draw it forth from his desk, brandish it in the startled eyes of the murderer, before the jury, and carry everything by storm. Sam had prepared himself for this exciting movement by copious doses of "old rye," which he imbibed at intervals from a bottle in the desk, so arranged that as the counsellor bent down, apparently to look for some paper, a sup could be taken, though at wonderful inconvenience. At last came the moment. The counsellor was full of eloquence.

"Not in the broad, open day, gentlemen, when some resistance might have been made, but in the still and dead hour of night. Not with the pistol or the sword, the weapon of the gentleman, not even with a knife, but with this—"

And the counsellor slipped his hand into the desk, still keeping his flashing eye upon the jury, and in an instant was brandishing before the astonished court, a bottle prominently labelled "old rye!"

There had been too much similarity in the size of the bludgeon and the neck of the bottle, and though Cousellor Sam obtained a conviction, the magnificence of the close of his speech—for it did close just there—was not in the least helped along by the roar of court, bar, spectators and even the prisoner himself.

It must not be supposed that the counsellor was an indiscriminate drinker; on the contrary, he was particular in his drinking, and had often been heard to declare that the straight article, and that of domestic manufacture, was the only human tipple. His opinions on this point were once or twice openly expressed in the courts, a sample of which was in this way:

A case was on, Brown against Jones, to recover for a load of potatoes, and the counsellor was for the plaintiff. A dunderheaded New Hampshire fellow had carted the potatoes, and Nevins was trying, by him, to show the delivery.

Counsellor: "Did you haul a load of potatoes to Mr. Jones's house?"

Witness: "Wal, s'pose I did, squire."

Counsellor: "S'pose! Why, don't you know whether you did?"

Witness: "Wal, no; I was so cussed drunk all that week that I doan't 'member nuthin."

Counsellor: "Drunk! Drunk! Why, didn't yau tell Mr. Brown this morning that you hauled the potatoes?"

Witness: "Y—e—s. But you see, squire, I warn't sworn then."

Counsellor (fiercely, and looking the witness full in the face): "Now, then, I want you to tell the court, all—every bit—you know about the matter, and mind what you are saying."

"Witness (very deliberately): "Wal! Jones asked me to haul him up a load of tators from Deacon Brown's. I said I would, and I started to do it. I went down to old Joe Jimmerson's an' got my jug filled with rum, an' I doan't 'member a cussed thing after that for a week!"

Counsellor (with double fierceness): "Got your jug filled with what?"

Witness: "Rum—old Jamaiky rum, squire."

Counsellor (fairly jumping with excitement): "Get down off that stand, sir! Get out of this court-house; or, by the Lord, I'll throw you out of the window. Any man who drinks Jamaica rum isn't worthy of belief, on oath or off."

The scared witness did not wait for a second bidding, but was off like a shot.

It is only a natural sequence that Counsellor Sam should be somewhat oblivious of many social duties, arising out of his devotion to the rosy. Among these shortcomings was that of a proper recognition of pecuniary obligations. It is not recorded that any creditor ever succeeded in collecting his small account from the counsellor, though Sam was full of promises. Here is a dun from a tired-out tailor and the counsellor's answer:

"JACKSON CITY, ILLINOIS.

"DEER SIR—I send you my little bill inclosed, and want it pade rite off. The amount is $14 50, which please remit by return male, to save law expenses in collecting, wich will be dun if you don't attend to it immejeatly.

"Yours, "JOHN WALKER.

"To Counseller Samuel Nevins."

"JACKSON COUNTY COURT HOUSE.

"MY VERY DEAR SIR—I have just received a letter from you enclosing my little bill of Fourteen dollars Fifty cents ($14 50), for which attention please receive my thanks. I would merely remark to you, before proceeding to other points, that your kind missive found me in good health and spirits, and though slightly misdirected, absolutely reached me. I have but one fault to find with it, my dear Walker, which is its brevity. Did I say only one fault? No! I have still another, which is the slight mistakes you have made in spelling. I am willing to admit—as you will possibly advance that argument—that great men, even greater than yourself—if such a thing can be—have sometimes fallen into the same error in their epistolary matters, but still the habit is a painful one to me, and I must call your attention to it. Why should you, my dear sir, spell "dear" with two ee's. I am not one of the antlered denizens of the forest. Again, why should you say "pade rite," when all the rest of the world declares the true mode "paid right?" Either all the world or yourself, in this case, must be wrong, my dear Walker! Once more, you say I must remit by "return male." Whether you really mean this, I cannot say, but my dear sir, I do not know a male who is about to return to Jackon city. In that case, what can I do, my dears Walker? And now, my dear sir, we will proceed to business. You request me to remit the small sum of Fourteen dollars and Fifty cents ($14 50) "to save law expenses in collecting."—I think, my dear Walker, that I use your own words—therefore, my dear sir, if you are driven to the unpleasant resource of so collecting your little bill, I trust you will not regard it in an unfriendly light should I recommend to you an attorney who will faithfully attend to your interests in the suit. I would, therefore, my dear Walker, recommend to your patronage Counsellor Sam Nevins, a rising lawyer, who is especially hard on debtors. By remitting the counsellor a retaining fee of $20, he will at once give you an opinion. After this, if he should advise you to proceed with the suit, it will be necessary for you to send him $50 more for drawing the complaint and bringing the case into court, after which the costs will be regulated by the length of time it is litigated. You needn't thank me for this advice, my dear Walker, as it really gives me pleasure to serve you in so small a matter.

"I must now close this little epistle, and I have only one request to make of you, which is that you will write me again. Do spare a moment for that purpose.

"I am, my dear Walker, yours very truly,
"SAM NEVINS,
"Counsellor-at-Law.

"P.S.—I forgot to thank you for the respect that induced you to sign my name in full, "Samuel." I rarely have such a compliment extended to me in this benighted region. Give my love to your charming family, if you have one. Au revoir!
"S. M."

I believe "my dear Walker" dropped the correspondence at that point, as I will Counsellor Sam, after one more reminiscence:

It was during a period when "a solemn conviction" had come upon Sam, and he had joined the church, and began to take great interest in questions of faith and theology, which he would discuss almost nightly at the house of the minister, though people would have it that the parson's pretty daughter had worked the great change. Sam had been retained as counsel by a near-by farmer, against whom a writ of lunatico inquirendo had been got by his own father, the old man claiming that the young man was not fit to manage his property, and praying the court to appoint him manager. The old man was on the stand and Counsellor Sam was examining him.

Counsellor: "Now, then, Mr. Wilson, what first led you to suppose your son insane?"

Old man: "'Cos he jined the meetin'!"

The roar that went up just then startled the old man, who was perfectly innocent of the hit he had made, as much as it nonplussed the counsellor, who, however, returned to the attack.

Counsellor: "Well, Mr. Wilson, what else did you see that made you think him insane?"

Old Man: "Why, he tuk to going to the parson's house and talkin' 'ligion with his darter."

That killed Counsellor Sam Nevins.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

THERE is but one vowel in the following literary curiosity:

No monk too good to rob, or cog, or plot,
No fool so gross to bolt Scotch collops hot,
From donjon tops no Oronoko rolls,
Logwood, not lotos, floods Oporto's bowls.
Troops of old tosspots oft to sot consort,
Box tops, not schoolboys, flog for sport.
No cool monsoons blow soft on Oxford dons,
Orthodox, jogtrot, bookworm Solomons!
Bold Ostrogoths of ghosts no horror show,
On London shop fronts no hopblossoms grow.
To crocks of gold no dodo looks for food.
On soft cloth footstools no old fox doth brood,
Long stormlost sloops forlorn work on to port,
Books do not roost on spoons, nor woodcocks snort,
No dog on snowdrop or on coltsfoot rolls,
Nor common frog concocts long protocols.

WHAT is that which has got feet and nails, but no legs, toes or claws? A yard measure.

WHY should Africa rightly be considered to rank first of the continents? Because it bears the palm.

WHAT is that which Adam never saw, never possessed, and yet he gave to each of his children? Parents.

THE man who collects the names of soldiers for the town records of Adams was recently the questioner in the following conversation, the "lady of the house" replying:

"Have you any friends in the war, madam?"
"No."
"Any relations?"
"No."
"Do you know anybody from this neighborhood who is in the army?"
"No."

As he was leaving a bright thought seemed to strike her, and she rushed to the door, exclaiming:

"Oh, my husband has gone to the war!"

WHY is a man in the stocks like one who abstains from eating? Because he is fast in (fasting).

"YOU rascal, do you ask me for money, and then take it right out of my pocket?"

"Oh, yes, your honor, I took it for granted."

THERE are as good horses drawing in carts as in coaches; and as good men are engaged in humble employments as in the highest.

A MAN that had been nearly drowned while bathing declared that he would not again go into the water until he had learned to swim!

THE Springfield Republican asks what military order is like a lady crossing the street on a wet day? Dress up in front and close up in the rear!

A LADY made a call upon a friend who had lately been married. When her husband came home to dinner, she said:

"I have been to see Mrs. ——."

"Well," replied the husband, "I suppose she is very happy."

"Happy! I should think she ought to be; she has a camel's hair shawl, two-thirds border."

A COUNTRYMAN was shown Gainsborough's celebrated picture of "The Pigs."

"To be sure," said he, "they be deadly like pigs; but there is one fault—nobody ever saw three pigs feeding together but what one on 'em had a foot in the trough."

CHARLES LAMB, in passing through Billingsgate, was witness to a quarrel and fight between two fishwomen, one of whom, taking up a knife, cut off her antagonist's thumb. "Ha!" said Lamb, looking about him, as if he had only just recognised the place, "this is Fair-lop fair."

A HUMOROUS comment on artificial memory was made by a waiter at an hotel where Feinaigle dined, after giving his lecture on artificial memory. A few minutes after the professor left the table the waiter entered, with uplifted hands and eyes, exclaiming: "Well, I protest the memory man has forgotten his umbrella!"

A FARMER, by chance a companion in a coach with Charles Lamb, kept boring him to death with questions in the jargon of agriculturists about crops. At length he put a poser:

"And pray, sir, how are turnips t'year?"

"Why, that, sir," stammered out Lamb, "will depend upon the boiled legs of mutton."

VOLTAIRE, after having been on terms of friendship with the King of Prussia, owing to his wit, gave some offence; when the King said to some of his courtiers:

"When we squeeze the orange and have sucked the juice, we throw the rest away."

"Then," said Voltaire, "I must take care of the peel!" and quitted his Prussian majesty's dominions.

A LOCAL EDITOR'S STATISTICS.—Local editors are evidently an "institution" of no little importance to the public, and as such any statistical information relating to their calling must be of public interest. So thinks, at least, the local editor of the Memphis Bulletin, who, after the manner of the insurance companies, banking institutions, state departments, charitable associations, other corporations, thus dishes up his own individual annual report, and submits it to the public as follows:

REPORT.	TIMES.
Being asked to drink.	11,393
Drank.	11,393
Requested to retract.	415
Didn't retract.	415
Invited to parties, receptions, presentations, etc., by people fishing for puffs.	3,333
Took the hint.	33
Didn't take the hint.	3,300
Threatened to be whipped.	174
Been whipped.	0
Whipped the other fellow.	4
Didn't come to time.	170
Being promised bottles of champagne, gin, whiskey, bitters, rum, boxes of cigars, etc., if we would go after them.	3,650½
Been after them.	1
Going again.	0
Been asked "What's the news?"	300 000
Told.	13
Didn't know.	200,000
Lied about it.	999,087
Been to church.	2
Changed politics.	33
Expected to change still.	83
Cash on hand.	$0,00
Gave for charity.	$5 00
Gave for terrier dog.	$23 99
Sworn off bad habits.	722 000
Shall swear off this year.	720 000
Number of bad habits.	10),000

THE servant of a Prussian officer one day met a crony, who inquired of him how he got along with his fiery master. "Oh, excellently!" answered the servant. "We live on very friendly terms; every morning we dust each other's coats; the only difference is, he takes his coat off to be dusted, and I keep mine on."

A VIEW ON THE RAPPAHANNOCK, NEAR THE RAPPAHANNOCK STATION.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, E. FORBES.

THE SANITARY FAIR IN NEW YORK.—THE 22D REGIMENT ARMORY ON FOURTEENTH STREET NOW PREPARING FOR THE FAIR.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

Col. W. Kryzanowski, 58th N. Y.
Col. P. Kelly, 88th N. Y.

Lieut.-Col. R. Avery, 102nd N. Y.
Col. G. L. Prescott, 32nd Mass.

Col. O. H. Morris, 66th N. Y.
Lieut.-Col. J. McConihe, 169th N. Y.

COLONELS OF VETERAN REGIMENTS RE-ENLISTED FOR THE WAR.

An invincible wit and punster asked the captain of a vessel with bowels how he managed to get dinner on the passage.

"Why," replied the skipper, "we always cook aboard."

"Cook a board, do you?" rejoined the wag; "then I see you have been well supplied with provisions this trip, at all events."

A COUPLE of travellers stopping at the hotel Frascata, in the city of Cordova, the capital of the Argentine Confederation, were surprised and amused by noticing on the bill of fare, "Eggs on horseback." Determined to know what it meant, they called for the equestrian dish, when it was steak with an egg on the top.

A Dog is counted mad when he won't take something to drink, and a man insane when he takes too much. A financier remains respectable with a fortune that don't belong to him, while a beggar becomes a criminal for purloining a piece of meat.

The most refined and best-dressed ladies of this country patronize Demorest's La Bon Ton Journal des Modes, imported by S. T. TAYLOR, 497 Broadway, N.Y. Subscription, one year $2; Single copies, mon thly, 20 cents. Ten specimen numbers will be sent to order for $1.

MADAME BENEDICT'S

Millinery & Dressmaking Establishment,

Is now replete with

Every Imported Novelty of the Season.

12 WAVERLEY PLACE, NEW YORK. 000

Literary Agent.

The subscriber will continue his Literary Agency He is about to act as authors. Manuscripts are critically read. A candid opinion is given. They are then, if approved, recommended to publishers. For this opinion, whether favorable or adverse, an advance fee is required. This should be remitted by mail or express, together with manuscripts, prepaid. Address PARK BENJAMIN

75 West 45th Street, N. Y.

The Color of your Eyes.

Language of Blue Eyes, Black Eyes, Brown Eyes, Hazel Eyes, and Green Eyes. Gen. Children's Eyes, and the Eyes of Celebrated Persons—Poetry of the Eyes—

The bright black eye, the melting blue,
The hazel changes between the two;
But that is nearest all the while,
Which sweetly wears the smartest smile, and much on the same subject, in the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for MARCH, now ready (15 cents, or $1 a year. Address

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Ten years in the Business.

Patrons counted by thousands in every State of the Union.

A Premium for all!

Evans' New Enterprise, 1864, $500,000 worth of New Goods,

consisting of

Gold and Silver Watches, Jewelry, Vest and Guard Chains, Gold Pens, Pencils, Lockets, Medallions, Setts of Jewelry, &c., &c.,

together with a large line of goods especially adapted to the wants of our Soldiers, Army and Navy, to be sold in

lots at One Dollar Each,

and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive. Premium Orders for above goods, sent to any address, on receipt of 10 cents.

Send your orders to

G. G. EVANS, Publisher, 630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

N. B. A classified Catalogue, of Books with Price Lists of Photograph Card Pictures and Albums, sent on receipt of 5 cents.

Address, G. G. EVANS, Philadelphia, Pa.

25 Cent Legal Tender Circular.

$15 A DAY AND A WATCH FREE!

Reader, delay not; send at once for our New Free Circular whether you want it or not, and we will return to you the package on your letter or its equivalent, as we want every person to have a Circular & several everybody defies competition, and distorts competitors.

1,000 Agents wanted. Samples 50 cts. Address

WEIR & Co., 505 Chestnut St., Phila.

Light for the Country.

The New Metal Top Lamp Chimney, the best in the world for Kerosene. Large white flame. Remove the top to clean. Outlasts 20 common chimneys Never breaks pitting on the shade. Everybody uses them. Get new glass when broken by accident. Sample box, $2. Exclusive agencies granted for towns or counties. Address

NEW METAL TOP CHIMNEY MANUFACTURING CO.

45 Fulton Street, New York.

We are now offering our celebrated

GOLD PENS

AND EXTENSION

SILVER-PLATED

HOLDERS

At the following low prices for Cash:

No. 1. Magic Gold Pens and Holders per dozen..... $ 3 50
No. 2. " " " " 7 00
No. 1. Albertine Fine Gold Pens and Holders..... 6 00
No. 2. " " " " 9 00
No. 1. Always Ready..... 11 50
No. 2. " " 13 00

These Pens and Holders are all Warranted and will retail from $2 to $5 each.

A deduction of 10 per cent. will be made on all sums of $50 and upwards. Our Pens and Holders have nice Fancy Cases containing One Dozen each, and are not sold in less quantities. Sent by mail or express prepaid. Address

SALISBURY, BROS. & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

Attention, Officers and Soldiers!

I have just issued a New Battle Pin with a likeness of either General in the Army and the principal Battles he has been engaged in, engraved thereon. Also a New Naval Engagement, Artillery, Battery and Cavalry Pin. The above are all made either of S.I.d Silver or Fine Gold Plate, and I will send them free on receipt of 50 each.

Also, for $1, I will send a Solid Silver Shield or either Army Corps, Division or Co. Pin, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely engraved thereon.

Agents wanted in every Regiment, Hospital and Vessel. With each sample will be sent a wholesale Circular to Agents.

Also, the Emporium for Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils, Lockets, Bracelets, Chains, Rings, Pins, Sets of Jewelry, Studs and Buttons, and everything in the line. Our Certificate telling you what you can have for $1 will be sent for 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5.

S. M. WARD & CO., Manufacturing Jewellers,

208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner,

For Kerosene Oil Lamps and Lanterns, gives a soft limit ing light, free from smoke or smell, and needs NO chimney. We are now prepared to supply the increasing demand for this superior Burner, which everywhere gives satisfaction. Sample sent, postpaid, for 38 cents.

Agents wanted. Send for Circular.

F. ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers,
1 Platt Street, N. Y.

Just what Everybody wants.

OUR NEW POCKET ALBUM.

(FOR SOLDIER AND CIVILIAN)

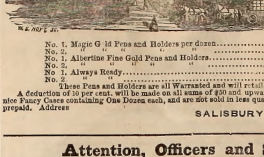
Holding 18 Pictures, is the cheapest and best Pocket Album ever offered to the public.

Sent by mail, to any address, postpaid, on receipt of 75 cents.

It is filled with Pictures (16) and sent by mail to soldiers in the army, or friends anywhere in Uncle Sam's domains, at the very trifling sum of 38 cents postage. All orders promptly filled by

SAMUEL BOWLES & CO.,
Photograph Album Manufacturers,
Springfield, Mass.

False Whiskers and Moustaches, $2.50 a pair. Whiskers $2 a pair; Moustaches 50 cts. and $1 a pair. Sent free, by mail. Address



C.W. FIELD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

4t14

Whiskers in 42 Days or money refunded. My Onguent will force them to grow heavily in Six Weeks on the smoothest face without injury to the skin. Sent postpaid, for 50 cents a package or 3 for $1. Address

A. R. CHAPMAN, Springfield, Mass.

Artillery Badges.

Annexed is a fac simile design of our Newest Style ARTILLERY BADGE. Sent free to any address on receipt of price, with Name, Co. and Regiment handsomely Engraved thereon.

Solid Silver (without button) $1.50. Solid Silver, letters in Gold Relief (without button) $2. Solid Gold (without button) $5.

Button, 20 cts. to each extra.

Also New Style CAVALRY BADGE, and every style Co. Pins and Corps Badges worn by the Army.

Our Illustrated Catalogue sent free. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO.,
208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of AMERICAN PEOPLE,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. TRALL, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the remedies are Hidden nonsense or Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

Sent full to any address on receipt of 25 cents. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 94 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 4t5-4t

$75 A MONTH!—I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address

S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

4t8-4t

Straight Hair Made Wavy.

Without heating it, by using
IVINS' PATENT HAIR CRIMPERS.
For Sale at Variety Stores. 8t8-8t

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS

THE HORRORS OF INDIGESTION.—You complain of your stomach, unfortunately, for you ought not your stomach to complain of you. Possibly the pangs you endure are only the stomach's reminding you, perhaps, of some sin for neglecting and insulting it. Perhaps you have over made an effort to improve its condition but on the other hand are continually trifling with unwholesome and poisonous food. Have you ever tried HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS, a proper diet and regular meals? The Bitters in a week would put your digestive apparatus in perfect order, regulate the functions of the bowels with the stomach, and produce just so much nervous action as would be necessary for your good; and when you were once all right, judicious and regular dieting, with a little of the Tonic to keep them, would keep you so. If you have neglected these means so long, don't blame the stomach for its rebellion. It is merely natural that that the weary body, if you neglect it, the next thing you have information, or the stomach, or the liver, or the bowels, and the nerves become. There is nothing as being for long as the unattended Dyspepsia. Take Hostetter's Celebrated Stomach Bitters, previously now engender diseases which only all restoratives.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 470 BROADWAY.

"The New York Monthly."

Send 25 cents to the "New York Monthly" for a "Song Bird." They please everybody. Sent by mail on receipt of price.

N. Y. MONTHLY, 81 Nassau Street, N. Y.

To Soldiers!

A new Ring made entirely of Fine Gold, with the Name, Co. and Regiment beautifully engraved upon the outside, for $1; in Solid Silver, $1.50. Sent by mail on receipt of price.

R. KEITH, 208 Broadway, N. Y.,
Dealer in all kinds of Army Badges, Watches, Gold Pens, &c.

The Newest Thing Out.

Wanted Canvassers, News Agents, Sutlers and Dealers generally, everywhere, to sell STEPUE SIS CELEBRITIES. Splendid Photographed in oil colors from original designs: three yards. 12 cards each.

Part 1.—Our Relations at Home and Abroad.

Pat. 2.—The Advantages of a Conscript. (Both spiritually com.).

Part 3.—The Slave in 1863. (A thrilling series of the great evil.)

Price 50 cents each, postpaid. Dealers sending $1 supplied with 3. Or, three parts, as samples, postpaid. Trade terms liberal.

WM. A. SIEPHENS, Publisher,
No 490 Chestnut St., Phila.

411-2

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1 000 different styles. Best sizes. For Catalogue, 000 VICTOR DELAFO 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,

42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office) offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	EACH
150 Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	15 to 75
400 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	5 to 15
3000 Vest and Guard Chains	2 00 to 6 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	2 00 to 5 00
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Gents Breast Pins	2 50 to 5 00
3000 Watch Keys	2 50 to 5 00
3000 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00
3000 Sets of Bosom Studs	2 00 to 6 00
3000 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 6 00
3000 Gold Band Rings	2 50 to 6 00
3000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 6 00
3000 Lockets	4 00 to 10 00
3000 Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
1000 Gold Pens, First Mixed Holders	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the neatest and most fashionable styles. Certificates of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail for 25 cents each. Upon the receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to send ONE DOLLAR and take the article named in it, or not. For 7 Certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred $15; One Hundred and Fifty, $20. Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate, provided their remittances amount to $5 or upwards. Descriptive Circulars sent free, or, if you prefer, we will send a Gold Watch. Address as above.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau Street, N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This wonderful mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., by mail, 10 cents, together with a guide to the admirers of both sexes—an extraordinary book, or great interest; Fluted cabinet, size 100,50 inches, and a gold ring. Address V. WILLIAM & CO. Publishers, Philadelphia.

Fifty Methods of Employment.—Arts Secrets, Wizards' Mail Money, etc. Complete system for $1—worth $100. Address

W. FRIEZELL, Baltimore, Md.

The "Jerks," or Convulsions,

When under religious exercises—Wonderful phenomena in France—Causes explained—A chapter of Hoof—The Power of the Affections—White, Red or Brown—which? What we want—Fruit growing—About Nasby, or the Surprise Party—Fine Illustrations in Great Britain and Ireland, Death Tokens, Sign of Misfortune, Tooth Guard—Death Coming—Odd Ends at a Funeral—Drying Fortunes, etc., in MARCH No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Only 15 cents, or $1 50 a year.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Baker's Rheumatic Balm,

BAKER'S FEVER COOLER.
BAKER'S COUGH MIXTURE.
BAKER'S CURE OF ALL PAIN.

are four remedies which no family should be ever without. Call and get our bottles each. Also,

BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES,
Price $5.

Principal Depot—No. 154 TENTH STREET, near 6th Ave., N. Y. Remedies sent to any section on receipt of price. 439-51

10,000 Agents Wanted

Both in and out of the Army, for
THE NEW ARMY PACKAGE.
Contains Five. Call and get one.
438-41 J. L. G. PIERPONT, 335 Broadway, N. Y.

The Mile Explorers,

Captain SPEKE and GRANT, with likenesses, including their Adventures in North Equatorial Africa. How to get two wives—THE SCIENCE OF FORCE, Magnetism—What Mind is—Mesmerism—Origin of Vegetation—What Mind is made of—The Breath of Life—WONDERFUL OLD CHARACTER—The Microscope—MODERN Birds, Physiological and Stellar Wonders, in MARCH No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. 15 cents, or $1 50 a year. Address

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 42 Days." Dont be humbugged with ONGUENTS, The GREAT Rising Tonic, Prepared in the BOOK of WONDERS, 12,000 sold. Only 20 cts; by 30 cts. Address C. E. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

NOW READY.

FRANK LESLIE'S

BUDGET OF FUN,

FOR APRIL,

Being No. 74 of the great Comic Paper of America.

The chief Cartoons are John Bull's Terror at a genuine American Ghost—and Uncle Abe's Spring Crops about to Shoot—besides numerous other excellent hits at the times.

The Illustrations are by the first living Artists, Newman, Bellew, Leech, Fisk, Mullen, McLennan, &c.

The Literature is also by our ablest writers, serious and comic.

PRICE TEN CENTS.

How to tell Fortunes by Cards.—Sent to any address for 30 cents. Address G. K. KNOWLTON, Hamilton, Mass. 438-41

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get your Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT SMOKING CASE!

Most complete in every combination of the Meerschaum Case and Cooling Mouth Piece, and Pipe Cleaner, with a handsome Tobacco Pouch attached, all fitting into a valise, satchel, or case of the finest or waist of tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and portable as a Cigar Case. It is made for service, of various and handsome styles, at $1 50, $2, $2 50, $3 50 and $5 to $3 75 each. Each case is highly Plated and Engraved. Nothing can excel its Comfort, Utility and Economy for all Smokers. As a PRESENT TO FRIENDS nothing could be more acceptable.

FOR THE SOLDIER IT IS INVALUABLE.

Also

The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco!

Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fill the case (about 2 weeks' smoking), $5 25 per dozen, and of various Sizes for the general Trade. A liberal discount to Dealers. Single Cases sent by mail, paid, on receipt of price and 25 cents. Also, half pound packages of this fine Tobacco; full weight sent (carefully put up) by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 25.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
Office 548 Broadway, cor. Howard St., N. Y.

Beauty—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson the celebrated "Parisian Ladies' Enameller," entirely obliterates the most permanent, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is more natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Sun Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address MME. RACHEL, 67 Northampt. 911 Bloomingdale Street, and 41 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

J. G. SCHULL,
MERCHANT TAILOR
32 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings, which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable, while style and in the most reasonable terms to cash.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smooth of face) without any or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of postage.

E. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N.Y.

Remington's

Army and Navy
REVOLVER!

Approved by the Government.

Is far more powerful and superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Is safe, simple and Self Reducers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N.Y.

Hawkes's Diamond Polished Gold Pen

Medium Pen $6 00 | Commercial Pen $3 25
Large " 6 63 | Mammoth " 2 50
Engraving " 3 75 | Letterhead " 2 00

Also, Fountain Pens—one filling will write eight to fifteen hours. Send stamp for Circular.

GEO. F. HAWKES, Manufacturer,
428-6 64 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Conjugal Resemblances,

Where Love begins and ends—Woman's Wages—Matrimony—Marriage—Harmony—Its nature, use, and abuse—Etymology, Skulls and national character of the English, Scotch, German, French, Celtic, Finnish, Circassian, etc. The Colored Chapiter. Rev. H. M. Turner—his genius and a sketch of character—in the March No. Phrenological Journal, 15 cents, or $1 a year.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers, Something New. The Traveller's Companion; or, Butcher's Proof Traveller's Lock Stapler; sent by mail, 30 cents. Retail $5 ea. Send stamp for Circular.

439 81 S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pen-cils, Oriental Burners and 13 other articles. Circulars free. JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Me.

NEW ARMY WATCHES!

The great New Army Watch, expressly for dealers, in very Heavy Solid Silver Hunting Cases. Best English Lever Movement. Full Jewelled, with Compensation Balance, White Dial and Steel Cut Hands. Engraved on Plain Cases. Warranted a perfect time-keeper for one year, $15.

$15 $15

Gold Composite, same as above, extra heavy plate. Full Jewelled Army Watch, $15.

$15 $15

Fine Double Bottom Silver Engish Lever Hunting Watch. Full Jewelled, Chronometer Balance, $25

$25 $25

OFFICER'S Watch — Genuine American Lever Watch, in 4 oz. Sterling Silver Case. Full Jewelled, Gold Joints and Double Bottom Cases, $35.

$35 $35

American Lever, same as above, with Chronometer Balance, $45.

$45 $45

Silver Hunting Watch, English Movement, $11.

$11 $11

Lady's very small Hunting Gold Composite Watch, in unfading Enameled Hinged Spring Set Cases, and warranted to be detect from Gold, $16.

$16 $16

Splendid 18 Karat Heavy Gold American Lever Watch, in 6 oz. heavy weight Cases, $35.

$35 $35

$92 Same as above, with Chronometer Balance, $92.

$92

$38 Gold Hunting English Lever Watch, Rare Jewelled and Screw Cases, $38.

$38

Constantly on hand Watches of Every Description

We will send any of the above Watches on receipt of price, free of expense, to any address.

Registered Letters come at our risk if properly seal ed.

All Watches Registered 20 cents extra.

Great inducements to Agents.

Send for our Circular.

Correspondence will give their address plain.

GEO. A. ELY & CO.,
IMPORTERS,
208 Broadway, N.Y.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations. Also, New Books and Publications. Catalogues free.
060 PIERRE BIJON, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

CHLOASMA, OR MOTH PATCHES!

Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion, as the discolored spots on the skin show more strongly on blondes than on brunettes; but they unfortunately exist in marring the beauty on either; and anything that will remove moth patches, or assist in imparting the skin a texture or color, we did no doubt be considered a great achievement and no stone unturned. Dr. B. C. PERRY, 49 Bond Street, having devoted his whole time and attention to the diseases of the Skin, will guarantee to remove Moth Patches, Freckles and other Discolorations of the face without injury to the skin or color of the skin. His success in this as in other forms of Skin Diseases—DISEASES OF THE SCALP and Loss of Hair—will warrant him in guaranteeing a CURE in EVERY CASE. For particulars, call or address as above.

DR. B. C. PERRY, 49 Bond Street, N. Y.

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

Sewing Machines
438-870 No. 505 BROADWAY, N. Y.

E. W. BENICZKY,
At his well-known
PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY,
No. 3 New Chambers Street,

Has now increased facilities to take Cartes de Visite as well as other Photographs in the best style. Notwithstanding the increase in price of different materials, the charges are the same and of equality the best.

Card Pictures $1 50 per doz.—8 for $1.
Cart Visnettes $3 per doz.
Large Photographs, 2 for $1.

All other Photographs up to life size colored in oil or water in the most reasonable terms.

☞ Particular attention given to Copying Cards or Ambrotypes into Large Photographs. The smallest or most defaced Cards can be copied by the experienced artists, copied into a handsome photograph.

Every attention paid to visitors wishing to examine the Gallery.

Something that won't make you Laugh.

6 000 copies already sold. The Wonderful and Startling Adventures of Richard Parker, of Birth and Humor. Sent everywhere (postpaid) on receipt of 25 cents. Address

FREDERICK L. DUTSON, Baltimore, Md.

Philadelphia Package Stationery.

ARMSTRONG & SHEPHERD having bought out E. R. RIE and taken in partnership in Dexter's Building, No. 31 South Third Street, offer to Travelling and Local Agents attractive inducements in new and improved styles of stationery Pack ges, of home manufacture to Agents. Send orders and for Circulars.

Philadelphia, Feb. 1864.

"Diphtheria."

A certain preventive, and sure, safe and simple remedy for this sudden and dangerous disease, may be had by addressing (enclosing one dollar) to

DR. OTIS C. LADLEIGH, 12 Astor Place, N. Y.
060

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!

30,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.

WORTH $150,000,

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for it, and also name your choice Circular containing full list of articles and particulars, and terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

Six Certificates can be ordered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $12.

Address C. F. SHULTZ,
437-49 208 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry! Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by W. YARIL, M. D., 100 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address 58 White Street, New York.

We have furnished our Weapon's Rifles as follows:

State of Kentucky	1,306
State of Indiana	760
General Ripley	150
Colonel Collins	230
Capt. Buck's Co., Chillicothe, O.
Capt. Conard's " Kansas.
Capt. Child's " Athens, Ill.
Capt. Whybark's Co., Rolla, Mo.
Capt. McGee's " Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Mercier's " Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Olds' " Perryville, Ind.

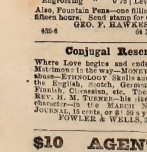
LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 12, 1862.

DEAR SIR.—The Rifles (31) were put to a severe test on the 7th at the State Fair, AND WON A STEADY OPPOSITION in a contest against THREE INFANTRY COMPANIES. They were to fire in squads of ten, each man having three shots, and to be allowed 30 seconds. Five " We were OUT-NUMBERED TWO HUNDRED when by the 3d fairly at 100 shots. The greatest number of hits in any infantry company was 124. Thus establishing the superiority of the KENTUCKY (Wesson) Gun.

M. S. GRANT,
Col. 1st Kansas Cav.

To MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.
B. KITTREDGE & CO.,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

431-44



Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Sure cure to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore in a few days the hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to remove effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the dandruff and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR GLOSS,
MEXICOLIN is keeping the hair in curl.
HOYT'S PERFECTION COLORING CREAM
oils and colors the hair at the same time; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.
HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER
imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves youthfulness of appearance. Sold everywhere.
JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place, N. Y.

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY'S

NEW UNION PLAYING CARDS.

National Emblems.

Colonel fo' Eagles.

The suits are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS and FLAGS. Colonial place of KING; Goddess of Liberty for Queen; Major for Jack.

The Union Playing Cards are the first and only genuine American Cards ever produced, and as they are entered according to Act of Congress they can be manufactured only by the American Card Company.

These Cards are strictly adapted to the place of Cards bearing Foreign emblems.

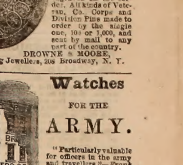
The Union Cards are the most pleasing and attractive Card ever made. They are proof and in the highest degree of finish and each pack is put up in a elegant Card Case suitable to keep them in when not in use, and thus in handsome dozen boxes for the trade.

Two Simple Packs, in Card Cases, sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY.

The Great Money-Making Article.

Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents.
060 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.



Patent applied for.

THE GREAT BATTLE PIN
Of the West!

Made of Solid Silver, 3/4 of an inch wide, and for each with Name and Rank engraved on the reverse. All kinds of Veteran, Corps and Division Pins made to order by the single one, 100 or 1,000, and sent by mail to any part of the country.

Address BROWN & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Watches
FOR THE ARMY.

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travellers."—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest timepiece ever offered."—N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 10.

"Splendidly finished Watches, the beauty of which is only equalled by their cheapness."—N. Y. Weekly, July 25.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADY'S OR GENTLEMAN'S WATCH COMBINED, WITH PATENT SELF-WINDING IMPROVEMENT.

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has what is, and cannot be had with its machinery, its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being the 16-carat gold. It has the improved ruby-setton lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, elegantly engraved, per case of half dozen, $264. Sample Watches, in neat morocco boxes, $30. By mail the postage is 60 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!

FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND ARTISTIC WORKMANSHIP, THESE IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES MUST DEFY COMPETITION.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer one first quality 16-carat silver, while the inner one is German Silver. It cannot be recognized by cutting or tearing the case, making it not only in appearance, but in durability a splendid resemblance of GOLD! STERLING SILVER in existence.

The size of these Watches for the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they will generally do, at $25 and upwards. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single day by any one of ordinary business tact.

☞ WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy bunting case, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy gold hands, in good running order, per half dozen, $72; postage, $2 36; registering, 20 cents Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by express.

☞ TERMS, CASH! INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No Agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent us by express or mail in registered letter, it is at our risk! Prices will stand the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., IMPORTERS,
438 169 Broadway and 2 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

EMPLOYMENT

At your own Homes.

THOUSANDS CAN REALISE A HUNDRED DOLLARS WEEKLY.—No utensils required except those found in every household; profits 100 per cent; demand staple as flour. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage. Address C. MUNRO BROWN, No. 74 Bleecker Street, N. Y. 440-1

Swords, Sashes, Belts.

Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords, 431-58 S. RITTREDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

New Catalogue of Jewelry sent free.
Address THOS. CAFFER & CO.,
438-41 Providence, R. I.

Soldiers and Everybody!

A great Book for you! Over 2,000 Things Worth Knowing! Mailed free for 25 cents. Address UNION BOOK ASSOCIATION, P. Box 369, Syracuse, N. Y. Agents, order our unequalled Soldiers' Packages. 440-1

Royal Havana Lottery.

50 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

$35. WATCHES. $35.

Genuine Full-Jewelled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

AMERICAN METALLIC COLLARS

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 70 cents for a "Choker" to Box 5173, and receive it by return mail.
AMERICAN ENAMELLED METALLIC COLLAR CO., 94 Pine Street, N. Y.
o

Shuits' Ongcent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. P. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts.,

MAGNIFYING 500 times, mailed on receipt of price. Five of different powers, $1. Address F. S. BOWEN, Box 230, Boston, Mass.
o

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 00, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Send for a Circular. Pens repointed on receipt of 25 cents.
435-470 E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, prepaid, for $2 50; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5. by
HENRY CRAIG,
335 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Bella-rius, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with 4 sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all eyes, for $1, with 12 assorted views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry Newport News, Hoyd, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARDENBURGH'S EXPRESS 16 & 78 Broadway. Boilers charged low rates. 000o

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,
20 cents each, $1 per doz. Free by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1614, New York city. Send for circular.

50 FIRST PREMIUMS in 1863

GROVER & BAKER'S
CELEBRATED ELASTIC STITCH
Sewing Machines

Were awarded the Highest Premiums over all competitors at the State Fairs of New York, Vermont, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Oregon, and at every respectable Institute and County Fair held in 1863.

Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, N. Y.

STAMMERING

And stuttering cured by Bates's Patent scientific Appliance. For Free Address of descriptive Pamphlets and Drawings, address o H. C. L. BATES, 377 West 23d St., N. Y.

Munro's 10 Cent Novel, No. 8.

The Death Face;

A Tale of the recent Indian troubles in the North-West. Send, postpaid, on receipt of price, 10 cents.
GEORGE MUNRO & CO., 137 William St. N. Y.
o

American, Swiss and English Watches

in superior styles and quality of cases. Orders from the Trade or Army (by express) promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 20 years.
000o T. B. SYNNER, 75 Broadway, N. Y.

Soldiers!

On receipt of $1 we will send, postpaid, a BEAUTIFUL PHOTOGRAPH ALBUM suitable for holding the Photographs of "loved ones at home." They are small (3¾ by 4¼ inches), can be carried in the pocket at all times, uninjured, and are manufactured by S. HOWLES & CO., Springfield, Mass., in POCKET BOOK STYLE, Morocco binding, gilt, holding 16 Pictures.
o H. H. MARTIN & CO.
Greenfield, Mass.

WHAT WE EXPECT TO SEE.

And what the present Claude Duval or dandy-highwayman style of ladies' dress is likely to lead to.

FINE WATCH FREE!

And $15 Per Day Made Easy,

by selling the GREAT "original and only genuine" RICKARD'S PRIZE AND STATIONERY PACKAGES, each of which contains "more real valuable articles" than any half-dozen other packages ever sold. Each Package contains Fine Writing Materials, Engravings, Fashion Plates, Fancy Articles, Yankee Notions, Games, Receipts, Many Ways to get Rich, Rich Presents of Fine Jewelry, etc. The whole worth several dollars if bought separate. Price 25 cents. Wholesale rates to Agents low. Profits large. Sales immense. Every soldier and every family wants them. Agents wanted in every town and camp. $15 per day guaranteed, and a splendid Gold or Silver Hunting-case Watch, genuine English movements, perfect timekeeper, PRESENTED FREE TO EACH AGENT. Beware of imitations.

We are the sole manufacturers of the GREAT ORIGINAL RICKARDS PRIZE PACKAGES, each of which we have copyrighted according to law. None others are genuine. For an expose of the swindling operations as practised by other parties, see editorial in New York Tribune of Friday, Feb. 26. Send for our great new Circulars for 1864, containing "extra premium inducements, free."
C. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y.
Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.
o

Salesmen Wanted.—Salary Paid. Address (with stamp) to Harris Bros., Boston, Mass. 435-470

Gen. McClellan's Report

Is published entire in Nos. 26 and 27, for February 20th and 27th, of the

ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL.

The Report is reprinted from the official copy presented to Congress, in a form convenient for publication, and contains, by a full index. The two numbers, containing the supplements with the Report, are for sale by all newsdealers, or sent, prepaid, on receipt of the price (50 cents), by
W. C. CHURCH, Proprietor.
o 102 Broadway, N. Y.

Ivory Jewelry!

Fine Ivory Brooches.....$1 25
Ball Earrings.....$1 50
Ivory Initial Sleeve buttons, per set.....75
Pearl Initial Buttons.....$1 00
Sent free, on receipt of price. A great variety on hand, at WELLING'S, 957 Centre St., N. Y.
Sign of the Golden Elephant.

Great Chance to Make Money!

$650,000 of Watches, Jewelry, &c.,

Given away with our STATIONERY PRIZE PACKETS.

Every AGENT purchasing 100 PACKETS will receive FREE, as a PRESENT from us, a GENUINE GOLD WATCH.

We also publish SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 Worth will be given away with each order to make more money by engaging in the sale of our PACKETS and ENGRAVINGS than in any other business. For full particulars of the SPECIAL INDUCEMENTS we offer send for our Circular.
G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
o Rockman 25, N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both Sexes—new and reliable Treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
o

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, CURED and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
435-470 CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

For Veteran, Army Corps, Cavalry and Battle Fins,

Sent to Headquarters,
o S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway.
(See Notice inside

COLLARS

LOCKWOOD'S CLOTH LINED
Paper Collars!
ALSO,
LADIES' COLLARS AND CUFFS,
AT
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
BY
CHAS. L. LOCKWOOD,
No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.

Soldiers of the Union!!!

Read the following Letters received from your comrades as indorsements of the WORLD-KNOWN and RENOWNED THREE REMEDIES known as Professor Holloway's Pills and Ointment.

You will here find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country where our army of occupation is in force.

See to your Health!

All of you have some ailment to cure, or your welfare, then do not delay.

Your Life is Valuable!!

Not only to yourselves, but to your fathers and mothers, sisters, wives and brothers. Thus, while you may, purchase your health!

FOR 30 CENTS, 70 CENTS OR $1 00

Will, when expended in these medicines, bring you down to the most rigid and ripest old age.

The following are genuine letters, on file for inspection at this office, with thousands more.

80 MAIDEN LANE, N. Y.
QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT, 70
39th Illinois Volunteers,
FOLLY ISLAND, S. C., November 26, 1863.

P Prof. HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden lane, N. Y.—Sir—Inclosed please find two dollars, for which send me one dollar's worth each of your celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please attend to this at once, for I am much in need of the above remedies. Address,
Lieut. A. W. FELLOWS, Q.M.,
39th Illinois Vols,
CAMP, near BRANDY STATION, Va.,
January 7, 1864.

Prof. HOLLOWAY.—Dear Sir—I have heard a great deal of talk about your famous Pills, and as I never was in the need of them until now, I want to try them, as diarrhœa is very prevalent at the present time. send me the worth of the enclosed. Yours truly, &c.,
JOSEPH WALSH,
20 Co. E, 5th regt., Excelsior Brigade.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in six drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs etc, etc.
R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 78 Maiden Lane, N. Y.
000o

Agents Wanted (Male or Female). Address HALE & CO., Newburyport, Mass. 000o

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Lever Cap, Double Case, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, sent free, by mail, in neat case, only $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" Hunting Case Watch—Magic Spring—Genuine English Jewelled Movements—Independent action—Self Balance—a perfect Timekeeper—"Warranted one year," will stand acid, and is so

Exact Imitation of a $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

The Celebrated English Court Watch

For ladies. "Rich escutcheon designs," ruby movements, extra heavy 18 karat gold-plate, in STERLING SILVER HUNTING CASE. "Will stand all tests," Exact timekeeper, a perfect "Magic Article." Sent free by mail, in richly embossed Turkey Morocco Case, for only $15.

ENGLISH STERLING SILVER LEVER WATCHES, engraved Hunting Case, full jewelled movements, massive cases, $18.

Real English Duplex Gold Watches, in massive Gold Cases. Fine article, from $45 to $100.

Gold Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above styles of Watches. Catalogue of fresh prices mailed free.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper:" "It is an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British officers in the field." Illustrated News says, "Correct timepieces; equal in appearance to $100 watches."

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO.,
o 38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS
SENT EVERYWHERE
BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready-Made or to Measure, at $33, $39, $45 per doz

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free on application.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50 each—all cut on long body. A single Shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 6 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELLED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To military men and Travellers they are invaluable. Price $1 per dozen; sent by express to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 15.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, (free of charge), with directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, King's Co., N. Y.
000o

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN
6 Maiden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fire Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brushes, Horn-ware, Pipes, etc.
Military and Navy Equipments in every variety. A large assortment of RICE PRESENTATION SWORDS.
34-70 Constantly on hand.

Scurvy and Scrofulous Eruptions

Will soon cover the bodies of those brave men who are fighting their country's battles. Night air, bad food and drenching rains will make sad havoc with the strongest, therefore let every man supply himself with HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT; it is a certain cure for every kind of skin disease. 30 cents, 70 cents, and $1 10 per box or pot.

Sportsmen, Tourists, and Army and Navy Officers.

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability combined with great power in Sportsmen, Tourists', Opera and general out-door day and night double perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him at from 2 to 6 miles. Spectacles of the greatest transparent power to strengthen and improve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent change. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.

SEMMONS, Oculists—Opticians,
000o 204 Broadway, N. Y.

28-Child.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED

NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 442—Vol. XVII.] NEW YORK, MARCH 19, 1864. [Price 8 Cents.

GEN. CUSTER'S EXPEDITION.

Capt. Ash, with the 5th Regulars, charging into Stuart's Camp.

Gen. Custer, with 1,500 picked men, in light marching order, left Culpeper Court-house about two o'clock on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 28th.

The 6th and 3d corps marched from their winter quarters earlier in the day, the former halted at Madison Court-house and threw out a strong cordon of pickets, while the latter bivouacked in the neighborhood of James city, and held the line of Robertson's road.

About two A. M. the raiders left their resting-place near James city, and took the road for Charlottesville. The men had been picked from Merritt's and Gregg's divisions, and were well mounted. When they marched up the steep banks of the Ravenna river their coming was unknown and altogether unexpected.

Before us (a correspondent says) was a large cavalry camp, the huts arranged with mathematical precision and soldierly regularity. On one side the horses were quietly standing; on the other side pieces of artillery were parked, with all the appurtenances neatly arranged and in close proximity to the caissons.

The 5th regular regiment of Gen. Merritt's old brigade led the van. Capt. Ash, with one squadron, dashed in among the comfortable-looking huts with reckless precipitancy, and scattered the occupants in all directions.

He ordered the men to destroy all they could, and they obeyed their instructions to the very letter. Neither axes nor rat-tailed files could be found in his command. It was found impossible to spike the guns or chop the gun-carriages to pieces, so they contented themselves with blowing-up the caissons and destroying the camp.

Custer's raid was well conducted. After effecting his purpose, by a masterly movement, masked under another charge which Custer headed in person, he decoyed Stuart from his position, flew past him on a side road, recrossed the river at Banks's mills, and halted safe. His trophies are 80 prisoners, numerous valuable horses, and samples of the ashes of three grist-mills, eight wagon-loads of commissary stores, six caissons, two forges and a set of artillery harness.

RECRUITING IN THE PARK, NEW YORK.

The recruiting service which, for a time, dotted the Park with tents of all shapes and sizes, has now taken up its quarters in a more substantial structure, which we picture for our city and country friends, as well as to enable some Mr. Dawson who writes a history of the Park in 1900 to give a correct view of the ephemeral edifice that rises beside the new Palace of Justice now erecting on Chambers street.

THE WAR IN VIRGINIA—GEN. CUSTER'S 5TH REGULARS, CAPT. ASH, CHARGING INTO J. E. B. STUART'S CAMP NEAR CHARLOTTESVILLE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

The recruiting business has been very active, and the numbers who have come forward to get the bounties offered by City, State and Union have nearly filled up the quota. New York city lacks only about 2 000, and these furnished there will be no necessity for a draft

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS—Three men and one woman, each over eight feet high; two Dwarfs, each less than two feet high—besides a host of other Novelties. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 23 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turkish, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table; and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs only $3. Sent free, by mail on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,
No. 37 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, MARCH 19, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 72 Duane street, between Broadway and Elm New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE P BEMIS & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 100 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 50
Two copies " to one address	5 00
Four " " "	9 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00
Paper, 14 weeks	1 00

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

75 cents a line on the outside or last page
40 " " on the 14th and 15th pages.

Conclusion of Vol. XVII.

THE present number concludes the Seventeenth Volume of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER, the oldest, and, we can as safely say, the most accurate, comprehensive and prompt Illustrated Record of news in the world. Our pages give the history of our times with a fidelity that has no equal. Tributes to the value of the paper on this point pour in upon us constantly. They come from Generals high in command, from clergymen of distinction, from men of all positions.

As a family paper it possesses superior advantages. Its tales and poems, almost exclusively original, and by writers who have won distinction in the country, are of the highest character, and are illustrated by artists of excellent talent. These stories are selected with great care, and are such as every family must approve and enjoy.

Our next volume will conclude the admirable novel of Mrs. Stephens, "The Gulf Between Them," fully equal to the famous "Fashion and Famine," and in point of illustration will present new and varied features.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

A combined movement has been made towards Richmond, of which the full particulars are not yet known.

Gen. Custer's cavalry started Feb. 29, and, supported by the infantry under Sedgwick, made a feint upon Lee's lines in the direction of Madison Court-house. Custer fell in with Stuart's rebel cavalry, near Charlottesville, destroying his entire camp equipage and blowing-up six caissons; but finding that Stuart was posted there in great strength — nearly five to one — Custer fell back towards Madison Court-house, burning the bridges on the Ravenna. Here he met another force of the enemy, and, after several dashing charges, drove them off, capturing 500 horses and 50 prisoners, without the loss of a man.

Meanwhile Kilpatrick crossed the Rapidan at Ely's ford on Sunday morning, Feb. 28, at four o'clock, and at eleven o'clock the same day had reached Spottsylvania Court-house, distant 18 miles from the ford.

On Monday they reached the Virginia railroad, which they tore up in four places, narrowly missing Gen. Lee, who passed less than an hour before. At Fredericks-hall they captured an unsuspecting Court-Martial.

A detachment of 500 men, under Col. Ulric Dahlgren, was then sent towards Louisa Court-house, to destroy the James river canal, while Kilpatrick kept on upon Ashland, to attack Richmond, by the Brooks turnpike.

Dahlgren was misled by a negro, whom he hanged; and having been taken to Goochland, nearly captured Gov. Wise. They burned the barns of Seddons, the Secretary of War, did some damage to the canal, but from loss of time Dahlgren failed to join Kilpatrick, although a part of his force did. He ultimately made his way to Fortress Monroe.

Kilpatrick reached the outer fortifications on Tuesday, the 1st, and entered the first works. The rebels there threw down their arms and fled or surrendered. At the next line a fight with artillery took place, but Kilpatrick found it too strong, and, hearing other troops coming up, drew off to Mechanicsville. Here he encamped, but was shelled out during the night. The next day he was joined by troops sent out from Fortress Monroe. The destruction of railroads, stores and supplies was very great.

His force operated in three columns, devastating the country as they advanced, being supplied with every engine of destruction that can possibly be used in a raid.

A fight took place on the 1st March, at Deep creek, 10 miles from Norfolk, but the result had not been ascertained, and heavy artillery-firing was going on at the time the correspondent closed his dispatch. The rebels seem to be infesting the Dismal Swamp canal in large numbers, and a party endeavoring to make their way to Roanoke island were compelled to turn back. A Lieutenant and 15 men of the 5th Pennsylvania cavalry were captured, while reconnoitring in the swamp. The precise object of the rebels in these demonstrations is not very clear.

NORTH CAROLINA.

News brought by the S. R. Spaulding, which arrived at Fortress Monroe from Newberne, states that a rumor prevailed that a large rebel force was within six miles of Beaufort.

This seems part of a plan announced as conceived by Davis to hurl an overwhelming force on our posts in North Carolina and drive us out, preparatory to a withdrawal of their entire force from Virginia. This step will make all the secessionists of North Carolina Union men, none of the inhabitants desiring the State to undergo the fate of Virginia. Davis has suppressed the Raleigh Standard, but has thus only secured the election of Holden, the editor, as Governor.

TENNESSEE.

Gen. Smith's cavalry expedition has returned to Memphis, having failed in its efforts to form a junction with Sherman's army. They only got to West Point, about half-way between Corinth and Meridian. At this place Lee, Chalmers and Roddy attacked them with a heavy force, and, after some severe fighting, our men began a retreat towards Memphis. The expedition destroyed over 1,000,000 bushels of corn, tore up and destroyed miles of the Memphis and Ohio railroad track, burned many bridges and trestles, captured and brought in over 1,500 mules and horses, about 2,000 negroes and over 300 rebel prisoners. Gen. Sherman advanced to Meridian, and possibly to Selma, but also fell back, after destroying all the railroads. McPherson's 17th corps has reached Jackson.

The notorious guerilla, Col. Richardson, was captured on Sunday, Feb. 28th, south of the Cumberland river, below Burkville, by a detachment of Col. Weatherford's cavalry, and subsequently shot in an attempt to escape.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Two hundred and forty-six shots were fired at the city of Charleston on Feb. 25 and 26, and the rebels report that our troops are erecting a battery on Dixon's island, to command Schooner creek.

MISSISSIPPI.

On the 14th Feb. a company of the 1st Mississippi Union (colored) infantry was surprised near Grand Lake, Miss., by a company of rebel guerillas, wearing Union uniforms, and all but two were killed. Some of the negroes were pinned to the ground with bayonets, others had their brains knocked out, and others were shot through the head while on their knees begging for quarter. The guerillas escaped without losing a man. This is reported upon the authority of the clerk of the steamer Pringle.

ALABAMA.

Our fleet opened a tremendous fire on Fort Powell on the morning of the 23d Feb., and it was thought that it could not hold out long. The rebel ram Tennessee now lies under the protection of the guns of Fort Morgan. The women and children were being removed from Mobile. Admiral Farragut, on board the Calhoun, was inside of Dauphin island, and the flagship Hartford was at Ship island, 40 miles west of Mobile. An attack on our blockading fleet was anticipated, provided that the rebel rams were in good order and condition.

NAVAL.

The small sidewheel steamer Scotia arrived on the 3d March at Fortress Monroe, having been captured running the blockade out of Wilmington. The gunboat Connecticut made her a prize. Her cargo consisted of 108 bales of cotton.

CONGRESS.

IN the Senate, on the 29th of Feb., the bill extending bounties to the 1st of April was passed. The Conference Committee on the Whiskey tax reported that no agreement could be effected, unless the Senate should instruct the Committee to allow a tax of 20 cents per gallon on whiskey on hand in July.

In the House, after some unimportant business, Mr. Long moved that the President be requested to appoint ex-Presidents Pierce and Millard Fillmore, and Thomas Ewing, to meet like Commissioners from the South, to agree upon the restoration of the Union. The resolution was voted down by 96 to 22. Mr. Pendleton proposed a resolution denouncing the arrest of Vallandigham, which was rejected by 76 to 47. Mr. Schenck then moved resolutions declaring rebels and their sympathisers as public enemies, and that to prevent future rebellions the cause of this must be extirpated. They were unanimously adopted. Mr. Ross offered a resolution, that in consequence of the increased rate of living, the pay of the officers of the army and navy be increased 33 per cent., and that the Committee of Military Affairs be ordered to carry out the suggestion.

In the Senate, on the 1st of March, petitions were presented from citizens of Ohio for a repeal of the Fugitive Slave Law in favor of a Constitutional amendment prohibiting Slavery, and in reference to reconstruction. The minority of the Committee on Slavery and Freedmen presented a report adverse to the repeal of the Fugitive Slave law, which was ordered to be printed. The Senate then took up the House bill for the issue of 200 000 000 of the 600,000,000 of bonds heretofore authorised, redeemable in not less than 5 nor more than 40 years, and of $11,000,000 worth of the 5 20 bonds, to meet the surplus subscriptions. A long debate ensued and different amendments were proposed The bill was finally passed, after the adoption of an amendment making the principal payable in coin. On motion of Mr Sherman, from the Conference Committee on the Revenue bill, the Senate insisted on its Whiskey tax amendments, and agreed to submit the matter again to the House.

In the House, after several routine matters had been discussed, the bill for the establishment of a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs was, after a long debate, passed by 69 yeas to 67 nays. A message being received from the Senate announcing the disagreement of the Conference Committee on the Whiskey tax, considerable discussion on the subject followed, and it was finally agreed, on the motion of Mr. Washburne, that the House adhere to its disagreement with the Senate amendments, and request another conference declaring its opinion that there should be levied on spirits already on hand and for sale an additional tax of not less than 20 nor more than 40 cents per gallon. A concurrent resolution for the final close of the session on the 31st of May was adopted.

In the Senate, on the 2d of March, the Whiskey bill was taken up, and the Senate, by 25 against 15, refused to agree to the request of the House for an instructed Conference Committee. A resolution was adopted to inquire into the causes of the late disaster in Florida.

In the House the business was of an uninteresting nature, being confined to defining the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims.

In the Senate, on the 3d of March, Mr. Wilson called up the House bill extending bounties to April 1st, and he read a letter from Mr. Stanton, recommending its immediate passage. It was passed. Mr Davis, of Kentucky, submitted an amendment to the joint resolution amending the Constitution; the amendment provides that no person or negro whose mother or grandmother was a negro, shall be a citizen, or hold any civil or military office; that the States of Maine and Massachusetts shall constitute one State to be called East New England; the States of New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island and Connecticut, another State to be called West New England. The bill to prevent military interference in elections was called up, and Mr. Powell addressed the Senate at length in favor of the bill, when the Senate adjourned.

In the House, a resolution to print 10,000 copies of Gen. Grant's report was referred to the Committee on Printing. The report of the Ways and Means Committee against the surplus gold resolution was taken up, and Mr. Stebbins, of this city, made a very forcible speech in favor of the principle of the resolution. Mr. Fenton also spoke in the same strain. Both gentlemen offered substitutes for the pending resolutions, but without taking further action, the disagreement of the Conference Committee on the Whiskey tax was announced. After discussion, the House, by 71 to 61, voted to stick to its proposition to tax whiskey on hand.

In the Senate, on the 4th of March, Mr. Sherman made a statement respecting the disagreement of the Committee of Conference of both Houses on the Revenue bill, and said that inasmuch as the disagreement seemed irreconcilable, the Committee on the part of the Senate would recommend, in order to prevent the failure of the bill, that the Senate recede from its amendments. A vote was then taken on the recommendation, which was adopted by 25 against 17. Mr. Brown called up his bill directing an additional classified census of the population and resources of certain portions of the country, but the passage of the measure was opposed by Mr. Grimes, and it was referred to the Finance Committee.

In the House there was nothing of any public interest.

FOREIGN.

THE German troops had entered Jutland. Lord Palmerston made a strong speech in Parliament on the subject of the Austro-Prussian invasion of Schleswig; but he did not say what England would do if Jutland should be invaded. A Cabinet Council, hastily summoned, met in London on the 20th ult. Napoleon was drawing closer to Denmark. Some of the leading journals of Paris and Vienna are very sarcastic on the Dano German policy of England. The British squadron in the Tagus was ordered to Portland roads, to be ready for any emergency. The German troops had attacked the Danish position at Duppel, along the entire line, but were repulsed after severe fighting. War risks were demanded and paid in England on the vessels of both belligerents, and naval retaliation on traders was ordered on both sides. Twelve Austrian war vessels were to put to sea to protect German merchantmen. Several Danish ironclad vessels appeared in Flensburg Fiord on the 18th ult , and exchanged shots with the Prussian artillery. The minor States of Germany were likely to separate more widely from Austria and Prussia.

The Archduke Maximilian was to receive the Mexican deputation in Vienna and be proclaimed Emperor of Mexico. Previous to this he was to visit Brussels, and attend at the baptism of the son of the Prince of Wales, in London. He will set out for Mexico in an Austrian war vessel, and touch at Civita Vecchia, in order to receive the blessing of the Pope.

From Poland we learn that the Russians had sustained some severe defeats at the hands of the insurgents.

Italy was actively preparing for war.

The frontier seat of war in India was again quiet

The steamship Great Eastern has been chartered to lay the Atlantic cable in 1865.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The deaths in New York during the past week were 558—140 men, 135 women, 146 boys, and 136 girls—an increase of 70 upon the mortality of the previous week, and of 132 as compared with the mortality of the corresponding week of 1863. Of the deceased, 237 were children under five years of age. The mortality by principal diseases was as follows: Consumption, 86; inflammation of the lungs, 60; infantile convulsions, 35; croup, 28; typhus fever, 21; scarlet fever, 18; typhoid, 16; inflammation of the brain, 16; diphtheria, 15; bronchitis, 13; disease of the heart, 10; erysipelas, 9; small pox, 2; deaths from external causes, 56, among which are reported 7 premature births, 10 deaths from old age, 1 murder, 1 suicide, 1 poisoned, 1 drowned, 2 frostbitten, 10 scalded, 8 killed by accident.

—— A man named MacIntyre actually obtained the arrest of a butcher the other day as an absconding debtor, the evidence being that he had closed his shop all day. The butcher proved that he was a religious man, and closed his shop because it was Lent. The informer was, consequently, signally defeated, and the butcher contemplates bringing an action against him.

—— The Eucleian Society of New York University gave an exhibition at Niblo's Saloon last evening before a crowded audience. The exercises consisted of orations and recitations by members of the society, which were, on the whole, excellently rendered. Helmsmuller's band discoursed fine music on the occasion.

—— The regular meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society was held on the 3d inst., B. L. Swan, Esq., in the chair. From the reports furnished it seems that the society is in quite a flourishing condition. Appropriations for foreign work to the amount of $64,177 46 were received.

—— The annual commencement of Bellevue Medical College was celebrated on the 3rd inst. at the Academy of Music, in the presence of thousands of citizens. The rooms were most brilliantly illuminated, and on every side beauty and loveliness rained down their enchanting showers. At seven o'clock the Academy was so crowded that ingress and egress were equally impossible. The exercises and amusements of the evening were of the most select kind, and up to the hour when the large audience dispersed there was enough to attract even larger crowds than those which thronged the great temple of art, to do homage to the disciples of Esculapius now branching into medical life from Bellevue Hospital.

—— The Brooklyn and Long Island Sanitary Fair finally closed on the 5th of March, after which the executive committee will decide how the goods then remaining unsold are to be disposed of. The gross amount of the receipts was about $372,000.

Western.—The Minnesota Legislature has increased the salary of the Governor of that State $2,000, and gives $500 to the person who killed Little Crow, the Sioux Indian chief and murderer.

—— The civil affairs of Idaho are in such an unsettled state that it is believed it will be impossible to establish good Government there until the Territory is divided. The seat of Government is in the extreme north-west corner of Idaho, from which the eastern part of the Territory is cut off by a mountain range, placing it quite beyond the control of the authorities while stationed so far away. The emigration this spring will be very heavy, and the Overland Mail Company are about to establish a daily line of coaches from Salt Lake City to the Territory.

—— The Chicago Journal says the farmers in various parts of Illinois are already sowing their spring wheat. This is unusually early. It also learns that if the weather continues favorable a large breadth of wheat will be put in There was much ploughing done last fall, and the only drawback to extensive farming operations is the scarcity of help. Wages for farm hands, which three years ago were from $15 to $18 a month, are now from $20 to $25 The winter wheat, as far as we have ascertained, has not been injured in the West by the cold weather.

Southern.—The troubles at Fort Jackson, below New Orleans, have terminated in a couple of Courts-Martial, one of which finds Lieut.-Col. Augustus W. Benedict, 4th infantry, Corps d'Afrique, guilty of "inflicting cruel and unusual punishment, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline," and sentences him to be dismissed the service. Twelve of the privates of the same regiment were Court-Martialed on a charge of mutiny Two were sentenced to be shot to death, and seven condemned to various terms of imprisonment, with hard labor.

—— Five additional Union officers, escaped from Libby prison, Richmond, have reached Fortress Monroe, viz., Col. Charles W. Tilden, 16th Maine; Major J. H. Hooper, 15th Massachusetts; Capt. Fisher, 3d Pennsylvania; Lieut. Wallace, 5th United States artillery; and H B. Chamberlain, 97th New York. This makes 55 who have arrived safely within our lines.

—— By the arrival of a steamer at Cairo, we have news from Memphis and New Orleans. Much dissatisfaction exists among the rebel Mississippi troops because of the speculations of their Generals in cotton, which, they allege, is taken from their wives and families by scouts sent out for that purpose. This cotton is brought to Memphis and sold, the scouts sharing the proceeds with the Generals. An enthusiastic emancipation meeting was recently held at Memphis. There is no confirmation of the reported capture of Selma, Ala.

Military.—Colonel Streight, of Indiana, recently escaped from Libby prison, at Richmond, is anxious to have a command under Gen Butler, that he may be enabled to operate against the rebel capital. Streight is just the man to take a cavalry command, and he has a long score to settle with Winder and Jeff. Davis. He and Col. Spear, of the 11th Pennsylvania, would prove to be the right men in the right place.

—— A Louisville dispatch announces the capture of the notorious Col. Richardson, who recently ordered his troops to shoot all men dead who refused to be conscripted. The scoundrel has caused the death of many Union men in Tennessee and in Northern Alabama, and it is to be hoped that due justice will be meted out to a man whose inhumanity has rendered his name a byword and a reproach.

—— The House of Representatives a few days since called upon the President to furnish a statement showing the number of re-enlisted veterans from each State, and other information in that connection. To this the President has replied, enclosing a letter from the Secretary of War, who says that in his opinion it would prove prejudicial to the public service to transmit to the House at the present time the information requested.

Personal.—Through the efforts of J. M. Tobin, the sum of $1,000 dollars has been subscribed by the Board of Brokers and others for the benefit of Mr. Daniels, the centenarian. Mr D. is, we believe, the only soldier of the Revolutionary War living in this city.

— Victor Emanuel has sent the Cross of a Commander of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus to Mr. Hemans, for services rendered to the Provincial Brigade Re d'Italie, when she went ashore at Barnegat. The same distinction is conferred on Admiral Paulding, and Capt. Halford is made a Chevalier of the Order.

— The Senate confirmed the nomination of Gen. Grant as Major-General of the U. S. Regular Army; also, of Gens. Meade, W. T. Sherman, Thomas and McPherson as Brigadiers in the Regulars. Gens. Pleasanton and Warren were confirmed as Major-Generals of Volunteers.

— Miss Emma Webb, one of the talented Webb Sisters, delivered an address at the Academy of Music on Monday night in reply to the public welcome advocated by Miss Ann Dickinson. It is to be hoped never repeated, so hackneyed a topic, and was received with great enthusiasm by a large and respectable audience.

— About nine o'clock of the evening of the 3d of March, on Thursday, Sunday, of March ahead, we mulled in matrimony to Mehitable Jones, of somewhere, both of the residence of Mr. Mehitable Jones. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Jedediah P. Sandcrust, in the Lafayette Avenue Church of the Brooklyn Sanitary Fair.

— Supper was read on the 6th before the Geographical Society, at Clinton Hall, by Joshua Leavitt, M. D., on "Mexico, Its Conditions and Relations." The paper ably sketched the political and social causes of Democracy and gave a lucid analysis of Count Schleswig-Holstein question. Dr. Leavitt took the side of humanity, and represented that country as struggling against unprincipled foes.

— A meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held on the 4th of March, Mr. President, A. A. Low, presiding. A series of resolutions in reference to the appointment to the death of Hon. Thomas Tileston, who had been a member of the Chamber for many years, was read, and passed a high eulogy on the deceased, which met with the appreciation of all present.

— Prince de Polignac, recently in the service of Jeff. Davis, died on the 3d for France, from New York, where he had been staying for several days.

— Gen. Sickles, President of the Association of St. Patrick, gave a very entertaining lecture on the Irish Bulls on the evening of the 4th of March. He was introduced by Gen. Meagher.

— Robert Bonner, the celebrated publisher, and owner of the famous team of fast horses, has notified his intention of giving his trotting mare, Lady Woodruff, to the New York Sanitary Fair. It will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder; and will, of course, realize a large price.

— Gen. Fitzjohn and Gen. Custer, whose exploits are to-day the leading theme of newspaper amusement and of social resorts, are both of them men of the best type of youth. Kilpatrick is 28 years old, has been a widower for about a year. Custer, he younger of the two, married in our service, is 24 years age, and was married only three or four weeks ago. Both of these fine young men are West Point boys, and were graduated to the same class, that of 1861.

Obituary.—Charles W. Marsh, formerly on the editorial staff of the Tribune, subsequently a correspondent of the Evening Post and the author of "The Romance of Yorktown," in the Lenox and Tilden of Alexandria, Rypt, on the 24th of January, ages 47.

— Mr. Wm. Mitchell the only surviving relative of the late Sir Colin Campb ll, died recently in Rydale. He was intended to m b for a sea career with that illustrious commander by giving her the rank of the ship in which he was a Hero. An English remarks: "Lord Clyde, in all but his name, is now indeed extinct."

— Baroness Bolton, the daughter of Sir Guy Carleton, afterwards Lord Dorchester, whose name is from early childhood identified with the Canadian people, died recently in England, at the advanced age of 86 years.

— George A. Coffey, United States District Attorney for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, died in Philadelphia on the 20th ult.

— Edward D. Whipple, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, died on the 21st ult, at his residence in Morristown, in the 71st year of his age.

— Hester Williams, a colored woman, died in Baltimore, a few days since, having reached the advanced age of 115 years. She deceased was a servant of Henry Williams, who served in the Revolutionary army under Gen. Washington.

— Mrs. Harrison, wife of President Harrison, whose death we briefly recorded in our last, was the daughter of Governor Symmes, the founder of the Miami settlement but who is better remembered as the inventor of the famous "Symmes Hole" theory, according to which the earth is hollow, open at the poles, and habitable by living inhabited within. She was married in 1795 to (then) Capt. Harrison, who was in command of Fort Washington, the site of the present city of Cincinnati. A biographer, writing of her a short time previous to the death of President Harrison, says: "She has been the faithful companion of his distinguished career during the various perils and vicissitudes of his eventful life, and lives to witness the history of his family and the honors paid him by a grateful country." Mrs. Harrison is the "full of years," referred to with the allegory of woman—a true and loving wife, a leader and affectionate mother.

— Hon. Thomas Bussey, of Greene county, Pa., died on the 19th ult., at the advanced age of 85 years. The deceased was for years a member of the Legislature from his county, was an associate judge for terms, and enjoyed a large degree of public confidence and esteem.

— The Rev. Thomas Starr King died at San Francisco on the morning of the 4th of March, of chilblains. A funeral sermon in the memory of member of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

— Sir L. Lafontaine, Chief-Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, died very suddenly on the 4th of March. While in the act of putting his signature to a writ of which he was author, he was suddenly seized with a fit and expired in a few minutes. When first a tress was heard in the letters of his name. He struck back in his seat, but on being urged to complete his signature, he replied that he was very impatient now falling and did so, and in a few minutes breathed his last. This distinguished jurist, who has attained the highest judicial tribunal of Canada for many years, was a "rebel" in the Canadian rebellion of 1837, and a reward was offered for his head. He was subsequently pardoned and appointed to the highest judicial office in the Province.

— William Scott, formerly British Consul at New Orleans, has just died in England. He was an Irishman by birth, and had spent all his life in the diplomatic service of England.

— Charles Dickens's second son, Walter Savage Landor, Lieut. in the 3d Highland regiment, died in military hospital, at Calcutta, on the 31st Dec., almost at the same time that his father was lecturing at the graves of Thackeray, his favorite son was dying of fever on the other side of the world.

Accidents and Offences.—The counsel for Wallace, the murderer of Lieutenant Paul, has failed and succeeded to be hung on the 8th of April next, has obtained a writ of error, thereby staying the execution, which is returnable to the Supreme Court on the 1st of May.

— A decidedly accident occurred on the 3d March, on the Hudson River railroad. The train left Troy for New York at a quarter to four o'clock, and a car for miles the sides of Bought ends the birdmen on broke the coupling by, being thrown off the track at a broken rail. One lady was very seriously injured and is not expected to survive, and several others were more or less seriously hurt. The consequence was that the cars were thrown over an embankment, and thereby a delay of eight hours took place. Great praise is attached to the engineer, as he did not sound the alarm whistle.

— Two men, named George Andrews and C. Shafer, were arrested on the 3d March and held for examination by the Commissioner of a Board and transfer Rafael Ortega, who charges that they are the proprietors of a gambling establishment on the second floor of No. 23 B oadway, in which, by betting on the game of "Rouge et Noir," some 20 persons have been fleeced. The police are in search of a third person, named George Hill, who, Mr. Ortega alleges, owns a part of the aforesaid establishment.

— William Kuntz was arrested with a thief by a fellow—ork an, name: Adam Schaffer, on the 19th January, in the cabin mansion house in Fulton street. Witnesses were examined. Schaffer does not appear. Kuntz was held to bail in the sum of $500, indicted in self defence. It was committe, to await the action of the grand jury. Justice, it is thought, cannot live much longer, as she has been sinking rapidly for the past few days — Arthur McMurray, a lad of 11 years of age, was run over on the 4th inst., in the 7th Ward, by a Fourth avenue line, and so severely injured that death subsequently ensued. One of the boy's legs was entirely severed from his body. The car was driven by William Avery, and at the time of the occurrence no one was attached to the car.

— Walter Rouse, a laborer, was almost instantly killed, in consequence of injuries received by accidentally falling from the third story of a new building, corner of Broadway and Liberty street, which was now completed. Deceased lived at 152 Worth street, where he left a widow and two children.

— Rutger Teal, doing business as commission merchant at No. 61 Liberty street, was arrested on the 3d March, charged with defrauding Smith, Rice & Co., out of $1,000. It appears that Teal sent a consignment to the Texas for trial, to default of $1,000 bail. Teal is also charged with several merchants of whiskey and other merchandise.

Foreign.—American oysters have been planted at Arcachon, and are reported to be doing well there.

— The Montignags and Nacagnes Indians, of Canada, are reported to be starving in consequence that they can see perfectly so long as the sun is up, but become perfectly blind when it sets from twilight to dawn. No artificial light is of the least service to them, and nothing under a flash of lightning enables them to see.

— Partridge's "Life of Butler" is elaborately review in the London Times, and the reviewer not only states that the book has entirely changed his opinion of Butler, but that it will have the same effect on him, in versatility and energy, of Frederick the Great.

— The Tuscaloosa, seized by the British authorities at the Cape of Good Hope, was a vessel that escaped by the rebel pirates and converted into a privateer, and was captured by the U. S. steamer Sacramento. In accordance with American precedent, it is a question for English Courts of Prize to decide. Privateers are brought into our ports, the British decide that the persons engaged in them are not to be treated as owners.

— The list of October, last year, the French army, exclusive of the reserve, consisted of 330,986 men, the Garrison at Algeria, 65,000; in Algeria, 67,661; in Italy, 19,591; in China and Cochin China, 1,615; in Mexico, 34,561. The reserve on that date amounted to 217,381.

— The watchword of the extreme German party in the Diet has been "Down with Austria" (or any subdivide), words used in the charter of 1600.

— In Canada there are 1,000 men for pioneer one for the rich, another for the poor, and another and sortly different one for persons of color.

— The last Huron of pure blood at the Mission of Loretto, near Quebec, bore the name of Thurollo. He was a painted Indian, and died in his wigwam.

— A French paper, reckons a great authority on fashions, pronounces that the prevailing style of ladies is to wear whiskers! We are considerably told now as to his to be worn, and first of all he must have his hair and trim it down their cheeks in a thick mass

Art, Science and Literature.—The Massachusetts Historical Society has elected Cambridge Farland is merely finished. The historian is seated in his study surrounded by his books, and the figure presented into the open leaves, as he had been collecting points in an argument. The attitude is graceful and the face noble. It has not been settled where the finished picture will be placed, but it will be in the Trinity Chapel, others in the library, the floor of which would not be strong enough to support it, and in order to bear the great weight of marble.

— Phillips, Sampson & Co. announce, and, in the Senate: "I think we have in the army 600,000 men, of which 400,000 are reenlisted veterans. I do not think the rebels have over 225,000. I have good reason to believe that. I think the rebellion will be crushed out by October."

— You can stop a clock at any moment, but you cannot stop a watch. The mainspring is broken, which applies to the stopping of the talk of a man and of a woman. He is generally a man of few words, but he can silence him. She is a beautiful, fragile, jewellike thing, which you can stop by the touch of a finger.

— A correspondent says: "Let me give you an item of your paper. A little girl of this city, only 6 years old, having conceived a passion for a little girl next door to her residence, left her home for the west to the public school the other day, quite alone, as I am credibly informed, and, after a long and tedious ride finding, however, that she was not placed in the same room with her little friend, she left the school. Love is certainly very powerful in the Jerseys.

— Shakespeare and Cervantes are commonly named as having died on the same day, the 23d of April, 1616. This was not really so, as the Gregorian calendar was then in use in England, while in Spain the old calendar, in England until more than a century later.

— The Prussian Government has invited Professor Daniels Passmer to the Brooklyn Sanitary Fair. In alluding to the New York Sanitary Fair, the Berlin Post says: "Since a kitchen that King Alfred set while the housewife baked of the King, has ... And when our ancestors left England such kitchens were floating behind them. The French Government has given ... to a handful of cooks on a pile of ships, with innumerable cooking pans, but with the assistance of the best gastronomic jaunts. The Gauls borrowed it from Great Britain, and the Germans from the Gauls, roads and bridges. Its progenitor may be found in the brains of the Anglo-Saxon race, with Russia, which sometimes instead of brick. But the British never forgotten it."

— Twelve soldiers of the Revolutionary times whose services their eyes rage from 70 to 105 years, and they enjoy pensions from 96 to $96 per annum. The oldest of these survivors, they are proud to be.

— Busts of A. Lincoln and Dan Rice were placed together at the great fair in Chicago, and labelled "The one to laugh at, the other by."

— A Leicestrian paper stimulates the authors of the present age to literary exertion, who strive to outdo each with their tales.

— Prof. Whitney, the State Geologist of California, says that the big trees of Tuolumne are 1,500 feet.

— Thomas, the pirate, is now described as carrying a very moustached, gray uniformed, 45 years old, and a tea cloak.

— The latest way to pop the question is to ask a friend if he would have the pleasure of acting her to the minister's.

CONFIDENTIAL.

BY JENNIE K. GRIFFITH.

I've the quaintest conceit, as I sit here and ponder,
Thinking sweet thoughts to myself;
My glances, made captive, continually wander
To the vase on the mantelshelf.

The homeliest vase, too, just gilt and some roses,
Common in shape and device,
Nobody looks at it and ever supposes
'Twas meant to be quaint and nice.

But it has cares, and it will keep them bending
Forward a little at me!
Demurely drawn up otherwise, and pretending
Never to notice or see.

It does, though—it does; it looks over my shoulder
When, heart all a-flutter like wings,
I see somebody coming, and, bolder and bolder,
It laughs when the door-bell rings.

I would like just to talk to myself for a little;
He loves me, and yesterday
He told me—Hush, hush! if I whisper a little
'Twill hear every word I say.

A CASE OF JEALOUSY.

A HAPPY husband was Philip Campbell, a husband to be envied by all married men in the world.

His wife was pretty—nothing very rare—amiable at home, a virtue sometimes seen, and true in her fidelity.

Philip went in and out when he would, always kissed as he parted, welcomed home with smiles, never scolded or complained. All was calm and bright as his glossy white linen, his well tied cravat, his carefully brushed hat, his overcoat never lacking a button.

One day Hortense said to her husband: "Philip, it is such a beautiful day, why don't you take a walk?" He mechanically acted on the suggestion; but he omitted to have it occurred to him that the request was a strange interference with his usual liberty of action. "Why should she send me out to walk?" she usually likes to walk without some misgiving. So, for all the beauty of the day, his walk was a short one.

When he returned his wife's room she was writing, but instantly slipped a paper, covered with the microscopic fly tracks that ladies delight to, into her pocket, and locked it. All this did not escape the husband; his suspicion increased.

She ran up to give her wonted kiss, but the fair recipient was not in a child caught in mischief, and this did not quiet poor Philip; but convinced that it would be useless to question her, he resolved to watch her by unravelling the mystery, and showed in his demeanor none of the suspicions that tortured him.

Chance at last aided him better than all the devices he had employed in vain. One morning he was putting on a clean shirt; with a shudder he perceived that a button was gone! This neglect, the first that had occurred since their marriage, was full of cruel evidence. He hastened to his wife's room. She was out. Seizing the opportunity, he opened her writing desk. The draft of a letter in his wife's hand met his eye. It ran thus:

"My Beloved—When I address you I seem to breathe a purer air; the paper to which I confide my thoughts exhales perfumes; the humming of the fly that settles upon my ears is full of the treasures of harmony. What sweetness is there in the very remembrance of my name! even in the look of the lapdog that my hand fondles! Oh, ecstacy! were I not rudely aroused by the importunate thoughts of the world.

Philip staggered to a chair thunderstruck. Then he rose with an eye kindling with fury; he cried: "Betrayed!" and he strode up and down, his wrath augmenting, till it burst forth anew: "I will kill them both!"

During a week of agony he watched, he spied, he plotted to surprise the guilty pair. When all failed his last resolve came: "I will kill her and him, and then myself! I will be free!"

Full of this thought he entered a saloon to take a cooling draught, for his blood was at fever heat. Mechanically he took up a paper. A story caught his eye: "Fatal Love!"

The hero thus wrote to his mistress:

"Adored One—Speak not of the air you breathe, the water you taste or the food you partake of; the humming of the fly that buzzes around your ears of the longdrawn notes of your canary, of the fond looks of your lapdog. I am jealous of all; of all, I say, even of your husband.

Philip was astounded. Here was an evident reply to the letter which he found in his wife's drawer. No doctrine of chances could bring together such expressions in two unconnected letters. The mystery was solved. She had fallen in love with some strywriter, and they had concocted this original method of carrying on a correspondence. The fatal letter was sealed! He rushed to the office of the paper and demanded the editor.

As he entered the sanctum the editor looked up with the furious expression of a tiger.

"What is the matter with Philip Campbell?"

A smile crept over the editor's face.

"There is an unfamous article in your last paper, sir!"

A second smile.

"Do you know the author of this story, 'Fatal Love?'

Again a smile, gradually extending over the face.

"You mock me, sir!"

"No, my dear sir," said the editor at last; "on the contrary, take my advice. The guilty author, as you style the editor, was here just now, and I have no doubt is now entering your house—"

"Sir, are you a married man?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then, sir, your conduct is infamous!" exclaimed poor Campbell, as he rushed out, eager now only to reach his home before the scoundrel could escape him.

Like a bombshell he burst into his wife's room. It was tenantless. He searched every nook and corner. While he was exploring the wardrobe, seeking the destroyer of his peace amid the shirts, hoops, dresses, he heard a door open, busy steps, chairs move and a voice that he recognised as his wife's:

"I am transported, my beloved, with joy and happiness. The world possesses, then, one heart that beats in unison with my own—one mind that feels as I do—one being, in a word, homogeneous with my own. But is not this one of these illusions that vanish and leave no refuge but death! Oh, my beloved, do you love me?"

Philip was livid with rage, his fists clenched, the perspiration rolled down his face. A voice replied:

"To love thee is to die, this is all my thought, oh, life of my soul!"

Unable to contain himself, he burst into the room. Hortense was alone, seated at her table, writing. As he entered, she exclaimed, calmly:

"Oh, is that you, Philip?"

Philip, unable to find words in the furniture, the curtains, the window, the ceiling.

"What are you looking for, Philip?"

"I am looking for the one who called you the life of his soul," was the melodramatic answer.

"Oh, life of my soul!" repeated Hortense in the voice which she had heard.

"What! Was that you?"

She burst out laughing.

"Of course it was me. When I write a story I always use a common and contralto for the two characters, and speak it all; and if ever you write a story, Philip, try it. You don't know how much better your dialogue is."

Poor fellow, he has her secret, and curses it. She makes him copy sometimes for her; she says that he understands her stories better, and makes him her man of business. How happy he was before he knew he had a literary wife!

WARD'S FREEDMAN.

The Freedman, of which we gave an illustration in our last number, deserves a description. It is a statuette representing a negro escaped from bondage, resting in the forest. He has thrown down a stump of a tree. Listening and on the alert, his free right hand grasps the broken musket, the only weapon in his possession, but from his powerful frame and determined expression it might prove a terrible weapon to those who might pursue him. With a slight expression of fear in his face, there is a look of hope in his countenance, and manly determination in his whole person.

Expression in the statue fully compensates for the absence of clothing and drapery.

The whole treatment of this figure is large, bold, and masterly in the extreme, and is a perfect study of the negro as Ward's Indian Hunter is of as red man of America.

Avoid the Doctor.

A GENTLEMAN of fortune visited a lunatic asylum, where the treatment consisted chiefly in forcing the patients to stand in the cold water or those slightly shrouded up to the knees; others, whose case were graver, up to the middle; while persons very violent were plunged entirely under the water. The visitor entered into conversation with one of the patients, who seemed to have some curiosity to know how the establishment was kept, and asked:

"I have horses and greyhounds for coursing," said the latter, in answer to the question.

"Ah! they are very expensive."

"Yes, they cost me a great deal of money in the year; but they are the best of their kind."

"Have you anything more?"

"I have a pack of hounds for hunting the fox."

"And they cost a great deal too?"

"A great deal. And I have birds for hawking."

"And a great hunting horn. And these swell up the expense, I dreamy?"

"Yes, they do; but for they are not common in this country. And then I sometimes go out with my gun, accompanied by a keeper and a retriever."

"And these are expensive, too."

"Yes, they are; but I find the animals of themselves that run away with the money; there must be 400 or 500 of them, and besides my horses, houses to lodge them in—in short the whole sporting establishment."

"I see, I see! You have horses, hounds, setters, retrievers, hawks, and hunting horn, carriages of races and birds. What an enormous revenue they must cost you! Say, by what I know to be thirty—what return do they pay? What does your property produce you?"

"Why, we kill a fox now and then—only they are very rarely caught—and we have hawks and the big lion the fifty brace of birds each season."

"Eh? Oh! I mean your property, landed property around him. "My friend"—in an earnest whisper—"there is but one way to get rid of them. Get out of this—die you are sane. Don't let the coolest git him. Don't let him know that you are sane. Don't let him see that you are a living man, he will drown you!"

The visitor was astounded. He looked around on. Perhaps he thought that he was as mad as the inmate of the asylum.

A LUNG PROTECTOR.—A very absurd fashion requires men, while wearing four to eight thicknesses of cloth around most of the upper part of the body, to have an opening in front to allow the lungs for the display of their white linen bosoms and gold studs, if they have them. This fresh fashion is not confined to the cities, but every part that should be most carefully guarded from changes of temperature, for the lungs to be just below the throat, are exposed, as we cannot compel the correction of the fashions by anything but ridicule, which is now our standard, which has, to our certain knowledge, proved efficacious in several instances. It is a species of self-defence (sometimes real. Chem—a shift, but usually a scapegoat, imposition) which we could almost everywhere for 20 to 30 cents per skin. From the smaller end of the skin cut off a piece; the rest of the skin may be used for cleaning carriages, windows, silver, etc. Put strings on each corner, to fasten it around the neck and waist. This kind of leather is so open that one can blow a fly out through it, and on this account it is valuable to shut out cold and at the same time permit the perspiration. Those who have worn this article will be pleased with it. Those who have not should have the same as flannel, except that the suds and flannel-water should not be quite so hot as for flannel.

RECRUITING FOR THE WAR—SCENE AT THE RECRUITING TENTS IN THE PARK, NEW YORK.

ONLY A CHILD'S GRAVE.

It is only the form of a heaped-up sod,
And some words in a sculptured wreath,
That tell of a soul gone home to God,
While the rest lies underneath.
It is only the grave of a little child;
A shred on the sea of Time;
A spot over which the winds run wild,
And clothe it with frosty rime.

But I, who stood in this very place,
One sultry summer's day,
Beheld a mother, with whitened face,
Bend over her baby's clay.
Bend down till she clasped the tiny shell,
With all its polish and sheen,
Close up to her snow-white bosom's swell,
Her marble arms between.

I know of a home not far away,
Where peace and plenty abounds,
But the light went out one summer's day,
From the beautiful house and grounds.
There were little feet that pattered about,
Now still in the sleep of death,
And the walls that rang a childish shout
Scarce echo a passing breath.

I know of a drawer in an ebony frame,
Wherein there is hoarded wealth;
Where every day comes a stately dame
To kneel and to weep by stealth.
Her wealth is a half-worn suit of blue,
Some books and a broken toy,
A velvet cap and a little shoe,
And the picture of her boy.

For these—she would give her gems and gold,
Would barter her house and lands,
For these—were they to be bought and sold,
She would work with her delicate hands.
One half of her heart lies here in his grave,
The other is out with the world,
Playing a part as callous as brave,
Till the scroll of her life is unfurled.

Aye! it is only the grave of a child,
Some sods o'er a sinless form.
Could it be by prayer from Death beguiled,
Could it be by love made warm,
The winds would wander around this spot,
And the frost erect its whitened crest,
But the frost and winds would find it not,
For the babe would be on its mother's breast.

CROSS PURPOSES.

CHAPTER I.

"WELL, Kate, here are my orders at last; to-morrow night I must start for Washington!" exclaimed my brother, entering the room and throwing an official-looking document into my lap, as I sat with a book, half-buried in the warm embrace of an easy-chair.

"Oh, Frank!" said I, starting up; "must you go so soon? Why you have scarcely recovered your strength yet, and I am sure it is not safe to resume your duties."

"Yes, little sister," said my brother, probably alluding to my short stature, for I was two years his senior, "yes. I have been already allowed only too much favor, and I must not abuse it; besides, I have been promoted, and am now on Gen. B——'s staff, as you will see by my orders," he added, pointing to the packet.

"What of that, Frank?" I exclaimed, sadly. "That may gratify your ambition, but it will be poor consolation for us when you are gone;" and the tears would rise in my eyes when I thought of the desolate home it would be without him, although as a soldier's daughter and a soldier's sister I felt ashamed of murmuring against that which I knew was his duty.

"Come, Kate," said he, kissing me, "don't be low-spirited, but try to cheer up mother; she will need you more than ever; besides, dear little woman, we have no time just now to waste, for I have a host of things to do, and you must help me. You know, after receiving these orders, I ought to start as soon as possible, and to-morrow is the latest I can remain."

THE LATE REV. WM. STARR KING, OF SAN FRANCISCO.

"Yes, Frank, I know; let us begin now," said I jumping up. "You go and tell mother, and I will begin to pack up for you."

Poor Frank! I knew that the few things an officer required were soon arranged, and saw through his little ruse to get me employed and thus banish sad thoughts. But I did not wish to make him gloomy too, so I packed away vigorously, and even found time to go with him and bid good-bye to our nearest friends and relatives, who had petted and overwhelmed with kindness our young soldier while he had the fever.

But for all that it was a sad day, and the thought would constantly intrude that it was his last at home, hard as I tried to drive it away for his sake. Poor mother, too, bore up bravely; but at last Frank and I persuaded her to retire when midnight came and the last visitor had said good-bye and departed, for we feared her weak frame would be worn out by the unusual excitement.

Then Frank and I sat down by the fire to have one more cosy, confidential chat before we parted; but although that was our avowed intention, still words dropped out slowly, and we sat long gazing at the glowing coals, holding that silent heart-communion which can only exist between those that love each other dearly.

Then Frank, starting up, paced thoughtfully up and down the room several times, as if endeavoring to make up his mind on some point. At last he stopped by my chair:

"Kate," said he, in a low voice, "there is something I want to tell you before I go." Here he paused, walked towards the gasburner and deliberately turned off the light. "I always feel more confidential in the dark," said he, with a short laugh, resuming his seat at my side; "and, besides, the firelight is much pleasanter than that glare; isn't it, Katie?"

"Yes, Frank." Then, after a reasonable pause, "But what were you going to tell me?"

He started from the brown study into which he had fallen:

"I was thinking how I should begin, Kate, for I have never spoken of it before, and would not now, were it not for the uncertainty of a soldier's fate. Do not think I have any foolish presentiment," he continued, laying his hand on mine, "which if it were unmanly in one of my profession to indulge; yet none of us can tell what may happen, and I would like to tell you this, although it is a foolish thing, and perhaps were better buried with me should I fall."

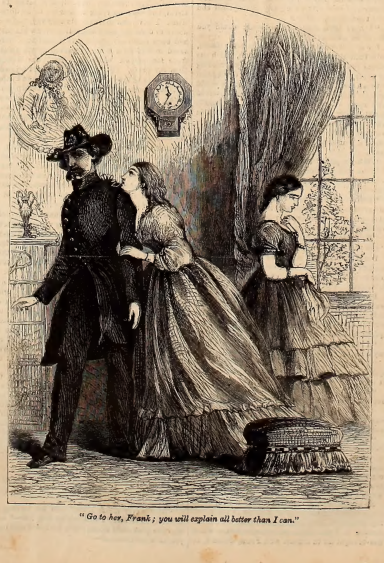
"Hush, Frank!" I exclaimed. "I cannot bear to hear you speak so."

"Nonsense, Kate! I shall not die any the sooner for it; but now, open your little ears and you shall hear the mighty secret. But, first, let me ask you a question: Did you ever see Fanny Somers?"

"What, the heiress? Yes. Don't you remember, two years ago, while you were still a cadet at West Point, we were at the hotel at the same time, only I left two days after her arrival, and she spent several weeks there, I believe——"

Seeking for Specimens of Seaweed.

"She passed the whole summer," interrupted Frank, in a low voice.



"Well?" I asked, rather impatiently. "What has she to do with what you were going to tell me?"

"It is about her that I am going to speak, Katie. You saw her, and you must have remarked her beauty."

"Indeed, Frank," I interrupted, "I only caught a glimpse of her at table once or twice, and I have forgotten what she looked like."

"She is lovely, Kate. But her beauty is not her chief charm; it is her sweet disposition, her true, noble heart, unspoiled by flattery or adulation. At first I judged her as superficially as you have done, and was determined to avoid her (for I always detested belles and had a mortal horror of heiresses), so that I could laugh and jest about her to the crowd of fellows that, attracted by her wealth, beauty and wit, never penetrated to the depths of the soul that lay beneath. So for several weeks our intercourse was of the most formal kind, until one evening her cousin, Fred Lane, came to me, and saying that he had been suddenly attacked with a dreadful sick headache, begged me, as I was going to the hotel, to make his apologies to his cousin, whom he had engaged to take to the evening band-practice, in front of the Superintendent's quarters.

'Tell Fanny,' said he, 'that I am dreadfully disappointed, and nothing but this confounded hard headache would make me give it up, for she is so surrounded that I have hardly had a chance to speak to her since she has been here; and say, Frank,' he continued, as I was turning away, 'why don't you take her yourself, if you have no other engagement? She is a real nice girl, and I am sure you would like her.' 'I do not doubt it,' I replied; 'but I expect Miss Somers will have half a dozen of her admirers, at least, ready and anxious to accompany her, and who have better claims.' 'Nonsense!' interrupted Fred. 'She doesn't care a snap for any of them; but I wish you would start off and not bother me with all your doubts when I have such a splitting headache!' and I am afraid the generally good-natured Fred swore a little bit as he left me, with both hands pressed to his forehead.

"Go to her, Frank; you will explain all better than I can."

"There was no help for it, I had to go; and so started off with rather a bad grace, hoping, from the bottom of my heart, that Miss Fanny had become tired of waiting for her cousin and gone off with some one else. The hotel I found nearly empty, all the young people having been tempted by the lovely moonlight and the strains of music, which were now floating across the plain, to leave the glaring and heated parlors, which were now occupied solely by a few gossiping old ladies. I soughtevery where for Miss Somers, and at last found her with her mother seated in one corner of the piazza, and, to a wonder, unattended by a single cadet or officer. As I approached she started up, exclaiming, 'Well, Fred, you have—then stopping short as she discovered her mistake, she was about to explain it, I suppose, when I began, in a very formal manner, to deliver her cousin's message, and was of course obliged to conclude by offering my services as escort to both the ladies. Fanny looked pleased, and her mother surprised, as I included her in the invitation; but the latter declined, and so we started off alone on our romantic stroll.

"At first I said but little, though Fanny had such a prodigious flow of her own that interested one in spite of himself, that, contrary to my resolutions to be distant and reserved, I found myself soon drawn into an animated discussion of a far more intellectual character than young ladies generally indulge in; and before 'tattoo' sounded I had actually engaged her to take a walk with me the following morning, and was forced to acknowledge to myself that I was very much pleased when she accepted; though afterwards, on my way toward camp, while enduring the jests and jeers of my comrades for being let last caught in the golden net of the heiress, I reproached myself for my own folly, and vowed that, our walk once over, I would again restrict our intercourse to the cold formality of a distant bow when we met. But it was not to be so; for walk with her made it harder to put my resolution into practice, and in spite of all my struggles, during which I summoned some sweet going to the head for days together, when we again met she would, by her frank, friendly greeting and bright smile attract me to her side. And Fanny, I think, did feel some regard for me at first, as I could not help seeing that she preferred my society to that of others. But that was only a mother fit of repentance, which lasted longer than usual, as I did not go near the hotel for three days, she seemed to have changed, and received me with evident contrariety, when carefully checked all further advances on my part; so that, from being excellent friends, we became almost as formal and indifferent as strangers; only, as I have hinted before, I was not quite sure that something in my face must have awakened in her a suspicion of my feelings, hard as I struggled to appear calm and cold, for she gave me a strange, startled glance, and then, as she turned away, I noticed that her eyes were full of tears. Still," added Frank, mournfully, "that was small consolation to me, for few young girls can leave the fascinations of West Point without some display of feeling, and I made so many friends!"

"But, Frank," I exclaimed, eagerly, "I think from all you have told me that she cares a great deal for you; her reserve at the last was probably only caused by the idea that you avoided her society. You may depend upon it, Frank, we shall yet see you married to Fanny Somers."

"Never, Kate!" said Frank, firmly. "Even could I win her affection, do you think I would ever ask one to share my fortune up in the midst of barracks, to share the hard lot of a soldier with little besides his pay?"

"Oh! Frank," I cried. "do not sacrifice your happiness to a feeling of false pride."

"Kate, it is useless to argue the question; my mind is made up; only should I fail, will you give her this letter?" he said, taking one from his pocket, "and in no other case—you must promise me."

"And now, Kate," said Frank, after I had given the required promise, "we will bury this subject for evermore between us; it never should have been alluded to at all, only I wanted to unburden my mind to you before saying good-bye—so good-night," he added, kissing me affectionately; "go to bed and sleep soundly, so that you may get up bright and fresh to see me off to-morrow morning."

CHAPTER II.

THE house was lonely enough after Frank's departure, and although we heard constantly from him, we both felt a feeling great anxiety on his account. While if, by any accident, the letters were delayed a day or two, we experienced the greatest misery, which each endeavored, most ineffectually, to conceal from the other.

At last my mother, whose health was always delicate, began to show signs of debility, occasioned both by anxiety and the approach of the warm weather, so that the doctor recommended change of air. She resisted all his arguments until June had nearly worn away, and then, under the influence of extreme weakness, at last yielded to my entreaties to leave town and renew her strength in the purer air of the country. So taking instant advantage of her consent I packed our trunks, and in three days time were settled in our new quarters at a quiet seaside resort, taking particular pains to select a place where the mails could be regularly transmitted to us.

The first morning after our arrival, as I descended to the breakfast table, I, of course, watched curiously all the persons who dropped in from time to time, with all the interest one naturally feels in the inmates of the same house with one's self. They were all total strangers, and with two exceptions, seemed very plain, quiet, common-place sort of people. The exceptions were an old gentleman and his wife who sat opposite to me, and who, without having anything remarkable in their appearance, bore the unmistakable marks of good-breeding and refinement.

Presently they were joined by a young girl in deep mourning, who soon riveted my attention, for I was sure I had seen her at some period of my life before. Besides, her face was one that would attract notice anywhere, for without being regularly beautiful it had such a pure outline, and shone all such a sweet expression, that I felt sure her character must be as lovely as her face. She was slightly pale, but of that pure whiteness which, when warmed by exercise or excitement into color, is so delicately beautiful. Then the abundant, soft brown hair, drawn in rippling waves from the pure intellectual brow, the long, expressive, gray eyes, with their long lashes; the sweet mouth, disclosing, when she smiled, the whitest teeth in the world; all had a charm which caused me to prolong my gaze almost to the verge of rudeness.

At last the young lady noticed it, and then, though I exerted my every faculty, could remark with that power we have of seeing one thing when apparently looking at another, that her face were at first a puzzled look, as if she had seen something familiar in my countenance; and then she suddenly dropped her eyes, while a faint color dawned in her cheek, gradually deepening, until the lady next her exclaimed:

"Why, Fanny, how warm you look! shall you unbutton or raise the window back of you?"

"No, I thank you, aunt Helen," she answered, rising rather hastily from her chair. "I have finished my breakfast and am anxious to send off a letter before the mail is closed."

So saying she left the room, and I did not linger long after her departure.

The moment she left, after leaving my mother in a sound sleep, which her weakness often required, and with our faithful maid within call, I donned my bonnet and shawl, and started out, which, as I walked for some distance and then sat down to watch the breakers which came booming into the shore, and soon became lost in reverie, on the top of the waves, which one after another washed over the sand nearly to my feet and then swept away in the receding tide, I was not aware of the passage of time until startled by a voice at my side saying: "I have rescued your hat, which the waves were carrying off, and also your parasol, which, in your fright, had carelessly thrown off and which, having been blown to a little distance, was forgotten by me in my precipitation, and which I ran out to me, its pretty plume dripping with sea water.

"I do not think it is spoiled," said the owner of the voice, who was no other than the young girl, as I hid seen at breakfast. "Sea water does not improve feathers, certainly, but if you shake it until it is dry it may not be injured."

"I am sure you have taken me so much trouble," said I, warmly, "and it was exceedingly careless in me to allow it to drift off in that manner."

"Indeed all; I was quite fascinated by the fascination which bound you; why, the first day after we came here I sat almost in this very spot, so lost in the beauty of the scene that I never noticed you came in with a dash and wetted me all over; so that I went home in a sorry plight," she continued, laughing at the recollection, "and was scolded roundly when she saw me that I must have narrowly escaped drowning."

Then I shook and I risen and was slowly walking with her in the direction of the hotel. She carried a little tin pail in her hand, which doubtless I had noticed before more curiously, she opened and held towards me, saying:

"I have been gathering seaweed; would you like to see some of the specimens I have?"

I was delighted with these delicate sea plants, with their tiny fibres and bright tints, which she offered to show me how to preserve, by pressing on paper; and also directed me how to distinguish between the fine and coarse kinds, for one would scarcely think that the little brown lumps, mixed with grasses, which were strewed upon the beach, would display such delicate beauty when placed in water. We had gathered several clusters, and she was just about picking up a few more specimens, when a receding wave washed it beyond her reach.

"What a pity!" she exclaimed, turning to me. "It was the prettiest one I have seen, but that provoking wave carried it off just as I was about to pick it up."

"I will set it for you," I cried, anxious to show my gratitude for her kindness to me, so I recklessly plunged after the seaweed, regardless of the advancing wave which threatened to overtake me.

"Stay, Miss Emerson," called the young lady, "you will only get your feet wet."

But I had already seized the prize and bore it back to the beach, although the sea punished my presumption by washing over my heels as I turned to it.

I had presented my offering and we resumed our walk, when I suddenly remembered that the young lady had addressed me as Miss, and could not resist the desire to find out how she had become acquainted with it.

"I have not you before," she said, in reply to my question, "and I seldom forget faces."

"I was sure I had met you somewhere," I exclaimed, eagerly, "but I cannot remember where it was."

"It was at West Point, two summers ago," she replied, in rather a reserved manner.

"Oh, yes, I recollect now," I exclaimed, as a sudden light dawned upon my mind, "and your name is Nora."

"Fanny Somers," she interrupted, laughing gaily and blushing a little too; "and now, Miss Emerson, our introduction is complete, so you will, for one, am very happy to have the prospect of becoming better acquainted with you, and hope, if you are willing, that this may not be the last of our walks together."

So saying we reached the hotel, where, with many mutual expressions of pleasure at the meeting, we parted, and I returned to my mother's room musing, as I went, upon the strange chance which had brought me in contact with Fanny Somers, so soon after hearing my brother's strange revelation regarding her, and wondering if her quiet remembrance of my face had anything to do with him. However, one thing I resolved upon, and that was to say nothing of the meeting in my letters to Frank, at least for the present; for I knew that, implicitly as he trusted me, his pride might take the alarm, lest in my anxiety anxiety to serve him I should misadvertently betray his secret.

CHAPTER III.

WEEKS passed by, and Fanny and I became constant companions; our acquaintance fast ripening into a friendship; while my mother also took much pleasure in the society of Miss Somers's aunt and cousin, and Mrs. Cooper. Fanny never spoke of my brother unless I introduced the subject, but always appeared interested, when I quoted from his letters or alluded to him in any way.

At length, one day in August, a letter arrived from him which embarrassed me considerably as to the course I should pursue.

It stated that he had obtained a twenty days' leave of absence, and would be with us in a week's time. Of course I was delighted at the idea of seeing him again, but my courage ebbed rather low when I thought of his reproaches at the deception, and the unpardonable reserve I had maintained, with regard to Miss Somers; while doubts of what he would think, should she discover I had never mentioned to him one word whom I was so constantly, arose in my mind. Yet still I did not speak of his coming to her, withheld by a feeling for which I could scarcely account even to myself, unless it was a vague desire to let events take their chance without my intervention. But Frank must be told, I knew that much, and whether to do it by letter, or wait for his arrival I was puzzled to decide.

I finally decided over the matter, and trying to make up my mind, late one night, after we had retired to bed, and my mother was already in a sound sleep, when I heard a strange bustle in the usually quiet house, and presently footsteps approached along the corridor, and a gentle tap was heard at my door. I immediately sprang up, and hastily on a wrapper, opened it, almost expecting to see my brother's face, but it was only Julia, our maid.

"Miss Kate," she said, hurriedly, but in a low tone, "a fire has broken out in the kitchen, and Mr. Monro said that all the boarders had better be startled, although he was sure there is not very great, so I thought I would come myself, for fear that any one else might give Mrs. Emerson a fright."

"That was right, Julia," I said, proceeding gently to arouse my mother, and explain to her what had happened, for I could see by the alarm on than I feared, so with Julia's aid I dressed her, and requesting her to wait for me in the public parlor below, in addition to the guidance of the maid, and commenced packing up our most valuable things, in case their removal should be necessary.

Having completed this I took in my arms a jewel-box, containing our ornaments, also my little writing-desk, in which I packed in rejoin my mother. The boarders had already taken the alarm, and were hurrying to and fro in all directions in the passages and the main stairway, and was about to descend, when stumbling over a box that had been carelessly placed on the landing, I only saved myself from falling by grasping the balustrade for support, and both the boxes slipped from my grasp. The jewel-box was not injured, but the look of my writing-desk was broken by the fall, and two or three letters and papers and papers which had flown in all directions when I was stopped by the proprietor coming upstairs, who told me that the fire was entirely extinguished, and that we might retire to our rooms, feeling perfectly safe.

Quickly gathering up the remaining letters, I hastened to the parlor, to inform my mother of the good news; but the energy which had sustained me during the immediate apprehension of danger forsook her when all cause of alarm was over, and I could see that she felt much exhausted, as I assisted her back to her room.

The next morning she was confined to her bed, and for several days required my constant attention, so that I was only able to see Fanny Somers for a few minutes each day. The day before Frank was expected her aunt informed me that she was confined to her room with a severe headache.

"The fact is, Miss Emerson," said the kind old lady, stopping at my door after paying a brief visit to my mother, "Fanny's sickness is more of the mind than body, and although her spirits have greatly improved since she has been so much with you, she still grieves for her mother, and at times gives way to a fit of depression, and no wonder, poor thing!" she continued, wiping away a tear from her eye, "for she has no one but us left."

That night, much to our joy, Frank arrived. Of course we had a great deal to say to each other, and my mother declared that joy had made her feel so strong and well that she would not retire until we did. So it was not until after he had bade good-night, and I on some trifling pretense slipped out of the room after him, that I could whisper whom he would see on the morrow. He, however, our introduction is complete, so you will, for one, am very happy to have the prospect of becoming better acquainted with you, and hope, if you are willing, that this may not be the last of our walks together."

So saying we reached the hotel, where, with many mutual expressions of pleasure at the meeting, we parted, and I returned to my mother's room musing, as I went, upon the strange chance which had brought me in contact with Fanny Somers, so soon after hearing my brother's strange revelation regarding her, and wondering if her quiet remembrance of my face had anything to do with him. However, one thing I resolved upon, and that was to say nothing of the meeting in my letters to Frank, at least for the present; for I knew that, implicitly as he trusted me, his pride might take the alarm, lest in my anxiety anxiety to serve him I should misadvertently betray his secret.

CHAPTER III.

WEEKS passed by, and Fanny and I became constant companions; our acquaintance fast ripening into a friendship; while my mother also took much pleasure in the society of Miss Somers's aunt and cousin, and Mrs. Cooper. Fanny never spoke of my brother unless I introduced the subject, but always appeared interested, when I quoted from his letters or alluded to him in any way.

At length, one day in August, a letter arrived from him which embarrassed me considerably as to the course I should pursue.

It stated that he had obtained a twenty days' leave of absence, and would be with us in a week's time. Of course I was delighted at the idea of seeing him again, but my courage ebbed rather low when I thought of his reproaches at the deception, and the unpardonable reserve I had maintained, with regard to Miss Somers; while doubts of what he would think, should she discover I had never mentioned to him one word whom I was so constantly, arose in my mind. Yet still I did not speak of his coming to her, withheld by a feeling for which I could scarcely account even to myself, unless it was a vague desire to let events take their chance without my intervention. But Frank must be told, I knew that much, and whether to do it by letter, or wait for his arrival I was puzzled to decide.

I finally gave over the matter, and trying to make up my mind, late one night, after we had retired to bed, and my mother was already in a sound sleep, when I heard a strange bustle in the usually quiet house, and presently footsteps approached along the corridor, and a gentle tap was heard at my door. I immediately sprang up, and hastily on a wrapper, opened it, almost expecting to see my brother's face, but it was only Julia, our maid.

"Miss Kate," she said, hurriedly, but in a low tone, "a fire has broken out in the kitchen, and Mr. Monro said that all the boarders had better be startled, although he was sure there is not very great, so I thought I would come myself, for fear that any one else might give Mrs. Emerson a fright."

"That was right, Julia," I said, proceeding gently to arouse my mother, and explain to her what had happened, for I could see by the alarm on than I feared, so with Julia's aid I dressed her, and requesting her to wait for me in the public parlor below, in addition to the guidance of the maid, and commenced packing up our most valuable things, in case their removal should be necessary.

Having completed this I took in my arms a jewel-box, containing our ornaments, also my little writing-desk, in which I packed in rejoin my mother. The boarders had already taken the alarm, and were hurrying to and fro in all directions in the passages and the main stairway, and was about to descend, when stumbling over a box that had been carelessly placed on the landing, I only saved myself from falling by grasping the balustrade for support, and both the boxes slipped from my grasp. The jewel-box was not injured, but the look of my writing-desk was broken by the fall, and two or three letters and papers and papers which had flown in all directions when I was stopped by the proprietor coming upstairs, who told me that the fire was entirely extinguished, and that we might retire to our rooms, feeling perfectly safe.

Quickly gathering up the remaining letters, I hastened to the parlor, to inform my mother of the good news; but the energy which had sustained me during the immediate apprehension of danger forsook her when all cause of alarm was over, and I could see that she felt much exhausted, as I assisted her back to her room.

The next morning she was confined to her bed, and for several days required my constant attention, so that I was only able to see Fanny Somers for a few minutes each day. The day before Frank was expected her aunt informed me that she was confined to her room with a severe headache.

"The fact is, Miss Emerson," said the kind old lady, stopping at my door after paying a brief visit to my mother, "Fanny's sickness is more of the mind than body, and although her spirits have greatly improved since she has been so much with you, she still grieves for her mother, and at times gives way to a fit of depression, and no wonder, poor thing!" she continued, wiping away a tear from her eye, "for she has no one but us left."

That night, much to our joy, Frank arrived. Of course we had a great deal to say to each other, and my mother declared that joy had made her feel so strong and well that she would not retire until we did. So it was not until after he had bade good-night, and I on some trifling pretense slipped out of the room after him, that I could whisper whom he would see on the morrow. He, however, our introduction is complete, so you will, for one, am very happy to have the prospect of becoming better acquainted with you, and hope, if you are willing, that this may not be the last of our walks together."

So saying we reached the hotel, where, with many mutual expressions of pleasure at the meeting, we parted, and I returned to my mother's room musing, as I went, upon the strange chance which had brought me in contact with Fanny Somers, so

"Oh no, Frank, not a word," I interrupted eagerly; "you surely would not doubt me!"

"It was not your honor I doubted, Kate; but I feared, in your desire to serve my interests, you might have said or done someth ng to betray my secret"

"No, Frank, I assure you I have not; she does not even know of your coming."

"Very well, I trust you," said he, leaving me, as mother's voice was heard calling for me.

The next morning I was hardly dressed before I heard him in the room next to mine.

"Go in our little sitting-room, Frank," said I, peeping at him through the crack, "and I will be there presently."

"Kate," said he, when in a few minutes I rejoined him, "I wish you would give me back that letter I have concluded to destroy it."

"Well, Frank, if you wish it," I said, meekly, knowing that when he spoke in that decided tone remonstrance was useless; so producing my desk from the drawer in which I kept it, I searched in the package where I knew I had placed the letter, but it was not there. With a feeling of terror at my heart, I looked through the desk, while Frank watched me anxiously, but could not find it. I tossed over everything in the table drawer, looked under the table, and then researched the desk in a state of perfect desperation.

"You surely have not lost it, Kate!" exclaimed Frank, in a dreadful tone.

"Oh, Frank," I cried, perfectly heartsick, "I am afraid—on the night of the fire—"

"What, Kate, Kate!" he said, seizing my wrist, evidently unconscious how powerful was his grasp.

"I was going downstairs," I faltered, "when the desk slipped from my arms, and all the letters fell out; but perhaps one of the waiters picked it up," I exclaimed, as a ray of hope darted across my mind.

But Frank heeded me not, he sat with his face buried in his hands, and I did not dare to address him until I thought of mother.

"Frank," I whispered, "for heaven's sake do not alarm mother with your anxiety all she knows—"

"You are right, Kate," said he, by a strong effort, forcing a smile as mother entered the room.

"Hi-Cam, mother," he said airily greeting us, "you see I have made a grand toilet for this great occasion, so let us go to breakfast, and astonish the quiet people of the house by showing off our handsome young captain; and let me tell you, Frank," continued poor mother, never dreaming that a terrible secret she was touching upon, "there is a very pretty young lady who sat just opposite to us—a Miss Somers; perhaps you have heard of her?"

Frank winced, but I managed to reply for him, and divert mother's attention from him, as we entered the breakfast-room. I am sure that my heart beat almost as fast as Frank's as he shook Fanny at her accustomed place, and remembered that she knew nothing of his arrival. Her eyes were directed to the door as we entered, but I saw her start and turn pale as they rested on Frank; but when we had reached our seats she returned my brother's salutation with a coldness that pained me, until I reflected that perhaps it might be assumed to hide a deeper feeling. He, too, was calm and self-possessed; but I could see by his paleness, and by the clenched hand that lay upon his knee, what a struggle it cost him. Then the thought of the missing letter returned to my mind, and acting upon the impulse of the moment, I turned to the waiter who was handing me my coffee:

"Patrick," I said, in a low tone, "do you know if any of the waiters have picked up a letter that was lost the night of the fire?"

"Yes, miss," he answered quite loudly, "I found one under the staircase the day before yesterday, and took it to Mr. Monro; but he said Miss Somer's's name was on it, and sent it to her."

Heavens! what a situation. Fanny had overheard him. I looked across the room at once, but I thought she would faint, then murmuring something about not feeling very well to her aunt, who, taking to be the cause of her illness what she had noticed us, she swiftly left the room. I looked at my side for Frank, but he had also gone, while I in my agitation had not noticed his departure; so that I was left alone to make excuses and explain his sudden absence to my mother as best I might, while my own mind was filled with the most unenviable that can possibly be imagined. Fortunately, after breakfast the two ladies, who, strange to say, had noticed nothing remarkable in all this, went to the public parlor to have a quiet chat together; while I, only too glad to escape, rushed to our own sitting-room to try and arrange my ideas in the best order if possible what course to pursue in this embarrassing state of affairs. I had hardly been there five minutes, when I heard a hand knock at the door, and I opened it to behold poor Fanny Somers, pale and trembling with agitation, holding in her hand the missing letter.

"Here, Kate," she whispered, glancing over my shoulder into the room.

"Yes, quite alone; come in, Fanny," said I, taking her hand, which I felt as cold as death, and pushing forward a chair, I locked the door leading into the hall, for I was sure she would not wish to be interrupted.

"Here, Kate," said Fanny, holding out the letter to me, while she covered her eyes with her other hand, "give this to your brother, and tell him I did not understand until—that all shall be—oh, Kate," she exclaimed, interrupting herself, and sobbing as I sat down by her side and took her hand, "you are his sister, I know, but as a woman you must feel how dreadful, how mortifying it is!"

And the poor girl, burying her face in her hands, gave way to a burst of feeling that I did not attempt to check.

At length she started from her seat, and going to the window seemed trying to control her agitation, when the door leading into my mother's room, which I had neglected to fasten, suddenly opened, and Frank appeared.

Startled as I was, I could scarcely avoid smiling at the strange chance which seemed destined to bring them together. Fanny looked round as the door opened, and seemed at first inclined to escape, then concealed her face to hide the burning blush which overspread it.

As to Frank, he seemed rooted to the floor, but would probably have rushed off the next moment had I not felt that the time for my intervention had now come, and I might yet repair the injury I had done. So going towards him, I took his hand, and whispering,

"Go to her, Frank; you will explain all better than I can,"

I immediately retreated, leaving them alone together.

What happened I know not; but this I do know, that about an hour afterwards Frank called me out of mother's room, where I was reading to her, for the sole purpose that I could see of giving me a prolonged hug, and calling me "the best little sister in the world." However, I drew my own conclusions therefrom; and you, kind reader, may do the same.

LOST.

BY HARRY WARING.

Through the huge dykes man's skill and patience rear,
To bar encroaching waters from the land,
The trickling drops their devious pathway steer,
Till the rough sea has burst the weakened sand.

And so the firm wall that I strove to raise
To-night has fallen—pierced through by a tear;
And all the tender thoughts of other days
Flood through my soul, as when thou once wert near.

Yet ever rolls between us a vast wave—
A fatal gulf no hope has ever crossed;
While on its brink I stand as on a grave,
And vainly gazing, mourn my treasure lost!

Aye! lost the gentle grace—the winning art—
The true devotion—all that makes the wife;
Fair as an angel to the trusting heart,
Gone! and O God! how desolate is life!

Oh! cruel Fate, that would not let me twine
The orange blossoms in thy tresses' zone;
Yet bade me bend before Ambition's shrine,
And strive to win the laurel for my own.

The laurel! like a draught from Lethe's cup,
One word can banish all the gloomy past;
Swell the worn soul with buoyant dreams of hope,
And raise fair gardens in the desert vast.

Now I will build my guardian wall anew,
So strong, that all save Death it may defy;
Then, through its crumbling wreck, perchance I'll view
My long lost Pleiad in the distant sky.

AN HOUR WITH AN ELK.

In the autumn of 1858 I had occasion to cross the Sierra Nevada, by Noble's pass. Our party consisted of about twenty, and up to the time of which I am about to speak we had known but little stirring adventure, unless a chase after a grizzly and a run in pursuit of some miserable, thieving Diggers might be so called.

It was a clear, frosty morning, on the 1st of November, just at sunrise. I knew that we were short of meat, and I determined to take a run from camp and see if I could not pick up a little something for breakfast even though it was only a few grouse or a hare. We had no intention of breaking camp for an hour or two, and that would give me plenty of time. With this idea I mounted, and was away.

I think I had ridden somewhat over two miles without seeing anything worth powder and shot, when my attention was drawn to the appearance of the ground over which I was passing. It was fairly torn and dug into holes, as though a parcel of ravenous hogs had gone over it within a few minutes past, for the soil turned up was not yet in the least dried; and I might have imagined a drove of those animals to have been there, notwithstanding the unlikelihood of the thing, had I not observed that here and there the bark of the trees about had been freshly knocked off at a height beyond the porcine reach. I had stopped my horse to look at these marks, and had but at that instant made up my mind that they must have been produced by animals fighting, when I heard a heavy sough, something between a bellow and a grunt, not very far away.

I cocked my rifle and rode in the direction of the sound, and had scarcely gone twenty yards when I emerged from the trees, and saw the open country stretching away for miles before me, while just out of the opening was a sight that for a moment made my heart jump with the natural excitement of the hunter. It was that of two enormous bull elks, engaged in a most desperate battle. They would withdraw for a few yards, and then, with fierce and fiery eyes, come together with a clash that seemed as though it must fracture their skulls. They would press and twist, retreat and advance, and go through all the strategy and study of veteran wrestlers. I stood some minutes in admiration of the pair, and then deliberately rode towards them. I was not afraid of disturbing them in the fight, for I had often heard that a hunter might ride or walk directly upon these animals when they were fighting without being noticed. At all events, if they did see me, and start or turn on me, I was well mounted and felt that I could depend on my mare. Therefore I rode up to within ten yards of the belligerents, and, taking a sure aim, sent a ball whizzing through the head of one, that dropped him instantly; and was about to give the other a taste of the same, for I had with me a Sharp's rifle, but before I could load, even as rapid as the thing is done, my gentleman was away, scouring over the ridge of a near-by hill, as though sudden business had called him, though not without a parting salute from me, which, as I had good reason to regret, missed him.

Then it was I should have loaded again, and, in a very unsportsmanlike manner, neglected it. I was too anxious to secure my meat to think of anything else, and instantly dismounted to tether my mare, and proceed to the cutting up of my animal. Every traveller across the mountains carries at his saddle what is called a trail-rope, for the purpose of staking his horse, that it may graze within a certain circle without straying away. I had fastened one end of my rope to the nearest tree, and was just about to hitch the other to the mare, when she gave a sudden snort, and I raised my eyes to see what for an instant froze my very blood in my veins. It was the other elk coming back! At the moment of my becoming aware of this fact he was within ten yards, and before I could make the slightest movement for defence he he had struck my mare full tilt upon the side, sending her reeling across the field, and for an instant the elk followed her. I had no time for thought, for the mare was on her feet in a moment, and dashing away across the open country. I saw it, and made one spring for the tree, to which I had been trying to tether her, a convulsive spring that carried me above the beast's horns, which in another instant made a dash at its trunk that almost shook me from my hold. How I went up the straight trunk of that whitewood was something marvellous to me, but up I went, and in less time than it takes to tell it sat ensconsed in the first crotch above the ground.

There I had time to review the situation, and the conclusion come to was this. My mare was gone, no doubt retracing its way to camp, and whenever she might report there it would bring out a party in search. The only question then was whether they would be able to find my trail, and so relieve me from the uncomfortable and dangerous situation in which I was placed. My rifle lay unloaded upon the ground beneath the tree, and beside it my hunting-knife, which I had drawn for the purpose of cutting up my meat, while my revolver had gone off with the mare. I sat there and thought of all this, as well as of every story I had ever heard of hunters and travellers treed by grizzlies and other "varmints," until my head was hot, and my hands shook from excitement. The hours went by like years until the sun was high up in the heavens, and yet my sentinel was inexorably on duty, scarce ever depressing his eyes from my perch. I thought of every scheme that could be thought of for getting my rifle, and so settling the point at issue between Mr. Elk and myself, but without evolving anything practical. If the beast would only have retired far enough away from the tree, say a hundred yards, to give me a chance of dropping on my shooting-iron, and taking one chance at a load, I think I could have settled our differences; but he would not, and I was obliged to see the sun go over the line, and yet no rescue.

It must have been about two P. M. when a brilliant thought struck me. If I could only get the trail-rope in my possession I felt that I could make an effort, but how to get it? I thought of going down the trunk, and, getting hold of it with my foot, draw it rapidly up; but that was mere theory, and had to be abandoned. At last an idea came I had a large and strong pin in my vest, which I bent in the form of a hook, and taking off my shirt I tore from it small strip after strip until I had enough to reach to the ground. I now changed my position in the tree, and angled for the rope. It did not take me many minutes to get a bite, and slowly and tremblingly I drew it up.

My object now was to make in the end that I had intended fastening to my mare a slip-noose This was soon done, and I had it dangling down before the nose of Mr. Elk. He looked curiously at the line, and up at the fisher. He smelt it and walked around it, and seemed puzzled to understand the matter, but was not at all timid about it. At last he came directly into the position I wanted him, and with a quiet slip I put the noose over his neck, by holding it open with both arms stretched, and then slowly drew it close. He felt then that something was wrong, and began backing away. As he did so I clung to the rope and drew it tighter, until it was upon his neck with a choke. As soon as he felt this he began to back forcibly away, and I let go, knowing that if the rope was but strong enough the tree would hold him, and his game would be up. Yes, the rope was strong enough! He backed away to its extent, and then, with one or two powerful jerks, that only had the effect of bringing him upon his knees, with his tongue lolling out, was for a moment still and breathless. The work was being done, and I was in no hurry to run any risk by helping it on. Up he came to his feet, only to make one more powerful strain, and, as before, to go down, this time upon his side Now was my time, and I was down in a moment, grasped my hunting-knife, and before he knew what was the matter there was an elk with a well cut throat lying before me, and visions of elk meat chasing through my hungry mind.

I only stopped long enough to cut out my two elk tongues, and then started for camp, which I reached in shorter time than I ever traversed the same distance before, and found them still there. My mare had come in, and two parties had gone out in search, one of which had not yet returned. We brought out packhorses, and even as tired as I was, I started with those who went out to bring in my meat, which we did before sunset, picking up the other party on our return; and that night we had a jolly time over our hunting stories, led off by mine of an Hour with an Elk.

LIEUT.-GEN. GRANT.

The nomination of Gen. Grant as Lieut.-General has been unanimously confirmed by the Senate, and he now holds the highest rank in the Army of the United States. Lieut.-Gen. Grant is a comparatively young man to have attained this high honor, but he has deservedly won it by his bravery, his high military skill, and his invaluable services to his country. The sentiment of the whole country pointed to him as the man whom they wished to see honored with this signal mark of distinction. Gen. Grant was born in Ohio, April 27th, 1822, and he is therefore not quite 42 years of age. Lieut.-General Scott, now on the retired list, still retains his rank. Gen. Scott, however, by his appointment, was only a Lieut.-General by brevet, and Gen. Grant is the only man, except Gen. Washington, who has been honored with the full rank of Lieut.-General in the United States. The bill under which Gen. Grant has been appointed says: "That the President is hereby authorised, whenever he shall deem it expedient, to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a Lieut.-General, to be selected from among those officers in the military service not below the grade of Major-General, most distinguished for courage, skill and ability, who, being commissioned as Lieut.-General, shall be authorised, under the direction and during the pleasure of the President, to command the armies of the United States." We have now one responsible military head to which the people can look for the guidance of our armies, and he is worthy of the trust.

REV. THOMAS STARR KING.

The sudden demise of this eloquent preacher at San Francisco, on March 4, after a few days' illness of diphtheria, has cast a gloom over his many and warm friends in the East.

Mr. King was a native of New York city, born on the 26th of Dec., 1824. His father, a distinguished Universalist clergyman, died at Charlestown, Mass., just as his son was about to enter Harvard. His collegiate course thus closed before him, he became a clerk and then a teacher, eagerly looking forward to the day when he might succeed to his father's ministry, and devoted his leisure to the study of theology. He possessed an enthusiastic love of learning, delighted to come in contact with free and original minds, and was eager to make himself acquainted with whatever was novel and significant in the progress of thought and speculation. In the autumn of 1845 he preached his first sermon in the rural village of Woburn, Mass., and in the following year—when scarcely more than 22 years of age—was settled over the Universalist church in Charlestown, of which his father had been pastor. In 1848 he was called to the Hollis street church in Boston. He remained in this post for 12 years, gaining a wide and wholesome influence as a preacher, and delighting the most intelligent circles of society by the freshness and cordiality of his manners, and the racy humor and brilliant narrative of his conversation. During this period he made extensive journeys as a lecturer; became a special favorite with every audience, and acquired a fund of incident and anecdote illustrative of American life, which he knew how to turn to the most effective account in the freedom of social intercourse. He was the author of numerous reviews, occasional pamphlets and magazine articles, besides his elaborate work on the "White Hills," containing a complete and admirable account of the scenery, legends and natural curiosities of that region. In the spring of 1860 he accepted an invitation to assume the pastoral charge of the Unitarian church in San Francisco for a limited period, and retained that position till his death. Mr. King's influence in California was great, and of the most important and valuable character. He completely identified himself with the social interests of that young and plastic State. His simple and forcible eloquence, his genial, glowing temperament, his overflowing good-humor, his sparkling wit, always at hand, and always benignant, and the kindly fervor of his manners gave him ready access to the hearts of the people, and clothed him with a degree of popular favor such as is rarely enjoyed by a public man in any station. Business was nearly suspended, the courts adjourned, the public offices were closed, and the flags on every flagstaff put at half-mast, including those on every church that ever raised a flag.

THE BLOCKADE OF CAPE FEAR RIVER.

The blockading of the coast of North Carolina, with its dangerous, harborless shore is not the most agreeable of the duties of our naval men, and except at Wilmington, where captures keep up enthusiasm, has little to compensate. Cape Fear—as its name implies—has ever been an unwelcome sight to the mariner, and the blockading has been no luxury. We give to-day a sketch of one of these—Bald Head inlet—showing Fort Caswell and the rebel batteries, as well as Smith's island and the Lighthouse. This is the old inlet, so called, there being also another, of which a sketch will be given hereafter. Few vessels attempt to run in here. Folly inlet, five miles south of the fort, offering greater chances, but the wreck-strewn shore proves that the chances are often against the high gamesters of England, who would ruin the Universe to gain two hundred per cent.

THE ATTACK ON FORT GRANT,

Mobile Harbor.

On the 15th Feb. the blockading squadron, which had long been awaiting their advent, beheld the approach of some schooners which proved to be bomb-boats, followed by the Octarora, Sebago, Port Royal and Calhoun.

An attack was immediately made on Fort Grant, to divert the enemy's attention and get all the gunboats down at the fort. The fleet bombarded the fort all day, but did little damage, the mortar-boats not getting the range. The Jackson, which has distinguished itself, sent 20 shell into Fort Grant, but her gun finally burst and she had to draw off.

We have heretofore given a plan of Mobile harbor and a view of the fort. These, with our present sketches, will enable our readers to follow the operations of Farragut, who can now run up to Mobile as he did to New Orleans.

THE LOSS OF THE SLOOP-OF-WAR HOUSATONIC.

Our readers remember the daring but fruitless attempt made by the rebels to destroy the Ironsides in October last. The cigar-shaped steamer escaped, and has since sunk, but on the 18th of February she succeeded in striking the Housatonic, Capt. Pickering, a fine sloop-of-war, exploding her torpedo.

The watch on deck perceiving something floating with the current, which to him resembled a porpoise, reported the same to the officer of the deck, whereupon Capt. Pickering was notified, and he, being suspicious on the subject, immediately gave orders to slip the cable and get under way; which order was put into execution, but all to no purpose, for the rebel propeller torpedo-boat Davis struck her on the starboard quarter, making a most frightful report. The propeller was broken off, the stern was torn to pieces, and the ship sunk rapidly in less than eight minutes from the time the torpedo machine was first seen. The vessel sank in six fathoms of water. The writer says:

"As she began to sink, the most frightful scenes, were witnessed. Men with nothing but their shirts on were seen struggling in the water, officers were trying to get the boats loose, while others were mounting the rigging. Boats were finally unlashed and sent to rescue those in the water."

Two officers and three men were lost. The rest of the officers and crew were saved by clinging to the rigging until rescued by the boats of the fleet.

P. O. Muzzy, captain's clerk, and Mr. Hazelton, ensign, are the officers lost.

The torpedo-boat Davis, commanded by Lieut. Davis, of Mobile, must have perished, as the Charleston papers speak of having only ascertained the cause of the sinking of the Housatonic from captured Yankees. They had previously supposed the vessel had sunk in a storm, and only learnt that the torpedo-boat had been successful ten days after the occurrence.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

What woman is mentioned in Scripture before Eve?
Jenny Sis.

What man is mentioned before Adam?
Chap. 1st.

Two gentlemen of high birth, the one a Spaniard and the other a German, having rendered Maximilian II. many services, they each, for recompense, demanded his natural daughter Helena in marriage. The prince, who entertained equal respect for them both, could not give either the preference; and, after much delay, told them that, from claims they both had to his attention and regard, he could not give his assent to either of them to marry his daughter, and they must decide it by their own prowess and address; but as he did not wish to risk the loss of either, or both, by suffering them to fight with offensive weapons, he had ordered a large bag to be brought, and he who was successful enough to put his rival into it should obtain his daughter. This strange combat between two gentlemen was in the presence of the whole imperial court, and lasted half an hour. At length the Spaniard yielded to the German, Andre Eiberd, Baron of Tetherd, who, when he had got his adversary into the bag, took him on his back and placed him at the Emperor's feet, and on the following day married the beautiful Helena.

A young minister, in a highly elaborate sermon which he preached, said several times, when giving some new exposition on a passage, "The critics and commentators do not agree with me here." Next morning a poor woman came to see him with something in her apron. She said her husband heard his sermon, and thought it was a very fine one; and as he said "The common taters did not agree with him," he had sent some of the very best Jersey blues.

Germany has been quarrelling with Denmark for the last 12 years on the Schleswig-Holstein question, but she now seems determined to settle the point by a "General" Wrangle!

Scene, the church door on Sunday.
Frederick: "There, now, how very provoking! I've left the prayer-books at home!"
Maria: "Well, dear, never mind; but do tell me, is my bonnet straight?"

A clergyman was once sent for in the middle of the night, by one of the ladies of his congregation.

"Well, my good woman," said he, "so you are ill, and require the consolations of religion? What can I do for you?"

"No," replied the old lady, "I am only nervous, and can't sleep."

"How can I help that?" asked the parson.

"Oh, sir, you always put me to sleep so nicely when I go to church, that I thought if you would only preach a little for me!"

The parson "made tracks."

ADVICE FOR THE SEASON.

Shut, shut the door, good friends,
Exclude the winter's blast!
This precept to your finger's ends
Keep till the cold is past.

Shut, shut the door! to each
The requisition's put:
Good friends! Sweet friends! Shut, shut the door!
And then the door'll be shut!"

Queer Papers.—The paper having the largest circulation—the paper of tobacco.
Paper for roughs—Sand paper.
Paper containing many fine points—The paper of needles.
Ruled paper—The French press.
The paper that is full of rows—The paper of pins.
Spiritualist's paper—(W)rapping paper.
Paper illustrated with cuts—Editorial exchanges.
Drawing paper—The dentist's bill.
A taking paper—The Sheriff's warrant.

Popular Definitions.—What is Fashion? Dinners at midnight and headaches in the morning. What is Wit? That peculiar kind of talk that leads to pulling noses and broken heads. What is Joy? To count your money, and find it overrun a hundred pounds. What is Knowledge? To be away from home when people come to borrow books and umbrellas. What is Contentment? To sit in the house and see others stuck in the mud. What is Ambition? A desire to become possessed of a leg and half an eyebrow.

Just as Well to Do it in a Hurry.—Why, you see, when my man came a courtin' me I hadn't the least thought of what he was after—not I. Jobie came to our house one night after dark, and rapped at the door. I opened it, and sure enough there stood Jobie right before my face and eyes.

"Come in" sez I, and take a cheer.

"No, Lizzie," says he, "I've come on an arrant, and I always do my arrants fust."

"But you better come in and take a cheer, Mr. W——"

"No, I can't. The fact is, Lizzie, I'm on this courtin' business. My wife has been dead this three weeks, an' everything's going to rack an' ruin right straight along. Now, Lizzie, if you've a mind to hev me, an' take care of my house, an' my children, an' things, tell me, and I'll come in an' take a cheer; if not, I'll go some one else to."

Why, I was skeered, and said: "If you come on this courtin' business, come in; I must think on't a little."

"No; I can't till I know. That's my arrant—an' I can't sit down till my arrant's done."

"I should like to think on't a day or two."

"No, you needn't, Lizzie"

"Well, Jobie, if I must—so here's to you then"

So Mr. W—— came in. Then he went after the Squire and he married us right off, and I went home with Jobie that very night. I tell you what it is, these long courtin's don't amount to nothing at all. Just as well do it in a hurry.

A lass! a lass! exclaimed an old bachelor who wanted to marry. Alas! alas! he cried, after he had been married awhile.

Marriage is designated by some people as a "bridle," because it generally puts a curb upon some.

An Ohio paper says: "Some say there are but two sexes, the male and female; but you have only to get into Massachusetts to find a Middlesex."

The man who courted an investigation says it isn't half so good as an affectionate girl. We presume not.

LIEUT.-GEN. ULYSSES S. GRANT, U. S. A.

FIFTY.

BY HELEN WARNER.

Where are the charmers I knew
When the violets of youth were glowing?
All like the dreams of youth,
Some gone—while others are going.

Where is Rachie, so merry and gay,
With cheeks like the first blush of morning;
Alas! where the tiny grave
A marble shaft are adorning.

And Rose, of the waving curls,
Whose wit and mirth were our glory;
Angels of fifty claw
The veil o'er her end, sad story.

Alice, slight, pensive and fair,
Was treated my suit with disdain,
Weigh'd over two hundred—thank Fate
I knelt to that mountain in vain!

Her children—unmannerly boys—
(I called there last week), with a pistol
One planted a ball in my hat,
While the baby smashed my watch crystal.

Sweet Annie, the gem of them all,
Had made such a splendid marriage,
That she cut me last night in the hall,
As she passed from the play to her carriage.

Her picture before me lies—
(I gave my heart for that passion);
Alas! how the living eyes
Soe only riches and fashion.

Heavens! is that a blot
On a tear that sullies the paper?
I'm growing old, my dim eyes
Can scarce see in the lighted taper.

At fifty it is not well
Grieving for faithless lasses;
'Tis better to ring the bell
For Burgundy and fresh glasses.

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE storm was still raging upon the ocean and sweeping in cold wet across the island; but Mellen was not a man to sleep within sight of his own dwelling, after a long absence, without an effort to reach it in defiance of wind and weather. So, heedless of all protestations, he mounted his horse and rode forward, with the wind howling around him and the rain beating in his face. His temporary attendant grumbled a little at the violence of the storm, while the darkness was so intense that both the horses went stumbling on their way like blind creatures on an unknown path. But Mellen scarcely heeded the danger or discomfort. His eyes were fixed on the lights of his own home, which twinkled now and then through the fog and rain, like stars breaking from a cloud.

Their road was along the coast, and they had the rushing winds and roar of the ocean all the way. Before they reached the Piney Cove grounds the blackness of the tempest began to break away overhead; the wind still hulled a little, but the rain still beat, and at intervals the moon would burst through the clouds and add to the ghostly effect of the white lines of foam in the distance.

They passed through the strip of woodland which extended down to the water's edge, making the boundary of the land connected with the dwelling upon that side, and came out upon the broad lawn.

"Home at last!" cried Mellen, as a warm glow of lights shone out from his dwelling. "Ride on, my man; you shall sleep here to-night, and return in the morning." In his exhilaration Mellen dashed forward, urging his horse across the open space till he was considerably in advance of his attendant. The moon broke out again for an instant, and Mr. Mellen saw a woman shrouded in a long cloak rushing towards the house. Some instinct, rather than any real recognition of her person, made him cry out, as he leaped from the horse and left him free:

"Elizabeth! Elizabeth!"

The figure paused. There was a faint cry; at the same instant Mellen heard a violent rustle in the shrubbery, and the downpour of raindrops, scarcely noticed then, as he hurried towards the lady, but well remembered afterwards. She was standing motionless still, as if that unexpected voice had changed her to stone; her hair had broken loose and was streaming wildly over her shoulders; a cloud was lifted above her eyes, as she strained her sight through the gloom.

"Elizabeth!" he called again.

"Who is that?" cried, in a suppressed voice, that had all the sharpness of an agonised shriek. "Who calls to me?"

He reached her side as she spoke.

"Don't you know me?" he exclaimed. "My wife! my wife! I have come back at last!"

There was one wild look—one heavy breath—he heard a low exclamation:

"My God! oh, my God!"

Before he could discover whether this was a cry of thanksgiving or not she fell forward and lay motionless at his feet.

After that first second of stupefaction Mr. Mellen raised the rigid form, shrouded the wonderment of the man—who by this time had come up—and between them they carried the senseless woman to the house.

The servant who met them in the hall gave a cry of dismay at the sight of her master thus suddenly returned, entering the house with his wife lying like a dead woman in his arms, and was ready to believe that the whole sight was a ghostly illusion.

"Bring some wine," called Mellen; "where is there a fire? Are you deaf and blind, girl?"

"It is the master!" exclaimed the frightened creature. "It's the master come back—oh, I thought I'd seed ghosteses!"

Her cries brought the whole household up, but regardless of their wonder and alarm, Gramley Mellen carried his wife away towards the library and laid her upon a couch.

It was some moments before Elizabeth Mellen opened her eyes, then she glanced about with a vacant, stated look, as if unable to comprehend what had happened.

Her husband was standing in the shadow, gazing down at her with the strange, moody look so unlike the active alarm which would have filled the mist of most men, and she did not at first perceive his presence.

"I thought I saw Grantley," she murmured. "I wonder if I have gone mad at last."

"Elizabeth!" he said, in his slow, cold voice.

She struggled up on the couch and looked towards him with a cry which might be forced out by her recent terror or her sudden joy at finding that she had not been deceived by some mental illusion.

"Is it you, Grantley?" she exclaimed. "Is it really you?"

"It is I," he said; "but it is a strange welcome home to a man when he finds his wife wandering about in the storm, and sees her faint at the sound of his voice."

Elizabeth Mellen forced her physical strength back by the sheer exercise of her will. She sat upright—a singular expression passed over her face—an inward struggle to subject herself and act as was natural under the circumstances.

"I was so frightened," she gasped; "I did not expect you for a fortnight—perhaps a month. When I dropped your letter I could tell what I thought—a dread—a terror of something terrible—something supernatural, I mean, came over me."

"But you should have taken you out of doors on a night like this?" he persisted.

She did not hesitate; she hurried to answer, but it was like a person repeating words studied for the occasion, and all the while her two hands clutched hard at the arm of the sofa.

"I don't know what drove me out, the storm made me wild. I thought of the sea—you on it, perhaps—I don't know why I went."

"You are very wet," he said—"thoroughly drenched. You must change your dress."

She seemed to grasp at the opportunity to go away, and started up with such eagerness that his suspicious eyes noticed it.

"This is a singular meeting," he said, bitterly; "two years apart, and not a word of welcome."

She turned impulsively towards him and threw her arms about his neck, with a burst of excited tears.

"I do love you, Grantley," she cried, "I do love you! I am so glad to see you; but this fright—it was so sudden—so——"

Her voice died away in a sob and she clung more closely to him, while he kept his arm about her waist, pressed his lips on her forehead and gave the usual caress, while cold doubts and thoughts which had been in his jealous mind, to feel the joy of reunion and the pleasure of finding himself at home after their long absence.

She felt her begin to shiver all over, and remembered the danger they both ran in standing there in their wet clothing.

"You are cold—shivering—and I am keeping you in these wet things!" cried Grantley, gathering her in his arms and mounting the stairs. "You must change instantly, child. It was wrong to go out in a storm like this."

She made no answer, but was seized with a cold fever-fit in his arms. He carried her into the dressing-room, and, seating herin an easy-chair, took off her hood and cloak, speaking soft, tender words to her all the time, while gentleness smoothed her hair with a caressing movement of the hand.

"You must change your dress, Elizabeth," he said. "Do it at once. I have some dry clothes in my room, I think, which I shall send to you."

"Yes," she returned, hurriedly; "go—go at once. You are glad to get home, are you not—glad to see me, Grantley?"

There was a tone of almost piteous entreaty in her voice; she was so disturbed by the shock she had received that her nerves could not recover their firmness at once.

Grantley Mellen held his wife to his heart and answered fond and tender words such as he had breathed during their brief courtship before a shadow had surged over the beauty of their skies.

But there shall be no more of that," whispered, "no more trouble. Look up, Elizabeth! Say that you love me—that you are glad as I am?"

"I do love you, my husband—with all my heart and soul I love you! I am glad—very, very glad."

"And I love you, Bessie. I did not know how well until I went away. But we shall never part in that manner—never any more."

Elizabeth was weeping drops as cold as the rain on her face. It was unusual for her to allow any exhibition of joy or pain to overcome her so completely.

"You are weak and nervous to-night, Bessie," he whispered, soothingly. "I was wrong to come upon you so suddenly."

"No, no!" she cried, vehemently. But even in her emotion she shuddered, remembering who she had just left and how she had met her husband.

She arose to go, but staggered in her walk and held herself up with difficulty. He looked at her with such tender love in his eyes that she held out her arms to him. He drew her close to his bosom:

"Elizabeth, we will be happy now."

"Yes, yes," she said, in the same hurried manner, "we will be happy now—quite happy."

She went out of the room as she said these words and entered her chamber, locking the door carefully behind her, as if she feared that she might be intruded upon.

Half an hour after the newly-united husband and wife met at the supper-table, and Grantley Mellen saw that Elizabeth had quite recovered her spirits from the sudden shock of his arrival in that unexpected way.

"I cannot realise it yet," she said, as she came into the room and walked up to the hearth where he was standing; "I cannot believe you are actually here."

She stood close by his side and folded his hand in hers. For an instant there was a slight hesitation amounting almost to timidity, as if she were doing something or assuming a place to which she had no right, but it passed quickly. She was looking up into his face with a pleasant smile, a little pallyet from her recent emotion, or else those two year which had elapsed since their parting had robbe her of a portion of her girlish bloom, but settled possessed and full of happiness.

Grantley Mellen looked at her more closely a she stood there in the cheerful light. Two year had changed her a good deal, but that was natural he was altered too.

"Do I look very different, Elizabeth?" he asked She shook her head.

"You are browned, you look a little older, perhaps; but you are not really changed—you are Grantley still."

"I cannot tell if you are altered," he said; "I must wait till I have seen you a day or two. You seem paler just now."

She shivered a little, but quickly regained he self-control and her cheerfulness.

"You are handsome as ever I look to-night," sh said. "I am sorry Ellsie is gone."

"When did she go away, Elizabeth?"

"Only yesterday. She wished to be getting little low in spirits, so I advised her to visit Mrs Harring'on for a while."

"I suppose she has not left you much—you twe kept together?" he asked, the old jealousy creep ing through his voice.

"Of course she has visited a little," replied hi wife, quietly, but she turned away to the table a she spoke.

A servant brought in the supper-dishes, and they sat down opposite to each other at the board; bu even during those first hours of reunion the strang gruesome spirit which he could not well linger i Grantly Mellen's suspicious mind, and, in spite o Elizabeth's cheerful manner, her color would come and go in a tremulous way. Sometimes there was a restless expression in her eyes, and she moved with difficulty to repress a nervous start at any sudden sound—not recovered wholly, it appeared to her self-watchful husband.

"You will send for Elsie in the morning," he said.

"Oh, yes. One of the men will go to town early."

"Don't tell her I have come."

Elizabeth hesitated.

"She would be so startled if I did not," she said "I really think her happiness will be greater if she expects to meet you."

"As you please," he returned, a little coldly. "I believe you are right, surprises are unwise."

"Where is Dolly?" Elizabeth asked.

"I sent him on with the steamer to deliver some letters I had brought for various people; he will be down the morning train. I had the same remarkable darkey as ever. His language is even grander, I think."

When they were sitting over the fire again, Mr. Mellen said:

"Now, tell me everything that has happened, your letters were very brief."

"I had nothing of importance to write, you know," she answered; "we were very quiet here."

"Has Elsie changed?" he asked.

"Not at all; gay and thoughtless as ever."

There seemed a suppressed bitterness in her voice. Perhaps that gaiety and frivolity had sometimes jarred upon the deeper chords in her own nature.

"Little darling!" he said, fondly. "I seem to feel more attached to her than ever since I went away—more as if she were my daughter than my sister."

"And she loves you very dearly, you may be sure of that."

"Oh, yes; nothing could ever come between Elsie and me," he said, then I have thought of the promise I made our dying mother; I have kept it, Elizabeth—wherever else I have erred, I have kept that vow."

"Yes, yes," she said; "yes."

But the tone grew a little absent, her eyes wandered, and she seemed to answer perplexed ones by some thought far away from the subject of their conversation.

"You have been happy and content, then, Elizabeth?"

"Not happy," she answered, "I forced myself to be patient; but the time seemed very long."

"Then, you do love me?" he cried, suddenly.

She looked at him reproachfully, with some sterner pain stirring under that reproach.

"Can you ask me such questions now?" she asked.

"No, no; you do love me. I believe it. But you know what a morbid, suspicious character mine is."

"I had hoped—"

She did not finish her sentence, but sat twisting the links of her chatelaine about her fingers, and looking almost timidly away from his face.

"Go on," he said, what did you hope?"

"That this long absence might have—that—I hardly know how to say it without offending you."

"You hoped I had learned to accept life more like a reasonable being, isn't that it? I think I have, Bessie; we will be happy now, very happy; you and Elsie and I."

He took her hand and held it in his own; was it true that it trembled, or only his fancy that made him think so?

"We shall be happy, Elizabeth!" he repeated, this time making the words an inquiry.

"I hope so—I, I do hope so!" she exclaimed, with sudden passion; "I want to be happy, oh, my husband! I want to be happy."

She threw her arms about his neck, and her head dropped on his shoulder; but the face which he could not see wore a strained, frightened look, as if she saw some dark shadow close between the rope in her words and its fulfilment.

Mellen strained her to his heart, and shortened sixteen down upon her cold face. Knees, so warm from the heart, that her cheeks kindled into scarlet under them, and she began to weep those gentle tears that drop from a loving heart like dew from a flower.

"Our lives shall go on quietly and pleasantly now," he continued, giving himself to the full happiness of this reunion; "we will have one long summer, Bessie, and warm our hearts in it."

"I have been in the cold so long," she murmured.

"But that is over—over for ever! We will trust each other, Bessie: we will be patient and loving always; can't we promise each other this, my wife?" he said, drawing her closer to his bosom.

"I can, Grantley; I do!"

"And I promise, Elizabeth, I will never be suspicious or harsh again. You and I could be so happy now."

"You will love me and trust me!" she cried, almost hysterically.

"Always, Bessie, always!"

Again he clasped her in his arms, pressing kisses upon her forehead, and murmuring words of such fresh, wholesome love as never could have been the romance of courtship could ever be, even in the first glow of of its loveliest mystery.

Elizabeth nestled closer to his heart, and a feeling of rest and security stole over her so inexpressibly soothing and sweet, that she almost longed to float away for ever from the care and dimness of this world upon the sacred hush of that hour.

There was a sound without which startled them both, making Mellen turn hastily, and sending the sickly pallor anew across Elizabeth's face.

"Only the wind," he said, "blowing one of the shutters to with a crash."

"That is all, it——"

She did not finish; her eyes were fixed upon the window; she made one movement; tried to control herself; looked in the other direction before her husband could observe the eagerness with which her eyes had been turned out into the night; but all her attempts at self-control were in vain; she gave one heavy sigh, and sank lower and perfectly helpless in his arms.

For the second time that evening Elizabeth Mellen had swooned completely away.

CHAPTER XV.

THE day was so bright and beautiful that the preceding storm seemed only to have added freshness to the scene.

The hills rose up majestic in their rich verdure, the lovely bay was at rest in the sunshine, and the long white line of distant water shone out tranquilly, as if no dangerous wind would ever again lash it into dangerous fury.

Grantley Mellen stood with his wife on the broad stone portico, looking towards the ocean. They had been wandering over the house and grounds that the master might see what changes had taken place in his absence, having returned late, and, though even in the midst of his happiness the old restlessness would intrude. Grantley Mellen could not avoid noticing the strange agitation of his wife at his return. It troubled him even in his newborn joy. She was quite herself this morning; so lovely in her rich purple morning dress, with the soft lace relieving her neck and wrists. Her dark hair was banded smoothly back from the grave, earnest face, which kindled into smiles and blushes under her husband's gaze. She was so calm that it seemed folly to vex his heart with vague fancies, instead of yielding himself to the full joy of the hour.

But she was changed: his jealous eyes took note of that. She was paler, thinner; there was a single line between the brows that had not gathered there during his absence; an added gravity about the mouth, a slight compression of the lips, as if they had grown accustomed to keeping back words or reasons when he remembered many things which had preceded their parting; the last restless year of their married life had disturbed jealousy and suspicion; the long months of loneliness which she had spent during his absence. There was answer enough for all these changes, which he had vexed himself during the morning.

"O! course Elsie will come home in the afternoon boat," he said.

"Oh, yes; don't think it is in yet—I have not heard the whistle," replied Elizabeth. "Our people will send her when the bay is smooth, no doubt. It is shameful of them to leave the shore road in the state it is; we must either go to the village by water, or take that long out-of-the-way back road."

"There is a sailboat now," exclaimed Mellen, pointing across the bay.

Elizabeth looked and saw the tiny streamers shining like silver traceries in the sun.

"It must be Elsie," she said. She ran into the hall and brought out a glass, which Mr. Mellen took eagerly from her hand.

"'Tis Ielsie." "I can see a woman in the boat—it is Elsie."

His face was all aglow with brotherly love; he could not remain tranquil. She walked up and down the porch and the hall in spirit, asking a thousand trivial questions again and again, and complaining of the slowness of the little boat.

Elizabeth stood leaning against one of the pillars, her eyes shaded with her hand, looking over the bright waters. The tranquillity and joyousness faded out of her countenance, while her husband talked so eagerly of his desire to see the child—as he called her. Sometimes her face grew quite hard and stern, as if she could not endure that even this beloved sister should come between her and her husband's heart in these first hours of their reunion.

The little sailboat flew swiftly on before the wind—it was quite near now—they could distinctly see the young girl half lying back in the stern of the skiff, allowing her hand to fall in the water with an indolent enjoyment of the scene.

She saw them too, at last, fluttered her handkerchief in the air by way of a signal, and after that they could see how full of eager impatience she was. Every instrument her handkerchief fluttered out, and when the wind took that she flung an azure scarf on the breeze. When the boat neared the landing Mr. Mellen ran across the lawn and received his sister in his arms as she sprang on shore.

Standing on the portico where he had left her, Elizabeth regarded the pair; she heard Ellen's eager exclamation of joy—her husband's deep voice—then the two blended in confused and eager conversation. An absolute spasm of pain contracted the widow's features; her eyes dilated, and a low moan broke from her lips.

"He loves her so! he loves her so! He will believe anything she says," she muttered in a tone which trembled with diverse emotions.

The sound of her own voice seemed to recall her recollection and the necessity of concealing these turbulent feelings. With that power of self-control which she was trying so hard to strengthen, in order to bear her life with calmness, she forced her features into repose, and stood quietly waiting for them to come up. There was nothing in her appearance save the dreary agitation; her pallor seemed only the reflection of her purple draperies, and her lips had forced themselves into a smile.

"There is Bessie," cried Ellen, coming up the lawn, leaning on her brother's arm, holding his hand, dancing about him and shaking her long curls in the sunshine, till the sight of her lovely person and grace might have softened for the time even a heart filled with fear of her sisterly influence, and jealous of the love which she received from that stern man.

"Oh, Bessie" she cried out again, as they reached the steps, "I am so happy! When I go to the new life of nursing I feel as if I must fly here directly. Oh, you darling brother, to come back! you deserve to be punished for staying away so long!"

She raised herself on tiptoe to kiss him anew, allowed her bonnet to fall off, and her curls to trail in bright waves over her shoulders; then she flew towards Elizabeth and showered kisses of greeting upon her.

"I cannot bind that dark subject," she whispered; "we'll be happy now in spite of everything."

Again that singular look passed over Elizabeth. Mellen's face as he listened and endured rather than returned the young girl's embrace, but Mr. Mellen was watching his sister and did not observe it.

"And isn't he brown?" cried Elsie, rushing over to her brother again; "he looks like an Indian, don't he, Bess? Oh, you bad, bad boy, to stay so long."

She laughed and talked incessantly, beginning a dozen sentences and not finishing any of them; she was so demonstrative in her expressions of affection to both, so lovely in her youth and her brilliant happiness, that it was no wonder her brother regarded her with that proud look; it seemed almost impossible that Elizabeth herself could help being won into happiness by her caressing ways.

"You'll never go away again—shall he, Bess? But isn't it luncheon-time? I could eat no breakfast for joy, and I do think I am hungry now."

"Great boy-thing!" laughed Mr. Mellen.

"Oh, Grantley, I saw Dolph on the steamboat; he is coming over with your luggage. The ridiculous creature has a more airs than ever. I like dealing at him. I wish you had forced him to come ashore in the pilothoat, it would have been such fun."

She gathered up her bonnet and shawl, tossed her curls back, kissed her brother again, and ran off, saying:

"I must go upstairs and brush my hair. Do come, Bessie; I never can do it myself."

"I must go and see what the servants are doing," Elizabeth said.

"Nonsense! Come with me."

Elsie caught her about the waist, waltzed away towards the stairs and forced her to ascend, while Mr. Mellen stood looking after them with a pleasant smile.

When they reached Elsie's room the girl drew Elizabeth in and closed the door. Mrs. Mellen sank wearily into a seat, as if glad for a time to escape from that restraint she had been putting upon herself all the day.

"You are quite frightened me so!" cried Elsie. "It was wicked of you to write like that."

"He came upon me so suddenly," gasped Elizabeth. "I was out in the grounds in the rain—I had gone to——"

"And Grantley came upon you there?" interrupted Elsie. "What did you do?"

"I nearly fainted when I heard her voice."

"Good heavens!"

"Oh, you would have been worse in my place," returned Elizabeth. "It was so sudden; how could I tell what he had seen?"

"But were are yourself now. You will not give way again?"

"I must not," she said, drearily. "I must bear up now."

"Don't talk in that dreadful voice," shivered Elsie; "it sounds as if you were dying. I thought you had more courage. Don't be afraid of me; if he held a bowl of poison to my lips I wouldn't tell."

"Oh, Elsie, what would death be compared to the agony of discovery?"

"Do stop!" pleaded Elsie, beginning to tremble.

"We mustn't talk. I won't talk, I tell you! I can put everything out of my head. If you will let me but if you look and talk like that I shall give way completely. Why can't you try and forget it? I will, be sure of that."

Elizabeth rose from her seat; a wan, hopeless look came over her face.

"You are right; let us be silent. But, oh, if I too, only could forget—but I can't, Elsie—I can't! The thought is with me day and night. The dread—the fear!"

"Be still!" shrieked Elsie, with a passion of which no one would have believed her capable. "You'll drive me mad. I shall go into spasms, and then who knows what may happen! I won't promise not to sneak if you drive me crazy."

All the youthful brilliancy was frightened out of her face, her lips turned blue, her whole frame shook so violently that Elizabeth saw there was absolute danger unless she were soothed back to calmness.

"I won't frighten you any more, Elsie," she said. "I'll bear it alone—I'll bear it alone."

"One can always forget if one is determined," said Elsie; "but you won't—you will brood over things——"

"I shall be more myself, now," interrupted Elizabeth. "It was from seeing Grantley so unexpectedly, just when I was waiting for——"

"Be still!" interrupted Elsie, sharply. "I won't hear that. I won't hear a word."

They stood opposite to each other, oppressed by the same secret, but bearing it so differently. Elsie's desire seemed to be only a burning thirst for mystery, there was no evil to be feared for her in its discovery, but deep sympathy appeared to have broken through her careless nature, moulding it into something grand. She was the first to recover from the cold, shivering horror which had come over both. Her volatility, however, prevented her from not dwelling long enough upon one subject, however painful it might be, to produce the effect which trouble had upon the character of Elizabeth.

"You look like a ghost," she cried, in sudden irritation. "It is cruel, Bessie, to frighten me in this way. You know I am weak, nervous little thing I am. It is wicked of you!"

Elizabeth turned slowly towards the door.

"Be at peace, if you can," she said; "I will trouble you no more."

"Now you are angry!" cried Elsie.

"No, dear, not angry!"

"Kiss me, then, and make up," said Elsie, with a return of her childish playfulness. "I'll help you all I can, but you mustn't put me so much on me; you know I am not strong, like you."

Elizabeth trembled under the touch of those fresh young lips, but she answered, quietly:

"I will not overshadow it," Elizabeth answered, "be serious for that. But it is so dread-ful to bear this constant fear! If Grantley should find out anything—he is so suspicious——"

"There you go again!" broke in Elsie. "I vow I won't live in the house with you if you act in this way! Just as one is getting a little comfortable you begin all this again. I can't stand it, and I won't."

Elizabeth did not reply. She looked at her again with that strange expression of astonishment and fear; now a strange sort of pity softened the glance.

"There shall be no more of it, Elsie," she said, after a considerable pause, during which Elsie had shivered herself quiet once more. "I ought to have borne this trouble alone from the first."

"That's a nice darling!" cried Elsie. "Nothing will happen, I am sure of it. Just hope for the best; look at everything as settled and over with. Things don't keep coming up to one as they do in a novel."

Elizabeth said no more, she stood leaning against the bed and watched Elsie as she arranged her ringlets before the glass, and clasped back the brilliant smiles which softened her face into something so youthful and pretty. Then they heard a voice from below, which made them both start.

"It's Grantley," said Elsie. "It sounds as odd to hear his voice! Open the door, Bessie; I am ready."

She ran to the head of the stairs, while Elizabeth followed slowly.

"Are you calling, Grant?" demanded Elsie, looking down at him as he stood at the foot of the stairs.

"Calling! I should think so! Are you both going to stay up there for ever? Dinner is ready."

"And so are we," cried Elsie, "and coming, Mr. Impatience."

Downstairs she tripped, humming a tune and making a little spring into her brother's arms when she reached the lower step.

She was such a dainty little thing, so light and graceful in all her movements, with such childish ways, such power of persuasion and coquetry, so lighthearted and frivolous, that it was quite impossible not to love her and treat her as if she were some blithe fairy, that would be frightened out of sight by a harsh word or look.

She was just one of those creatures whom everybody fondles and pets, who have sacrifices made for them which they are never capable of appreciating; whose loves and fears and hates are only of a shallow and transient kind, though capable of leading them to great lengths during their first fever; creatures whom we miss as we do sunshine and flowers, or any other pretty thing; who seem born to feed upon the fruit of life, and from that very fact take with them, even towards middle age, a kind of lightheartedness and joyous spirit, which is a sort of return for the demands they make upon others.

It seemed hard that a creature like this should have her youth burdened with any secret; it was scarcely wonderful that she grew impatient and angry with Elizabeth, upon whom she insisted upon forcing trouble on her mind, which, when left to herself, she was able, out of the very shallowness of her nature, to throw aside so completely.

Wrong and cruel it seemed in Elizabeth to burthen her thus—she should have kept Elsie aloof from all domestic mysteries, whatever they might be, and have borne her sorrow, her fears, perhaps her remorse, alone. It was not easy to tell from her face how much or how little lay back of her half-uttered despair. But she should have endured in silence things to be held as far away from Elsie's joyousness and Elsie's youth as the deep ocean current of the Gulf-stream was apart from the brilliant blithesome which made the girl so pleasant. Thus the world would have judged had they seen Elizabeth.

While they were still seated at the luncheon-table the door opened, and 'Dolph came in with a tray, which he placed at the right of Mr. Mellen.

"So, there you are, 'Dolph," said Mr. Mellen, carelessly. "Did you lose half the letters I gave you to deliver?"

'Dolph drew himself up with a great deal of dignity.

"Master knows I'se trusty as Solomon's seal," he said. "De 'pistelers is safe in de honorable hands for which dey was originally intended."

Mr. Mellen burst off at the right moment," said Elsie, laughing.

'Dolph rather missed her play upon his misunderstanding of the word, but he gave another magnificent flourish.

"Jes so, Miss Elsie; you've 'spressed it beautiful."

"How do you do, 'Dolph?" asked Mrs. Mellen, kindly, rousing herself from the abstraction into which she had fallen. Elsie and her brother were both busy in chatting gaily. "Are you glad to get back?"

"I'se sherry reason to be satisfactory wid my berth, and am obligatory for de requiry," replied 'Dolph, with a bow so profound that it seemed by a miracle he recovered his balance. "De bery glad to see de family again, Miss Mellen, and de faces of yerself and young Mise Elsie is like de sunshine to me."

"Bless me, 'Dolph," cried Elsie, "that's poetry."

'Dolph gave a degenerate wave of the hand, as the poetry had been unavoidable, and a smile which insinuated that he was capable of still higher flights of fancy, as he said:

"Maybe, young Mise Elsie—I didn't reserve partic'lar—dese tings takes a pusson onawares mostly."

"Now, 'Dolph," said his master, "try and put my things in some sort of order before the day is over."

"Yes, master; shery ting dat's wanting shall be toppermost."

Elsie laughed unrestrainedly, but 'Dolph only took that as a compliment and was immensely satisfied with the impression he had produced.

"Don't go another flirtation with the cook," she said; "I shall be jealous, 'Dolph—your mother, but she's rich—think of that, 'Dolph."

'Dolph bowed himself out of the room with much ceremony, as he had entered it, and took his way straight towards the kitchen regions. His brain had already formed numerous projects on the strength of Clorinda's wealth, and he felt it incumbent upon him to open the interview as soon as possible with this elderly heiress.

He came upon her in the kitchen hall; she was seated on a wooden bench by her door, walked upright as a ramrod, and looked forbidding as if she had been the eldest daughter of Erebus.

"Dat's de ugliest 'oman I ever brought 'Dolph; "she is persimmony and no mistake, but here goes for de power of 'suasion."

He made up his mow which fluttered the sable spinster a good deal, and almost made her drop her pan.

"Dolf, Dolf, am dat you?" she exclaimed, growing a shade darker.

"Permit me," said 'Dolph, gracefully, taking the pan from her hand; "it's my expressive delight to serve de lady, and de most bery, through dis instrumentation, to renew your honorable acquaintance."

He followed this up with another tremendous bow, and Clorinda thought it quite time that she should make a show of her breeding likewise. She gave her body a bend and a shock, but unfortunately 'Dolph was ducking at the same moment and their heads met with a loud concussion.

There was a giggle from the kitchen door—there stood Victoria, the chambermaid, now a spruce mulatto of eighteen, enjoying Clorinda's discomfiture.

"De fault was mine," cried 'Dolph, in his gallantry; "all mine."

"Any how yer needn't stand dar a grinning like a monkey, Vic," exclaimed Clorinda, in wrath.

"Accidents will recur," said 'Dolph. "But, lawa, Miss Victory, is dat you? I had de pleasure of yer 'quaintance afore me and marster started on our devitations."

"I've been alone here ever since," explained Victoria, not proof against his fascinations. "I'm sure yer haint altered a bit, Mr. 'Dolph."

"I guess if you don't go upstairs mise'll know why," cried Clorinda, sharply. "Jes give me dat pan, Mr. 'Dolph; I kin' wait all day for you to empty it."

'Dolph was recalled to wisdom at once—he could not afford to make a mistep on the very day of his return. He emp'ied the pan, followed Clorinda into the kitchen, making a sign of farewell to Vic which the old maid did not observe, and so followed up the impression he had produced that before long he was discussing a delicate luncheon with great relish, and as disturbing Clorinda's equanimity by the compliments that she received, endangered the piecrust she was industriously rolling out on one end of the table where he sat.

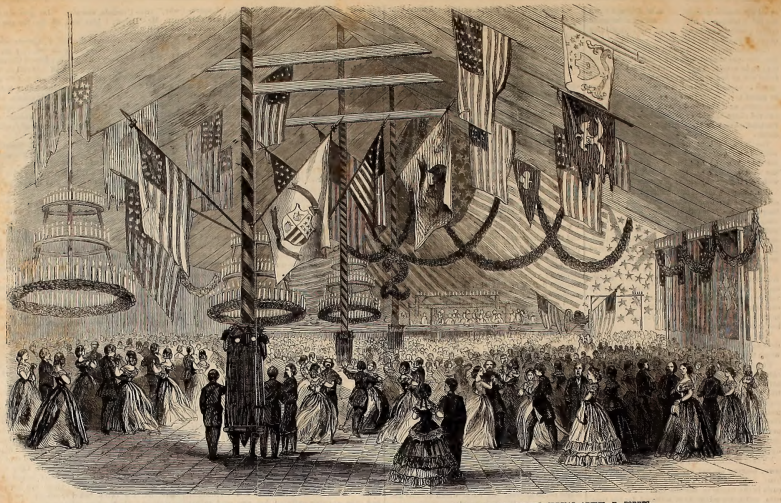
While Elizabeth, after Elsie left her, Grantley Mellen mounted his horse, and rode off towards the shore to warn a sad and heavy-hearted man. The woman whom he had loved so devotedly in the first passion of his youth lay in that little chamber waiting for burial. Where destined when she met her fate, or how much she suffered, he could only guess. But there she was, after years of separation, thrown upon his chastity even for a grave, with no one to mourn her death, no one to care how or where she was buried. He had not mentioned her to his wife or sister, an aching memory as the head of Medusa that, but underneath the joy of his return home lay this dead secret, haunting him with funereal shadows.

The woman was in her coffin when he entered the little chamber, which was now perfectly clean; for he had given orders regarding her interment before leaving the house that stormy night, and every thing had been done as he had desired. Delicate gauze covered the face, softening it into singular loveliness. Mellen did not lift this veil, which seemed to shield the coldness of death so tenderly, but his breast heaved with a farewell sigh, while many tears blinded his last look, which carried all sense of material fairness with it. A noise in the next room disturbed him. He turned hastily, and went downstairs, shrinking from observation. Clorinda's hat he observed in the hall—the door which connected this death chamber with a small inner room was pushed open, and on the floor the wild Irish looked at. That chat of North; after a quick survey of the room, he darted towards the door leading to the stairs and shot the bolt. Then he came up to the coffin, drew back the gauze from that marble face, and looked down upon it. Those black eyes burned too hotly for tears, but the heart within beamed about his mouth, and his hand was clenched over the burning consciousness of a great crime was upon him. If North had ever loved this woman all the force of that passion seemed now back upon his soul now in an agony of remorse. As he gazed, his hand released its iron grip, his strong limbs shook, like a weak child flinging himself down beside the cursed himself, his crime and that living woman for whose sake it had been committed.

Then he sprang upstairs. He heard the heavy blundering footsteps of two men, and knew what they were after. Creeping softly to the door he threw the bolt back with trembling haste, and stealing into the little chamber fell upon the floor, and held his breath listening.

He heard the men-fill closed, the slow turning of the screws; a sudden jar, and then the footsteps again, broken and disturbed by the mournful burden which they bore carried. Then all was still for a moment, and up through the passage, vibrating like electricity through that evil soul, came the sound of a clear, solemn voice reading the burial service.

Still he listened, with his head lifted from the floor, and his hands pressing himself to one arm like a worn-out gladiator. A sort of terror had seized upon him with the sweet low sound of that voice. Great drops gathered upon his forehead and crept back thence. He was like an evil spirit looking through the gates of Paradise. Then came another pause, followed by the slow roll of wheels and the sharp tramp of horses. Mellen rose to his feet, and threw up the window. A hearse was moving heavily down the street, and close behind it rode the solitary Mellen alone.



Near the Piney Cove mansion was an ancient burying-ground, with the graves of many generations crowded under its shadow. A church which rose up in solemn stillness among a grove of cypress trees and wild cedars. In one of the remotest corners of this ground a newly-dug grave, and a pile of blossoming turf was laid ready to cover that hapless woman in her place of rest. Grantley Mellen performed their last work. Mellen stood by, with his head bared reverentially, and the heart in his bosom standing still. When he turned away it was with a conformed their work. Mellen stood by, with his head bared reverentially, and the heart in his bosom standing still. When he turned away it was with a conformed their work of relief. The bitterness and the pain of his first love was buried for ever. Henceforth Elizabeth would have no rival, even in remembrance.

Mellen rode home in silence and a better man after laying his lost one down in her grave. Hitherto her memory had been one of unmixed bitterness. Now it had come forgiveness, and out of that his spirit arose chastened, gentle and tending towards a healthy cheerfulness.

Elizabeth was too deeply observant not to remark the softened seriousness of her husband's manner when he came home that day, but every thing in her own heart was so full of fear, so angry, and smote her worse than reproaches. Could the wife who deceived her husband find joy in the confidence which that husband had of her death. Many times during those few days Elizabeth wished that her husband would be harsh and cruel again.

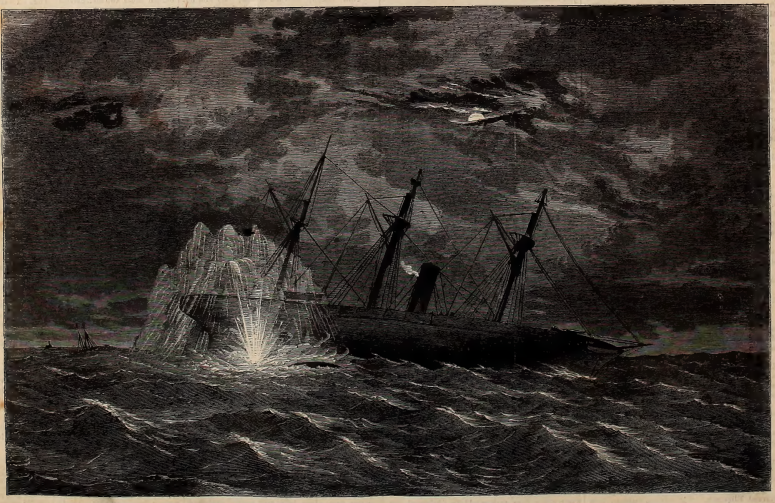
THE latest in the photographic line in London is the representation of the stars on a blanch, which he calls a hard in a plaster for the inspection of his friends, or curious visited up to the sun. We do not know how the matter is managed, presuming the pictures are not correct representations; but there is something very horrid in the fun.

A LITERARY correspondent is informed that the author of the tragedy of "Ion" was not Elcock.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY IN THE ARMY—BALL AT THE SECOND CORPS HEADQUARTERS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, E. FORBES.

THE BALL OF THE 2D CORPS.

THE ball given on Washington's birthday by the officers of the 2d Corps was one of the most successful entertainments of the kind ever given anywhere. A large building, with board sides and canvas roof, was erected especially for this occasion, with an extension along one side, the extreme length of the main structure, for a dining-hall. Less than 300 $10 tickets were sold, exclusively officers of the corps, and the invited guests consisted of those only who, by their position, were entitled to that distinction, or were intimate associates of the officers having the matter in charge. This rule has been strictly observed, as a consequence a select company was secured, and not so large as to make every one present uncomfortable. All, therefore, had plenty of opportunity to dance or promenade as best suited their fancy. The bands of the whole corps were brought into requisition. The table, also, was everything that could have been desired. There were almost as many ladies present as gentlemen, and many of their toilets would have been worthy of notice in the most fashionable drawing-room of the metropolis of the nation.



OLD ABE'S NUGGET.

Among the invited guests were Vice-President Hamlin and daughter; Maj.-Gen. Meade, lady and son; Gens. Sedgwick, Warren, Sykes, Newton, Merritt, Davies and ladies; Gen. Kilpatrick; O. A. Brownson, son and daughter; Senator Sprague, Mrs. Kate Sprague, Mrs. Senator Hale and daughter; Senator Usher, the Secretary of the Interior.

The ball, of which we give a view, as well as the music-stand, was tastefully decorated with flags and banners, and the whole affair proved to be a grand success.

OLD ABE'S NUGGET.

WE give a faithful representation of a nugget, valued in greenbacks at $125, sent by a miner of Kiel Idaho, through Capt. James L. Fisk, U. S. A., to the President. The face attached is a natural golden image, believed by the miner to resemble Old Abe, according to his notion, derived from "pictors" circulated while he was running for the Presidency. This specimen is from Bevia's gulch, at the Stinkwater, or Virginia city diggings, on a branch of the Jefferson fork of the Missouri river.

LOSS OF THE U. S. SLOOP OF WAR HOUSATONIC, CAPT. PICKERING, OFF BEACH INLET, S. C., FEB. 17.

THE OPERATIONS AGAINST MOBILE—FARRAGUT'S ATTACK ON FORT GRANT, FEB. 16.—FROM A SKETCH BY E. B. HOUGH.

THE WAR IN NORTH CAROLINA—VIEW OF THE BALD HEAD INLET, CAPE FEAR RIVER, FORT CASWELL FIRING AT A U. S. BLOCKADER.—FROM A SKETCH BY A. PERKS.

A WHITE MAN TURNING BLACK.—The Philadelphia Age gives a long description of the singular case of Gustavus Brett, a native of Germany, who has been in this country for 15 years, and for most of that time a workman in a cotton factory at Manayunk, Pa. He is a single man, of temperate habits, and 45 years of age. In the autumn of 1861 he was taken with spotted fever, from which he recovered, and the spots disappeared in due time. In August last dark purple spots appeared on the back of each hand, and on each instep, giving no pain, but increasing in size until the whole surface of the body has been covered with a purplish hue. His nose is described as "a mass of corruption." Appropriate remedies are more of a notice case. The palms of his hands and the soles of his feet are as white as they ever were. His health is remarkably good—it never was better. Within the past month a deeper shade has been added to the skin. Neither the microscope nor the investigations of the most learned physicians have found any cause for this singular transformation.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED for the New Parlor Game containing Jewelry, Good Stationery, and a Picture in Oil Colors. Enclose stamp for Circular. Sample 25 cents.
J. L. G. PIERPONT,
440-5 258 Broadway, N. Y.

Ten years in the Business.

Patrons conted by thousands in every State of the Union.

A Premium for all!

Evans' New Enterprise, 1864, $500,000 worth of New Goods,

consisting of

Gold and Silver Watches, Jewelry, Vest and Guard Chains, Gold Pens, Pencils, Lockets, Medallions, Setts of Jewelry, &c., &c.,

together with a large line of goods especially adapted to the wants of our Soldiers, Army and Navy, to be sold in

lots at One Dollar Each,

and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive. Premium Orders for above goods, sent to any address, on receipt of 10 cents.

Send your orders to

G. G. EVANS, Publisher,
630 Chestnut Street,
Philadelphia, Pa.

N. B. A classified Catalogue, of Books with Price Lists of Photograph Card Pictures and Albums, sent on receipt of 5 cents.

Address,
G. G. EVANS,
Philadelphia, Pa.

DAWLEY'S

CAMP AND FIRESIDE LIBRARY,
No. 1.

Incidents of American Camp Life;

Being events which have actually transpired during the present rebellion.

CONTENTS:

The Snake Hunters of Western Virginia; or, The Mocassin Rangers—An Inquisitive Rebel; or, Tapping the Lightning—An Exciting Incident of Picket Life—How the Rebels like Yankee Coffee—A Picturesque Scene—Yankee Invention in Camp; or, Irish Wit—Contract Stand it; or, the List of Sick—An Incident of Battle—Wit of the Turn-Coats—Scenes on Sentry Duty—Patriotism; or, Telegraph Strategy—Notes from the Diary of a Private—Yankee Operations—A Curious Case in the History of the War—Hurst, the Lone Scout—Scenes in the Evacuation of a United States Fort—Sharpshooting and the Telegraph; or, Better Tents for General Privates—Fat and Bull Run—Adventures of a Contraband; or, an Incident Attending the Operations of the Army of the Potomac During a Advance—Don Sudden—Parasole and the Fisherman—Drubbing a Prisoner; or, Fat and Bull Run—Scenes in the Battle-Field—Assimilar Result—A Female Scout—Probable Tragic Results of an Evening Serenade—Col McCalla First Escape—What they all Need—Wear your Head, Sammy—Some New Yankee Notions—Unless they Lay Down their Arms—An F F V. Outwitted by a Chicago Zouave—Yankee Ingenuity—Love, Marriage—A Remarkable Escape—A Maryland Incident; or, Colonel Gordons Wife—Scenes in Sharpshooting on the Battle-field—Hallo, Lobster, we are Union Men—California Joe at his Wit—Every Inch a Yankee—Yankee Ingenuity—Science, the Scout; not Kit—Dramming a Coward out of the Camp—Sharpshooting in Their Own Way—Dem'lyon Dalliet and his Contents Spiked; or, Advance over Open Ground—Another An Incident of the Williamsburg Battle—Clearing the Battlefield after an Engagement—A Yankee Trick in Missouri—Those Are My Sons!—The Spirit of '76—Scenes at a Provost Marshal's Office—Death Scene of Captain John Griswold—The Massacre the Sixth in Battle—Two Drummer Boys—A Curious Incident in Camp of Pemelesat Island No 5—Who Was She?—A Fool's Revenge—Mrs Taylor in Camp Dick Robinson—The Dying Soldier's Last Enemy—An Exclamation—Details—The Drummer Boy—Remembered and Mourned—Heartlessness of a Surgeon, etc.

These books are sold by Booksellers and News Agents throughout the country. Price 15 cents; mailed, postage, on receipt of price.

T. B. DAWLEY, Publisher,
No. 13 and 15 Park Row,
New York.

N. B.—Nearly 100 per cent. allowed to Agents.

We are now offering our celebrated

GOLD PENS
AND EXTENSION
SILVER-PLATED
HOLDERS

At the following low prices for Cash:

No. 1. Magic Gold Pens and Holders per dozen..... $ 5 50
No. 2. " " " " " 7 00
No. 1. Albertine Fine Gold Pens and Holders..... 8 00
No. 2. " " " " " 9 00
No. 1. Always Ready..... 11 00
No. 2. " " " " " 13 00

These Pens and Holders are all Warranted and will retail from $2 to $5 each.

A deduction of 10 per cent. will be made on all sums of $50 and upwards. Our Pens and Holders have nice Fancy Cases containing One Dozen each, and are not sold in less quantities. Sent by mail or express prepaid. Address

SALISBURY, BROS. & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

I have just issued a New Battle Pin with a likeness of either General in the Army and the principa Battles he has been engaged in engraved thereon. Also a new Naval Engineer Artillery Battery and Cavalry Pin. The above are all made either of Solid Silver or Fine Gold Plate, and I will send them free for 25 50 each.

Also, for $1, I will send a Solid Silver Shield or either Army Corps, Division or Co. Pin, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely engraved thereon.

Agents wanted in every Regiment, Hospital and Vessel. With each sample will be sent a wholesale Circular to Agents.

Also, the Emporium for Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils, Lockets, Bracelets, Chains, Rings, Pins, Sets of Jewelry, Studs and Buttons, and everything in the Jewelry line. One Certificate telling you what you can have for $1 will be sent for 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5.

S. M. WARD & CO., Manufacturing Jewellers,
208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

THE COMPLAINTS OF THE SEASON.—"Take care of the Founts, and the Siblings will take care of themselves," says the proverb. Take care of the stomach and its immediate tendencies, and the rest of the system will, as a general thing, take care of itself. At this season what we all want is vigor—a replacement of vital force we have lost during the hot weather—and this must be obtained through the stomach, the great controlling organ, with whose conditions every thre and molecule of the body sympathizes. No other medicine will effect this object half so speedily or safely as HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS, in fact, it is the only preparation that will cure with entire certainty all forms of dyspepsia. The proprietors can say this without fear, begging of the reader, for the sake of his own health, to see the signature of some of the most eminent men in this country, who have used the Bitters, before they venture to be used in the public prints for the pu pose of an heretofore a great but important evil, to every one who suffers from Indigestion, Liver Complaint or Disorder of the Bowels.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK. 676 Broadway.

Just What Every Family Wants!

SAVAGE & CO'S NO CHIMNEY BURNER for Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene oil with a brilliant light, without chimney, smoke or odor. Saves 25 per cent. Office, 302 FULTON STREET, N. Y. Agents wanted. Send for Circular Sample sent free for 50 cents. American Institute awarded First Premium and Medal, 1863.

Champagne Wine at 10 cts. a bottle, so good as sold at Saratoga restaurants for 25 cents. Address
W. FRIZZELL, Baltimore, Md.

$75 A MONTH—I want to hire Agents in every County at $75 a month, to introduce a pale new article. Address Shaw & Co., Alfred, Me.

Straight Hair Made Wavy.
Without heating or by using
IVINS' PATENT HAIR CRIMPER.
For Sale by Stores, or sent by mail, 25 cents. 614-48

The Great Money-Making Article.
Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.
500

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office), offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive.

	EACH
150 Gold and Silver Watches	$150 to $300
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	$ 75
500 Gold and Gem Set Silver Watches	$ 50
2500 Vest and Neck Chains	$5 00 to $20 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	$ 00 to 10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Cameo Brooches	3 00 to 6 00
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00
5000 Gents' Breast Pins	2 00 to 6 00
3000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 6 00
3000 Stone Set Rings	2 00 to 6 00
2500 Sets of Stone Studs	2 00 to 6 00
2500 Sleeve Buttons	2 00 to 6 00
5000 Plain Rings	2 00 to 6 00
5000 Stone Set Rings	2 00 to 6 00
5000 Lockets	2 00 to 6 00
10000 Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mixed Holders	4 00 to 6 00
5000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 8 00

The articles in the above stock of Jewelry are of the best and most fashionable styles. Certificates of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail for 10 cents each; and on receiving a Certificate, if for $1 or less, you can send ONE DOLLAR and take the article named in it. If for $2, Five Dollars, $3, Ten Dollars, $5, Fifty Dollars, or any sum over $100, one hundred per Cent. Certificates need not be returned with order. CALIFORNIA gold or greenbacks answered.

Agents wanted in every town and county. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate provided their remittance amounts to $1, and liberal inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the affections, confidence and love of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, free, together with a guide to conjugal happiness, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cts., together with a package of the most popular kind of parlor magic—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; just published. A queer book. Address "PSYCHOMANCY," WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 42 Days." Dont be humbugged with ONGUENTS. The GREAT SECRET fully explains how to do it. SENT HIDDEN. 12,000 sold. 13 in 5c. Only 30 cts; 3 for $1. Address C. E. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps and Lanterns, gives a brilliant light, free from smoke or smell, and needs NO chimney. We are now prepared to supply the increasing demand for this superior Burner, which, where given satisfaction. Sample sent, postpaid, for 25 cents.

Agents wanted. Send for Circular.
F. BESIC & CO., Manufacturers,
2 Platt Street, N. Y.

The Newest Thing Out.

Wanted Canvassers, News Agents, Sutlers and Dealers generally, everywhere, to sell STEPHENS'S COLORED ALBUM CARDS, splendidly lithographed in all colors from original designs: three parts, 12 cards each.

Part 1.—Our Relations at Home and Abroad.

Part 2.—The Adventures of a Conscript. (Both sepitably comic).

Part 3.—The Slave in 1863. (A thrilling series of the great evil.)

Price 50 cents each, postpaid. Dealers sending $1, ordering all three parts, will receive them postpaid. Trade terms liberal.

WM. A. STEPHENS, Publisher,
441-2 No. 400 Chestnut St., Phila.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite.
1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for Catalogue.
000 VICTOR BELAPO. 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

LATEST INVENTION IN GOLD PENS.
JUST OUT.

After years of public approval in his been demonstrated new, for the first time, that a genuine Gold Pen, with Solid Iridium Points, can be had, uniting all the elasticity and durability of the highest priced Pens, and at a price within the reach of every one. Saving of the kind heretofore offered. Years have been spent in order to produce the Elastic and Diamond jolted Pen at a lo figure, and until now all efforts have failed. We have nothing to say against parties advertising low-price Pens and calling them Gold. We know that ours is the only Solid Gold and genuine Diamond-pointed Elastic Pen in the market that can be affords, at anywhere near our prices.

Trade Prices per Dozen.

No. 1. Medium Pens..... $3 00
No. 2. Medium Engraving..... $3 75
No. 3. Large Engraving..... $4 50

A discount of 10 per cent. on all orders of $50 and upwards.

Sample Pens.

No. 1. Medium Pen..... 40 cts.
No. 2. Medium Engraving..... 60 cts.
No. 3. Large Engraving..... 75 cts.

WARRANTED.

We warrant Every Pen for one year, and to be Solid Gold, Genuine Iridium or Diamond-pointed, and to give all the Elasticity of the most Expensive Gold Pen made.

We will send these Pens to any address in the United States, postage paid, on receipt of price.

Money properly lost in Solid Gold comes at our risk.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
Sole Manufacturers,
No. 181 Broadway, N. Y.

Artillery Badges.

Annexed is a fac simile design of our Solid Silver ARTILLERY BADGES Sent free to any address on receipt of $1. Hall Marked, Co. and Regiment handsomely Engraved thereon.

Solid Silver (without buttons) $1 50
Solid Silver, Letters in Gold Relief (without buttons) $3. Solid Gold (without buttons) $5.

Buttles, 50 cts. to each set.

Also, New Style CAVALRY BADGE, exactly as shown. Cut. Pins and Corps Badges worn by the Army. Our Illustrated Catalogue sent free. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO.,
208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New! Burglar-Proof Traveller's Lock, for three Pencils, Keyless Compass, Magic Tobacco Box, and 20 more Novel and Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.
S. W. RICH & CO., 88 Nassau St., N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
206 Broadway, New York.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT
SMOKING CASE!

Most ingenious combination of the Meerschaum Case containing Pipe and Stem, Mixture and Pipe Cleaner, with a handsome Tobacco Pouch attached. Filling the Pipe by a valve, without use of the fingers or waste of tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and preventing Clear Case-ing. It is made for gents' pockets and handsome styles, at $1 50, $2, $2 50, and for ladies at $3 75 and $5; the two latter richly Plated and Engraved. Nothing can excel its Combined Utility and Economy for all Smokers. An A PRESENT TO FRIENDS nothing could be more acceptable.

FOR THE SOLDIER IT IS INVALUABLE.

Also

The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco!

Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fill the case (about a week's smoking), $2 25 per pound. A sad of various kinds for the general Trade, a liberal discount to Dealers. Single Cases sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 50 each. Also, half pound packages of this fine Tobacco, full weight sent (carefully packed) by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 00.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
Office 629 Broadway, cor. Howard St., N. Y.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Lady Complexion Manufacturer. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, $1 00 each. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 193 South-seventh Street, and 41 South-Second Street, Philadelphia.

J. G. SCHULL,
MERCHANT TAILOR
33 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings, which he will make up in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks on the smoothest face without injury to the skin. Sent, post-paid, to any part of the country, for $1; sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.

R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell the Everlasting Pencil, Original Inventions and 10 other novelties. 12 Circulars free. JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Me.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD

30,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.

WORTH $150,000,

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

Six Certificates will be ordered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $12.

Address C. F. SHULTZE,
235 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to their advantage. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARLY, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelopes on receipt of 25 cents. Address 58 White Street, New York.

Philadelphia Package Stationery.

ARMSTRONG & SHEPHERD having bought out R. S. ELY and taken his rooms in Dexel's Building, No. 34 South Third Street, offer to Travelling and Local Agents attractive inducements in new and improved styles of Stationery Packages, of large profits to Agents. Send orders and for Circulars.

Phila., Feb. 1864.

False Whiskers and Moustaches, $2 50 a pair. Whiskers $2 a pair; Moustaches 50 cts. and $1 a pair. Sent free, by mail. Address
461-2 C. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Whiskers in 42 Days or money refunded. My Onguent will force them to grow heavily in Six Weeks on the smoothest face without injury to the skin. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents a package or $1 for $1. Address
440-3 A. R. CHAPMAN, Southfield, Mass.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

A Great Literary Engagement.

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY,

(The Greatest Story and Sketch Paper Published),

Has succeeded, at great expense, in securing the services of one of the greatest of living romance writers, who, for reasons of his own, chooses to write for us not under his own proper name, but under the nom de plume of

LOUIS LEON.

The fame of this gentleman is world-wide and it is safe to say that there is hardly a reader of romance on this continent who has not, at one time or another, been charmed by his genius. He combines the dramatic power of Dumas the rich imagery of Bulwer, on the graphic force of Dickens, in a style which is peculiarly his own—as one can more envious, and yet so fearful, as to hold his readers from first to last as by a spell of magic. With the power of Will to acquire to his possession the human heart, and rules it at will. He has the singular faculty of riveting the attention of the most illiterate as well as of the most intellectual reader, and carrying them captive as long as it suits his purpose.

Louis Leon's last contribution to the columns of the NEW YORK WEEKLY, which will appear on Tuesday, March 17, is indisputably the finest of all his productions. He himself in a letter to us says: "It is infinitely superior to anything which I have ever written." This splendid romance is entitled

THE SILVER SHIP;
OR,
The Bloodhound of the Caribbean.
A SPANISH-AMERICAN STORY.

The tale is historical, and the main incidents are true. The principal characters are CALLOCABRAS, the famous pirate, commonly called by the Spanish-Americans of his time, before the proper name was known, El Sabueso del Mar Caribe, or the Bloodhound of the Caribbean—a title that arose from his terribly superhuman way of learning about the movements of treasure-ships, and tracking them, a secret which is clearly explained for the first time in these pages. RUY LEON, the hammock-maker of Isla Grande, who also lives and moves in a singular mystery. COUNT ESCOL, of Mexico, the proprietor of the great silver mine of Regle. PADRE LASSO, the priest of Isla Grande. CAPTAIN ROMERO, the commander of the galleon Escandalosa, the Silver Ship. SENOR NERLI, a person of wealth and luxurious habits, who lives retired at a batiful villa on Isla Grande, and to whom an extraordinary mystery attaches. YOLA, a young girl of marvellous beauty and fascinating grace, who lives under the protection of among the inhabitants of Isla Grande to be his niece—a glorious type of the Spanish-American woman, a being of sunshine and flowers, over whose life, at the moment of her introduction reads a painful mystery, in which is threatened an appalling doom! IOLET LEON, the foster-sister of DON RUY. The COUNTESS OF REGLA.

It is useless to attempt to describe the situations which will be presented in our story while perusing this truly great story. Language is too weak to give a true idea of its thrilling effect. The reader becomes so absorbed as to lose himself, and the effect is rather that produced by a thrilling melodrama upon the beholder than that wrought by the simple perusal of a story, so acutely does the reader sympathize with the characters introduced—so entirely is he carried away by them as to imagine himself a verit ble actor in the scene.

The work is dedicated to President JUAREZ in these terms: "To the Senor Don Benito Juarez, President of the Republic of Mexico, I dedicate this work, with a sincere abhorrence of the ruler of the entire world against the infamous pretensions of tyrants." The tale is a Spanish-American story, in a sense heretofore unknown to the Anglo-American public. It is the first real and truthful picture of Spanish-American Dons, Donnas, officials, pirates, etc., ever published in the form of a story. It is perhaps necessary to say, in advance, that although PADRE LASSO—one of the characters represented—is a villain, who "has stolen the garb of Heaven to serve the devil in"—the moral of the story is such that no reader, whatever his creed, can take exception to it.

We confidently look for an immense increase in circulation on this story, and news dealers would do well to send in their orders in time.

Besides the above great story, this favorite family journal will contain weekly two other continued stories of great merit, a weekly FIVE SHEET TO TWELVE PAGES of SERIOUS sketches of different varieties, a large number of fine POEMS, and a variety of departments of a useful and entertaining character, including "PLEASANT PARAGRAPHS," "MISTRESS MORRIS," "KNOWLEDGE BOX," "TERMS OF INTEREST," etc., etc., the whole going to form a family newspaper which, as is freely admitted by all who take it, has not its equal either in this country or the old. Price, five cents for a single copy, $2 per year, and liberal terms offered to letters-up of clubs.

STREET & SMITH, EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS,
No. 11 Frankfort Street, New York City.

*Specimen Copies sent free.

Dr. R. G. Perry,
DERMATOLOGIST,
No. 49 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.
(Formerly of 5 Bulfinch St., Boston.)

Treats successfully all
Diseases of the Scalp, Loss of Hair and Premature Blanching;
ALSO
Removes MOTH, FRECKLES, and other DISCOLORATIONS from the FACE, without injury to the texture or color of the skin.

NO CHARGE FOR CONSULTATION.

For particulars address, enclosing stamp,
DR. R. G. PERRY,
49 Bond Street, N. Y.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in every respect. Restores the hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, overcomes effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR GLOSS, nonsecilue in keeping the hair in curl.

HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM
oils and colors the hair at the same time; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER
imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves youthfulness of appearance. Sold everywhere.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place, N. Y.

Swords, Sashes, Belts.

Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords, 461-66 B. KITTRIDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Watches
FOR THE ARMY.

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travellers."—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 27.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest watch ever offered."—N. Y. Illustrated News. Jan. 16.

"Splendidly finished Watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their cheapness."—N. Y. Weekly, July 25.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADY'S OR GENTLEMAN'S WATCH COMBINED, WITH PATENT SELF-WINDING MOVEMENT.

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it, and recorded with its machinery, He own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16-carat gold. It has the imported ruby-action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, expressly for one case of half dozen, $204. Sample Watches, in neat morocco cases, $35. By mail the postage is 50 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!

FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND ELEGANCE OF FINISH, THESE WATCHES HAVE NEVER BEEN EXCELLED IN EXISTENCE.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faithless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer one fine quality Sterling Silver, while the liner one is German Silver, it cannot be recognized by outline or heavy appearance, making it not only in appearance, but in durability, the best combination of SOLID STERLING SILVER in existence.

The sale of these Watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 and upwards. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact.

Agents WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white metal, and fancy cut hands, in good running order, by the half dozen, $72; postage $2 50; registering, 20 cents. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

Terms, CASH! INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed; buyers will deal directly with us. If money is sent us by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk! Circulars will send the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., FINE IMPORTERS,
428 169 Broadway and 3 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

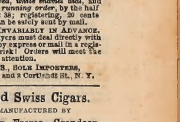
The Celebrated Swiss Cigars.

MANUFACTURED BY
Vautier Freres, Grandson, Switzerland.
SUISSES FINS,
FIGAROS,
CABANOS.
THE REGINE.

For sale at the principal Cigar stores throughout the country.

J. MARC MARTIN,
Sole Importer for the United States,
No. 203 PEARL STREET, N. Y.

Complete Musical Library for $10.
Comprising nearly
One Thousand Pieces of Piano Music.



"HOME CIRCLE," a collection of Piano Music, Marches, Waltzes, Polkas, Quadrilles, etc., 2 vols. "SHOWER OF PEARLS," Charles Voss Davis, with Piano accompaniment. "SILVER CHORD," a collection of Songs, Ballads, Duets, Quartettes, etc., Piano Accomp. "OPERATIC PEARLS," comprising the Vocal Beauties of Modern Operas. Piano Accomp. The above sent, postpaid, for $10, or each of the following pieces, Flute, $2; Cloth, $2 75; Full Gilt $3.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers,
430 Boston.

New Catalogue of Jewelry sent free.
Address THOS. CAFFERTY & CO.,
438-41 Providence, R. I.

Soldiers and Everybody!

A great Book for you! Over 2,000 Things Worth Knowing! Mailed free for 25 cents. Address "UNION BOOK ASSOCIATION," Box 300, Syracuse, N. Y. Agents wanted. Order our unequalled Stationery Packages. 440-1

Royal Havana Lottery.

30 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

VETERAN SOLDIERS!

We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Fits for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field at $1 50 each; also, all the various Army Badges worn by the different armies, by the single one, 100 or 1,000.

Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE, Manufacturing Jewellers,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

Solid 18 K. Gold, $6 50. Solid Silver, $1 50.

CONJURING!

The whole art of Conjuring made easy, with full directions for performing 100 of the most wonderful and astounding Feats of Hocus Focus, Sleight-of-Hand, Necromancy and Legerdemain. Profusely illustrated. Price 15 cents, sent, postpaid, by mail.

Address M. M. SAWHORN, Stanhope, N. J.

Ha! Ha!! Ha!!! Yankees Outwitted.

Enjoy the fun and read Celebrated Yankees Outwitted! Remember! without "Apples" or other fruit, in family 12 hours! Sent, postpaid, for 20 cts.
4482 Address P. O. Box 38, Hiwoy, Pa.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 101 pages, Illustrated. "Getting on." "Physiognomy." Plainly shows how either sex can fascinate, win the unwilling love, and secure wherever they wish, the affections of any person of personal appearance. Sent by mail for 25 cents in cash or red stamps. Address
K. D. LUCKE & CO., Box 1365, Portland, Me.
462-68

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVERS.

Trade Mark, P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jewelled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to C. H. WELLING, 24 Pine St., N. Y., and receive it by return mail.
o

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts.,

MAGNIFYING 500 times, mailed on receipt of price. Five of different powers, $1. Address F. B. ROWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.
o

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Sent for a Dollar. Pens repointed on receipt of 38 cents.
$10-270 E. S. JOHNSON, 18 Malden Lane, N.Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, prepaid, for $2 25; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by
HENRY CRAIG,
335 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Reflective, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Field Piece, accommodating all eyes, for $3; with 12 assorted views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newbern, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS Co., 74 Broadway. Have charged our rates. 000o

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTES,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,

20 cents each, $1 80 per doz. Free by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1616, New York city. Send for circular.

American, Swiss and English Watches

in superior styles and quality of cases. Orders from the Trade or Clubs (large or small) promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 30 years.
000o T. B. BYNNER, 176 Broadway, N.Y.

Great Chance to Make Money!

$650,000 of Watches, Jewelry, &c.,

Given away with our STATIONERY PRIZE PACKETS.

Every AGENT purchasing 100 PACKETS will receive FREE, as a PRESENT from us, a GENUINE SILVER WATCH.

We also publish SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Agents can make more money by engaging in the sale of our PACKAGES and ENGRAVINGS than in any other business. For full particulars of the SPECIAL INDUCEMENTS we offer send for our New Circular.
o G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
76 Beekman St., N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Special causes, in both Sexes—new and reliable treatment—Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
o

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, CURED and PREVENTED. Pamphlet free. Address
$38-270 CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the Prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
000o Williamsburg, Kings Co., N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in six drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs etc., &c.
R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Malden Lane, N. Y.
0000

25 Cent Legal Tender Circular.

$15 A DAY AND A WATCH FREE!

Reader, delay not; send at once for our New Free Circular whether you want it or not, and we will refer you to you the postage on your letter or its equivalent, as we want every person to have a Circular. It astonishes everybody; defies competition, and outstrips competitors.

1,000 Agents wanted. Samples 50 cts. Address
WEIR & CO., 505 Chesnut St., Phila.

THE FURLOUGH SOUTH.

Rebel returns to the bosom of his family. Being clad in the stolen uniform of one of our gallant defenders, he is mistaken by his wife for a "Yank" and received accordingly.

FINE WATCH FREE!

And $15 Per Day Made Easy,

by selling the GREAT "original and only genuine" RICKARD'S PRIZE AND STATIONERY PACKAGES, each of which contains "some real valuable article" than any half-dozen other packages ever sold. Each Package contains Fine Writing Materials, Engravings, Fashion Plates, Fancy Articles, Yankee Notions, Games, Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Rich Presents of Fine Jewelry, etc. The whole worth several dollars if bought separate. Price 25 cents. Wholesale rates to Agents low. Profits large. Sales unusually. Every soldier and every family wants them. Agents wanted in every town and county. $15 per day guaranteed, and a splendid Gold or Silver Hunting-case Watch, genuine English movements, perfect Timekeeper, PRESENTED FREE TO EACH AGENT. Beware of imitations.

We are the sole manufacturers of the GREAT ORIGINAL RICKARDS PRIZE PACKAGES. Each of which we have copyrighted according to law. None others are genuine. For an exposé of the swindling operations at practised by other parties, see editorial in New York Tribune of Friday, Feb. 26. Send for our new Circulars for 1864, containing "extra premium inducements, free."

S. C. RICKARD & CO., 208 Nassau St., N. Y.
Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.
o

Salesmen Wanted.—Salary Paid. Address (with stamp) to Harris Bros., Boston, Mass. 436-470

We have furnished our Wesson's Rifles as follows:

State of Kentucky	1,366
State of Indiana	760
General Ripley	300
Colonel Collins	320
Capt. Buck's Co., Chillicothe, O.
Col. Grant's "	Kansas.
Capt. Child's "	Athens, Ill.
Capt. Why's "	Rolla, Mo.
Capt. McGee's "	Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Hunter's "	Benton, Mo.
Capt. Olds' "	Perryville, Ind.

LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 12, 1863.

DEAR SIR—The Rifles (33) were put to a severe test on the 7th, at the State Fair, AND WON A STAND OF COLORS, in a contest against THREE INFANTRY COMPANIES. They were to fire in squads of ten, each man having five shots, and to shoot at the command "Fire." We were OUTNUMBERED TWO HUNDRED shots by the infantry. Distance 300 yards. We hit the target 45 times, and the three companies together 42 hits by any infantry company was 13. Thus establishing the superiority of the RIFLE(DGE (Wesson) Gun.

M. S. GRANT,
Col. 1st Kansas Cav.
TO MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.
D. KITTREDGE & CO.,
Cincinnati, Ohio.
453-44

Agents Wanted (Male or Female). Address HALE & CO., Newburyport, Mass. 0000

Remington's

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
438-50 Ilion, N. Y.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PIERRE BIRON 33 Ann St., N. Y.

Millinery & Dressmaking Announcement.

MADAME BENEDICT invites the LADIES of New York for her OPENING DAY THURSDAY, the 24th of March, to inspect her NOVELTIES in MILLINERY and DRESSMAKING.

MILLINERS NOT ADMITTED.
$45-30 13 WAVERLEY PLACE.

For Veteran, Army Corps, Cavalry and Battle Pins,

Send to Headquarters,
S. R. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway.
(See Notice inside
o

To Consumptives.—A Minister of the Gospel, having cured his only son of Consumption, after having been given up to die by the most celebrated Physicians, desires to make known the mode of cure, which proves successful in almost every case, and will send the same, free, of charge, to all who will send their address to Dr. UNCAS BRANT, Box 3511, Post Office, N. Y.
o

INFANTRY PIN FOR THE SOLDIER

In coin Silver, for $1 50, including the Engraving of the Name, Co. and Regiment; also the National Bristle Pin, Cavalry and Artillery Pin, Monitor, Eagle and Signal Corps Pins.

LOUIS PHILIP & CO.,
442 50 No. 2 Murray St., N. Y.

COLLARS

LOCKWOOD'S CLOTH LINED

Paper Collars!

ALSO,

LADIES' COLLARS AND CUFFS,

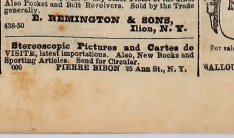
AT

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

CHAS. L. LOCKWOOD,

No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.



Baker's Rheumatic Balm,

BAKER'S FEVER COOLER,
BAKER'S COUGH MIXTURE,
BAKER'S CROUP ALLEVIATOR,

are four remedies which no family should be ever without. Price $1 per bottle each. Also,

BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES, which are invaluable. Price $2.

Principal Depot—No. 154 TENTH STREET, near Fourth avenue. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price.
439-51

BALLOU'S
Patented
French Yoke
SHIRTS.
Warranted to fit, and to be
UNSHAPED
for the same qualities and make than those of any other Shirt House in this city.
Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.

For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.
BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, New York.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Lever Cap, Double Case, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, sent free, by mail, in neat case, only $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper, $15

OR COMPASS WATCH.

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" engraved or engine-turned Hunting Case Watch—Magic Spring—Genuine English Jewelled or Model Movements—Independent action—Self-Balance—and has a NEW MINIATURE COMPASS set in the movements—a correct Guide for the soldier or traveller—a perfect Timekeeper—Warranted one year,* will stand acid, and is an

Exact Imitation of a $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

The Celebrated English Court Watch

For ladies. Sent free by mail, in richly embossed Turkey Morocco Case, for only $15.

ENGLISH STERLING SILVER LEVER WATCHES, SILVER HUNTING Case, full jewelled movements, $ 5.

GENUINE AMERICAN LEVERS, jewelled, and in massive Silver Hunting Cases, $30.

Real English Pocket Gold Watches. Fine article, from $45 to $100.

Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above styles of European Watches. Catalogues of true prices mailed free.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper," "It is a novelty here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Frank Leslie's New Year's Gift, Correct timepieces, and for beauty and finish is equal in appearance to $100 watches.

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,
o 38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

The Beard &c.

IN those cases of scanty, retarded growth, where the person is over 18, by its remarkably nourishing and stimulative power, the Balsam of the Tennessee Swamp Shrub has been found to excite the beard, Moustache, &c., to an exceedingly rapid and vigorous growth. The history of this Balsam, with a small sample, will be sent sealed, on receipt of return postage.

JOHN RAWLINS, 815 Broadway, N. Y.
o

Soldiers See to Your Own Health.

Do not trust to the Army supplies; Cholera, Fever and Bowel Complaint will follow your slightest indiscretion. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT should be in every soldier's knapsack. Fatigue and exposure troops use no other medicines. 30 cents, 70 cents, and $1 10 per box or pot.

250 Rare Receipts.

SEVENTY ELECTROTYPE ENGRAVINGS.

Tells What to Do, And How to Do It.

The best Family Receipt Book ever published. Sent free, by mail, for 30 cents.

HUTCHINSON & CO., Publishers,
o 142 Broadway, N.Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready-Made or to Measure, at $33, $30, $15 per doz.

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, a list of prices and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50 each—all cut your long. A single Shirt sent by mail on receipt of 75 cents and 45 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS

IN THREE SHAPES.

Having to appear in and out of doors, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they readily shrink in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable. Price 75 cents each; sent by post to any part of the Union on receipt of price.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

Ivory Jewelry!

Fine Ivory Brooches	$1 50
Ball Earrings	1 50
Ivory Initial Sleeve Buttons,	75
Pearl Initial Button	1 00

Sent free, on receipt of price, to any variety on hand, at WELLING'S, 507 Centre St., N. Y. o Sign of the Golden Elephant.

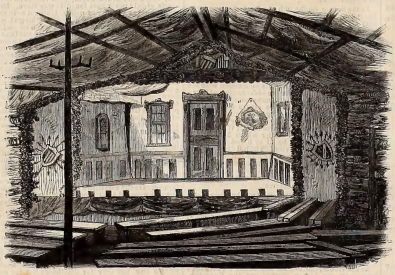
TOMES, SON & MELVAIN,
9 Malden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fine Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brushes, Mesershaum Pipes, etc., etc.

Military and Navy Equipments in every variety. A large assortment of



RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS.
34-70 Constantly on hand.

Shuits' Ongreat.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 30 cents. Address C. P. SHULTS Troy, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 443—Vol. XVIII.] NEW YORK, MARCH 26, 1864. [Price 6 Cents.

INTERIOR AND EXTERIOR OF THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC OR OPERA HOUSE OF THE 1ST ARMY CORPS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, E. FORBES.—SEE PAGE 7.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY IN NEW ORLEANS—THE GRAND CONCERT IN CANAL STREET.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BONWILL.

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS. Three men and one woman, each over eight feet high; two dwarfs, each less than two feet high—besides a host of other NOVELTIES. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album.

Consisting of 32 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costume, representing Turk and Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druse nationalities; and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every centre table; and the only one cheap and most acceptable present that can be made to a friend, price, by mail, post free, only $5. Send for circular.

C. OSCANYAN,
No. 17 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, MARCH 26, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 72 DUANE street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE P. BEMIS & CO., Proprietors of the London Newsroom, 190 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 50
Two copies " to one address	6 00
Four " "	12 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00
Paper, 11 weeks	1 00

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

75 cents a line on the outside or last page
40 " " on the 16th and 18th pages.

THE PUBLISHER of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER invites his present contributors and others to send in before May 1st stories and poems suited to the season, as well as ideas for comic sketches on subjects of the day.

Our New Volume.

THE present number commences the 18th Volume of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, the leading journal of its kind in the world, no other, here or in Europe, having ever approached us in the number of our Special Artists, or the widespread and active efforts made to give the contemporaneous history of the world in graphic and life-like illustrations. Endorsements of these from every source pour in upon us, in every form; but the public do not require or want indication from us on a point in which their ever increasing patronage shows their conviction.

Our illustrations are a complete history of the great Civil War, and of the events of the day at home and abroad.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER is moreover an admirable Family Paper, with brilliant and original works of fiction, poetry, foreign intelligence, domestic news, including the amusements of the day and other interesting reading matter. Our illustrated and other stories, by some of the most talented writers in the country, are especially fitted for family reading, being of a high and elevated character, and of acknowledged beauty, grace and power.

The Volume will conclude Mrs. Stephens's admirable novel, "The Gulf Between Them," to be followed by a work of extraordinary power and interest.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

The gallant young Col. Ulric Dahlgren, reports of whose bravery and daring reached us, we really killed while cutting his way through the enemy. The rebels, with that brutality in the treatment of the dead which makes the stories of ghouls credible, stripped his body, mangled it, and, to use their own expression, gave it the burial of a dog.

The miscarriage of the expedition is due entirely to the War Department, which neglected the furnish capable guides, or to concert with Gen. Butler, so that he might move simultaneously.

Our forces took possession of Suffolk on the 10th, after a short skirmish with the enemy.

WESTERN VIRGINIA.

Lieut.-Col. Root, of the 15th New York cavalry, on the 6th returned from an expedition to Hardy and Pendleton counties, where they destroyed effectually all the saltpetre works.

Major-Gen. Sigel has assumed command of the department of West Virginia, and has fixed his headquarters at Cumberland. Gen. Averill captured two spies who were endeavoring to pass southward through his lines. A skirmish is said to have taken place near Snickersville, Loudon county, in which several of the 21st New York cavalry were killed.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Davis is filling the State with troops to oversee the Convention and keep North Carolina in the Confederacy. Twenty-three North Carolina Union soldiers were hung in Kinston on the 6th inst. by the rebels, and the event created a serious riot, which it took a considerable armed force to put down. The indignation of the loyal people was violently manifested, and the Stars and Stripes were conspicuously displayed on the occasion. Poor North Carolina has thus the luxury of being ground down by Virginians and South Carolina cavaliers.

ALABAMA.

Farragut was continuing, Feb. 25, the bombardment of Fort Gaines, on Powell with the ships Calhoun, Jackson, Octarora and Sebago. He has not yet attacked Forts Gaines and Morgan. Even when he has subdued Fort Morgan he will have 30 miles to proceed before he can arrive at Mobile, nine of which are through a narrow channel, with its banks fortified the whole distance. Obstructions are again placed entirely across the channel three miles from the city, in such a way that vessels are compelled to pass under the guns of two ironclad forts and a battery from the shore.

FLORIDA.

Gen. Seymour was, on the 2d, in a fortified position eight miles from Jacksonville, awaiting a rebel attack. The rebels refused to exchange the wounded soldiers. Gen. Finegan is encouraged between Lake Miccosukee and Baldwin. The rebel army is meanwhile gathering and driving off cattle.

MISSISSIPPI.

Our authentic reports from Grant's department show that Sherman's expedition penetrated 35 miles beyond Meridian, destroying all the railroads in the vicinity, 32 locomotives and a large number of cars. There was no more fighting after leaving Meridian. Gen. Wirt Adams's rebel cavalry was scattered. Gen. Sherman's loss in killed, wounded and missing is 500. A large number of plantations were destroyed.

TENNESSEE.

The rebels are pressing our lines near Chattanooga, and our advance has been withdrawn from Tunnel hill to Ringgold. It is reported that the rebel furnaces at Ringgold were recently destroyed by our troops. Our advance in East Tennessee is at Morristown, while on the 5th Longstreet was still reported as holding Bull's gap, with his headquarters at Greenville. Gen. Burnside has returned to Knoxville. The Federal forces were at Morristown, 42 miles from Knoxville. The rebels were at Greenville, about 74 miles from Knoxville. The rebel cavalry were at Bull's gap, 56 miles from Knoxville. There is a tremendous rise in the Tennessee river. The pontoon bridge was carried away at Chattanooga.

Sixty rebels were captured at Chikawee mountain by the 4th Indiana cavalry, and the enemy were repulsed in an attempt to dash into our lines at Mossy creek on the 6th.

On the 5th a large force of rebel cavalry attacked a detachment of the 3d Tennessee at Panther springs, but met with a loss of 30 killed and wounded, our loss, two killed, 40 wounded and 22 missing.

Our position at Chattanooga is considerably in advance of the one held during the winter. Gen. Palmer's line, embracing the Chickamauga battlefield, Ringgold, Taylor and White Oak ridges to Cleveland gap, is already fortified. The rebels are said to be 29,000 strong at Dalton and Tunnel hill.

NAVAL.

On Saturday, March 5, a rebel party under Lieuts. Maxwell and Fitzhugh of the Confederate navy captured the tug Iolas, in the employ of Government as a dispatch-boat, and the sidewheel steamer Titan, loaded with Commissary stores, both lying in Cherrystone inlet, Chesapeake bay. The rebels destroyed the telegraph station and the submarine cable.

The English Government has ordered the release of the pirate Tuscaloosa at the Cape of Good Hope; and the English Judges in the Provinces release the pirates of the Chesapeake. The grounds of the latter decision are curious. 1. The Government or the United States has not demanded the pirates; 2. She would have no right to them if she did; 3. They have not been indicted for piracy.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 7th March, after several discussions on unimportant subjects, Senator Foote, of Vermont, presented a petition from Eli Thayer, praying that the confiscated lands of the rebels be given to the freedmen; referred to the Committee on Slavery and Freedmen. The Minnesota railroad was then discussed.

In the House, the resolution ordering 1,500 copies of Lanman's Directory of Congress at $2 a copy was rescinded, and the price altered to $1.

In the Senate, on the 8th, the proceedings were entirely routine, having reference to subjects already discussed.

In the House, resolutions of the Iowa Legislature were presented for the appointment of disabled rebel soldiers to fill situations under Government as they occur—referred. The Deficiency bill was taken up, and nearly all the Senate's amendments were concurred in. Mr. Stevens, of Pa., moved to authorize the sale by the Secretary of the Treasury of the surplus Government gold, after considerable discussion, passed in a much amended and considerably emasculated form. The bill authorizes, nevertheless, the Secretary of the Treasury to anticipate the payment of interest on the debt from time to time, whenever he may deem it expedient. It passed by a vote of 90 to 35. A portion of the morning was taken up in a somewhat spirited debate on the Vallandigham resolution, referred by the Military Committee, for the retirement of unemployed army officers, which was finally laid over for further consideration on the 11th. The bills to establish a uniform system of rank for officers, to restore the rank and pay of the Provost-Marshal-General to those of a Brigadier-General; and providing for the payment, when absent on leave or as prisoners, shall not suffer diminution of pay, were passed.

In the Senate, on the 9th, the resolution calling on the Secretary of War for the minutes and report of the Military Commission, of which Gen. McDowell was president, was defeated by 25 to 11.

In the House the morning hour was a sort of entry for Western Virginia, and various suggestions and bills appropriate to the locality, referred to the War Office, some of them very severe on the Secretary of the Navy Department.

In the Senate, on the 10th, the resolution empowering the Secretary of the Treasury to sell coin was very angrily discussed, and postponed. The bill to make the pay of officers in the army the same as white soldiers was then taken up, the question being on the adoption of the amendment of Mr. Davis, of Kentucky, for the appointment of commissioners to ascertain the value of property belonging to slaveowners taken for military service. Mr. Pomeroy, of Kansas had the floor, but gave way to Mr. Davis, in a speech, to define his position in regard to the President's emancipation proclamation. He declared his circular recently issued for the advancement of Secretary Chase, to be a manifestation of the Republican party. He set forth, in eleven separate and distinct articles, the grounds of his opposition, which he concluded by urging on his party the necessity of an election, as was signified to it by Mr. Williamson, of Minnesota, and others. After which Mr. Davis's amendment was rejected by 29 to 11, and the bill was then passed by the same vote. The bill granting land to aid in the construction of a railroad from St. Paul to Lake Superior was passed, after some debate, and the Senate adjourned.

In the House, the whole time was taken up in speeches of little public interest.

In the Senate, on the 11th, took up the House joint resolution in reference to the surplus gold in the Treasury, with the amendment of Senator Sherman, authorizing the Secretary to dispose of the same to the highest bidder, after giving sixty days notice. Other amendments were offered and rejected, and a long debate took place, finally the resolution, substantially in this form, was adopted by 29 yeas to 8 nays. The Indian appropriation bill was passed; adjourned to Monday.

In the House, the bill for the better regulation of the pilot law in the country and the Executive, Legislative and Judiciary Appropriation bill were passed. The Senate amendments of the Pension and Homestead acts were reported, but acted upon. The Senate's amendment to the Deficiency bill, repealing the foreign coasting trade on the lakes, was reported from the Commerce Committee and passed.

BOOK NOTICES.

LA GAVIOTA. By FERNAN CABALLERO.

J. Bradford Kip has published a spirited translation of a novel by the most popular romance writer of Spain, a lady whose nom de plume is Fernan Caballero. "La Gaviota" is a story of real power and interest, and has found its host of readers and admirers in this country, as well as in the mother land, for a long since apaced. It cannot fail to win its way among us, and will be a welcome addition to with her other works.

The translation is fair, not always idiomatic or graceful, but will compare favorably with most foreign works rendered into English of late.

TOWN TOPICS.

THE spring is opening, and the pavements of the city as positively show the genial effects of the sunbeams as the fields do, or the birds and highways of the country. With its first glad approach they blossom and bloom in beauty, and the hand of the searcher finds them with the first make nature tremble with sheer envy. The shops put forth their gayest tints, the windows of unfailing flowers, and the butterflies of fashion wing their way idly from point to point, sipping here or flitting there, until the time shall come when they will fly away to Saratoga and Newport, or ruralise in some yet unexplored country nook.

Broadway is beginning to assume a summery look, and the time-honored dirt is fast disappearing. The Broadway railroad is in course of occupation, or the larger part of it, in escorting fair ones from curb to curb through the dust and slush, and is occasionally obliged to fill its time with passing on fulsom honors not assisting them to rise—and viewing the pageant that passes beneath with their critical eyes.

And this reminds us that the daily press has during the last few weeks devoted much attention to the subject of street obstructions, and how to remove them. Now, where can you have a better spot upon which to exercise your wit than on the same sunny Broadway? From the Battery to Fourteenth street it is nothing but obstructions, and those of a nature that could not be removed by the Broadway squad. No person should be allowed to set a box or package upon the walks. No persons should be allowed—even though they be the prettiest and best dressed of the fair promenaders—to gather and talk before the show windows, without being imperatively ordered to move on. A knot of gossipers will throw the whole street into confusion as much as will a countryman forcing his way up on the inner side of the pave or down on the outer. We have seen a porter or a boy from a store come deliberately out upon Broadway at the crowded hours of the day and shake a doormat, or empty an ashbox thereby covering a hundred people with dust or ashes, and go unpunished, a thing that would hardly be believed in a European city.

The absorbing topic of the week, and perhaps will be for many years to come, is the Sanitary Fair. An army of builders and carpenters make Fourteenth street vocal with clang of hammers, and the vast buildings that are to contain the contributions of nation are fast approaching completion. They open upon the 25th inst., and until that time there is only the monotony of receiving and receipting for the stream of goods that is flowing in from every part of the world. While upon this subject let us enter a protest against the petty jealousies that one or two actuate those who have been engaged in the same good work in other cities towards those who are engaged at it in New York. The sending of that broom from Cincinnati to the Brooklyn Sanitary Fair was a bad specimen, and was not made any better by the latter from the New York Commercial. The remarks of Henry Ward Beecher, on the last Sabbath, from his pulpit, were more equally fair and candid. Coming to New York that unless her enterprise turned out a brilliant success, the city of Brooklyn would be mighty hog her head in shame. Brooklyn should be proud of her efforts, all that she has done, and in the contest that she has contributed a great sum to a great cause, without any wish to say a word of unfriendly jealousy. This false rivalry can do no good, but only lead to efforts that will overreach the cause for which they are working. The Brooklyn Fair closed finally on Friday night, and what was termed a grand ball, an entire failure so far as numbers or profit were concerned, and a mingled, jumbled affair, not very creditable than agreeable. A few called dresses made their appearance, somewhat hastily borrowed with training, but the majority of the ladies were in full dress, and slightly overdressed. It is to be hoped that New York will not, for the sake of adding a few dollars to the fund, give way to absurdities that can do nothing but bring disrepute on the cause.

There is a singularly void of excitements. "There's nothing stirring but stagnation." The Opera has finished its season, with "Faust" still drawing overflowing houses—which reminds us to say a word or two upon the subject of the management Bachi. Those connected with the stage are perpetually descanting upon the impossibility of their private affairs, and yet, as in the case of this lady, they are as perpetually throwing away money upon the most foolish ideas. We hold that any affair like that of Mad. Bachi, which has, within this and the few weeks, been realized in our courts should never have found its way there. Even when argued in her favor, the verdict which was paid her to have acceded to all the demands of the girl, who claims she was seduced; she should have argued they were, than to have allowed her name and fame to be dragged through the public prints. Managers of opera should never allow their private affairs to be ventilated in courts of justice or by the press except because of the kind invariably ending in a loss of reputation and popularity to the lady, who can ill afford that they are glaringly right. The theatres are going over the same old ground. Wallack's is now varying it with a round of benefits, which, in the olden time, would have spread a blaze of light over each, but which in this case probably does not. It is to be hoped that, if the promise be true, that the veteran gets a few days of rest to look about him, he will look at the outside of the theatre and see how some other houses are flourishing of the building, that it may not retain the reputation it now has of being the most unsightly-looking upon the line of Broadway.

With the gay appearance of the street cars upon all our thoroughfares, and the consequent fading out of the omnibus, all efforts relates to form a new interest. We heard a few days since of a lady who entered an omnibus where there already were persons and room for one. On the side where the seat should have been five ladies grasped the straps, and, as each moved the new-comer, after paying her fare, to stand while the remainder sat down, she waited in patience, and then quietly seated herself upon the laps of the two who opened their knees for her reception. Despite their arrangements for the trip, the lady was requested to get out, and the driver refused to move. She got down, and the lady took her seat, remarking as she did so that she regretted that she was forced to give five women a lesson in the etiquette of the omnibus. We should like to engage that lady as a public teacher in this line, not only for omnibuses but for cars. Just now there is considerable discussion whether a gentleman is bounden in chivalry to give up his seat to a lady, and to stand during the period of his ride. This has only been generated by the past conduct of women, who sometimes would not enter a city car or omnibus to unsex themselves and study to see how rude and unmannerly a man can be. A lady may crowd in, no matter under what inconvenience, take as a matter of course the proffered seat, cover up her neighbors on either side with her spread of skirts, sometimes absolutely sit on the knee of the man opposite, and taking up the room of two. It is impossible for a man to move without treading on her dress, and then let him look out for the withering glance; let him breathe but he moves too near her for the same rule for an in-comer. Her manner of drawing up her offended robes will be a study for him through all time. Should the lady bring a child, he must reconcile himself to the little creature's dirty face, the remains of his cousin tails or pantaloons, or possibly ornamenting him with little dabs of chocolate candy should it be a precocity for that article. Should the lady be given to snacks, let him reconcile himself to them. "Love me, love my basket," and not venture to set it upon the floor, should he want the seat it occupies. Remember all these things, and—ride with the driver.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—Of Mrs. Z. R. Plumb's Gymnasium, 60 gentlemen and ladies, masters and misses, have kindly consented to give a select entertainment for the benefit of the U. S. Sanitary Commission, at the Cooper Institute, on Saturday evening, April 16th inst. All admirers of good gymnastic's should attend this entertainment. Those desirous of purchasing tickets can have them at the Gymnasium, 59 West 14th street. Tickets of admission, Reserved seats, $1. Doors open at half-past seven, to commence at eight.

A new epidemic is thus described in the Pensylvania Inquirer: "Since the inhibition of the presence of this disease is noted by a sudden trembling of the hands and arms, which is followed by short symptoms of fever, pains in the arms and the lower part of the back, with severe pains in the back of the head. The victim generally goes to bed, and the physician have not yet established any data to determine the diagnosis of the disease, as it is neither typhoid or typho-malarial fever, but seems to partake of a very definite conclusion as to its nature. Its action throughout resembles the effect of some powerful narcotic poison on the system."

The Sanitary Fair will open in Pittsburg, Pa., May 30.

The Albany Bazaar for the Sanitary Commission—$10,000.

The Calico Ball, in aid of the families of soldiers of Brooklyn and King's county, was given at the Academy of Music on the 16th inst. It was in all respects a deserved success. About 2,000 persons were present. The object of a Calico Ball, the ladies generally appear more expensively dressed than at Opera and Sanger's Grand Soirees, the music. The receipts amount to over $3,000.

Gov. Buckingham, of Connecticut, has appointed the 28th of March as a day of humiliation and fasting.

George Thompson, the well-known English Abolitionist, who has made a fashionable tour to the 11th of March, in Mr. Beecher's Church. The subject was the Popular Sympathy in England with the Efforts in the United States for the Suppression of the Rebellion and the Liberty of the Slave." Mr. Thompson that the act of Congress favoring freedom had done more than anything else to convert Englishmen into advocates of the cause of the North. The working and operative classes had always been with us, which he trusted we should remember when, no longer threatened with a great evil continually sapping our institutions, we should be rejoicing as a great nation, and give them the benefit of our example, that they might soon enjoy similar free institutions.

— Gold has ranged from 102 to 103.

— The propeller Taylor, from New York, arrived at Albany on the 11th of March, being the first boat through.

— By a curious fatality Gerritt Smith drew the President's autograph copy of the Proclamation of Freedom at the Albany Bazaar.

— The annual report of the statistics of crime in the State of New York, presented to the Legislature by the Secretary of State, exhibits an increase of minor offenses and a decrease of more serious crimes. The total number of convictions at special sessions for the year 1863, and in the city proper, the decrease of convictions for drunkenness in New York city was 8,000 during the past year.

— A Boston paper facetiously said: "I have 46 children, and I have reason to hope that Heaven will remember him a good many more. Before 50 years my descendants will exceed in number the population of the State of New York, which consists of 3,000,000 souls."

— Owing to the rise in real estate almost every property holder is anxious to sell. It is, consequently very difficult to hire a house, unless altogether with the contingency of a sale.

— The receipts of Greenwood Cemetery for the year 1863 were $174,691 60, and the expenditure, $170,017 46—of which $45,000 were invested in the U.S. stocks. The number of lots sold during the year were 831, and the total, including the number sold previously, 17,000.

— The Sophomore Class of the Free Academy will hold an exhibition on the 30th March, at the Cooper Union; the proceeds of which will be for the aid of the Southern Colonization. The students to the said class have used their utmost exertions to accomplish the design of securing the interest of the public to this worthy cause, and they look forward to the public's hearty support. There will be some very interesting selections from the most noted authors, and will, no doubt, afford a pleasing entertainment for the audience. The following are the speakers selected by the class for the evening: Charles M. Hibbard, William C. Hess, John G. Jones, Charles H. Brodhead, Edward C. Page, Lewis H. Spence, Rod Gordon, Jr., Horry S. Cary, James W. Wilson, Henry Knowlton, Gustavus Werner, James J. Condon, Ernest Surich.

— On the 25th inst. Sherman's expedition penetrated 35 miles beyond Meridian and destroyed all the railroads in that vicinity, together with 20 locomotives and a large number of cars. There was no more fighting than was anticipated. Forrest, with his cavalry, retreated through Allowed him to traffic. He now occupies the railroad to the Tombigbee River.

— The Choctaws have called a convention to arrange for rehabilitation in the United States Government. Chief Pushmataha, of Jackson, is actively distributing the Amnesty Proclamation and trying to bring the people back to loyalty. The Seminoles and Chickasews still hold out, under the influence of the rebel Gen. Cooper, who was for a long time Indian Agent among them.

— The brutality of the rebels is almost superhuman. Recked prisoners, arrived from Richmond, state that the rebels placed 20 or 30 barrels of powder in the alley and other parts of Libby prison. Kilpatrick's raid, intending to blow up our forces as they succeeded in capturing the city.

— The Raleigh (N. C.) Standard, formerly supported by Governor Jed Davis, has been purchased by Mr. Holden, the editor, announces himself as a candidate for Governor.

— What slavery leads to is thus described in one of the slave papers, the Richmond Whig, of the 7th March: "A young German, named Charles F. Reese, called officer Kell out of the court-room, during the session of the Mayor's court, and proceeded to a negro girl, about 10 or 11 years of age, wanted her taken into custody for having had a stockook. On examination, the officer discovered that Reese had literally cut the hook out of the child's head, causing the blood was trickling down from her person and collecting in pools at her feet. Reese said she had stolen his pocket-book, and that he resolved to whip her until she had confessed what she had done with it. On being taken before the Mayor, Reese was committed, and the wounded, miserable girl was taken to a hospital."

— A correspondent, under date of Nashville, March 9, observes that since Gen. Sherman has penetrated the heart of the Confederate States, his enemy have reported that the country through which he has passed is barren, with all life's necessaries for man and beast. In addition to this, he states that it has been ascertained that the aggregate of the rebel army amounts to 344 000 men, composed of 224,000 veterans and 120,000 conscripts, lately added.

Military.—Gen. Wool has written a letter to the Secretary of the Albany Bazaar, in which he gives his views for the defeat and suppression of the rebellion during the ensuing campaign. He would have 200,000 under Grant, and as many more under Meade, moving upon the enemy at once and with their whole power. Thus placed between the upper and nether grindstones, the rebellion would be effectually crushed.

— Gen. Grant paid a visit to the Army of the Potomac on the 11th. A speedy movement forward is expected. All indies have been banished from the lines.

— Major-Gen. Sigel arrived at Wheeling on March 16th, having assumed command of the department of Western Virginia, headquarters at Cumberland, Md.

— The hanging of 23 Union prisoners is reported to have taken place at Kinston, N. C., on the 8th inst. The hanging of others is promised, at Salisbury, N. C., is rumored in consequence. Preparations are being made to resist the attack of the rebels on the coast, which is believed to be impending.

Personal.—Lowell, the popular comedian, is at the point of death.

— Parson Brownlow has cleared $60,000 by his "rushed system and limited hopes." So much for modern manhyrom.

— Princess Helena, third daughter of Victoria, is to marry the brother of the Emperor of Austria. More exchanging of brothers.

— M. Auber, the composer, was seized with a giddiness, and fell down, striking his forehead against a marble chimneypiece. Happily he sustained no serious injury, and so far recovered from the fit that he was able, a few days after, to do the honors of a dinner party invited to celebrate his 81st birthday.

— The Albion says that Signor Brignoli's voice has taken a sign of decadence.

— Secretary Chase has declined being a candidate for the Presidency.

— John M. Murphy, a former resident of Dalles, Oregon, recently sloped from Boise river with a Miss Cunningham, who is said by a California paper to be a daughter of Mrs. Cunningham of Bucktail murder notoriety. At last accounts the fugitives had arrived at Salt Lake city, on their way to Colorado Territory.

— Col. Dahlgren's body servant arrived in Washington on the 16th. He confirms previous statements concerning Dahlgren's death and the barbarous treatment of his rebel murderers.

— Col. Basil Duke, the notorious guerilla, graduated from Yale College, in the class of 1861.

— The London papers say that the present income of Mrs. Bateman, the actress, is not less than $60,000 a year.

Obituary.—Robert Grigson perished in a snowdrift, near his own house, on New Year's day, about 10 miles from Oshkosh, Wis. He was about 30 years old, and was known as the warrior who captured Black Hawk.

— Mrs. Sarah B. Potter, wife of the Right Rev. Alonzo Potter, D.D., LL.D., died on the 5th of March.

— Mr. Ch. W. March, a literary gentleman, well known in this city, died recently, at Alexandria Bay, N. Y. His death seemed the more untimely, as Mr. March had newly entered upon a large fortune.

— We regret to record the death, at the age of 70 of the Rev. Edward Hitchcock, D.D., LL.D., ex-President of Amherst College, and for many years a pastor, as a teacher and as a man of science.

— Mr. Hoagland, vendor of crayons, who made a fortune by dressing up in an eccentric way, and boasting that his carriage cost his enemies a dead. Most visitors to Paris will recollect the man, a genius in his way, whom the Parisians called "Jo."

— Mrs. Sarah Watere died at Hoosick Falls, R. I. on the 9th March, at the age of 101. The husband of the deceased, Mr. Jacob Watere, was a soldier of the Revolution, and his widow received a pension up to the time of her death.

— A veteran musician, formerly one of the most attractive performers in Vienna, and at the instructor of one of the first artists of the past and present day, Herr Joseph Czerny, died on the 15th inst. Victor Douglas was the composer of "Cagliostro," "Sonnambula," "Ernani," "Lucrezia," and one or two of their day. In 1816 he was Professor at the Conservatoire of Paris. He was a pupil of Haydn, and he wrote a treatise on harmony, which has been highly praised.

— The wife of the gallant Brig.-Gen. Daniel Tyler and the wife of Gen. Sherman were both taken ill in March, after a short illness. Gen. Tyler was in Boston at the time of his wife's illness. Tyler was a highwhose estimable qualities endeared him to all who knew him, and whose reputation as a soldier, as well as those of personal friends, will be well remembered in his painful and sudden bereavement.

— Accidents and Casualties.—On the evening of the 5th March Mrs. Mary Cannell attempted to light the fire in a sitting-room adjoining the bed-room she occupied. The paper under the wood had been lighted, and the flames communicated with a can of oil, thus causing it to explode. This set her clothes on fire, and she rushed into the bed-room, where she was so burned as to cause her death a few hours afterwards. Blood was lying on the floor.

— The total loss at the late fire in Meridian, Conn., was $70,000.

— A small boat, carrying passengers from Port Morris to Riker's island, was swamped on the 11th March, and seven persons drowned. Two others were rescued.

— A man named Craig was robbed of $925 by a man named Young, in West Greenville, Pa., on the 3d inst. Young was arrested and committed to jail pursuit to Philadelphia and New York, where he discovered that Young had purchased tickets for gold and had taken ship for Liverpool, whither he was followed by Craig, who arrested him in advance of the steamship in which Young had sailed. Young had $1,000 in gold. Upon the arrest of Craig, he went to sleep and missed his man, but traced him to Liverpool, where he found Craig, who had been jailed on capturing the robber, and recovered his cash and $1,000 in gold. Young's counsel claimed that the prisoner was on his way to jail, a lot of powder exploded, and Young escaped. Subsequently returned from his wedding tour, having been married only about a month since.

— As Gov. Smith was passing up North Main street, Providence, on the 14th inst., a drunken fellow, who had escaped from an officer, came dashing down the street, driving a spirited horse furiously. The Governor caught the culprit as he was rushing past, and, holding on to the reins, the horse was started again, this time with his Excellency at his beels. The fellow was taken to the lock-up, where he was sent, and, just as the fellow was making a fence, the Governor handed him a gold eagle, which he left the officer, and then proceeded to the State House, to sanction the acts of the Legislature of the day before.

— There was a fatal collision on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad, between Tullahoma and Decherd, on March. Two freight trains, with one passenger car between, coming north, met on a curve of the last train, with the greatest carelessness, ran his train into the passenger car, which was smashed. The conductor struck was broken up and set on fire from its lamps and stoves. Seven persons were killed outright, and other persons were injured. The engineer would have been killed but for jumping in time.

— John Bell, who was shot in a dance-house on the 26th Feb., by an unknown person, died on the 11th March.

— The brutality of corner grocery clerks is proverbial. On the 10th inst. Mr. Christian Hansen, of Benson, entered a store on the corner of Laurens and Franklin streets, and, after making a purchase, asked the latter seized a meat axe and inflicted such severe wounds upon her head that her life is despaired of. The ruffian was immediately arrested.

— Foreign.—The husband of a lady belonging to the Countess Rilovia, on the banks of the Como, lately fell into the lake; most fortunately no persons were present but the lady and her child. She returned with a magnificent dinner were given to the fishes.

— The Emperor Napoleon has given 100,000 francs to build a tunnel. The cost will be about half a million dollars.

— At a recent ball in Rome the Princess Massimo lost a diamond bracelet worth $30,000. A well-known and wealthy aristocratic is suspected as the thief. The Princess refused to dance with him since he made a present of some jewels to his mistress a few days after the ball. The affair has flashed up.

— A letter from Rome, of a late date, states there are but few Americans in that city at present, owing to the high rate of exchange.

— A paper has just appeared in Paris called Le Grand, gold enough, the subscription is $40 per year.

— At a public ball given by the wife of the President of the Swiss there were 2,000 ladies present, not one of whom wore crinoline.

— The Russian fleet at Odessa, has just awakened from a sound sleep of 10 days and nights, the longest on record, and is now all right. Yes, and has breathing was distinctly audible all the time.

— Science and Literature.—Prof. B. Carpenter, the artist, is now in Washington, painting a historical picture representing the reading of President Lincoln reading his Proclamation of Emancipation to his Cabinet.

Chit-Chat.—Humboldt says: "We saw, on the slope of the Cerra-Dinda, shirt trees 50 feet high. The bodies cut of cylindrical pieces two feet in diameter, from which they peel the red and brown bark, without breaking any longitudinal incision. This bark shrinks from a sort of garment which resembles a sack of very coarse texture, and without a seam. The upper opening serves for the head, and the two lateral ones are cut to admit the arms. The natives wear these shirts of skins in the rainy season."

— On the 1st of March the price for board at our hotels were increased to $5 50 per day. As omnibuses cost but six cents per ride, it will amount to fifty 11 50 more, the question seems to be now, What is to become of the bachelors?" who have not $3 a day?

— There was a Leap-Year Ball at Hartford, on the night of the coming round of "Sir privilege." Ladies invited the guests, made what offers they pleased, selected the partners, and took numerous other "steps" according to fashion. It is said that some even went so far as to "pay the fiddler."

— The Richmond Examiner contains an advertisement of the Danville Female College, announcing that the institution will open its doors on the 1st April, for the reception of flour.

— A paragraph has been going the rounds of the English and American papers, concerning the marriage of Miss Maxwell, daughter of the late Mr. John Maxwell, publisher. This is contradicted by Mr. R. B. Maxwell, a near relative of Mrs. Maxwell —who is still living.

— Letters from Venice state that the cold there has been unprecedented this winter. The whole of the Lagunes are frozen over, and can be crossed in safety by passengers from the Campanile to Mestre, and from Murano to Fondamente Nuovo.

— The Academy of Music, Philadelphia, has made a public meeting, at which it was resolved that for the future the price of his box should be reduced by two sauas; a Fanese, four; a Bolsmanesian, five and a half dollars; and a Venetian, six. The European prices were not disturbed, for being able to shave themselves, and wash their own linen, might enable them to self-protection. There were 3,500 barbers present, and the meeting broke up in consequence of the present dearness of the necessaries of life.

GEN. CUSTER.

BRIG.-GEN. GEORGE A. CUSTER is a native of Ohio, and graduated in the lowest graduates of the class of 1861. He is, therefore, a very young man. He entered the United States army as a Brevet Second Lieutenant of the 2d U. S. cavalry and Second Lieutenant of the 5th U. S. cavalry on the 24th June, 1861. He served on the staff of General of the Potomac, and distinguished himself in the affair at Williamsburg, on May 5, 1862. For distinguished service in the battle of Gettysburg he for a Brevet of First Lieutenant. During the campaigns in the Shenandoah Valley he again distinguished himself, and was nominated for a Brevet of Captain, to date from May 20, 1862.

On July 26, 1863, he was appointed First Lieutenant of Company M. of the 5th U. S. cavalry, and was immediately appointed an aide-de-camp on McClellan's staff, with the rank of Captain, to date from June 5, 1863. In this capacity he gained great honor.

He was promoted to the rank of commander of a brigade of cavalry in the army of Washington, under Gen. Stahel, and on June 29, 1863, was appointed to the command of the Michigan Cavalry Brigade. He commanded the second brigade of Kilpatrick's division of the cavalry corps at Gettysburg, the battle at that place, and the pursuit of the rebels from that battle-field.

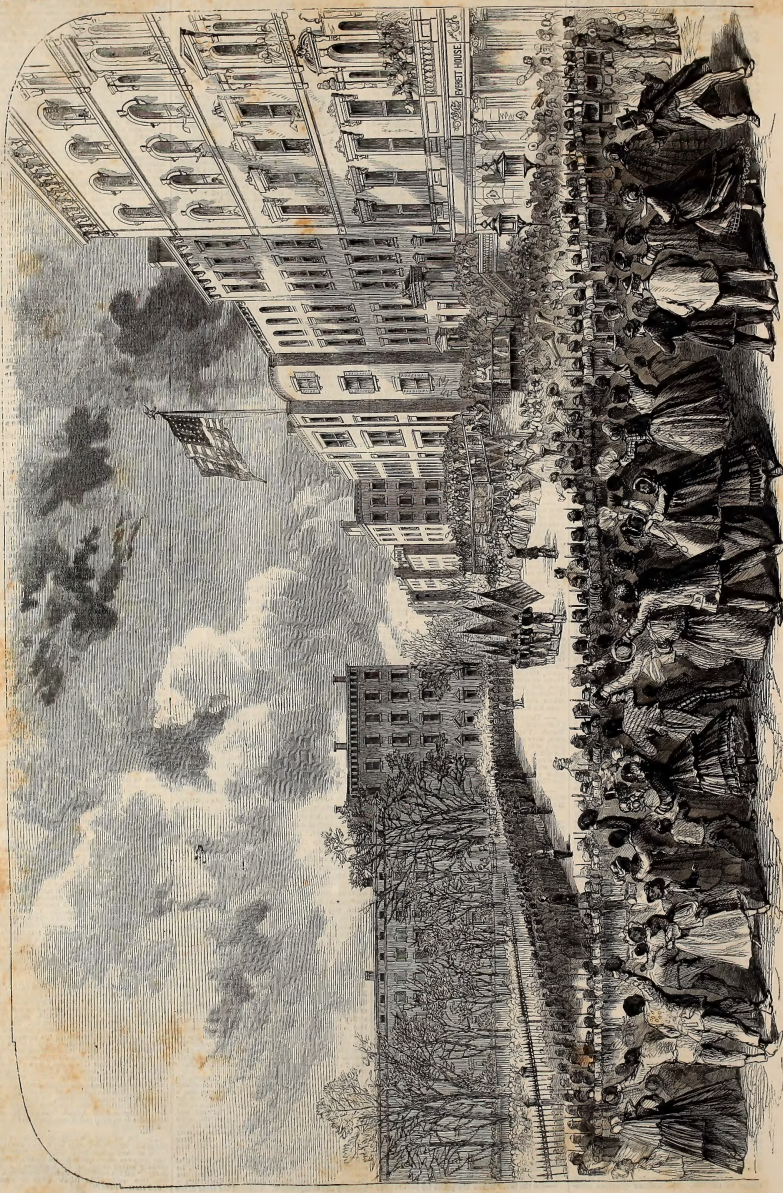
He took an active part in the cavalry fights upon the Rappahannock, in June, 1863, and was at one time wounded in the leg, but not seriously.

On November, 1863, Gen. Custer had in charge of the post of Stevensburg, Va., one of the advance cavalry posts of the army of the Potomac.

When the present expedition was organized Gen. Custer was appointed to the command of a brigade, formerly under the charge of the late gallant Gen. Elon J. Farnsworth.

At the recent battle of Stanardsville he well maintained the reputation of a brave and skillful officer under their late noble leader.

Gen. Custer has recently returned from his wedding tour, having been married only about a month since.



JOHN N. PATTISON.

True unequivocal success which the young American pianist, Mr. J. N. Pattison, he displayed in the Academy of Music yesterday justly entitles him to a place among the celebrities whose portraits from time to time find a place in our columns. We are glad to record a decided success in favor, and has won his place among the first by the choice of a difficult programme, and by that determined perseverance by which eminence, in art, if not always achieved.

Mr. Pattison was born at Niagara Falls on the 22d of October, 1839, and is, consequently, now a little more than 24 years of age. His early youth was passed almost within sight of that wonderful work of nature, whose grandeur, with poetic minds, increases the wonder with which they contemplate it, and it is evident that its influence may have been felt, unconsciously, by the boy, and have done much towards expanding and strengthening the musical nature of the child. He received his early education at a school in Lockport, and during his boyhood his love for music was first developed. His studies were pursued in the room next to the music-room, and though not pursued with any remarkable degree of diligence, sprang up in his mind to become master of the art. The first instruction he received in music was given by the women of Turkey, he brings the women themselves before you, as they sit in the bazaars and in the streets, and forms picturesque tableaux of Eastern life and manners. This is entirely new, and serious censure is marred by the graceful movements of musician, and the many pleasing incidents and startling contrasts—hence his popularity. Ladies are invariably interested in the beautiful and graceful by their sisters in the Orient: the youthful mind is more attracted to the study of music by the following of illustrations than it would be by a six months' course of congregating with the dry rules of harmony. Then enjoy an opportunity which would otherwise, from the force of circumstances, be lost to quite that interesting class, and we have all read so much and seen so little.

BARNUM'S MUSEUM.—The new fairy drama, which has been produced with more scrupulous attention and a manager has made a legitimate success. Not only is it a fairy drama in the sense of the term, but it is a fairy in spirit and effect. Mrs. Prior is especially entitled to commendation. Her performance is, we believe, her acting admirable, and she is worthy to be one of the most talented attractions of the museum. Miss Alvord is also an actress of great merit, and is a great favorite with the audience. The drama will, undoubtedly, have a long run. It is full of the most delightful sentiments of humanity, each one being well formed and of the right kind. The other attractions, such as the wonderful Sah, Albino family, etc., are too numerous to be even mentioned, and must be seen to be appreciated.

In one of our Sunday schools, recently, the pastor asked the pupils what they would rather have, if they could have whatever they wished. The answers were various, and mostly of the extremely selfish order, as for instance: "A bag of gold," "all the bank bills to be counted in a day," etc. One ruddy little fellow spoke up promptly, "I'd Jeff Davis's head!"

PRESENTATION OF COLORS TO THE 20TH U. S. COLORED INFANTRY, COL. BASTRAM, AT THE UNION LEAGUE CLUB HOUSE, N. Y., MARCH 5.—[SEE P. 7.

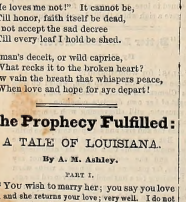
THE MARGUERITE.

ERE the swallow's homeward wing
To its native bower hath flown,
Or the genial airs of spring
Prompt the cuckoo's monotone;

When an unseen presence fills
Every pulse with fresher life,
And the warm, moist air distils
Dews with honied fragrance rife;

Hidden from the garish sun,
In some nook of tender green,
Waiting to be sought, ere won,
Peeps the violet from her screen;

Coy as maiden modesty,
Bowed the common gaze beneath;
Blue as fair Floranthe's eye;
Fragrant as her odorous breath;



Redolent of pleasures past—
Hopes that no fruition knew;
Bliss, too bitter-sweet to last;
Faith, no vows can now renew;

Remembrancer of love and spring,
Of days that long have taken flight;
Thy simple perfume seems to bring
Sweet dreams of vanished years to light!

And she hath gathered violets blue—
To mingle flowers might break the spell;
And fain would try the test anew
That may her saddest doubt dispel!

Such ordeals now are idle all;
If needed, love is love no more;
And tests that wishes vain recall
But tell us what we knew before!

"He loves me not!" "He loves me still!"
Oh that such faith were yet my lot!
Or that this leaf might work my will,
That says, alas! "He loves me not!"

"He loves me not!" It cannot be,
Till honor, faith itself be dead,
I'll not accept the sad decree
Till every leaf I hold be shed.

Of man's deceit, or wild caprice,
What recks it to the broken heart?
How vain the breath that whispers peace,
When love and hope for aye depart!

JOHN N. PATTISON, THE YOUNG AMERICAN PIANIST.—FROM A PHOT. BY BRADY.—SEE PAGE 3.

The Prophecy Fulfilled:

A TALE OF LOUISIANA.

By A. M. Ashley.

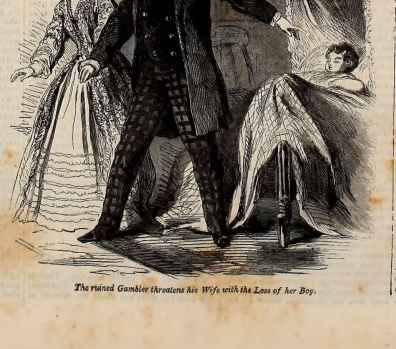
PART I.

"You wish to marry her; you say you love her, and she returns your love; very well. I do not approve of it. She can do as she likes; but remember what I tell you, Albert Bruno. If you are kind to her she will make you a good wife; but if you are not, she will prove a sword to pierce you with."

So said Mrs. James, in answer to the young man who had pled with her for her daughter's hand in marriage. Aphia, the young girl who had betrothed herself without her mother's consent, was one of three daughters of this the most wealthy and aristocratic family in the neighborhood. Her two sisters were married to rich planters, who made them good husbands, and were already at the head of luxurious homes, where the élite of the country were daily received and entertained as familiar friends.

Mrs. James's plantation bordered on the Red river, in that richly cultivated district where the waving cane and the snowy fields of cotton yield abundant wealth to their possessor. Thirty years ago the wealthy gentlemen of that part of the country were all hunters. They loved the chase as as their chief amusement, and many a feat was made more merry by the recital of some of the daring feats performed by these more daring spirits, in the pursuit of game they delighted to bring back to their plantations, as the trophy of their success; and jokes passed round, and glasses were filled and emptied, with toasts and songs, in honor of him who was acknowledged to be the boldest hunter of the Red river.

"So Bruno has carried off the last of the sisters, eh?" exclaimed Col. Hunter, an old planter, better known in the neighborhood as Uncle Hunter. "Boys, you were not sharp to let such a fine deer escape you."



"What would you have us do, uncle Ben?" replied his nephew. "She's a fine jewel, surely, but not as strange as she is rare."

"Bruno has won, but he will not wear her long, mark my words," replied the old planter. "He's not the man for that girl: he's too cold a nature for that high-spirited, noble creature. Why, I've seen many a fine fellow ride an hour on a full gallop to catch up to her, just to have a talk—and he had to ride fast to overtake her, for no one knows better how to sit a horse. I tell you, boys, Bruno won't understand how to treat her; she's too fine a woman for him."

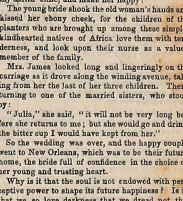
And the old gentleman filled his glass and emptied it at once to hide his rising indignation.

"She will marry him. Her mother does not approve of the match; but what can she do, uncle Ben? Those girls were always independent spirits, but wonderfully interesting and well-informed upon every subject."

"You are right, Jim!" exclaimed uncle Ben. "Did you never hear how this one educated herself?"

The ruined Gambler threatens his Wife with the Loss of her Boy.

"No; tell us!" cried out the young men at once.



"Why, I've often heard her father say that she got all her education from his English edition of the Encyclopædia. 'Hunter,' my old friend would say, telling me of it, and looking at me, with his head on both his hands, elbows resting on the table and a twinkle of delight in his round blue eyes, 'that girl's a perfect wonder! She never hears a word or a name that is new to her but she searches for it in that valuable work.' Think, boys, of marrying a girl who is a walking encyclopædia!"

"I would have run the risk, if she had agreed to it," replied his son. "But I hope she will be happy," he added, "for she deserves to be."

And truly Aphia James was a worthy favorite of the country round. With her petite, delicate figure, large, lustrous dark eyes, and silken black hair that could completely envelope her like a cloud, she possessed a mind richly stored with varied information, derived from a widely extended course of miscellaneous reading. For, so wedded was she to her home and Southern life, she could never be prevailed upon to enter a school for those accomplishments which could best be obtained in our Northern cities.

We will pass over the great wedding at the hospitable mansion of the widow. Mrs. James overcame her prejudices (or rather laid them aside) against the favored bridegroom, who had secured first her daughter's love, and then the share of the estate, which, by her husband's will, came to each child on her marriage, leaving the widow still a most luxurious home and ample support. The family mansion was crowded with visitors, who, with their servants and attendants, as is the custom at the South, had collected to witness the marriage and enjoy the festivities. The negroes, dressed in their best suits, gathered round the dwelling, showing, by the rolling of their eyes and a fine display of ivory teeth, their high appreciation of an event that secured to them a glorious holiday. Each held in hand something, some little gift for the young missus that was about leaving them.

"God bless you, Miss Phia," said an old woman, who had been nurse to the sisters, "God bless my darlin' child, and make her happy!"

The Threat fulfilled.

The young bride shook the old woman's hands and kissed her ebony cheek, for the children of the planters who are brought up among these simple, kindhearted natives of Africa love them with tenderness, and look upon their nurse as a valued member of the family.

Mrs. James looked long and lingeringly on the carriage as it drove along the winding avenue, taking from her the last of her three children. Then, turning to one of the married sisters, who stood by:

"Julia," she said, "it will not be very long before she returns to me; but she would go and drink the bitter cup I would have kept from her."

So the wedding was over, and the happy couple went to New Orleans, which was to be their future home, the bride full of confidence in the choice of her young and trusting heart.

Why is it that the soul is not endowed with perceptive power to shape its future happiness? Is it that we so love darkness that we dread not the shadow which coming evil casts before it? Or does hope, that will-o'-the-wisp of our inner life, bewilder us with its fitful light, till it leads into those depths of sorrow and despondency which so often prove our ruin? I would rather believe that each heart receives the discipline it requires, and which alone could have the power to cleanse and purify it, even as fire tries gold, and removes from it all that is impure.

Three years have passed, for time is no laggard; and whether its path lies among thorns or flowers it has ever a sure, steady pace, marked by events and experiences, or heartbeats, more than the dull, leaden sound of clocks and bells.

To the young bride the first year of wedded life was one of sunshine and flowers; her husband loved her—or seemed to do so—and anticipated every wish. But soon a change came over their home. Her evenings were spent by her alone, or in the company of friends who visited her. He, for whom she had left mother, sisters, and the home of her happy childhood, sought other companionship, other pleasures. She remarked not; but as rumors reached her of his habits, and the haunts he frequented, reason told her that her hopes of happiness were gone—like withered flowers they lay scattered, dropping one by one from that consecrated vase—her living heart—that had treasured them, and would have kept them fresh and sweet. But no one is ever wholly bereft of all

Something tangible or intangible, something to love in form or in the ideal, is ever left as a gleam of light to cheer the sorrowing heart, even as a single star is seen shining in the thick darkness as a lamp to make visible the surrounding gloom.

The young wife became a mother, and that new born life brought with it a dawning hope—Albert Bruno would love his child—he boy who was to bear his name and inherit the talents which he knew he possessed (for the father felt the was wasting the gifts with which God had endowed him), he would turn now from those ways which led to ruin; that young child would be his star, lighting his pathway to a new life.

But he was now a noted gambler; play was his profession, his life; the gaming table supplied him with food, employment—all he desired. To it everything was sacrificed, and it had become his Moloch, crying for more, as each object was given to satisfy its insatiable demands. To those disappointments at monstrous losses, the cup was resorted to as a Lethean draught, and the poor wife saw the gradual advances of want and misery with consternation—for she had a brave spirit—but with a wasted form and a sad heart.

"I must have money!" he would exclaim to his wife, "or I am ruined man. My honor is at stake; your mother has plenty, and you must get it."

Alas! for the honor of a gambler! But the world acknowledges and provides for it in its Decalogue.

Then went forth another heartrending appeal to that mother on whose bosom the young wife longed to lay her head and find rest, as she had done in childhood's days. But these requests became so frequent that Mrs. James could no longer grant them.

"Come home, my child," she would write to her daughter, "come back to cheer my heart and share all I possess. I am alone, and you are suffering in want of the comforts which I cannot secure for you while you are from me. Bring the boy with you, perhaps he will miss you both and follow. I am ready to forgive and receive him too, if he will but forsake that terrible sin which drags himself and the two beings he should cherish into disgrace and misery."

One morning the husband returned home—now a scene of sad desolation—desperate and infuriated by his fulfilment of new and adventurous. He had risked all—house, furniture, even to the bed on which lay his wife and the young child who had not just learned to call him father. She piled with him to fly from the scene of his disgrace, and showed him the last letter received from her mother, begging for her forgiveness and readiness to receive him with herself and child.

"Oh, Albert!" she exclaimed, "let me make the more appeal to the love which you so earnestly plied, and I know I listened with joy! Come with me to a home, happy and pure, where we shall again find peace and love, where our boy will be as a bird in groves, joyous and free. This is no place for him, that tender bud of innocence, he cannot bloom in this barren spot."

Albert was restless, tender and pathetic, had been made and rejected before; but the poor wife thought the time had now come when no other alternative offered, and he would be forced to listen and comply. Vain hope! idle dream! When it is so dark with evil that it cannot be darker, for its tendency is ever downward into a deeper gulf.

"Your mother is the besotted man, "and not a step shall you take in that direction; you vowed to share my fortunes for better or worse, and I claim the fulfilment of that vow. The child is mine, and with me it shall stay!"

"And have I not fulfilled my promise?" she asked. "What is it I offer you but all in a desperate condition? There is nothing else left for us, even though I did not wish to join my mother."

"Your mother is mean and intriguing, or she would send you more money, and not try to force you from your home and me."

Aphia's heart ached with wounded feeling at this unjust attack upon her noble-hearted, generous mother, whom she so fondly loved, but she did not mount the lists.

"But has she not again and again sent means, till I am ashamed to ask? Must I reduce her, too, to poverty? Is nothing else settled yet?" she replied, tears forcing themselves into her eyes.

"I wish no scene!" he replied, brutally grasping her arm, till she screamed from pain, "but look you, Aphia, if you take not my part, by or by yourself, I will follow you, and wherever you hide there will I seek you, and drag him from you—not from love—but to strike you in the tenderest part," and the unhappy man went forth to his daily work of ruin.

The poor wife looked after him as he left the room, and the big tears dropped slowly and silently from her eyes as over a new-made grave—for there she buried all the deep and devoted love she had given to the husband of her youthful heart. From that mound of ashes of the Past she rose, the strong, courageous, devoted mother, ready to battle for the sake of her darling boy.

"To secure his welfare, his happiness," she exclaimed, "shall now be my only care; to keep him with me, my only desire."

The preparations for her departure were soon made—few and few—and that evening found her on board the steamboat, on her way to the home of her happy days.

PART II.

MRS. JAMES received her daughter with open arms and heart—but the child, the boy who was henceforth to be the object of their constant watchfulness, engrossed her tenderest love. He was to bear the family name, and by him the honor of the house was to be sustained.

A dressing for her daughter was soon procured, and Albert Bruno's name was never mentioned. But was it forgotten? Ask the slight needle if it forgets ever to turn to the North Star as its true attraction? or the sunflower if she neglects to give her last look to the God of Day? and they will answer: "The law that governs us is Supreme!" So is it with the woman that has truly loved—that has sacrificed herself to the one affection. It may be shrouded in the deepest grief and hid from outward sight, but the heart travels to it (the love, we mean, not perhaps the object of it) through the distance of years, even as we journey far to visit the green spot where we have laid away the forms of those we love.

They grew and was lovely. In appearance he resembled his mother, while bright intellect looked out in him from the same lustrous eyes. He was allowed to mingle with the young children with the young negroes, his playmates, who loved him and would have died to protect him.

"Where young master gone?" asked the nurse, of his mother, late one afternoon, as she sat on the piazza, reading. "Did missus give'm leave to go any?"

"No, Elsie. I have scarcely seen him to-day. I thought he was with you," she replied.

Young master had disappeared woman. "You tell Cato him and massa Albert could go pick berries in de glen by de brook—but dey not yet cum home, and de night coming on fass. I'se not like dat boy way dis time o' day."

"You need not be alarmed," replied the mother, "they have been careful and will surely bring him home safe. They will be here soon," she continued, taking up her book.

Twilight came on and brought no sign of the missing child. Twilight deepened. Several of the men were sent out in search of the boy and the young negro who accompanied him. The horsemen glanced fitfully in the adjoining woods as they continued their search into night. At last they returned to the house bringing with the negro groom the lifeless body of the boy, in a by-path, some distance off, apparently stunned by a blow he had received. He soon recovered under the care and tenderness of his mother, and was able to give the following account:

The child and himself had picked berries for some time, in the pleasant brook, and then wandered slowly till they reached a footpath among the cedar woods, quite remote from the road, when they saw a stranger coming from the direction of Arrowhead. He drew up near the boy, and looking at the child, he asked,

"Albert Lane, is your name, little fellow?"

"Albert James," replied the child. "Now, tell me yours, if you please, for I like to know who I talk to. Mamma tells me never to talk to strangers."

"Your mother is quite right; but I am not a stranger—your name is Albert Lane, and I am honey; jump up with me and I will take you there."

"No, no, sar, massa Albert can't do das," exclaimed Cato, catching up the child and beginning to run, but the stranger gave the boy the blow that stunned him, and then the poor negro could tell, adding, "I dunno what for I was feared uv de gemmin—him didn't look good."

"Good God, my darling boy!" exclaimed the frantic mother. "But which way did he go, Cato? Speak! quick! I must follow!"

"I dunno, missus," replied the boy, weeping and wringing his hands. "He knock me down fuss—I no see den nuffin. I go wid you arter massa Albert. Oh, Lor, Lor, what'll poor Cato do?"

The night was now far advanced, but no ray o light yet heralded the approach of morn.

"Stay with your child here!" exclaimed the unhappy mother. "Quick, boys; you love me, I know. Some of you come with me."

"Mother, mother, what is my daughter?" asked Mrs. James. "You do not know who took him or where to seek him."

"But he could do that deed!" she exclaimed. "His words ring in my ears—I will drag him from you, to wound you in the tenderest part, O God! I could kill myself—I would instantly reclaim them. I'll search the woods—the whole country round. Every inch of the ground is familiar to me. I will track him like a bloodhound and find my boy!"

Mrs. James saw that all remonstrance would be vain; so she desisted from making it.

The men were soon at the door, and the men mounted were ready to accompany their young mistress.

Hours passed, of weary watching to Mrs. James. To her daughter, of hard riding and deep, varied emotions of anxiety for her child—of sorrow and self-reproaching towards the mother who could nurture his boy, to annoy and wound her whose life he had turned to bitterness. For truly she could say of herself—"Call me Mara, for I have drunk of the bitter waters of life."

The next evening, as the sun was dipping behind the hills and kissing the waters of the bay in a blush of promise for the morrow's light—the dull, distant sound of hoofs was heard drawing nearer and nearer, till the young mother was seen in front of the door, and gave the tired child to the arms of her mother.

"I found him, mother, dear!" she exclaimed, jumping from the back of the jaded animal. "I said I would ferret him out though he burrowed in the vaults, and take my child away from him. Dear mother, I told him, and called Heaven to hear me, that if ever he again stole him from me I would kill him! Oh!" added the weary, heartsick woman, sinking down exhausted by her mother's side—"this is the man I once loved! this the state to which he has brought me!"

Mrs. James comforted her afflicted child and soothed the boy, who was weeping with fatigue and joy at finding himself again in her loving embrace. His father had taken him far into the dense woods miles away from the plantation, where he had erected a log hut, in which he had lived for months a solitary life, on game and whatever he could occasionally purchase from the neighboring town, in the hope that the opportunity would occur of carrying into effect his wicked design of robbing the mother of her child.

They had spent the whole day in their search, when, all at once, the keen eyes of the mother spied a thin and scarcely perceptible column of smoke rising from distant part of the dense woods that skirted the horsepath. Dashing into its thick undergrowth, which barely allowed a passage, they reached a spot where a few trees had been felled, affording an open space to build a log cabin scarcely large enough for the abode of man. The boy, who had been left with the negro boy, ran at the sight of his mother and the faithful negroes, and threw himself on her neck. Aphia James kissed her child and thanked Heaven for an inherited the Southern nature fostered under a hot sun) and advanced towards the prostrate form of a man who was sleeping on a straw bed within.

"Albert Bruno," she cried, wildly, her face lighted up with an unearthly light, "you stole my child from me. God has led me to your lurking-place, and given him back to me. You may go this time; but if you touch him again, as sure as there is a God in Heaven, I will take your life," and she held a loaded pistol within reach.

The man, half awakened from a deep sleep after the day's hunt, stared at the figure bending over him, and before he could collect himself the young mother was riding with her boy and her dark escort through the woods, on her way home.

Nearly a month elapsed since the event we have undertaken to relate. Mrs. James and her daughter remember it as a horrid dream, not likely to be repeated during the course of six years old, and looks upon their whole care and affection. His mother charges herself with his instruction, for on him are centred the hopes of the remaining few joys of her withered life. She is courted and again sought in marriage by many a noble heart, who would gladly purchase the love of her child by a hardened pathway. But that noble woman is true to the idol of her youth; it was not realised, but another cannot now take its place. She begins now to feel the nothing effect of rest and returning peace upon her health and spirits.

"This is Albert's birthday, mother, dear," said Aphia, sitting down at the breakfast-table on the morning of that interesting anniversary. "Shall we not give the people a holiday, and help them to be happy? I have a plan in my morning hat! They can have a dance on the lawn, a good dinner afterwards, and then amuse themselves as they wish in their own quarters."

"Surely," replied Mrs. James; "and they will learn to love the boy all the more for the pleasure he gives them, as well as unexpected."

So the large plantation bell was sounded loud and long, and the hands came back from their fields—where they had heard the news from the young master himself, who stood among them the future lord of their earthly destiny.

Dance had begun, and the old fiddler, uncle Joe, had scraped his bow till it drew forth an uncertain sound, not musical, but sure to excite the dancing propensities of the merry impressed race; the little ones, half-baked, were tumbling and rolling over on the ground, while their elders chattered, laughed and showed symptoms of the "big flake." All was going on as merry as the marriage bells, when a scream, a child's cry of terror and agony suddenly hushed and silenced the fiddler's efforts, above the laugh and the chattering of the happy negroes assembled to celebrate that eventful anniversary.

"Albert! Albert!" "Where is Albert?" exclaimed Mrs. James and her daughter at the same time, running in the midst of the negroes from different directions.

They had both recognized the child's voice, even in those tones of terror and distress, and their pale faces told the truth that flashed like lightning upon them.

But no one could answer their question, uttered in accents of fear and frantic emotion. Some had seen him but just before at play in their midst, others had missed him for a moment since running after the dogs, but now he could nowhere be found.

The gentlemen of the neighborhood, who were dining that day at the house, were soon in the saddle, ready to scour the country in search of the missing child, but the mother would not be prevented from accompanying them. Mounted on her favorite, the same animal that had borne her on her former search, and whose mettle she had often tested, Aphia James followed in the lead, urging them on and on, led further by that natural instinct that leads the dam to its young than the knowledge that she could find her own sought. She reached it at last, the log cabin in the dark cedar woods, where she had found him lying before. But "Gone, God!" she exclaims, "it is empty. Long since he has deserted it, for no sign o life is here. Where shall I seek him next?"

She turned her horse's reins to the noble animal that bears her onward. Her friends follow, wondering where this wild chase will end. But night came on without any return to the house of dejected, baffled, and impatient for the returning daylight to renew their search in a different direction.

Three days were thus spent; three terrible days of suspense and agony to the poor mother! On the fourth, after a hot, long ride, they stopped at a small house on the wayside, to rest their horses and refresh them with water. While waiting to mount again, a child's voice is heard from an inner room, begging in tender accents to be released.

The mother starts—she listens—her cheeks flush.

"Come," she says, in a hushed tone, "he is here! I know his voice. I heard it from that room. I cannot mistake it."

Her friends obey without speaking. There is something in her eye that compels obedience; they force the door; she stands one moment on the threshold; looks at him who is holding her child, to keep him from her arms; rushes forward, and plunges something that glittered in her hand deep into his breast.

"I warned you, Albert Bruno!" exclaimed the poor, frantic woman, in a subdued but terribly audible voice, "but you would not heed my warning. I have killed him," she continued. "God have mercy on me! I resign myself to the law."

It was all the work of a moment; and she stood with her hands clasped around the neck of the child, who had run to her as soon as released by his wounded father, who had fallen, bleeding, on the floor.

All stood for a moment as if transfixed to the spot. The mother, pale as death, and looking like a spectre, with her long black hair, which had escaped from her riding-hat, flowing wildly to her feet, led her boy from the room, passing slowly through the crowd, that had now gathered, remounted her horse, and placing the child before her, retraced her way back to her home.

"I have—killed—him—mother!" were the first words she uttered, slowly and solemnly, as she again placed the boy in her arms. "Our prophecy is fulfilled; he made me the sword to pierce him with; but I have again brought the boy."

For weeks Aphia James laid at the point of death, the few words she uttered at intervals only proving that reason had deserted its throne, and life in any form would be a burden. But gradually she recovered, and demanded a trial by the laws of her country, which she had broken in the state of frenzy excited and goaded on by the dread of losing her child. She rode daily, in her weak state, to the courthouse, accompanied by her judge and friends, to hear the pleadings of the able arguments and eloquent pleadings for and against herself. She attempted no pallation of her crime; which was acknowledged by all. But the public opinion was in her favor; her family was loved by rich and poor in the neighborhood; she, herself, a favorite, and deserved so; her husband's name known to have been great, and nobly borne; the case was one of aggravated provocations; and, as the verdict was "not guilty," all those present secured in that part of our country where deeds of violence were in those days, as now, the rule, and not the exception, she was sentenced to a short imprisonment, which was made as light by the companionship of the child for whom she had endured so much.

Albert Bruno was never seen in that section of the country after. It was rumored that he began a new life in some distant land, which rumors of his disgraceful conduct never reached; and where he tried to retrieve his character, and redeem the talents he had so shamefully wasted.

WALKS IN PARADISE.

By Ernest Trevor.

LAST night we paced beneath an avenue
Of shadowy trees, whose feathered leaves had past
Away for ever in the wintry blast,
Which oft returns their boughs to revel through—
Invisible and unconfined wings!
Touched by the grim solemnity of night—
Starless and chill, with just enough of light
To see the branches and the stately things,
Their arms above us—for awhile we rest
'Neath the bare choir, where a wild requiem rings
Of wind, sighing, as for a soul unblest!
While thus we stood, with breathing hearts all mute,
Yet tuned to love, mine arm she fondly prest,
And I gave a sigh which thrilled me like a lute.

"Better Late than Never."

By F. Brock.

"AHAB for womanhood!"

Those words, with a deep sigh, welled up from Miss Clementina Smith's inmost soul, as she thought of her own desolate condition. She was still romantic, still effervescing with romantic affection (to use her own language), though she had seen the sun rise and set upon thirty-five birthdays. But would-be scattered hair? Ah! that, she knew, would at some time meet its acknowledged master, and she could wait. She did not say patience, for she knew there is no hurry when one is waiting for a husband at so advanced an age. On one circumstance were all her hopes placed:

Miss Clementina Smith was situated near the beautiful and well-known Lake George, and who would presume to say that among the summer boarders who come from from from from some one could be smitten with her charms? In fact, our heroine had already had her lovers among them, and there had been a time when she believed herself the undisputed object of their choice. She maintained the doctrine that more matches were made by these summer trips than in any other way; and she would, with a knowing smile, that she knew nothing else induced young men to visit the city except a desire to flirt and chat with the girls, declare that she could see heels in love before they knew what they were about. They said they came to fish, but she could not be blinded as to what they came to fish for. For girls, she knew, were the bait.

Her old bachelor uncle, for whom she had kept house ever since the death of her parents, had often twitted her about her flirtations, and asked her "Who was to be the happy man?" Ah! she knew that well enough herself. A handsomed fellow was uncle Ben, and one much thought of in the village, and when he took his accustomed seat on the church steps during the hour between morning and afternoon service (for it was a good, old-fashioned Presbyterian church, and most of the people took their lunch in their pockets and staid till their church affairs for the week were concluded), many friends gathered around to hear him tell his oft-told but always amusing stories. He had his favorite story, too, and his jolly sides would shake as he told of the summer morning when he slily took away he ladder from below the tall tree in which the schoolmaster was perched, eating apples, and absorbed in reading his favorite, "Pope's Essay on Man." And then how he watched till the master, looking at his huge silver bullseye watch, found that it was schooltime and for the first time discovered that the ladder was missing. But fears were excited lest he should never recover his gravity, when he described the many ways in which the betricked pedagogue endeavored to reach terra firma.

But enough of uncle Ben. You know now what a protector Miss Clementina had, and can judge how little he would be apt to appreciate her romance. But you should have seen the corners of his mouth twitch with the ill-repressed smile when he spied his niece sitting by the open window, in the pleasant summer twilight, warbling (as she said) "Ever of Thee!" and "Would I were with Thee." She heeded him not, for in bright fancy-land she was dreaming of enchanting some wandering swain, who was lying in ambush among the trees, and who would, when he could no longer restrain his feelings, rush to her side and beg to be allowed to make her acquaintance without the formality of an introduction. But it was all in vain. No one came to admire the sweet singer, though she donned the simple white dress (an emblem of purity she said) and exhausted time and patience in arranging the ringlets to fall so as to cover the neck, which each returning summer was rendering less bewitching, for years will leave their mark, and this the lady well knew. She met good-looking gentlemen in her daily walks, and wondered that they could not see in her face what a fond and loving wife she would make. However, all things have an end, and so did the single life of Miss Clementina Smith.

One evening uncle Ben burst into her room, exclaiming;

"Here, Jinny, where are you?"

(He always called her by this name, much to her horror, for he said he could not bother to say her real name, for he averred that it was a good mouthful for any one.)

She answered his summons and saw that he had company with him.

"Here, Jinny," said he, "let me introduce Major Winslow and his cousin, Miss—Miss— Well, now, it is too bad, but I've clean forgotten your name."

"Miss Lucy Norris," said the young lady smiling.

"Ah, yes. Well, I declare I don't see how I forgot it. It puts me in mind of the time when I was young and bashful and forgot my own name. It was one Sunday——"

"Well, never mind now, uncle," interrupted Miss Smith; "you are keeping the gentleman and lady waiting, and it is not likely that they will fancy your stories as well as your village chums."

"That's so," said uncle Ben; "forgive me, young lady. And now to the point, Jinny. The hotels and boarding-houses are all full, and Mr. Martin, down to the depot, told the major that perhaps we could accommodate them until they could find rooms elsewhere."

"Well," said Miss Clementina, whose heart beat wildly at the thought of having a major staying in the house, "if they can be comfortable in our unostentatious domicile, far be it from me to interpose any obstacle in the way of their enjoyment." So the business was settled, and soon the major and sweet Lucy Norris felt completely at home with the hearty joker and his romantic niece. To be sure Lucy often felt like laughing when Miss Clementina and her cousin wandered off together, and left her to amuse herself with uncle Ben, who seemed to care for nothing better than to say or do things to make the merry laugh ring out, and the bright eyes sparkle with delight.

A bright sunny creature was she, and nothing pleased her better than to mount on the hay by the side of uncle Ben, and ride through village or wild country, she little cared which, though she rather preferred to go where she thought there was a chance of meeting the couple who had become very well acquainted with each other, and seemed to wish now to explore every lonely place in the vicinity. The way in which Lucy happened to be with her cousin was simply this:

Her parents lived in Burlington, Vermont, and she had never been to New York, a circumstance that she very much regretted, for she wished to visit her uncle (the major's father), who was very fond of her. Still she could not go alone, and there was no one who wanted to take her. But at last an opportunity came in the shape of the major, who paid Mr. and Mrs. Norris a farewell visit before his departure for the seat of war, and volunteered to escort Lucy to the city, and also said that he would like to have her go with him to the pretty place in which we now find them. Lucy, nothing loth, agreed, and here they are. But the major is fairly entrapped. Bright eyes are dangerous things for epaulets, and vice versâ.

The major was not very young, but then how infinitely better is a man who knows the ways of the world and has risen to a position like his than one who has all these things yet to gain. So thought Clementina, and she strove hard to bring the major with his fifty years and his shoulder-straps to her feet. She shrank a little from Lucy's roguish eyes, yet with true Spartan will she never swerved from her purpose. And so she won him.

It was an evening in June, and an eventful one it proved to be. The moon was shining brightly, and in the little sitting-room of the Smith mansion no lamp opposed its rude glare to the mild moonbeams. The major was standing by the open window, thinking probably of the future, when, crowned with bright laurels, he should return to his home. A light hand touched his arm, and he turned to see Miss Clementina.

"Ah!" quoth she, "a beautiful evening, and I see you enjoy it. It is with those who love the beauties of Nature that I ever wish to affiliate, and I am rejoiced to see that you are one of those. I have ever been searching for companionship which may bring sympathy to my soul. My uncle is a good old man, but I ask you, major, you who must understand the cravings of a romantic female heart, if he is one to make my home congenial?"

"Indeed, Miss Clementina, I cannot say he is, for you are as unlike as a major's straps and those on the shoulders of a first lieutenant. Still, as you say, he is a good man, and not so very old either."

"No, not so very; yet half a century seems to me a long period, though in some persons years add dignity, without detracting any other merit. Is it not so?"

"Yes, my dear miss, and I fondly hope that age will not stand in my way when I wish to take to my home a companion for life."

"Oh! my dear major, how could you think for a moment that I—that she—I mean that any one could so far overlook your worth, as to think of those years which have elevated you to a position from which you can look down on the common herd at your feet. No, sir, you need have no fears on that score, but march boldly up to demand the surrender of the fortunate lady's heart with less timidity than you would feel in battle, for I know your bravery, and feel that you are a lion in war, though gentle in peace. Am I not right, major?"

Her companion was overwhelmed by her oratory, and for a few minutes remained speechless and motionless, till at last he ventured to take the lady's hand (which was still resting on his coat-sleeve) in his, where it remained passive, as she knew it should, according to popular novels.

"Then I may," he said, "hope that you are not averse to my suit. Spare me further persuasions, and tell me if you will indeed be mine?"

What should she do? She had heard of ladies fainting when they received a proposal, but that was so troublesome, she concluded not to do it; so she moved towards him and rested her head confidingly on his shoulder.

After a few minutes' silence, she said, "Perhaps it is hardly maidenly in me to be so lightly won, but my heart is untutored, and will have its own way. However, I must refer you to uncle Ben, who is my guardian."

The compact was sealed by a kiss, which was rather louder than the enamored swain intended, and was heard by uncle Ben, who was standing at the garden gate, telling stories to Lucy.

"Well, now, did you ever?" said he; "I vow if army and dimity ain't kissing each other! Would you believe it, little Lucy, nobody ever kissed me but my mother."

"You shan't say that any more, uncle Ben, for I'll kiss you myself."

And she did, too, and ran away before he could half realise what she had done. Poor fellow, that kiss on his rough-bearded cheek traversed every part of his body, and he felt like seizing his finger ends to keep the delightful sensation from leaving him. He realised how blessed he would be had he such a one to kiss him always, and a tear rose to his eye as he felt how hopeless was such a future for him. He soon recovered himself, and with a low laugh, murmured:

"Pshaw! I shall make myself as ridiculous as the major. That happy creature could never content herself with me, even if she could love me, which is very unlike to happen, and couldn't be in the common course of nature."

But Ben could not deny to himself that he loved the winsome Lucy, though he tried to laugh at his foolishness. But he watched her more carefully and talked less. He gave his consent to the major and Jinny, but ventured no joke on the subject. Sometimes, too, a day would pass without one of his stories, and Lucy, who would really liked him very much, began to fear that he was sick. At last she ventured to ask him what was the matter. Looking her full in the face to see if she suspected his secret, he asked if she really wished to know.

"Indeed, indeed I do," she said, manifesting her ignorance by her very eagerness.

"Well, then, listen, and you shall hear. I am now nigh onto fifty years old, and since my dear old mother died I have lived almost alone, except since my niece has been with me, a matter of nine year or so. And I've had no one to love except my good dog, Jack, that used to follow me everywhere. I must tell you a story about him some time."

Here his eyes brightened, but they soon dimmed again, and he continued:

"But never mind Jack's story now. I am telling you one that is sadder than any I ever told before, Lucy. Well, as I say, I have had no one to love; but this summer a dear little girl has crept right inside of my tough old heart, and, though I know she don't care a cent about staying, somehow I can't help a keeping of her there. Don't laugh at me, Lucy, I shall get over it perhaps, and some of these days I'll come and see you when you are married, and if you'll only think once in awhile of poor uncle Ben—"

Here he stopped and brushed his rough hand across his sunburnt face, while he gulped down a huge sob that was struggling for mastery.

Lucy's eyes, too, were flooded, and she put her arms around uncle Ben's neck, and whispered:

"Why, don't you keep the little girl, uncle?"

He looked up and said, sorrowfully:

"Because she would not stay."

"Have you asked?" persisted Lucy.

"If I haven't, I do now; will you, little darling, will you come to the home of one nearly three times as old as you, but who would like to make you as happy as a bird?"

"If my parents are willing, so am I, and here's my hand on the bargain."

Now uncle Ben's happiness was complete, or nearly so, for he only waited the sanction of Lucy's parents, which, I may add, he received. And here we may leave the two couples. Brave major and romantic Clementina, dear uncle Ben and charming Lucy.

My readers may disdain the idea of these old bachelors and this old maid getting married, but why should they not? Marriage is an institution established by God, and, I say, let every one enter into the holy state, even though they may be on the wrong side of forty, for the doing of a good work is "Better Late than Never."

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY IN NEW ORLEANS.

The Concert.

THE 22d day of Feb., says the New Orleans correspondent of the Times, was celebrated in this city by a variety of events that certainly mark an era in its history, and will be always remembered by those who passed through the varied excitements with unusual pleasure. The day was one of the finest that ever dawned upon the earth, and, after the unseasonable cold, was therefore doubly enjoyed. At an early hour the people were astir to witness the parade and hear the grand concert to come off at the head of Canal street.

Long before the hour set for them in the programme the wide street was densely thronged from Camp to the Levee. The Custom-house and every other available space were literally covered over with spectators, including large numbers of ladies.

Just above the Custom-house was erected a large stand, on which were stationed the members of several of our best military bands, formed for the moment in an immense orchestra or instrumental music. At the intersection of Tchapitoulas street with Canal was a park of 40 pieces of artillery, loaded with cartridges, and so arranged by a galvanic battery that they could be fired as the bass notes of the rolling music. The first piece was appropriately "Hail, Columbia," and we never heard it given with more effect. As one note after another of that swelling anthem struck the ears of the enthusiastic listeners, the crowd gradually assumed a perfect silence. The ladies convulsively kept tune with their hands, the gentlemen's eyes glistened and the bronzed veterans present of the Department of the Gulf wore a more fierce and martial aspect. Amid this profound moment of interest, as the speaking harmony swelled and reverberated even across the glorious Mississippi, the climax was reached by the sudden belching forth of the artillery and the cheers of the enthusiastic crowd.

A number of pieces followed; the most noticeable of which was the "Storm Galop," in which the soldiers of Col. Dudley's cavalry brigade gave great effect by their hearty cheering, the charge or battle-cry of the men. The musical entertainment concluded by a finale furioso, in which our national airs mingled with those of other nations, the whole ending with the rapid discharge of artillery.

This novel concert and most appropriate celebration of Washington's birthday consumed nearly two hours. There were present on the stand Maj.-Gen. Banks, his staff and most of the distinguished officers of the department, as well as a large number of our most influential citizens.

The Masquerade Ball given by Mrs. Gen. Banks.

The entertainment which Mrs. Gen. Banks offered to the élite of the New Orleans population as a proper conclusion of the glorious festivities of the day was a bal masque at the Opera House. The building for the occasion was most profusely decorated with flags, and further ornamented with a magnificent gas jet, forming the name of Washington. Two splendid bands, one in the second gallery and one in the rear of the stage, discoursed the music, alternately relieving each other.

At ten o'clock the streets were alive with carriages, the occupants, in their various and gay dresses, glistening most picturesquely in the bright moonlight, while on the pavements long processions might be seen of ladies and gentlemen, masked, wending their way to the Opera House. New Orleans looked for the time like an Italian rather than an American city. All was joyous, the ladies delighted with the novelty of the affair, the gentlemen additionally exultant from the now officially announced Free State victory.

Entering the Opera House, the guests, ascending the steps, entered the building, and finally reached the first tier of boxes, where the centre of the front had been removed, and a platform erected reaching over the parquette. From this platform a winding stairs descended to the floor of the ball-room. On the stage stood Mrs. Gen. Banks, the hostess of the evening, dressed as a lady of the era of Louis XIII., supported on the right by a lady in the dress familiar to the dames of our first Revolutionary period, and here, supported by Gen. Banks, she received her guests with a dignity and ease that charmed the immense throng present.

The entire affair was a most brilliant success. The boxes were crowded with elegantly-dressed spectators, the floor was overflowing with maskers, including many representatives of aristocratic families. They have withstood all inducements to be friendly and accept the Federal rule until the fascinations of social and elegant entertainments, under the patronage of Mrs. Banks, brought them from their seclusion. All were forced to admit that the Crescent City, in her palmiest days, never gave so brilliant a ball, or one in every particular so rich in costume and distinguished for its guests as this closing fête of the celebration of Washington's birthday in New Orleans.

THE FETE TO THE 20TH U. S. COLORED INFANTRY.

THE 20th regiment United States colored troops left Riker's island at nine o'clock on the 5th of March, on board the steamer John Romer, and were conveyed to the foot of 26th street, East river, where they were disembarked and formed in regimental line, and marched to Union Square, arriving in front of the Union League Club House at one o'clock.

A vast crowd of citizens of every shade of color, and every phase of social and political life, filled the square, and streets, and every door, window, veranda, tree and housetop that commanded a view of the scene was peopled with spectators. Over the entrance of the Club House was a large platform ornamented with flags and filled with ladies. In the street was another platform tastefully decorated and occupied by prominent citizens. From the stand the colors were presented by President King, of Columbia College, who addressed them with warmth and eloquence.

At the close of his speech President King read an address which had been prepared by H. T. Tuckerman. The address was neatly engrossed on parchment, and signed by the ladies who presented the colors to the regiment.

Col. Bartram responded in fitting terms.

After the presentation ceremony was over the men stacked arms, and partook of a collation provided for them. Corpulent cans of coffee and fat baskets of sandwiches were carried into the square, and their contents generously distributed among the sable soldiers. They ate heartily, and were not backward in presenting their sentiments in relation to the reception they had met. "This is what we get for being soldiers." "If Uncle Sam treats us in this way, we should like to board with him." "Hurrah for the Committee." "This doesn't look like July." "How are you, rioters?" "Three cheers for the ladies." "That flag is a big thing, boys." "We will show the Copperheads what we can do for freedom when we get a chance." "That was a jolly speech made by our Colonel." "Didn't Professor King talk like a book?" &c.

After luncheon march was resumed in the following order:

Police Superintendent Kennedy.
One Hundred Policemen.
Members of the Union League Club.
Colored friends of the Recruits, marching with hands joined.
Governor's Island Band.
The 20th regiment United States Colored Troops.

The line of march was down Broadway to Canal street, through Canal street to the North river, where they embarked on board the Ericsson for New Orleans. The men made a fine appearance in their blue uniforms, white gloves and white leggings. They are hearty and athletic fellows, many of them six feet tall, straight and symmetrical. A majority of them are black; indeed, there are but few mulattoes among them.

THE DANNEWERK.

WE give in this paper an illustration by which our readers can form some idea of this great historic bulwark of the Danish monarchy.

The Dannewerk is situate at the extreme southern part of the duchy of Schleswig, and is now an enormous earthwork that stretches almost across the entire country. The length of the peninsula of Schleswig-Holstein to the end of Jutland is said to be 300 miles. The breadth, however, is but one-third of its length, and the Dannewerk is a fortification that reaches very nearly across the land from the German Ocean to the Baltic. This border wall is said to have been erected in the ninth century, and, according to the accounts given of it in Olaf Tryggveson's Saga, it was built of wood, stone and earth. In the year 937 the wall, we are told, was strengthened by Queen Thyra, whom the people, in their thankfulness for the national defence, christened Danabod, which, literally translated, means the Pride of the Danes; and as a proof of the extreme antiquity of the structure, there is at Flensburg a splendid collection of flint arrow-heads and axes which have been collected from the barrows or earth mounds in the immediate neighborhood, and which resemble absolutely those found in this country, and which the Indians used at the period of the European colonization.

The fortress consists at the present day (without going into all the niceties of historical detail) of three enormous earthworks, stretching across the entire breadth of the land; they are so arranged as to form the neck, or funnel, with a long outwork to protect the narrow channel through which the troops are ultimately intended to be driven. Toward the Baltic, or East Sea, there runs the "Oster-Wolden" (or east rampart); this lies toward the "Eckenforde," and is sometimes called the "Camel-Dannewerk." It is about two English miles long, the earthworks being from four feet to five feet high, and 16 yards broad, and beset with a ditch, the depth of which varies from six to 20 feet. Beyond this is the great bay formed by the river Schley, which is so wide that no troops could possibly attempt to pass it. Stretching immediately in front of this is the "Kurgraben," which is upwards of a mile in length, beginning at the end of Selker lake; it is from 10 feet to 12 feet broad, and from four feet to six feet high. Behind this lies the great "Dannewerk" itself, which consists of earthworks not less than 14 miles long. In some parts it is from 30 feet to 36 feet high, and the ramparts are from 16 feet to 20 feet broad.

The whole of these earthworks are immediately in connection from one side of the peninsula to the other, with the river Treene, which falls into the Northern Ocean; so that the Danish forces have it within their power to flood not less than 64 square miles of land in front of the great bulwark of Schleswig at a moment's notice.

KILPATRICK'S RAID.

THE recital of the sufferings of our prisoners at Richmond had excited throughout the land the deepest interest in them. The refusal of the rebel authorities to exchange them, and the unfair advantages which they take on every occasion, compelling us to forego the superiority of numbers on our side in order to release any, made their release almost hopeless.

A forcible delivery by a sudden dash was next projected. The first attempt made by Gen. Butler failed by the treachery of a deserter, who rewarded Mr. Lincoln's clemency by doing all the injury in his power. The next was the late raid of Gen. Kilpatrick, which failed from circumstances too well-known, but chiefly from the neglect of the War Department to provide suitable guides. Kilpatrick was delayed, Dahlgren misled and killed, and Butler warned only in time to protect the retreat of the cavalry to Yorktown.

It is questionable whether, had all gone well, Kilpatrick could have taken the city. The first alarm was too fresh in the minds of the rebel Government and the citizens to allow them to leave Richmond so defenceless as to be taken by a cavalry dash.

We give a sketch of the setting out of this historic expedition, to which the death of Dahlgren gives such a sad interest.

The Richmond papers call on Davis to take the cavalry from Lee, and keep it oscillating between the city and his camp.

THE OPERA IN THE 2D CORPS.

WE must not suppose that balls and operas are the privilege of the denizens of the peaceful cities. The army has both; and we give a couple of illustrations to-day of the Opera House erected by the 2d Brigade, 1st Division, 1st Army Corps, commanded by Gen. Rice.

With scant materials they managed to erect a very presentable edifice of pure logs, chinked with clay, after the fashion of the Sunny South. The roof is a miscellaneous collection of shelter tents and wagon covers; a greenroom was made with the help of a stolen door. The scenery is, according to our Artist, the most wonderful part of the Academy of Music, the pigments employed being red clay, blacking and charcoal.

The dress circle and parquette are furnished with neat log seats; and though intended to accommodate only 200, more than twice that number have crowded its interior to listen to the charming melodies, not, indeed, of Verdi and Donizetti, but of Foster and his imitators.

A CASE OF CURIOSITY.—Some people have very inquiring minds—but few, we think, carry their curiosity so far as a Yankee friend of ours, who rung the bell of a fashionable residence, the other day, and when the servant girl made her appearance politely inquired:

"What are you going to have for dinner to-day?"

The girl, thinking the man was one of their tradesmen, and had made the inquiry in his business capacity, innocently replied:

"Mutton!"

"With sauce?"

"Yes, sir."

"Ah! well, I was passing by and thought I would inquire. Good morning."

The servant girl was indignant when she came to comprehend the motive, but he was too far up the street to hear her angry denunciations.

THE RAID ON RICHMOND—GENERAL KILPATRICK'S FORCES SETTING OUT.—FROM A T.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 7.

THE POET AND THE LEAVES.

BY REV. T. S. HODGSON.

He stood beneath an arbor's pleasant shade,
Crushing the juice from sweet Pomona's fruit,
When lo! a bunch of leaves with yellow suit
Dashed in his face, and rested where leaves fade
To browncst rottenness. He thought it said,
"Mark where I lie, and let thy pensive lute
Embalm my fall in song! I am mute,
But would not in Oblivion's grave be laid;
And so in flitting leave I wakened thee
To lie on earth, a dead but famous thing."
"Oh, thus will I, when swept by Death's decree
Along that sea which knows no fathoming,
Naught left behind whose worth men long will prize,
Just touch one plume of Time's all-sweeping wing!"

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

CHAPTER XVI.

As they were sitting at dinner the next day Mellen observed Stuart Fuller.

"I have quite forgotten to ask you about Tom, he said; "he was in town when you last wrote to me."

"He has not come yet," Elizabeth replied; "the house in which he was employed conducted to keep him at Nordmore for a time; in his last letter he wrote that he might be gone another year."

"Poor old Tom," Elsie said, laughingly.

Elizabeth's lip contracted a little; she had never been able entirely to forget the suffering this girl had caused the young man. Whenever she heard her mentioned it came in that trifling way it jarred upon her feelings and irritated her greatly.

"Bessie doesn't like any one to laugh at Tom," said Mellen, noticing the expression of her face.

"I confess I do not," she replied; "he is such a noble fellow at the bottom, with an honest, kindly heart, and it seems to me that no one really acquainted with Tom can help respecting him, in spite of his eccentricities of manner."

"But you will not be so heroic, Bessie," returned Elsie; "Tom always allowed me to laugh at him as much as I pleased; you know I don't mean to be unmannered."

"No one would ever suspect you of that, Birdie," added Mellen, with a fond glance.

Elizabeth said nothing more, and the conversation changed.

"We shall have the house crowded with visitors, I suppose," Elsie said; "Mary Harrington told me she should only give us one day for family affection—"

"I hope she won't come to stay any time just yet," said Elizabeth.

"I hope so, too," added Mellen; "I should like a little enjoyment of my home, if possible, for a week or two at least."

"But people will come," said Elsie; "you must expect it. They look for all sorts of invitations, and you must give them or mortally offend everybody."

Perhaps the idea of the gaiety that would ensue was not unpleasant to Elsie, in spite of her joy at Mellen's return; it was quite natural at her age, and to her character, which drooped in solitude like a flower deprived of the sun.

"Oh," said Mellen, "we will give them as many dinners and parties as they like, provided they won't demolish themselves with us; is not that so, Elizabeth?"

"Yes; I don't mind that so much."

"Shall you take a house in town, Grant?" asked Elsie.

"Do you particularly wish it?"

"Oh, it would be pleasant, of course."

"Just as you and Elizabeth choose," he said.

"For my part I would rather stay here," exclaimed Elizabeth.

"And so would I," said Mellen.

Elsie looked a little disappointed, but she concealed the feeling with her usual quickness.

"I have not told you what, Dr. Peters said," she continued.

"What?" her brother-asked, anxious at once.

"He thinks the air too strong for me in the winter; but, I dare say, it is only his fancy; I would not have either you or Elizabeth disturbed on my account."

"My dear child," cried Mellen, "that settles the matter at once; we will certainly go away from here before the cold weather comes; any where you like; will we not, Bessie?"

"Certainly," she answered, quietly.

Elsie looked triumphant; she was always elated at having her own way, whether the thing was of importance or not.

"We need not think about it now," she said, demurely; "it will be warm and pleasant for several weeks yet."

"But you must be careful," returned Mellen, dear child; I cannot reach home safely only to see your health give way."

"Oh, nonsense, Grant, don't begin to fidget! I am perfectly well; make him believe it, Bessie."

"I think so," she replied; "you are stronger than you look."

"Elsie requires great care," said Mellen, decidedly.

Elsie did not look displeased; she liked being considered weak and delicate; it made her more petted and at liberty to indulge her numberless whims and caprices.

The family had that evening entirely to themselves, and it passed off very pleasantly. Elizabeth and Elsie sang the old songs Mellen loved, and hey all talked and laughed gaily, forgetful for the time of any clouds which might have oppressed the minds of either.

The next morning when they met in the breakfast-room the post had arrived, and Dolph presented Elsie and Elizabeth with several letters; these were only the journals for Mellen, and he said, laughingly:

"The division is not just; Bessie having two letters; you might give me one."

"I am too selfish," she answered.

"Mine is from Mary Harrington," observed Elsie. "Bess, you shall not read yours till you have given us our coffee. I'll just see what the news says."

Elizabeth poured out the coffee while Elsie opened her note.

"She coming to-day," she exclaimed; "I told you so. She sends all sorts of messages to you, Grant; calls you a darling and a wonderful creature, and is dying to see you."

"Oh, of course," said Mellen.

"She asks after Mr. Rhodes, Bessie—poor old fellow—she has quite turned his head."

"What is that?" asked Mellen.

So Elsie explained how the widow delighted in worrying Miss Harrington, and making desperate love to the stout man on every occasion; and in laughing at her quaint speeches Elizabeth quite forgot her own griefies.

"Why, where are your letters?" asked Elsie.

"I forgot them," returned Elizabeth, drawing them—she has quite turned her head—and as she glanced at the superscription of the upper one, "it is only from the dressmaker."

Elsie drew it from her, and cried out:

"Why, this is from Tom Fuller; oh, see what it says."

"From Tom? oh, I am so glad; I have been expecting a letter for a week past."

Elizabeth took the letter, and her face lighted up quite joyously as she broke the seal and began to read.

"Well," said Elsie, impatiently, "what does he say? read it out."

Elizabeth uttered an exclamation of delight.

"Oh, you provoking creature," cried Elsie, "do tell us what it is?"

"You must have found a diamond mine," said Mellen.

"He has," echoed Elizabeth, "as good."

"Bless me," said Elsie, "will he go about covered with diamonds?"

"His old uncle has left him a fortune," explained Elizabeth.

Elsie fairly screamed.

"Who would have thought it! Only fancy Tom Fuller rich! Why he'll be robbed every day of his life."

"How much is it?" asked Mellen. "I am very glad. Tom deserves a little success, he is such a fine fellow."

"Thirty thousand a year," replied Elizabeth; "Tom is in a state of bewilderment that makes his letter sadly incoherent; he never expected a penny; his uncle changed his will at the last moment."

"But wasn't he your uncle, too?" asked Elsie.

"No; he was aunt Pullen's brother."

"Oh, let me see the letter," said Elsie.

Elizabeth gave it to her, but between excitement and his usual odd penmanship Tom's epistle was not a pleasant one to unpractised eyes, and Elsie went into shrieks over its appearance.

"He promised to bring me a bracelet," said she; "I'll be dowdy like this if I shall have no return—at the—he—can that be Millennium?"

"Scarcely, I should think," said Mellen, laughingly.

"Try and make it out, Bess," said Elsie, giving her the letter.

Elizabeth took it, looked at the lines to which she pointed, and after a moment's study read it correctly.

"I shall return by the Hammonia."

"Why that's due now," said Elsie.

Elizabeth glanced at the date.

"The letter has been delayed," she cried; "he may be here to-day."

She was in a state of great delight, and her companions fully sympathised with her eagerness.

"Well, Elizabeth, you will have to find Elsie," said Mellen; "why, he will give all he is worth to the person that asks first. Won't it be fun?"

"I shall not ask for anything," said Elsie; "if he offered me a diamond star, as you formerly did," said Elizabeth; "I will not have it."

"But I will," said Elsie. "Thirty thousand a year! I declare, he will act as if he had fallen from the moon."

About midday Mrs. Harrington arrived with a little party of friends, and soon after Mellen and his sister her till she had overwhelmed him with compliments and congratulations, all of which he received with becoming resignation. When they were quite alone she said to Elsie:

"I haven't seen anything of that mysterious creature, North, in an age; what can have become of him?"

"Horrid creature," cried Elsie, "don't mention his name! Now, Mary Harrington, don't forget for once in your life I shall know we have had even one visit from a stranger he would be furious; if you let it out neither Elizabeth or I will ever speak to you again."

"My dear, I won't open my lips."

"Mind you don't, that's all; if you do, I'll be even with you, as sure as my name is Elsie."

"You need not be so ferocious."

"Oh, I hate to be scolded, and Grant would be dreadfully angry! I promised Bessie I would warn you, so be sure and remember."

"I'll swear it if you like."

"Bless me, don't be tragic! The matter is of no consequence to me, only Bess makes such a point of it; besides that, I dread to see Grant angry."

"He never could be with you," said Mrs. Harrington.

"Well, it would be just as bad if he scolded her."

"How good you are!" cried the widow. "You are just the dearest thing in the world."

"Of course I am; but there's no use in standing here to say pretty things to each other, for there is no one to hear."

"Oh, you odd creature!" laughed Mrs. Harrington. "But, what man was the strangest, fascinating person—"

"There you go!" interrupted Elsie, angrily.

"My dear, there is no one in the room but ourselves."

"I don't care if there is not; I don't want to hear his name."

"I can't see why you dislike him so," pursued the widow. "It always seemed to me he and Elizabeth treated each other coldly—"

Elsie interrupted her, quite pale with anger.

"Mary Harrington," said she, "if you and I are to remain friends, stop this instant. I won't hear another word, nor must the subject come up again."

Mrs. Harrington was quite subdued by her friend's vehemence, and dropped the matter without another allusion.

When they went downstairs after the rest of the party were assembled, Mellen began laughing at the widow about the conquest she had made of Mr. Rhodes.

"Isn't it delicious?" she cried. "I just want you to see us together—it is better than a play."

"And Jemima's spite is something to witness," added Elsie. "I know she will poison you yet, Mary Harrington."

"I am on the watch constantly," replied the widow. "I don't engage a strange servant now for fear it should be one of the old maid's secret emissaries."

"You are as badly off as the Duke of Buckingham," said Mellen, laughing at her pretended distress.

"It is dreadful, I assure you," she said, shaking her plumage; "but it is very amusing, nevertheless."

Of course, if you can annoy somebody," answered Mellen; "that is the very acme of female happiness."

"Oh, you barbarous creature!" shrieked the widow. "Let's you ashamed to utter such atrocious sentiments! Mrs. Mellen, your husband has come back a perfect savage."

Elizabeth had never been never accurred to the widow that it could be at her own airs and graces; she was too thoroughly satisfied with her own beauty to fascination to suppose it possible, even for an instant.

"After all, it is tiresome to inspire a grande passion," said she, with a theatrical drawl.

"No woman ought to be better able to decide," cried Elsie; "you have made enough in all conscience."

"Oh, dear, no!" said the widow.

"Don't deny it," said Elsie, who never scrupled to make sport of her most intimate friends, and with all her fondness for Mrs. Harrington was always leading her on to do and say the most absurd things.

Elsie was in the most extravagant spirits, as she had been ever since her brother's return. She flitted about the house like a beautiful elf, and Elizabeth could see Mellen watched her every movement, while his face kindled with affection and pride.

"He has not changed," she thought, sadly; "all his tender words were only the first pleasure of finding himself at home."

Then she began to shudder, as she often did now when the icy wind of some stern thought crept over her.

"Better so," she muttered; "what should I do with love and affection—what right have I to expect them?"

But she banished these reflections quickly, determined to have at least a few days of perfect freedom from anxieties, a little season of peace and rest in which her mind and soul might restore its strength, like a seabird reposing on the sunlit bosom of some inland lake after the exhaustion of a long and perilous flight amid storm and tempest.

Mellen, too, was laid by the suspicious feelings which the strange circumstances connected with his return had caused, and appeared, as he could when disposed, the charming host possible.

Elizabeth sunned her heart in the smile which lighted up his face whenever their eyes met, and drew from the dark shadows resolutely aloof from the mind.

"Peace and rest!" she murmured. "I need them, and they shall not drive them at any cost."

The day passed as such days usually do; the guests were easily amused, and though the conversation might not have been such as altogether suited the intellectual tastes of Mellen and his wife, they were too well-bred for any expression of such feelings, and Elsie made even the nonsense charming by her brilliant sallies and buoyant spirits.

The widow had not forgotten her old desire to fascinate Elizabeth, and her efforts were highly amusing to the lookers-on. She was in doubt whether he preferred the queenly manner and repose of Elizabeth or the arch grace and exuberant gaiety of his sister, and attempted airs which she considered a happy medium between the two. Her efforts to support the double character delighted Elsie immensely, who, with the usual good-nature of intimate friends, made as much sport of her before her very face as she dared.

They were all assembled in the library before dinner, tired with laughing and roaming about, tired of rowing over the sunny waters, and glad to rest a little before the important business of dining should commence.

Suddenly there was a bustle in the hall, and a loud, goodnatured voice that made Elizabeth start to her feet.

"It's Tom," she cried. "Grantley, Tom has come."

She rushed into the hall, and sure enough there stood Tom, sunburned, a little thin from seasickness, but the same droll old Tom as ever.

He caught Elizabeth in his arms and uttered his first incoherent expressions of delight when Mellen came up, and Tom commenced shaking his two hands with immense energy, as if they had been pump handles and nothing but the greatest exertion on his part could save the ship.

"I'm so glad to see you!" he cried. "I'm so glad to get back. I declare I can't say a word."

"And I'm glad; very, very glad," replied Elizabeth.

"And we congratulate you heartily on your new fortune," said Mellen.

"Oh, don't speak of it," cried Tom; "it's no end of a bother to me already. God bless you, I don't know what to do with it! How—how is your sister?" he stammered.

"She is quite well," Mellen answered, "and will be charmed to see you; we were expecting you."

"That's more of you. Do you've only just got back! Well, it's good to get home, isn't it? that is, if I had any home—but it's dreary for a solitary chap like me."

"This house will always seem like home to you, I hope," said Mellen, kindly.

"Always," added Elizabeth; "don't forget that, Tom."

"You're too good to me," cried the grotesque fellow; "you always were!"

"Of course they were," said a laughing voice, that made Tom start, and appeared to take every particle of strength out of his limbs.

Elsie had followed them into the hall and suddenly appeared before Tom in her brilliant evening dress and weird loveliness, reducing him to a pitiable state at once.

"Don't you mean to speak to me?" pursued Elsie.

"Of—of course!" said Tom. "I'm so glad to see you—will you shake hands—will you—be—be glad to see me?"

"There is my hand," replied Elsie; "my pleasure depends on how agreeable you make yourself. I suppose you have come back with such fine foreign manners that you will hardly deign to notice us poor plain untravelled people."

"Oh, you don't think that!" said Tom. "You are laughing at me just as you always did."

"Did you bring me my bracelet?" demanded Elsie.

"Indeed I did; I'd have brought all Paris if I had thought it would please you."

Elizabeth now plainly thought poor Tom had returned no wiser than when he went away; but Mellen, man-like, never paying much heed to which Elsie's fascinations had thrown the honest fellow, and would not have thought seriously of the matter if he had.

"Of course you speak French like a native—Ircquois, I mean," pursued the pitiless Elsie.

"Just about," replied Tom, as ready as ever to laugh at his own blunders.

"So you did not forget the bracelet?" urged Elsie.

"Indeed I did not; it's in my carpet-bag."

"Then I will be goodnatured to you all the evening," said she, "and won't tease you the least mite."

Tom was quite in ecstacies at the prospect; but Mellen said:

"She can't keep her promise no matter how hard she tries—don't trust her, Fuller."

Elsie made a gesture of playful menace and carried Tom off into the drawing-room, quite regardless of the fact that Elizabeth had, as yet, found hardly an opportunity of speaking to him.

Mrs. Harrington was not excessively cordial in her greeting; as a poor man she had always liked Tom for his extreme good-nature and willingness to wait on her caprices to any extent, but now that he made his appearance in the character of a rich man, it was perfectly natural that she should look upon him, like the world generally, in a totally different light.

Tom's awkwardness would only be a pleasant eccentricity now; his unfortunate tastes in dress would only be the peculiarities of wealth, and all his good qualities, which had been quite overshadowed during his days of poverty, would now be fully appreciated.

Not that Tom ever thought how much would be the case himself; he was too unsuspicious even to think about it, and when people bestowed more interest in him than before he would only wonder at their kindness and think what a pleasant world this was after all, and what good-natured people there were in spite of the vile slanders of misanthropes.

Elsie kept her word; she did not tease Tom in the least, but deliberately bewildered him worse than ever with her arts and her coquetry—which set Elizabeth's teeth on edge, for she could not help it—but perhaps she had none at all, and was only obeying the whims of the moment.

Tom produced the gold bracelet and for Elsie's hair, and a lovely little ornament it was, with the gorget in its throat composed of emeralds and rubies and pearls, the slender link and delicate wings formed of the most beautiful enamel.

Elsie perched it among her curls and was happy as a child with her new toy. Not that the world was ever to much delighted with novel things, and nobody ever allowed the gloss to wear off them so quickly. In all probability she would rave over Tom's gift for a week, and by that time, if she did not lose it, would break the wings first, by way of amusement, or tear the tail off to make the paint of a stiletto, or ruin it in some other way, just to gratify her caprice and wicked love of destruction which was in her nature.

Tom Fuller spent the first happy evening he had known for months at Piney Cove, and he was so deliciously goodnatured and noisy in his pleasure that he would have supplied any lack of merriment on the part of the other guests if it had been necessary. But it was not.

CHAPTER XVII.

No man with any wisdom whatever thinks of returning from a journey without gladdening all the feminine hearts in his sphere with goodly presents, and Mellen had by no means forgotten his duty. There were all sorts of curious Chinese ornaments, wonderful pagodas for glove boxes, scented sandal wood repositories for laces, exquisitely carved ivory boxes, and such costly trifles which kept Elsie in perfect strokes of delight during the first glow of possession. He had brought stores of valuable ornaments which had once belonged to wealthy Mexican families, their value increased by the quaint, old time setting, and the romance connected with them; and Elsie contented herself in ornamenting herself with them, laughing at her own appearance, and dancing about like a regular Queen Mab.

Among these presents were a pair of very valuable bracelets, made after a fashion prevalent in Spain two hundred years ago—you may see such things even now treasured among the old Castilian grandees, to be kept through all changes of time and fortune, and aired on festive occasions only.

When Don LUY. was a youth and in love with Marie Mencini, he once offended her mortally by bestowing a similar bracelet upon a young stranger at the ceuta. A dare wager it required a whole set of jewels to put the haughty Marie in goodhumor and satisfy her Italian cupidity.

These bracelets Mellen brought with him, and gave one to his wife and the other to Elsie. They were made of a gauntlet-shaped piece of gold, widening at the back of the wrist, and covered with delicate chasing; the gold was so fine and thin that they were supple as a bit of kid. A double row of pearls and rubies ran about the edge, and the clasps were of diamonds, arranged in the shape of a shield.

These jewels were exceedingly valuable, though to anybody possessing the least fancy that made the least charm of the ornaments; they looked as if they owned a history, and one might have woven a thousand romances concerning the lives of those who had once worn them—that is, anybody who is not ashamed of being a dreamer in this running, practical age.

These were the last gifts Mellen displayed, and they certainly made a very splendid climax to the costly exhibition.

As I said, the first fortnight passed off delightfully, then the visitors departed, and there were a few days of quiet. The Mellens renewed the parties then by giving a dinner-party to several families in the neighborhood to whom they owed civility, and as Elsie said:

"They are stupid people to be sure, but then it's a little change from our own genial dullness, and we have been alone for three days."

"You are such a foolish puss!" returned Mellen.

"Oh, that's all very well," laughed Elsie; "but I don't wish to make a female Robinson Crusoe of myself, I do assure you. Bessie, old Mrs. Thompson will wear that wonderful new head-dress, and her son will ask me to sing and be so scarlet and fluttered when I look at him."

She ran on, and the expected guests in turn, and did it so cleverly that her companions were both obliged to laugh, so everybody prepared for the infliction of a country dinner in the best possible spirits. It was rather stupid to be sure, but Elsie so lighted up the room with her radiance, and Elizabeth was so pleasant a hostess in her stately beauty, that everything passed off quite tolerably, and even the most commonplace of the party warmed up a little under the influence of their hosts.

The ladies had risen from the table, giving the men an opportunity to enjoy their cigars in comfort, and were passing through the hall towards the drawing-room.

The scene was broad and full through the windows of the hall, and somebody remarked on the beauty of the night. Elsie darted away and flung open the door.

"You will get cold," Elizabeth said; "don't stand there."

Elsie stepped out on to portico in playful defiance of her sister, and they went after her, everybody expostulating with true feminine eagerness.

As Elsie ran away to the other end of the veranda something fell upon the stones with a ringing noise, followed by a little shriek which she uttered in starting back.

"What is the matter?" called out several voices, but before they reached her Elsie stooped, picked something up and ran towards them.

"I thought it was French," she said; "come in, I am chilled through and through."

She drove them playfully before her, and they all entered the portico laughing gaily—all but Elizabeth. It was a little thing to disturb any one, and her nerves must have been in a strange state from constant sleeplessness when this little event could have moved her so greatly. She leaned against the door-frame quite cold and chill. As Elsie passed her the girl slipped something in her hand, unperceived by the others.

Elizabeth stood motionless until they had all gone, then she started forward, gave one shuddering breath and moved towards the hanging lamp. She opened her hand and looked down at a slip of paper carefully folded about a broken bit of iron, as if to give it weight enough to be thrown with ure aim. She shut her hand quickly as if the sight of the harmless paper filled her with loathing, conquered the convulsion which shook her from head to foot, unfolded the note and read the brilliines it contained.

Then with spasmodic haste she tore the paper into fragments and thrust them down into the ball fire, watching till even the ashes were gone, fearful that any trace should be left.

"I must!" she muttered; "I must go—I dare not wait!" She looked eagerly about; the gay laughter of the men rang up from the dining-room; she could distinguish her husband's voice; through the closed doors of the parlors came the sound of the piano and a birdlike song, gleeful and joyous, with which Elsie was amusing the ladies.

Elizabeth flung her arms aloft with sudden passion.

"Laughing, singing," she moaned, "and I here with this horrible suffering! I must go—I must go!"

She caught up a shawl which lay on a chair, opened the outer door softly, hurried down the steps and disappeared among the trees.

Mr. Mellen did not give his male guests a very lengthy opportunity to enjoy the cigar and cognac he had no interest in their talk about the political affairs of the country, a recent bankruptcy, the price of corn, or any of the topics which came up, and some time before it might have been expected from his nature, anxious to counteract the dulness by the presence of his wife and sister, both of whom he had regarded all the evening with new tenderness he had thought lavishing like a couple of rare birds among all those fine feathers, he strolled away and was still at the piano when the gentlemen entered Mrs. Mellen looked about for Elizabeth, but she was not there.

"She had not come in yet," said old Mrs. Thompson, in answer to his inquiry.

Elsie had the words—she had ears like a little beast of prey.

"One of the servants stopped her," she called out; "she wants to see Bessie, I suppose, and will be better regulated. Come here, Grantley, and help me in this old song you like so much."

"In a moment, dear," he replied.

He left the room, fearing that Elizabeth might be drawn away by a headache. He had never felt any tenderly solicitous about her. The warm glow of sunshine had made his proud nature kindly genial. He was anxious to atone for all his old coldness and little neglect of her comfort.

He was crossing the hall, when the outer door opened and Elizabeth entered. She did not observe him, and he saw her in all her unrestrained emotion. She was deadly white, and rushed in as if seeking escape from some danger.

"Elizabeth!" he called out.

She started as if he had struck her, but she was accustomed now to controlling herself, and after that first trembling threw off her shawl and forced her face into composure.

"Where have you been?" he asked.

"Only on to the veranda," she said, a little too hurriedly; "I was so tired and my head ached—I wanted air."

He looked at her dissatisfied and suspicious.

"You might have caught your death," he said; "I wonder at you."

It was foolish," she returned, trying to laugh, "but the dinner was so long. Come into the drawing-room."

She made an effort to speak playfully, as Elsie might have done, but it was a failure.

"Your shoes are damp," he exclaimed suddenly; "you have been on the grass—pray what could you have been there?"

"I—I just ran down the steps—I won't do so again."

Elsie heard their voices—she always heard everything—and opened the door.

"Come in here, you naughty people," she cried, laughing and speaking with the gay grace she bore as a gleam in her eyes. "Oh! Mrs. Thompson, the husbands and wives who have been separated are now united lovers."

She forced them to enter, talking in her wild way, and making everybody laugh so much that neither Mellen nor Colonel Mellen's brow nor his wife's paleness were observed.

"You have been out," she found an opportunity to whisper to Elizabeth; "you must be mad!"

"I shall be!" groaned the woman; "I shall be!"

Elsie gave an impatient gesture and ran away from her. The very sight of her carelessness and gaiety made Elizabeth feel how necessary it was to be composed; her husband was watching her closely. They asked her to play, and she went to the piano and played one of her most brilliant pieces—to sing, and her rich contralto voice rang with new passion and power. I tell you even women can only marvel at the power many of the sex preserve over themselves when playing for a husband's sake, and the least betrayal of look or movement might be full of danger.

The evening passed off without further incident, and the guests went away delighted with their reception, thinking what agreeable people the Mellens were, and how happy they must be in their domestic circle.

"Oh—oh—oh!" cried Elsie, with a yawn that distorted her pretty mouth out of all proportion. "Thank heaven, they are gone! I am sure another half hour would have killed me."

"You deceitful little thing!" said her brother, who had entirely recovered his cheerfulness. "I heard you tell poor young Thompson that you had never enjoyed yourself so thoroughly."

"Of course I did; what else could I say."

Mr. Mellen laughed and went out of the room.

Elsie was standing by the fire, she was always complaining of cold, and Elizabeth walked towards her as the door closed.

"Don't!" whispered Elsie, "you are going to talk—don't!"

Elizabeth dropped into a seat with a wearied look, such as a person wears after hours of self-restraint.

"It's no use to talk," she said.

"You ought not to have gone out——"

"I know; but I dared not wait. Oh, Elsie! such a scene——"

"Be still!" exclaimed Elsie, with the old passion which seemed so foreign to her nature. "I can't hear—I won't! Grantley saw you!"

"Yes; he was in the hall when I entered," she replied, in the same dreary way. "I know, I feel that something will happen at last."

"There must not—there shall not!" broke in Elsie.

"Such madness—such greedy selfishness——"

"Don't tell me," shivered Elsie; "please don't!" Elizabeth clasped her hands into her lap with a gesture full of weariness and desolation; as they fell apart she uttered a low cry.

"What is it?" cried Elsie. Don't frighten me!"

"My bracelet!" moaned Elizabeth. "My bracelet!"

"You have lost it?"

"Gone, I tell you! He would have money—was nearly mad—I pulled it off to pacify him."

"Which scoundrel has got it now one?"

"Yes; the one Grantley brought me. Oh, what shall I do?"

"It won't notice it," said Elsie; "you can wear mine."

"He will notice it," returned Elizabeth. "It may be anywhere, and who may find it."

"You can say that you lost it."

"But he is so suspicious."

Elsie drew her head away from her sister, and said Elsie, fretfully.

"It is easy for you to talk" exclaimed Elizabeth. "But I will be seen in my place, listening to those threats——"

"Stop, stop!" Elsie almost shrieked, hiding her face in her hands. "I am going into spasms—I shall choke!"

"But a crisis is near" exclaimed Elizabeth. "Oh! you know all that a bad, desperate creature is capable of to extricate himself from his ends."

"I can't do anything," moaned Elsie. "What am I in all this? You promised to leave me in peace——"

"So I will, Elsie—I will. God knows I am ready to bear my burthen alone; but sometimes I must speak."

"It does no good," said Elsie, beginning to cry. "I'd rather be dead than live in this way"

"Be a woman!" cried Elizabeth, roused into severity.

"It's all very well for you to talk, you are a great strong thing. I am a woman that you are big, but your nerves are like iron and I am so weak. Grantley says he believes the least thing would kill me."

Passionate indignation lighted up Elizabeth's face for an instant, but it softened into pity, like that with which a strong man might have regarded a pet animal whimpering under a hurt.

"Be good to me," said Elsie. "I can't help you. I don't want to be selfish, but I must have my sunshine. I don't care even to talk about it at all. If Grant ever should find out anything, even my talking to you about it would enrage him so."

"And what would become of me?" demanded Elizabeth. "Do you never think of what would happen to me?"

"Oh, but he won't find out anything," urged Elsie, changing her tone at once. "Just let things rest. The wretch will be quiet for a time."

"No, no; I tell you money must be raised."

"More money?"

"I promised it; there was no other way. But heaven knows where to get it from all over it."

"Well, tell Grant about some family or household——"

"Lies!" interrupted Elizabeth; "always lies! Sinking deeper into the mire every day. I tell you this constant deceit makes me hate myself!"

"Now you are going to spoil it. Oh, my head!"

"Hush, I say! You are safe."

"Whatever comes I shall not be dragged into it?" pleaded Elsie.

"No, no; have I not promised?" returned Elizabeth, in her anguish and her bitterness hardly noticing the girl's words.

Elsie threw both arms about her neck and kissed her.

"You are so good!" she said. "Oh, I wish I wasn't such a weak little thing! Don't despise me, Bessie?"

"No—I—I don't. Your arm hurts me" and Elizabeth pushed her away, struggling hard to be calm.

"If I had never known——"

But Elizabeth checked the selfish wail.

"It is too late now to think of that. I tell you I shall not trouble you any more."

"When the paper fell on the stones," said Elsie, "I was so frightened."

Elizabeth gasped for breath at the very thought.

"But I managed about it. I am very weak and nervous, but I have my wits about me sometimes."

Elizabeth was shivering from head to foot, whether with fear or from the knowledge of evil which this young girl had gained through her, or some sudden fear, no one could tell.

"I must go to town," she said; "but what excuse can I make?"

"Oh, anything! Tell Grant we want to make something for baby. But why must you go?"

"The money, I tell you the money. I have those stocks; if I could sell them. I might tell Mr. Hinchley I was in debt, and feared to have my husband know it. Another lie—another lie!"

"Oh," groaned Elsie, "the lying is the least part of it!"

"You don't know the worst. If you had to face him! Oh, Elsie, the shame, the remorse!"

She wrung her hands again with the same passionate fury she had displayed after reading the note, till Elsie began to grow hysterical and cry out.

"You must stop! you must stop!"

Elizabeth made an effort to control her own suffering and soothe the girl's nervous paroxysm, to which she gave way half to escape a scene.

By the time they were both quieted Mr. Mellen returned to the room, and by one of those evil chances that often happen he began speaking of the very subject that had roused their fears.

"Those bracelets are the admiration of everybody," he said.

Elizabeth glanced at Elsie. Her first impulse was to hide her hands, but she checked that and looked herself to utter some sort of answer to his remark.

Elsie gave another long yawn.

"Oh, Grantley," she exclaimed; "I advise you both to do the same."

"I wish I understood the meaning of the device. Let me see your bracelet, Bessie," he continued, bent on his own train of thought, and not heeding his sister. Just let me look——"

Elsie thrust out her arm.

"Look at mine," she said.

"No, no; Bessie's has a different design. I want to see something. Show me yours, Elizabeth."

Elizabeth did not stir. Whiter she could not grow, but a hopeless despair settled over her face pitiful to witness.

"Can't you show me your bracelet?" demanded her husband, with his natural impatience.

"I haven't it," she faltered.

"Why, I saw it on your arm at dinner!"

"Oh, don't bother, Grant," interposed Elsie; "talking about jewels when one has a bad asleep."

"Elizabeth, where is your bracelet?" demanded her husband, imperiously.

The exigency of the case gave her courage.

"I have lost it," she said, her voice sounding fairly indifferent from the effort she made at composure.

"Lost it!" he repeated. "How? Where?"

"While I was out——"

She was beginning to tell me when you came in," interrupted Elsie. "We are both frightened to death, so don't scold."

"Such inexcusable carelessness," continued Mr. Mellen. "At least, Elizabeth, you need not appear so indifferent."

"I am sorry," she answered, coldly.

"Oh, if I had lost mine I should be wretched," cried Elsie, kissing hers. "You dear bracelet!"

Elizabeth shot one terrible look at her, but was silent.

"I am glad that you at least prize my gift," said Mr. Mellen. "I suppose you have not taken the trouble to search, Elizabeth?"

"I have had no time——"

"The moon is down," said Elsie.

"There will be servants, I suppose."

He rang and ordered the servant to bring a lantern, went out and searched for the missing ornament, while Elsie lighted candle after candle in the hall, and Elizabeth stood, cold and white, in the way.

Clorinda came out of her domains while Mr. Mellen and the servant were in the hall.

"Lost somethin', marster?" she demanded, with the coolness peculiar to her race.

"Miss Elsie lost her bracelet," interposed Dolph.

"Law!" cried Clorinda, not perceiving her mistress on the verandah. "I rather reckon nobody loses things so; 'taint a month since she lost a diamond ring, and all she said, when her maid missed it, was, 'I s'pose I've dropped it.'"

This was an aside to Dolph, but Mr. Mellen heard the words plainly, so did Elizabeth.

"If his wife lost a ring," pursued Clorinda, "I heard steps early in de evenin', I reckon I did, though missis called me a foolish cullud puson when I told her of it next morning 'cos Dar's trees about, now; 'member I tells you so."

"Clorinda," called Elizabeth, "go into the house. The next time you venture any remark on me you will leave my service."

Clorinda called back as if she had been shot, and darted into her own dominions, less favorably disposed than ever towards her mistress for reproving her before Dolph.

Mr. Mellen had reclaimed the man, walked into the verandah and confronted Elizabeth, who was pale in the moonlight. His agitation made Elizabeth more sternly cold and proud than before, and he was, in his suspicious, jealous moments in the old time.

"Did you lose that bracelet, Elizabeth?" he asked.

"Did I not say so?" she retorted.

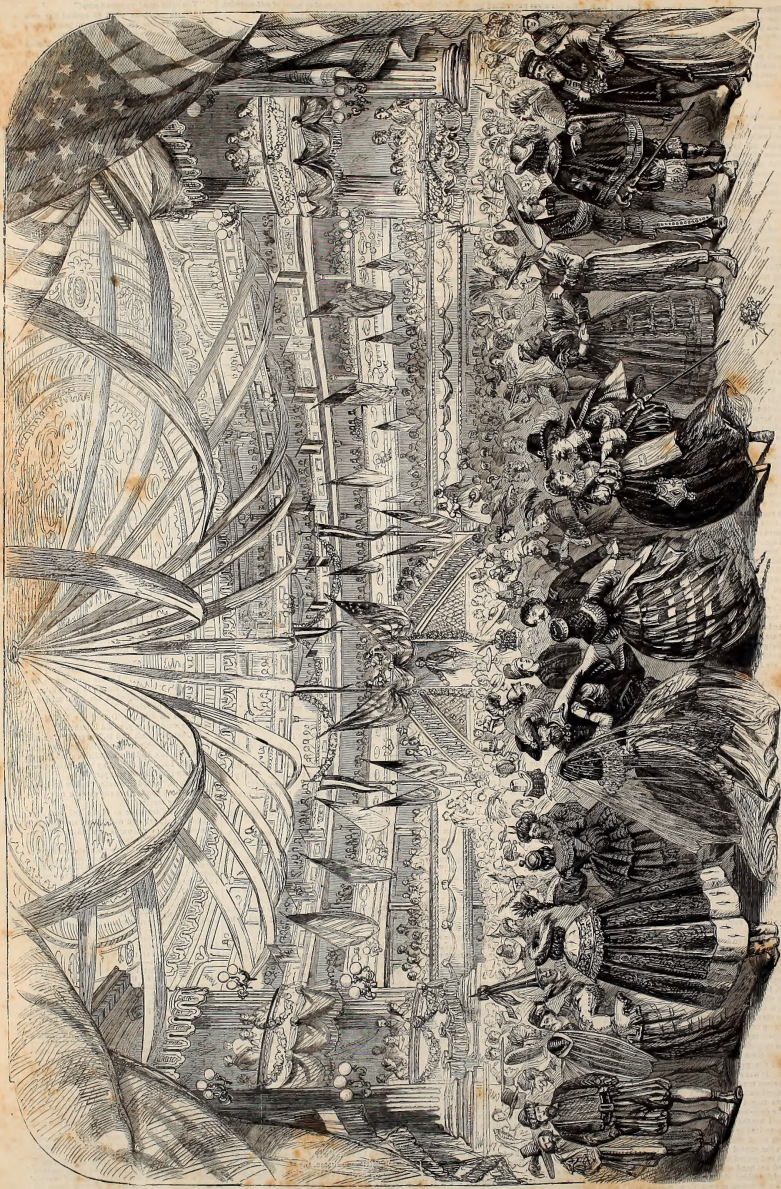
"I can't understand it," he went on; "these sudden frights and tremors, these mysterious losses——"

"The old suspicions," she broke in, goaded into defiance by her mortal danger. "You promised me to have done with all those feelings."

"Admit nothing. I will not talk to you when you speak in that tone. I am sorry the bracelet is lost, but I am sure it will be found at last."

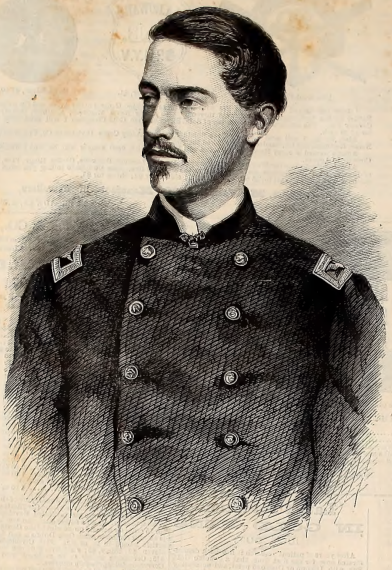
He heard it all, and when the dialogue reached that point she crept quietly upstairs, determined that at least she would be beyond even the hearing of their difficulty.

For a few moments they retorted bitterly upon each other, then Elizabeth had been Elizabeth's way to bear in silence, but it is hard to be patient when one has wrong to conceal.



It was all very unsatisfactory, but there the matter ended.

The next morning Mr. Mellen made another thorough search for the bracelet. Still no sign of it was discovered, not he did find traces of footsteps in the grass, which proved the truth of Clorinda's suspicions.



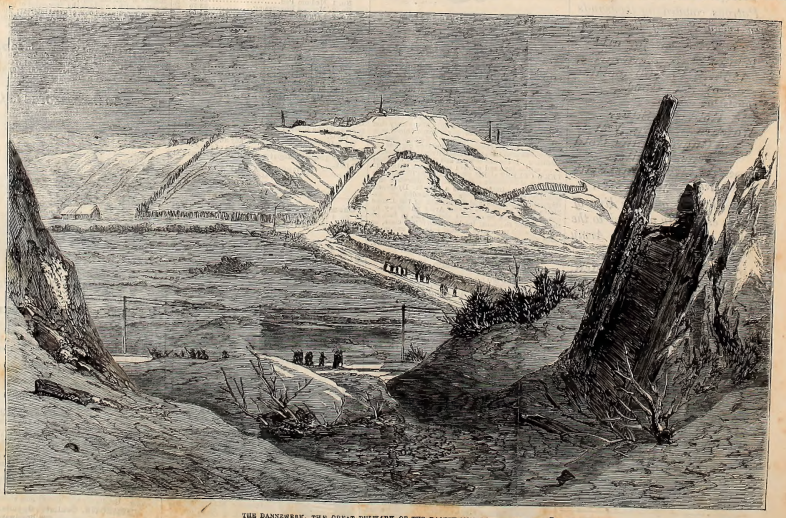
"It's over, at all events," said Elsie, as she met Elizabeth on the stairs.

"Over!" repeated the half-distracted woman, desperately; "who can tell how or when it may come up again?"

Elsie kissed her and flew away, leaving Elizabeth to seek solitude in her chamber, while she went in search of her brother, not with the object of benefiting Elizabeth, but anxious to impress upon his mind that she at least did nothing to distress or vex him.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY IN NEW ORLEANS.—THE MASQUERADE BALL GIVEN BY MRS. GENERAL BANKS.—Sketched by C. E. H. Bourne.—See Page 7.

COL. ULRIC DAHLGREN, U. S. A.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.



GEN. GEORGE A. CUSTER, U. S. A.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.—PAGE 7.

COL. ULRIC DAHLGREN.

THE brutal circumstances attending the death of Col. Dahlgren, no less than his youth and distinguished services, have excited throughout the land a feeling akin to that kindled by the fall of the earlier martyrs of the struggle, before the myriad-handed Death had, by his repeated blows, familiarized us to the loss of the young, the brave and the good.

Col. Ulric Dahlgren was the son of Admiral Dahlgren, and at the opening of the war his predilections were for active service in the navy, but he abandoned that idea to assist his father in the Navy Ordnance Department. At the time Gen. Saxton was in command at Harper's Ferry, and that place was first threatened, Com. Dahlgren received instructions to place a naval battery on Maryland heights. No suitable person being at that time available to take charge of this battery, Com. Dahlgren selected his son Ulric, who was familiar with all the details of ordnance and gunnery, and under his supervision the two 9-inch Dahlgren guns were placed in position and successfully worked. He thus became Captain of artillery, and when Gen. Sigel took command was appointed on the staff, and became Aide-de-camp, with the rank of Captain. He continued with Sigel through Pope's campaign, and was especially distinguished in the artillery movements at the second battle of Bull Run.

He next accompanied Gen. Stahel in several reconnoissances and scouts, and when the army moved down into Virginia, in November, 1862, the 11th corps advanced to Gainesville, and from that place Capt. Dahlgren, with Gen. Sigel's bodyguard, made the attack upon Fredericksburg, which has now become history. Gen. Burnside expressed his thanks for the valuable information furnished. Returning with the corps to Fairfax Court-house, he was sent for by Gen. Burnside, prior to the assault upon Fredericksburg, and detailed as Special Aide upon that General's staff. At the crossing of the Rappahannock he was the only one of Gen. Burnside's Aides who went in the boats and was one of the first to land.

THE DANNEWERK, THE GREAT BULWARK OF THE DANISH MONARCHY.—SEE PAGE 7.

When Gen. Hooker took command Capt. Dahlgren was transferred to his staff, and distinguished himself at Chancellorsville and in the cavalry fights at Aldie and its vicinity. Learning that a bearer of dispatches to Gen. Lee was en route for that General, he secured the country between the columns of the rebel army until he anticipated his arrival at Greencastle, where he attacked and captured the whole party, including the dispatches.

To find his way to Gen. Meade's headquarters was no easy task, but by adopting every possible resource, dividing his men into small parties, and riding himself with only an orderly, he succeeded in reaching headquarters after the first day's fighting, where before the council of war was being held which was to decide the fate of the army. Covered with dust from his long ride, he walked into the General's tent and presented before the council the dispatches of Jefferson Davis to Gen. Lee, the most important capture which could possibly have been made.

Returning with his 100 men, he assisted materially in worrying the enemy, by destroying wagon trains and attacking them at every point.

On the retreat of the rebels he was in the famous charge into Hagerstown, where, of five officers who led, two were killed, he was wounded and one was saved by his scabbard. Capt. Dahlgren was then brought to Washington, where amputation was performed. Owing to the severe inflammation which had set in, the operation was a very critical one, and it was not until five operations had been performed that the wound could heal. His life was despaired of at the time, but his indomitable will brought him safely through the trial.

His services won him a Colonel's commission. As soon as he was able to walk on crutches he sought to resume active service, and at his own urgent request took part in the raid in which he fell.

WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE?

What's the difference between your greatcoat and a baby? One you wear and the other you wean.

What is the difference between perseverance and obstinacy? In a strong will and the other is a strong won't.

What is the difference between a miller and a matron? One is a moth and the other is a mother.

What's the difference between a boy running after a girl and running after a carriage? One chases the miss and the other misses the chaise.

What is the difference between the chief effect of catching cold and the loss of Grace? In the one case it is you cough; in the other it is Corfu.

What is the difference between Noah's Ark and an Archbishop? Noah's Ark was a pretty high ark, but an Archbishop is a hierarch (higher-ark).

A SCHOOLMASTER in one of the neighboring towns, while on his morning walk, passed by the door of a neighbor, who was excavating a log for a pig-trough. "Why," said the schoolmaster, "Mr. ——, you are not furniture enough yet!"

"Yes," said the man, "I supply for my own family, and expect to board the schoolmaster this winter, and am making preparations."

In a year a woman asks you what you will bet, answer that you will lay your head to hers.

The evils from which a morbid man suffers most are those that don't happen.

A SINGLE woman has generally but a single purpose, and we all know what that is.

The best capital to begin life on is a capital wife.

BOURICAULT'S Notion of Copyright—The Right to Copy.

Ten years in the Business.

Patrons counted by thousands in every State of the Union.

A Premium for all!

Evans' New Enterprise, 1864, $3000 worth of New Goods, consisting of

Gold and Silver Watches, Jewelry, Vest and Guard Chains, Gold Pens, Pencils, Lockets, Medallions, Sets of Jewelry, &c., &c.,

together with a large line of goods especially adapted to the wants of our Soldiers, Army and Navy, to be sold in lots at One Dollar Each, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive. Premium Orders for above goods, sent to any address, on receipt of 10 cents.

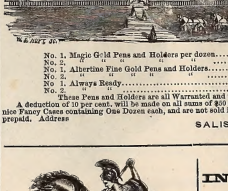
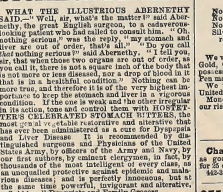
Send your orders to

G. G. EVANS, Publisher, 630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

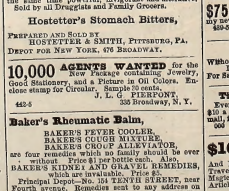


N. B. A classified Catalogue, of Books with Price Lists of Photograph Card Pictures and Albums, sent on receipt of 5 cents.

Address, G. G. EVANS, Philadelphia, Pa.

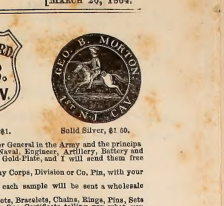


Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue. 1,000 VICTOR DELAFO, 50 Nassau St., N. Y.



Fine Gold Plate, $1.50.

I have just issued a New Battle Pin with a likeness of either General in the Army and the principa Battles he has been engaged in engraved thereon. Also a new Naval Engineers, Artillery, Battery and Cavalry Pin. The above are all made either of Solid Silver or Fine Gold-Plate, and I will send them free for $1 50 each.



Also, for $1, I will send a Solid Silver Shield or either Army Corps, Division or Co. Pin, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely engraved thereon.

Agents wanted in every Regiment, Hospital and Vessel. With each sample will be sent a wholesale Circular to Agents.

Also, the Republican for Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils, Lockets, Bracelets, Chains, Rings, Pins, Sets of Jewelry, Studs and Buttons, and everything in the Jewelry line. One Cent'sende telling you what you can have for $1 will be sent for 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5.

S. M. WARD & CO., Manufacturing Jewellers,

208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Solid Silver, $1. Solid Silver, $1 50.

We are now offering our celebrated

GOLD PENS

AND

EXTENSION

SILVER-PLATED

HOLDERS

At the following low prices for Cash:

No. 1. Magic Gold Pens and Holders per dozen.....$ 5 50
No. 2. " " " " 7 00
No. 3. Albertine Fine Gold Pens and Holders..... 8 00
No. 3. " " " 9 00
No. 1. Always Ready..... 11 50
No. 2. " " 13 00

These Pens and Holders are all Warranted and will retail from $2 to $3 each.

A deduction of 10 per cent. will be made on all sums of $50 and upwards. Our Pens and Holders have many Fancy Cases containing One Dozen each, and are sold in less quantities. Sent by mail or express prepaid. Address

SALISBURY, BROS. & CO.,
Providence, R. I

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS

WHAT THE ILLUSTRIOUS ABERNETHY SAID.—"Well, sir, what's the matter?" said Abernethy, the great English surgeon, to a cadaverous looking patient who had called to consult him. "Oh, nothing serious," was the reply; "my stomach and nothing serious!" said Abernethy. "I tell you, sir, that when those two organs are out of order, as you call it, there is not a single inch of the body that is not more diseased, nor a drop of blood in it that is in a healthful condition." Nothing can be more true, and therefore it is of the very highest importance to keep the stomach and liver in a vigorous condition. If the one is weak and the other irregular in its action, tone and control them with HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS, the most special of all reliable restoratives and alteratives that have been administered as a cure for Dyspepsia and Liver Disease. It is recommended by distinguished surgeons and Physicians of the United States Army, by officers of the Army and Navy, by first authors, by eminent clergymen, in fact, by thousands of the most intelligent of every class, as the most qualified protective against epidemic and malarious diseases; and is perfectly innocuous, but at the same time powerful, invigorant and alterative, Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 676 BROADWAY.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED for the New Packages of Diamond-Dyes. Good Stationery, and a Picture in Oil Colors. Enclose stamp for Circular. Sample 10 cents.
J. L. G. PIERPONT
No. 1 Broadway, N. Y.
442-5

Baker's Rheumatic Balm,

BAKER'S FEVER COOLER.
BAKER'S COUGH MIXTURE.
BAKER'S CROUP ALLEVIATOR,

are four remedies which no family should be ever without. Price $1 per bottle each. Ask for BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES, which are invaluable. Price $5.

Principal Depot—No. 154 TENTH STREET, near Fourth avenue. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price. 430-51

Just What Every Family Wants!

SAVAGE & CO'S NO CHIMNEY BURNER for Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene oil with a brilliant light, without shimmer, smoke or odor. Saves 25 per cent. Office, 302 FULTON STREET, N. Y. Agents wanted. Send for Circular. Sample sent free for 50 cents. American Institute awarded First Premium and Medal, 1863.

Latest Invention IN GOLD PENS

JUST OUT.

After years of patient research it has been demonstrated now, for the first time, that a genuine Gold Pen, with Iridium or Diamond point, and possessing all the elasticity and durability of the highest-priced Pen made, can be produced at prices far below anything of the kind heretofore offered. Tears have been spent in trying to produce an Elastic and Diamond-pointed Pen at a low price, and until now all attempts have been futile. We have nothing to say against parties advertising Iridiumized Pens and selling them Gold. We know that ours is the only Solid Gold and Genuine Iridiumized Elastic Pen in the market that can be afforded at anywhere near our prices.

Trade Prices, per Dozen.

No. 1. Medium Pen.....$3 50
No. 2. Medium Engrossing.....3 75
No. 3. Large Engrossing.....4 50
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders, in Morocco Cases (extra per doz.).....$4 00

A discount of 10 per cent. on all orders of $20 and upwards.

Sample Pens.

No. 1. Medium Pen.....40 cts.
No. 2. Medium Engrossing.....50 cts.
No. 3. Large Engrossing.....65 cts.
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders, in Morocco Case (extra).....50 cts.

WARRANTED.

We warrant Every Pen for one year, and to be Solid Gold, Genuine Iridium or Diamond-pointed, and to possess all the Elasticity of the most Expensive Gold Pen made.

We will send these Pens to any address in the United States, postage paid, on receipt of price.

Money properly Registered and Sealed comes at our risk.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
Sole Manufacturers,
No. 181 Broadway, N. Y.

Champagne Wine at 10 cts. a bottle, as good as sold for $1. Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
W. FRIZZELL, Baltimore, Md.
442-3

$75 A MONTH!—I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.
440-51

Straight Hair Made Wavy.

Without heating it, by using
IVIN'S PATENT HAIR CRIMPERS.
For Sale at Variety Stores. 434-66

The Great Money-Making Article.

Everybody wants it. Agents or Solicitors can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.
000

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New! Burglar-Proof Traveller's Lock, Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, Magic Tobacco Box, and 20 more Novel and Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.
S. W. RICE & CO., 53 Nassau St., N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY,

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers Amateurs, etc., etc.

And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular to

J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,

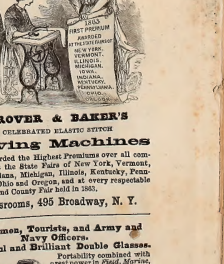
42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office) offer for sale the following Magnificent Stock of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	EACH
150 Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	$15
500 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	$15
3000 Vest and Neck Chains	$3 00 to $10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Cameo Brooches	3 00 to 6 00
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	3 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	3 00 to 6 00
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	3 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	3 00 to 6 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	3 00 to 6 00
5000 Gents' Breast Pins	2 50 to 5 00
3000 Watch Keys	2 50 to 5 00
2500 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00
2500 Sets of Sleeve Studs	2 50 to 6 00
2500 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Plain Rings	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Lockets	3 00 to 6 00
10000 Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mtd Pencils	3 00 to 6 00
5000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Holders	3 00 to 6 00
Coral Pendants	4 00 to 6 00



The articles in the stock of Jewelry are of the neatest and most fashionable styles. Certificates of all the various articles are put in sealed envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail for 25 cents each; and on receipt of Certificate, it is at your option to send ONE DOLLAR and take the article named in it, or not. For Certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred their choice, $15; and more according to amount in documents to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail 25 cts., together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes —an extraordinary book, of great interest; Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 42 Days." Dont be humbugged with ONGUENTS. The GREAT SECRET fully explained in the BOOK OF WONDERS, 12,000 sold. 18th Ed. Only 30 cts.; 8 for $1. Address C. B. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

50 FIRST PREMIUMS in 1863

GROVER & BAKER'S

CELEBRATED ELASTIC STITCH

Sewing Machines

Were awarded the Highest Premiums over all competitors at the State Fairs of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Oregon, and at every respectable Institute and County Fair held in 1863.

Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, N. Y.

Sportsmen, Tourists, and Army and Navy Officers.

Powerful and Brilliant Portable Glasses.

Portability combined with great power. Field, Marine, Tourists', Opera and general out-door day and night glasses. Descriptive glasses, each adapted directly a person to know him at from 2 to, 6 miles. Spectacles of the greatest transparent power to strengthen and improve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent changes. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.

SIMMONS, Oculists—Opticians,
000 606 Broadway, N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
368 Broadway, New York.

VETERAN © G.MORTON & Co E.48TH N.Y.V.

VETERAN SOLDIERS

We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Pins for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field at $1 25 each, also, all the various Army Badges, worn by the different grades in the service one new pattern. Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers,
208 Broadway, N.Y.

Solid 18 k. Gold, $6 50. Solid Silver, $1 50.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps and Lanterns, gives a brilliant light, free from smoke or smell, and needs NO chimney. We are now prepared to supply the increasing demand for this superior Burner, which everybody gives satisfaction. Sample sent, postpaid, for 25 cents.

Agents wanted. Send for Circular.

F. ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers,
2 Platt Street, N. Y.

The World's Conqueror!

For Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, &c. No sick person need despair while a bottle of this medicine is left. Send for circular and you will be convinced. It has no equal. Price $1. Six bottles for $5.

DR. CLINTON KUYPERS.
Office, 36 Beekman street, N. Y.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated "Parisian Ladies' Incognito," it whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 193 South-Seventh Street, and 41 South-Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

J. G. SCHULL.
MERCHANT TAILOR
32 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings, which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.

C. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pencils, Colored Pencils, and 13 other articles. 15 Circulars free. JOHN F. LODD, Redford, Mich.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD

30,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.

WORTH $150,000,

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Town and Town in the Country.

Six Certificates can be ordered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $15.

Address C. F. SHULTIS,
437-49 280 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All about it you know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by M. EARL, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address 26 White Street, New York.

Philadelphia Package Stationery.

ARMSTRONG & SHEPHERD having bought out No. 24 South Third Street, offer to Travelling and Local Agents attractive inducements in new and improved styles of stationery Packages, of large profits to Agents. Send orders and for Circulars.

Phila., Feb. 1864.

False Whiskers and Moustaches, $2 50 a pair. WHISKERS $2 a pair. Moustaches 50 cts. and $1 a pair. Sent free, by mail. Address
441-2 C. W. FHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Whiskers in 42 Days or money refunded. My Onguent will force them to grow heavily in Six Weeks on the smoothest face without injury to the skin. Sent postpaid, for 50 cents a package or 2 for $1. Address
440-5 A. E. CHAPMAN, Springfield, Mass.

Headquarters for Officers' and Soldiers' Pins of Every Description!

We will send either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, in Solid Silver, with your Name, Regiment and Co., handsomely Engraved upon it, on the receipt of $1. Also, a Keamy Cross in Fine Gold Plate for $1, or a New Style Solid Silver Cavalry Pin, Engraved as above, for $1 50.

☞ Agents sending for 10 or more at one time will be allowed 15 cents on each.

ALSO, THE EMPORIUM FOR WATCHES AND JEWELRY.

75,000 Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils,

Vest, Guard and Neck Chains, Chatelaine Chains and Pins, Engraved Bracelets, Engraved Spring Lockets, Seal Stone Rings, California Rings, Chased Rings, Masonic Rings and Pins, Gents' California Diamond Pins, California Diamond Ear Drops, Beautiful Sets of Jewelry, New Styles Studs and Buttons, etc., etc., etc.,

WORTH $400,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

Certificates naming each article are put into Envelopes, Sealed and Mixed, and sent without regard to choice.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for doing the business 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the request is made to know what you can have

Five Certificates can be ordered for $1—thirty for $5—sixty five for $10—and one hundred for $15.

With the information of what you can have will be sent a Circular giving full instructions to Agents and a Full Catalogue of articles.

S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome the effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S MINNEHAHA HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled in keeping the hair in curl

HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM oils and colors the hair at the same time; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and prescribes youthfulness of appearance. Sold everywhere.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

Swords, Sashes, Belts.
Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords, $31 06 B. KITTREDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Ha! Ha!! ☞"Yankees Outwitted.
Recipe to make the "Genuine Coloring Extract." ☞Remember! without "Apples?" or other fruit, in (only) 12 hours! Will Secret, postpaid, for 10 cts.
442-2 Address F. O. Box 28, Hawley, Pa.

Do You Want to get Married?
"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, Illustrated. Treating on "Matrimony;" Plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry any person they choose, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail in sealed envelope, on receipt of 25 cents.
E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1823, Portland, Me.
442-52

We have furnished our Wesson's Rifles as follows:

State of Kentucky	1,366
State of Indiana	760
General Rifle Regiment	450
Colonel Collins	320
Capt. Buck's Co., Chillicothe, O.
Col. Grant's " Kansas.
Capt. Child's " Athens, Ill.
Capt. Whybacker's Co., Canton, Mo.
Capt. McGee's " Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Hunter's " Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Olds' " Perryaville, Ind.

LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 12, 1862.

DEAR SIR.—The Rifle sent me proved to a severe test on the 7th, at the State Fair, AND WON A GRAND OF COLORS, in a contest with the BEST ENFANTRY COMPANIES. They were to fire in succession, each man to discharge SIXTEEN shots and shoot at the command "Fire." We were OUT-NUMBERED TWO HUNDRED LIVES to one in infantry. 72 dance 300 yards. We hit the target 45 times out of 100 shots. The number of hits made by any infantry company was 13. Thus establishing the superiority of the RIFLE OVER THE (Wesson) Gun.

M. S. GRANT,
Col. 1st Kansas Cav.

TO MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.
B. KITTREDGE & CO.,
453-44 Cincinnati, Ohio.

Corns and Bunyons.
Their Cause, Prevention and Cure. Fully explained in the Great Work just published by DR. MERRIFIELD. Mailed everywhere for 25 cents. Address F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most desirable Cards ever published—including the Presidential Series. Sparkling with Love; Bedtime; Rombarding Charleston; Sinking in the Sea; etc., etc. Sent by mail, post paid, or $1 for the set of 16 choice cards.

G. W. CARLETON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Excelsior Music-Book.—For Violin, Flute, Fife or Cornet. "I love that dear old Flag the best" —Flute. "When Johnny Comes Marching Home" Fortune is too Small for me." "My Love is on the Battle-field." Sixteen pages of MUSICAL MELODY. MYRICK. Illustrated price list sent on receipt of postage. FIELD, LEARNED & BOWERY, N. Y.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc., supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope, a copy may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings county, N. Y. 000

MOSKWA!

For Chronic and Inflammatory Rheumatism, Hip Complaint, Paralyzed Limbs, White Swelling, Neuralgia, Cramp, Spinal Disease, Pain in the Breast, Side or Loins, &c., etc. The utmost Magical effect of this remedy has enabled the Proprietor to cure not only his Thousands but his Tens of Thousands within the last 40 years of his practice, and he challenges the world to produce an article of superior merit, as the ingredients combined possess virtues of the highest order. Afflicted sufferers, try it! Price $1—six bottles for $5. Send for Circular.

DR. CLINTON KUYPERS,
Office, 36 Beekman St., N. Y.

Remington's

Army and Navy REVOLVER!

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
635-50 Ilion, N. Y.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, Instructive. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Catalogue.
000 PIERRE SIBON 35 Ann St., N. Y.

CHLOASMA, OR MOTH PATCHES!

Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion, as the discolored spots on the skin show more strongly on a blonde than on a brunette, but they contribute greatly in marring the beauty on either; and the following will remove moth patches from the face, and restore the skin in texture or color, would no doubt be considered a great achievement in the medical science. Dr. B. C. PERRY, 49 Bond street, having devoted his whole time and attention to Diseases of the Skin, will guarantee to remove Moth Patches, Freckles and other Discolorations of the face without injury to either texture or color of the skin. His success in this as in other branches of his specialty—DISEASES OF THE SCALP and LOSS OF HAIR—will warrant him in guaranteeing a perfect CURE. For particulars, address enclosing stamp.

DR. B. C. PERRY, 49 Bond Street, N. Y.

AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1863. The best and only reliable Billiard Table manufactured. Balls, Cues, and every article relating to Billiards, for sale.

PHELAN & COLLENDER,
435-7 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

New Catalogue of Jewelry sent free.
438-43 Address EROS. CAFFERTY & CO., Providence, R. I.

GREAT TRIUMPH.

STEINWAY & SONS, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker Street, N. Y., were awarded a FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world in active competition.

The special correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway's enforcement by the Jurors is conclusive, and is entitled more to be the point than that of any European maker." 0000

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

Sewing Machines
438-470 No. 505 BROADWAY, N.Y.

EMPLOYMENT
At your own Homes.

THOUSANDS CAN REALIZE A HUNDRED DOLLARS WEEKLY.—No stencils required except those found on each instrument; profits 100 per cent; demand staple as flour. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage. Address C. MUNRO BROWN, No. 74 Bleecker Street, N. Y.

Artillery Badges.

Annexed is a fac simile design of our Newest Style Artillery Badge. Sent free to any address on receipt of price, with Name, Corps and Regiment handsomely Engraved thereon.

Solid Silver (without button) $1 50. Solid Silver, letters in Gold Relief (without button) $2. Solid Gold (without button) $5. Button, 20 cents each extra.

Also, New Style CAVALRY BADGE, and every style Co. Pins and Corps Badges worn by the Army. Our Illustrated Catalogue sent free. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO.,
208 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Remington's

Army and Navy REVOLVER!

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
635-50 Ilion, N. Y.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, Instructive. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Catalogue.
000 PIERRE SIBON 35 Ann St., N. Y.

CHLOASMA, OR MOTH PATCHES!

Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion, as the discolored spots on the skin show more strongly on a blonde than on a brunette, but they contribute greatly in marring the beauty on either; and the following will remove moth patches from the face, and restore the skin in texture or color, would no doubt be considered a great achievement in the medical science. Dr. B. C. PERRY, 49 Bond street, having devoted his whole time and attention to Diseases of the Skin, will guarantee to remove Moth Patches, Freckles and other Discolorations of the face without injury to either texture or color of the skin. His success in this as in other branches of his specialty—DISEASES OF THE SCALP and LOSS OF HAIR—will warrant him in guaranteeing a perfect CURE. For particulars, address enclosing stamp.

DR. B. C. PERRY, 49 Bond Street, N. Y.

AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1863. The best and only reliable Billiard Table manufactured. Balls, Cues, and every article relating to Billiards, for sale.

PHELAN & COLLENDER,
435-7 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

New Catalogue of Jewelry sent free.
438-43 Address EROS. CAFFERTY & CO., Providence, R. I.

GREAT TRIUMPH.

STEINWAY & SONS, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker Street, N. Y., were awarded a FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world in active competition.

The special correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway's enforcement by the Jurors is conclusive, and is entitled more to be the point than that of any European maker." 0000

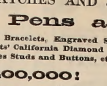
Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

Sewing Machines
438-470 No. 505 BROADWAY, N.Y.

EMPLOYMENT
At your own Homes.

THOUSANDS CAN REALIZE A HUNDRED DOLLARS WEEKLY.—No stencils required except those found on each instrument; profits 100 per cent; demand staple as flour. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage. Address C. MUNRO BROWN, No. 74 Bleecker Street, N. Y.

Artillery Badges.



Annexed is a fac simile design of our Newest Style Artillery Badge. Sent free to any address on receipt of price, with Name, Corps and Regiment handsomely Engraved thereon.

Solid Silver (without button) $1 50. Solid Silver, letters in Gold Relief (without button) $2. Solid Gold (without button) $5. Button, 20 cents each extra.

Also, New Style CAVALRY BADGE, and every style Co. Pins and Corps Badges worn by the Army. Our Illustrated Catalogue sent free. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO.,
208 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Watches

FOR THE ARMY.

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travellers."—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest timepieces ever offered."—Illustrated News, Jan. 16.

"Splendidly finished Watches, the beauty of which is only equalled by their complicity."—N. Y. Weekly, July 25.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADY'S OR GENTLEMAN'S WATCH COMBINED, WITH PATENT SELF-WINDING MOVEMENT.

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it, and connected with its machinery, its own winding attachment, and requires no other key to unscrew. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine coloured gold. It has the finest ever ruby-action lever movement, and is warranted as accurate time keepers, expertly engraved, per case of half dozen, $20. Sample Watches, in neat morocco cases, $35. By mail the postage is 50 cents: registering, 30 cents.

Silver Watches!

FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN THESE WATCHES MUST INSURE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer one first quality sterling silver, while the inner one is fine coin silver. It cannot be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, neither is not only in appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of SOLID STERLING SILVER CASES extant.

The sale of these Watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, enabling us to offer very cheap, at $25 and upwards. Mailed, postage paid, or made in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact.

☞ AN WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and strong cut hands, in good running order, by the half dozen, $72; postage, $2 36; registering, 30 cents. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

☞ TERMS CASH. INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No Agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent as by express or post-office registered letter, it is at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., SOLE IMPORTERS
169 Broadway and 8 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

Munro's Ten Cent Publications.

Novel No. 1—THE INDIAN RELATIVE. Nothing can surpass this inimitable Indian tale. It is full of adventures of the most startling nature, hairbreadth escapes and marvellous exploits. Sent postpaid on receipt of price, 10 cents.

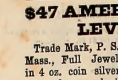
GEORGE MUNRO & CO.,
137 William street, N. Y.

Soldiers and Everybody!

A great Book for you! Over 2,000 Things Worth Knowing! Mailed free for 25 cents. Address UNION BOOK ASSOCIATION, Box 366, Syracuse, N. Y. Agents, order our unequalled Stationery Packages. 440-3

Royal Havana Lottery.

$9 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.



TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVERS.

Trade Mark, P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jewelled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on seconds.

J. T. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Chalon," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine St., N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts., MAGNIFYING 500 times, mailed on receipt of price. Five of different powers, $1. Address F. B. BOWEN, Box 229, Boston, Mass.

Great Chance to Make Money!
$650,000 of Watches, Jewelry, &c.,
Given away with our STATIONERY PRIZE PACKETS.

Every AGENT purchasing 100 PACKETS will receive FREE, as a PRESENT from us, a GENUINE SILVER WATCH.

We also purchase SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS, $10 invested will yield $50. Agents can make more money in engaging in the sale of our PACKETS and ENGRAVINGS than in any other business. For full particulars of the SPECIAL INDUCEMENTS we offer send for our New Circular.
G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
35 Beekman St., N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, from whatever causes, in each SEXUAL and private treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, CURED and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, Kings Co., N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in six drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs etc., etc.
H. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

25 Cent Legal Tender Circular.

$15 A DAY AND A WATCH FREE!

Reader, delay not; send at once for our New Free Circular which you want it or not, and we will return to you the postage on your letter or its equivalent, if you want every penny we have a Circular. It astonishes everybody; defies competition, and substrips competence.

1,000 Agents wanted. Samples 50 cts. Address
WEIR & CO., 503 Chesnut St., Phila.

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case; warranted for one year, and case accompanying each Pen. Send for a Circular. Pens repaired. Receipt of 35 cents.
435-470 E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, prepaid, for $2 25; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by
HENRY CRAIG,
205 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Bellevue, or Pocketed STEREOSCOPE, with a dissolving Focus and Fixed Plane, accommodating all eyes, for $1; with 12 assorted views, $2. A liberal discount to the trade.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newbern, Port Royal, &c., all other places will be sent at Low Rates, by HARNDENS EXPRESS No. 74 Broadway. Rates charged low rates. 000o

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,

22 cents each, $1 50 per doz. Free by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1016, New York city. Send for circular.

American, Swiss and English Watches
In superior styles and quality of case. Orders from the Trade or Army (large or small) promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 20 years.
T. B. BUNNER, 175 Broadway, N. Y.

Ingenious contrivance for raising the label of doorways, to avoid crushing the pretty high hats and head-dresses now fashionable.

FINE WATCH FREE!

And $15 Per Day Made Easy,

by selling the GREAT "original and only genuine" HICKARD'S PRIZE AND STATIONERY PACKAGES, each of which contains "more real valuable articles than any half-dozen other packages ever sold. Each Package contains Fine Writing Materials, Sporting, Fashion Plates, Fancy Articles, Yankee Notions, Games, Keepsakes, Many Ways to get Rich, Rich Presents of Fine Jewelry, etc., etc. We want Agents, dollars in profit, every month. Sales Large. Wholesale rates to Agents. Prize Packages, 25c. Everybody wants them. Agents wanted in every town and county. $15 per day guaranteed, and the Greatest Gift Enterprise, Hunting-case Watch, presented FREE TO EACH AGENT. Beware of imitations.

We are the manufacturers of the GREAT ORIGINAL HICKARD'S PRIZE PACKAGES, each of which we have copyrighted according to law. None others are genuine. For an expose of the swindling operations as practised by other parties, see editorial in New York Tribune of Friday, Feb. 26. Send for our great new Circulars for 1864, containing "extra premium inducements, free."

S. C. HICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y., Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

Salesmen Wanted.—Salary Paid. Address (with Stamp) Dr Harris Bros., Boston, Mass. 435-470

The Miasma and Foul Vapors

Generated by the hot sun will be far more deadly to our Volunteers than the enemy's bayonets. In the Indian and Campaign Guide HOLLOWAY'S PILLS were used in enormous quantities. They kept the troops in perfect health. 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1 00 per box or pot. Soldiers, supply yourselves.

Wells & Waller,
Manufacturers of Artificial Limbs,
Worn and approved by Major-General
D. E. SICKLES.
Also, Artificial Hands,
Send for Circular. 429 Broadway.

For Veteran, Army Corps, Cavalry and Battle Fins,
Sent to Headquarters,
S. M. WARD & CO., 203 Broadway,
(See Notice Inside

INFANTRY PIN FOR THE SOLDIER

In coin Silver, for $1 50, including the Engraving of the Name, Co. and Regiment; also the National Battle Pin, Cavalry and Artillery Pin. Monitor, Engineer and Signal Corps Pins.
LOUIS PHILIP & CO.,
442 50 No. 2 Murray St. N. Y.

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN
6 Maiden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fire Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brush, etc., Merchants Plows, etc., etc.
Military and Navy Equipments in every variety.
A large assortment of
RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS,
54-70 Constantly on hand.

Millinery & Dressmaking Announcement

MADAME BERNEDOIT invites the LADIES of New York for her OPENING DAY, TUESDAY, the 22d of March, to inspect her NOVELTIES in MILLINERY and DRESSMAKING.
MILLINERS NOT ADMITTED.
442-30 12 WAVERLEY PLACE.

THE BEST LITERATURE
☞By the Best American Writers.☜
Is found each month in the

Atlantic Monthly

LONGFELLOW, LOWELL, HAWTHORNE, EMERSON, HOLMES, AGASSIZ, and others of the leading writers of the country contribute regularly.

Terms, $3 a year, postage paid—50 cents a number. Liberal reduction to Clubs. Send 25 cents for a specimen number to

TICKNOR & FIELDS, Publishers,
135 Washington street, Boston.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS!

Our Catalogue now embraces considerably over

FOUR THOUSAND

different subjects (to which additions are continually being made) of Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., viz.:

72 Major-Generals, 526 Statesmen,
126 Brigadier-Generals, 127 Divines,
259 Colonels, 116 Authors,
24 Lieut.-Colonels, 30 Artists,
207 Other Officers, 112 Stage,
60 Officers of the Navy, 46 Prominent Women.

147 Prominent Foreign Portraits.

9,500 COPIES OF WORKS OF ART,

Including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statues, etc.

☞Catalogues sent on receipt of stamp.

An order for One Dozen PICTURES from our Catalogue will be filled on receipt of $1 80, and sent by mail, free.

Photographic Albums!

Of these we manufacture a great variety, ranging in price from 50 cents to $50 each.

Our ALBUMS fully maintain the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any others.

The smaller sizes can be sent safely by mail at a postage of six cents per ounce.

The more expensive can be sent by express.

We also keep a large assortment of

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.

Our Catalogue of these will be sent to any address on receipt of stamp.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers of Photograph Materials,
501 Broadway, New York.

☞Friends or relatives of prominent military men will confer a favor by sending us their likenesses to copy. They will be kept carefully, and returned uninjured.

☞FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER for Congregations to present to their Pastor, or for other purposes, with suitable inscriptions, etc.

250 Rare Receipts.
SEVENTEEN ELECTROTYPE ENGRAVINGS,
Tells What to Do, And How to Do It.
The best Family Receipt Book ever published.
Sent free, by mail, for 25 cents.
HUTCHINSON & CO., Publishers,
442 Broadway, N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Time-keeper, sent free, by mail, in neat case, only $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7. So daily adapted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper $15
OR COMPASS WATCH.

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" engraved or engine-turned Hunting Case Watch, Magic Spring—Genuine English Jewelled or Nickel Movements—"M. J. TOBIAS"—Independent Action —Self-Balance—and has a NEAT MINIATURE COMPASS set in the movements—making it a correct Guide for the Soldier or Traveller—a perfect Timekeeper—"Warranted one year," will stand and, and is a

Exact Imitation of a $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

ENGLISH SPERLING SILVER LEVER WATCHES, Engraved Hunting Case, full jewelled movements, warranted, $18.

$30 American Levers. $30

In 4 oz. Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Full Ruby Jewelled, Gold Joints, Magic Spring, with Full Guarantee, only $30.

Real English Duplex Stop Watches,

In Massive Silver Hunting Cases, Full Jewelled, Lever Escapement, for Artillerists or Timing Horses, Full Guarantee, $30.

Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above styles of European Watches. Circulars with prices sent free.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper," It is a novelty here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Illustrated News says, "Correct timepieces, and for beauty and fine finish they are equal in appearance to $50 watches."

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,
38 and 40 ANN STREET, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready-Made or to Measure, at $23, $30, $45 per doz

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices and drawings of different styles of shirts sent free everywhere, on application.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50 each—all one yard long. A single Shirt sent by mail on receipt of these and 63 cents for postage for each shirt.

Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS

UNSOILED SHIRTS,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for three years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price 75 cents each; sent by mail to any part of the Union on the receipt of 90 cents.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

Ivory Jewelry!

Fine Ivory Brooches	$1 50
Ball Earrings	$1 50
Ivory Initial Sleeve Buttons, (new style)	75
Pearl Initial Buttons	$1 00

Sent free, on receipt of price. A great variety on hand, at WELLING'S, 94 Canal St., N. Y. o Sign of the Golden Elephant. o

STAMMERING

And Stuttering cured by Bates's Patent Actenuic Appliances. For New Edition of descriptive Pamphlets and Drawings, address
H. C. L. MEARS, 277 West 23d St., N. Y.

Agents Wanted (Male or Female). Address HALE & CO., Newburyport, Mass. 0000

BALLOU'S
Patented
FrenchYoke
SHIRTS.
Warranted to fit, and to be CHEAPER
for the same quantities and marks than those of any other Shirt House in the Union. Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.

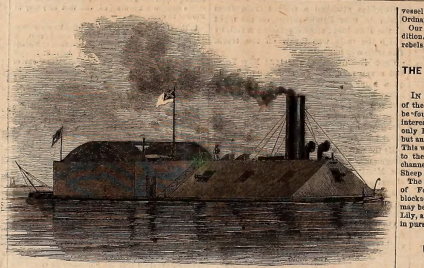
For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.
BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, New York.

Shilts' Ongluent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 444—Vol. XVIII.] NEW YORK, APRIL 2, 1864. [Price 8 Cents.



THE SIEGE OF MOBILE.

MOBILE, for a place of its size, has been frequently the scene of military operations. One of the earliest stations of French power on the southwest, it was menaced by the Spaniards, and at a later date, in the hands of the latter, exposed to English attack. During the present war it has been blockaded by a Union fleet and commanded by Fort Pickens, which the rebels vainly endeavored to take.

When Sherman and Smith recently advanced, and Farragut began to thunder at Fort Powell, all expected to see Mobile soon in our hands. This hope has been doomed to disappointment. The capture of Mobile was not the object of Sherman's expedition, and Farragut's bombardment of Fort Powell proved ineffective, his vessels not being able to approach nearer than two miles, too far to inflict any serious injury.

Recent Southern news explains Farragut's attack as an attempt to co-operate with a revolt of the garrison of Fort Morgan. This was, however, discovered, and 30 of the mutineers shot.

We give, as illustrations of the operations, a view of the rebel ram Baltic, Admiral Buchanan, Commander, one of the main defences of the place, as seen from Farragut's fleet on the 20th of February, the last day of active operations; and the explosion of a rifled gun on the J. F. Jackson. This steamer, which has been in very active engagements during the war, was this time most unfortunate. In the first attack her rifle gun burst, and on the 20th she went into action with a new one, but this too burst after two hours' service, wounding several and injuring the vessel. Evidently there is some oversight in the Ordnance Department that requires remedy.

THE REBEL RAM BALTIC, NOW LYING AT MOBILE, AS SEEN FROM THE BLOCKADING FLEET, FEB. 20. FROM A SKETCH BY R. B. HOUGH.

Our view of Fort Powell shows its present condition. It has been greatly strengthened by the rebels, and will make a stubborn resistance.

THE BLOCKADE OF CAPE FEAR RIVER
North Carolina.

IN our last we gave a sketch of the mouth of the Cape Fear River. The new inlet, which will be found in our present issue, is a much more interesting view. The rebels to guard it have not only Fort Fisher, a well constructed fortification, but an artificial mound with a heavy rifle gun on it. This was erected in order to give a sufficient plunge to the balls to injure monitors. It controls the channel between Fort Fisher, on the one side, and Sheep Head and Smith's island, on the other.

The view of Folly inlet, which is five miles south of Fort Caswell, shows the vigilance of our blockaders and their daring. In this single sketch may be seen the ruins of the Bendigo, Ranger and Lily, as well as of the U. S. steamer Iron Age, lost in pursuing too closely one of the blockade-runners.

HON. MICHAEL HAHN,
Governor of Louisiana.

THE Hon. Michael Hahn, to the imposing ceremonies of whose inauguration as Governor of Louisiana we give so much space to-day, is a native of EXPLOSION OF A CANNON ON BOARD THE J. F. JACKSON, DURING THE SIEGE OF FORT POWELL, MOBILE HARBOR.—FROM A SKETCH BY R. B. HOUGH.

Klingenmister, in Rhenish Bavaria, where he was born in 1830. His family came to New York in 1831, and resided there till 1860, when they removed to Texas, but after a short stay in that State proceeded to New Orleans. Here young Michael grew up, receiving his education at St. Anne's school. He was early left an orphan, but being aided by his brother-in-law, John E. Schmitz, he studied law with Christian Roselius, and for the term of age began practice. He took an active part in politics, and when secession was first openly advocated came forward as a Union man. On the 8th of May, 1860, in a Union meeting in Lafayette Square, New Orleans, he offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we, the citizens of New Orleans, regardless of all the minor differences of opinion that divide the people of this country politically, are of one mind and one heart in support of the Union in these States, and that, as long as the Constitution of the Republic and the laws enacted by Congress in accordance therewith can be maintained inviolate, as we confidently believe it can now be done, we shall regard with abhorrence and horror the attempt, wherever made or however originated, to destroy the paternal ligaments which bind in links more durable than brass the sovereign members of this glorious Confederation together; and we here solemnly pledge ourselves, one to the other, and all to our country, to oppose all parties, or fragments of parties, and all aspirants to public office, irrespective of party or distinction, whose claims to public confidence are in any manner identified with disorganizing or disunion sentiments or designs; and to regard as enemies to Republican liberty all who attempt to produce a separation of these States, while within the Union their equality rights under the Constitution are susceptible of maintenance without recourse to physical force."

During the rebel rule in New Orleans he never swore allegiance, omitting it in his oath of office as Notary Public.

When the United States authority was restored in New Orleans Mr. Hahn at once became active and conspicuous. He was one of those who met at Polar Star Hall, which was Dan Rice's, May 18th, 1863, and was elected to Congress, and satisfied all men as to his ability and fitness.

Under the loyal scheme for restoring State Governments in the revolted districts, Mr. Hahn was the Free State candidate, and on the 22d Feb. was elected by a large majority over his competitors, Fellows and Flanders.

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS—Three men and a woman—ranging from eight feet high to Dwarfs, each less than two feet high—besides a host of other Novelties. FANTASTIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of Fifty Portraits of Turkish and Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, in the streets of York, etc., Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and in various groups, illustrative of characters of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures

It is the most unique Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table; and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a friend. Only $3. Sent free, by mail on receipt of the price, by

F. OSCANYAN,
No. 37 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, APRIL 2, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl Street, between Broadway and Rim, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE P. BEMIS & CO., Proprietors of the London Illustrated News Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 00
Two copies " to one address	5 00
Four " "	9 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00
Paper, 13 weeks	1 00

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

75 cents a line on the outside or last page.
60 " " on the 14th and 15th pages.

THE Publisher of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER invites his present contributors and others to send him Sketches of Scenes and poems suited to its columns, as well as ideas for comic sketches on subjects of the day.

Summary of the Week.

WASHINGTON.

The President, by the order of March 10, appoints Gen. Grant to the command of the armies of the United States; and by another order retires Major-Gen. Halleck, with thanks.

The President calls also for 200,000 men, to be raised before April 15th, or then drafted.

VIRGINIA.

On the 11th a detachment of 100 men from Gen. Custer's cavalry command started on a scout towards Blair mountain in Madison county, Va., which is a well-known rebel guerilla resort. Some time during the night they made a dash into a guerilla camp on the stream known as Conway river, just west of the above-named mountain, and drove about 40 of the guerillas across the river, and captured 20 horses, together with them all. The command returned to their camp yesterday morning in good order, not having lost a man or a horse, or had one injured.

In the recent attack upon Suffolk the 2d colored cavalry, under Col. Cole, behaved with great bravery in a fight of an hour's duration. They had a largely superior force to contend against, but cut their way through with a loss of 20 killed, wounded and missing. One of our lieutenants was killed. The rebels are said to have had 67 killed.

Gen. Wadsworth left Washington for Fortress Monroe on Sunday, with orders from the War Department to stop all the exchange of prisoners upon the basis recently acted on by the rebels, by which 100 rebel prisoners are exchanged for every 75 of ours in possession of the rebel authorities. Gen. Wadsworth has been instructed to state that no more prisoners will be exchanged except upon the principle of man for man, and that, too, without regard to color.

The army of the Potomac on the 18th was preparing for an advance of the enemy.

WESTERN VIRGINIA.

On the 19th a detachment of Gilmore's rebels made a raid into Bath, Morgan county, and carried off Hon. Mr. Bechtel, of the W. V. Senate, and Hon. Mr. Wheat, of W. V. House of Delegates. The guerillas were pursued by cavalry, and some of them captured.

TENNESSEE.

Guerillas attacked a freight train from Nashville, near Estill springs, on the night of the 10th inst., after displacing a rail, by which the train was throw off the track. The train was burned.

Capt. Beardsley, of the 123d New York, and seven men, arrived at Decherd, Tenn., on a handcar, having been paroled, after being robbed of clothing, money, watches and jewellery. The rebels killed three of the negroes on the train. Two of the guerillas were killed. There were no other losses.

By the new arrangement Major-Gen. W. T. Sherman is to command the department of the Mississippi, which is to embrace the departments of Ohio, Cumberland, Tennessee and Arkansas. Major-Gen. McPherson is placed in command of the army of the Tennessee.

On the 19th the enemy were in strong force in our front, but no movement was visible.

ARKANSAS.

Gen. Price had resumed command in this State, and addresses his army hopefully.

LOUISIANA.

Admiral Porter, with the gunboats Ouachita, Conestoga and Lexington, Fort Hinman and Crockett, ran up Red river a few days since, and opened on Trinity. The Osage passed the fort, but the Ouachita was disabled. The Ouichets then silenced the fort. The enemy were driven from Harrisonburg and the place burned. The Conestoga was run into by the Gen. Price on the 10th and sunk. The fleet is to co-operate with Gen. Steele, in an advance on Shreveport, which Gen. Steele will also attack from Arkansas.

The rebels have reappeared at Lake Providence in force, committing shocking barbarities on the negroes.

MISSISSIPPI.

A portion of the marine brigade, under Capt. Crandell, recently surprised a rebel camp east of Fort Gibson, Miss., capturing 47 prisoners and releasing five Union soldiers taken at the Big Black.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Gen. Peck thus sums up the result of recent operations in North Carolina: "Besides the repulse of Gen. Pickett's army at Newbern, the following rebel forces were captured: 6 officers, 281 prisoners and dangerous rebels, 500 contrabands, 250 arms and accoutrements, 138 horses and mules, 1 bale of cotton, 1 piece of artillery, caisson complete, 2 commissary saddles, harnesses and wagons. Much property of the rebel government has been destroyed from inability to remove it, as appears by a partial list: 250,000 pounds of pork, 80 barrels of lard, 75 barrels of meat, 20,000 bushels of corn, 32 barrels of beef, 5 hogs heads of sugar, 5,000 empty sacks, 1 cornmill, 10 waggons, 1 ton of tobacco, 18 mules, 2 warehouses of salt, and 2 extensive salt manufactories."

NAVAL.

The Navy Department has received official information of the following captures: On Feb. 25 the U. S. bark Roebuck captured in Indian river; abreast of Fort Capron, the British sloop boat Two Brothers, from Nassau, bound to Dixie and laden with four bags of salt, one keg of liquor, four boxes of goods and one keg of nails. On the 27th the Roebuck captured, at the same place, the British sloop Nina, from Nassau, bound to Sand Point, laden with liquors, coffee and boxes of goods. On the 29th the same vessel captured the schooner Rebel, with a cargo consisting of salt, liquor, cotton, &c. On March 1 the Roebuck also captured the British schooner Lauretta, laden with 52 bags of salt; two miles from the entrance of Indian river. These prizes were all sent to Key West for adjudication.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 14th, the bill defining the duties of paymasters' stewards and clerks of officers was passed. The West Point Academy bill was taken up, which led to a lengthy political discussion, but was finally passed with an amendment, fixing the pay at $40 per month, the same as naval midshipmen.

In the House, various important matters were brought up and disposed of. The House agreed to the report of the Conference Committee on the Deficiency bill. A resolution to print 10,000 copies of Gen. Meade's report of the battle of Gettysburg, and accompanying papers, was referred to the Printing Committee. Mr. Washburne offered a resolution instructing the Ways and Means Committee to report a bill taxing liquor on hand 40 cents per gallon, respectively, where such tax has and has not been paid. The resolution laid over. The Gold bill then came up, and elicited a long discussion, but without concluding to action the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 15th, a petition was presented from 1,000 colored citizens of Louisiana, and representing equal to $15,000,000 of property, that their rights be acknowledged, and that they may be allowed to vote.

In the House the bill giving full franking privileges to the Presiding and Vice-President was passed. A bill was reported to establish Assay Offices in Nevada and Oregon. A resolution to pay John S. Sleeper $750, for coming to Washington to examine the seat of Mr. Rice of Massachusetts, was laid on the table. The report of the Committee in favor of printing 10,000 copies of Gen. Rosecrans's report; also, 10,000 of Meade's report of the battle of Gettysburg.

In the Senate, on the 16th, Mr. Wilson introduced a bill to disqualify for voting or holding office all deserters who have left the service of the United States, but directs the President to issue a Proclamation of amnesty to deserters upon their return to the service, with no punishment but loss of pay during their absence. Referred to Committee on Privileges. Deserters hereafter are to be deprived of those rights of citizens. The other proceedings were of no public interest.

In the House Mr. Farnsworth introduced a bill to increase the pay of the United States artillery, which was referred. The House concurred in the Senate's amendment to the Deficiency appropriation bill. The Gold bill was then taken up, and after a lengthy discussion was passed by 97. The resolution, as passed, provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the payment of coupons and the public debt by a period not exceeding one year, from time to time, without the Treasury's refusal of interest; and he may dispose of any gold in the Treasury of the United States not specifically appropriated by law. The House then took up the bill to amend the several acts relative to the rolls, which was discussed at length, but without action.

In the Senate, on the 17th, the proceedings were of no public interest.

In the House, the bill to make the Delaware and Raritan Bay and Camden and Atlantic railroads military roads, and to grant to them other rights and privileges, was taken up, and, after discussion, passed. The report of the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs reported a bill to appoint a Commissioner to settle the claims of the Hudson Bay Government. The House then proceeded to the consideration of Territorial business. Territorial acts were passed for Nevada, Colorado and Nebraska. An act was also passed to provide for the temporary government of the Territory of Montana.

In the Senate, on the 18th, after much discussion on the Mail bill, Mr. Wilson called up the Senate bill to increase the pay of privates, his amendment as a substitute for the bill being in order. This was subsequently agreed to, extending the pay to such children of the slave recruit in the first section. The second section authorizes the Commissioner of Slave States to award to loyal owners of said wives and children a just compensation. Debate followed, in which Messrs. Pomeroy, Sumner, Wilson, Conness, Williams and others participated. The bill was finally postponed. After Executive session, the Senate took a recess.

In the House, the proceedings were unimportant, being confined to lengthy discussions on the Homestead bill. The House also passed a favorable report on paying Gale and Seaton for certain volumes of Congressional Globe and Debates, claimed to be delivered before the resolution authorizing the supply was enacted. The latter subject was tabled, 67 against 66.

The Senate did not sit on the 19th, and the time of the House was entirely occupied in listening to several speeches on the war and slavery.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Ariel we have dates from Panama to March 7.

The Congress of the United States of Colombia, on Feb 25, elected Señor Murillo to have been constitutionally elected President of the Republic.

The Congress of Panama has sanctioned the extradition of ex-President Barrios.

In Chili the invitation for a general Congress of the States of Latin America has been received with universal enthusiasm.

In Nicaragua the Central American Transit Company contract has passed both Houses of Congress, and was signed by the President on Feb. 18; on Feb. 20 the first payment, in accordance with the stipulations of the contract, of $60,000 in American gold, was made to the Treasurer-General of Nicaragua. Ambaghiman, Capt. Gen. of Guatemala, Costa Rica, asking for large grants of land to enable him to organize a colonization party, with a view to opening a railroad through the Republic from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific.

On Feb. 24 President Martinez sent in his resignation, but it would probably not be accepted.

THE Howard Money Belt is at once the neatest, safest and most elegant repository for money ever presented to the public. It is made of the best leather, and has several compartments, so that a soldier and a traveller can carry with him, safe and undisjured, his dearest relics, the photographs and letters from his friends—as well as his greenbacks. In a word, it is the very thing a soldier and traveller ought to have always with them.

TOWN TOPICS.

THE cold that precedes the storm has just now settled upon New York. Nothing is heard of or thought of but the Sanitary Fair. It absorbs all lesser things, but being in embryo it makes only the great calm. Next week the storm will burst, and we shall be Sanitary Faired at breakfast, dinner and supper, in our sleeping and in our waking, in church and out of church. It will meet us at every corner, and fill upon us from the housetops, and for several weeks we shall know nothing but its sounding echoes. All places of public amusement will reap harvests of gold—provokers, we mean—enough to bring back the bread they floated out upon the waters in the days of famine. But the Fair, the time and all New York will be full of the country until the air will be redolent with greenness.

The first arch of the buildings on 14th street are nearly finished, and another of a semicircular form, large enough to allow a dozen horsemen to ride abreast, on the upper end of Union square, as an offshoot, to help hold the superabundance of wealth that is flowing to the great Fair. Between the two, on the centre of this stream, we will only mention that, up to this date, the largest merchandise alone have received over $125,000. Should other branches of trade equal this, the grand result will swell into millions!

The week we have been looking among the pictures. We have seen Bierstadt's "Rocky Mountains," and Kensett's "Lake George." We shall discourse of the first:

Upon entering the room of exhibition we are at once taken by surprise. It is not a picture. There is no art. It is a fact; and we are but looking out of a window upon a veritable scene. Here we see far hills, tipped with everlasting snow, the nevertiring streaming light of the noon-day sun shining with noisy foam, within a few minutes walk. There is a sheet of glassy water, too wonderful not to be anything but nature, and in the foreground the groups of Shoshonee Indians, engaged in their bustling, half-lazy everyday avocations.

The picture is taken upon the Wind river range, in Nebraska Territory, and the principal peak of the group is called the Wind river mountain. But for its merit alone upon a translation of the scenery, but there a band of Shoshonee pleasure in the prairie of Indians scattered over the entire foreground, some engaged in the chase, in the women's work, and dear, with loads of ducks and small game and one immense grizzly bear, others, dressed in their finest gewgaws of the race, are occupied about the tents in scores of various employments, and others recruit or render them real. We see but one fault in this picture, and that is the want of variety and interest in the field in these peaks. They look cwarfed. Against this we commend the wonderful variety of color existing between the hills, and the perfect transparency of the water, as marvellous.

We would we could say as much for the "Lake George," but coming from the very scene of Bierstadt to the cold chilliness of Kensett's was too much. It has always an autumn, but it is a cold, hauling in winter, and the picture is unrelieved by a solitary bird or beast. We look for no one upon entering the room, and we find nothing to sit and gaze upon as we said of the grand out upon the "Interesting" finis of the "Rocky Mountains."

As an instance of the high prices paid for pictures, we would cite a sale made during the past week of a "Cranberry, entering Lake George," by Gignoux, sold to Marshall O. Roberts for $3,250. It is about 10 inches by 14, a single foot of canvas, and is not anything startling about it but its price. Another Messonier, about the same size, but a better picture, sold for $2,500.

There are many fine pictures now in Goupil's gallery, among which we would note a large and fully portrait of himself, by Meissonier, and "Portrait of Paul Delaroche," "The Temptation" and "Maternal Love," by Lambinet. We wish that we can not make pictures as are daily shown in the gallery, there is no reason they should not study art.

In music and the drama the promises for the week are—first, the Philharmonic Society's concert, Wed., on Monday, the 28th, which, it is presumed, he will give the public the first performance of his early matinée, until they have had enough of it. The closing up of the Academy of Music for the debut of Madame Methua Scheller in a musical drama; the opening of the new Broadway theatre, under Mr. Mercier-politan Hotel, by Robert Heller, for the exhibition of what he calls "Sensation Novels and Stories," and, most important, the first appearance before a New York audience of Wm. Davidge, a Bowery boy as we have heard much, in a grand Biblical legend of "Judith and Holofernes." We intend to be of the heaviest dramatic artillery, perhaps a 15-inch bore.

Le Fair Face, standing from the middle of our writing-table, wishes to know why it is that each week we are favored with a notice of the new style of the theatres, but absolutely nothing of the churches! She desires us to state, for instance, that the last nice man, the Rev. Mr. Hanks, who preaches such a sweet sermon, and would be so good to have it understood that he is anxious to see his name in print, oh, no—but it might have the effect, perhaps, of inducing more sinner into the fold; besides which he is so handsome and so gentlemanly, and has such a beautiful way of stretching out his white hand towards the congregation and addressing his sister-christians, when he desires to impress something particularly on them; to say nothing of his—a—beautiful voice, which cannot be surpassed by any congregation in New York.

To all this we have only to answer, that as we are not able to own a pew in every church in the city, we are only enabled to see those others when we are sleeping strangers, who present themselves, peewless, at the doors of our grand churches, standing the congregation is seated shall be abolished, and then we intend visiting them.

"But is it not right that the congregation shall have first choice?"

"Undoubtedly: but why cannot each church spare a small part of their space from Monday and devote it to the stranger who shall present himself at the gate! Let it be one-tenth of the church, and we are satisfied that none are favored with more than that proportion of non-pewholders, and that would be disgraceful custom of keeping crowd of would-be worshippers standing at the doors will be abolished by the Most High, awaiting, but in hand, that the crumbs that fall from the table may also be offered them, would be at an end. There is no necessity for any such degradation of the temple—for rarely is any one of them filled. In England, more of the great churches are free, and now, that by law, no church can be built, but free, the Catholics have set the only the last Sabbath one-third free sittings in their new church.

We were one of the waiters at the door of the Rev. Mr. Chapin's Tabernacle, and were astonished at the number of persons who, apparently in the gallery, that came to worship, and were turned away. Perhaps the church was not two-thirds full, and we thought during the sermon of the matter. It is disgusting and reprehensible practice, and should be done away with. It is entirely unchristian and ungrounded as it is only upon a grasping desire for the attainment of worldly lucre.

One of the most instructive calls that can be made through this of all cities is upon the poor. We do not mean the poor of their own street, but the poor of the working women, and in the first precincts of the Sanitary Fair Protectorate.

The "upper ten" of fashion and wealth, of which the sum is as it costs were put by a great manufacturer, whose name will be given. There are will see a linen coat made for 25 cents, and an army shirt at four and one-sixth cents. Mark the sixth! There she will see a pair of drawers made, all by hand, by an old woman of 60 for the munificent sum of seven cents, her week's work being one dozen, or 84 cents' worth, out of which she was obliged to find herself in thread. Think of it, you that have mothers, and you that may be snatched away from loving wives at any moment, leaving them dependent.

This association proposes to make itself an office of intelligence and justice between the employer and employé. They desire the workers to come and register their names, and the employers to seek them there. They ask that ladies through all the land requiring sewers, or any kind of female labor not connected with household service, will send to them or call and their demands shall be rigidly complied with. Every lady sometimes wants a semptress, and at the very moment of necessity and haste oftentimes cannot find one. The association will supply the want. Gentlemen have shirts to make, and, in these days of dear cotton, to mend; let them put them in first hands, instead of going to fashionable establishments, and paying 200 per cent profit for plateglass windows and marble counters.

On the night of the 21st the working women made a demonstration at the Cooper Institute, presided over by Judge Daly, and addressed by the Rev. W. M. Milburn, the blind orator. Miss Teresa Esmonde read a poem written by Mrs. Ann S. Stephens, and altogether the affair was one of the highest success, of which we shall speak next week.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The official vote in this city on the soldiers' voting amendment shows thus: For, 16,388; against, 6,830. Total vote, 23,218. There were only three wards which gave a majority against: the First, yeas 144, nays 166; the Bloody Sixth, or Five Points, yeas 221, nays 308; and the Fourteenth, yeas 270, nays 359.

—— The Philadelphia Press says that the Government has called upon the locomotive builders of that city for 200 engines, to be made forthwith, and in case of default the Government would seize the shops. The engine-builders have agreed to do the work.

—— The French Consul at San Francisco informs the mercantile world that Acapulco and Manzanilla, west coast of Mexico, are under blockade, and neither passengers nor merchandise will be allowed to enter those ports.

—— The Fenian Brotherhood of Philadelphia have resented, through a public meeting, the recent attack of Bishop Wood (Roman Catholic) on their organization. They deny that the Brotherhood is a secret society; adding that the society have no oaths, signs or grips. Their constitution and by-laws are open to inspection. 50,000 men have subscribed their names, of membership in the United States, and in the British Provinces and Ireland 150,000 men are enrolled. The Fenian Brotherhood had not established any line of conduct. It is not definitely declared that they must resort to force of arms in aid of Ireland. So far, they have but exerted their energies to unite the people and form one sentiment.

—— St. Patrick's day was celebrated with unusual vigor on March 17. The 69th regiment paraded, and the display made by the civic societies was very fine. High Mass was solemnized at St. Patrick's cathedral by Vicar-General Father Starrs, and a panegyric pronounced by the Rev. Father Boyce, of Washington. The Friendly Sons of St. Patrick honored the day by a "feast of reason and flow of soul" at Delmonico's, corner of Fifth avenue and 14th street. The Knights of St. Patrick celebrated their national holiday by a banquet at the Astor House, at which about 150 knights and a score or more of invited guests were present. Speeches were made by the President of the society, W. F. Lyons, Esq., and by Col. O'Mahony, Mayor Gunther, Judge Daly, Edwin James, John K. Devlin, John Butler, Mr. Meehan and others. The exercises were enlivened by music from the Navy Yard band and by appropriate songs sung by Mr. Gustavus Geary.

—— A Gen. McClellan mass meeting was held at Cooper Institute on the 16th March, at which speeches were made by Hon. Amos Kendall, of Washington, Lieut.-Gov. R. T. Jacob, of Kentucky, Gen. A. B. Norton, of Texas, and Dr. Max Langenswartz.

—— The sum of $1,112 25 was realised by the Sanitary Commission from the benefit entertainment given by the pupils of the 13th Ward Common Schools, at Cooper Institute, on 16th of March.

—— On the 18th March the new Board of Police Commissioners was organised by the election of Thomas C. Acton as President. Messrs. Acton, Bosworth and McMurray were present; Mr. Bergen, being ill, was absent.

—— Justice Barnard has granted a commission for the examination of a witness in Chicago, on behalf of the plaintiff, Benjamin Franklin Hatch, in the somewhat stale "Hatch divorce case."

—— On the 19th of March the pupils of Mrs. Z. R. Plumb's Gynasium held a select entertainment at the Cooper Institute. The exercises were admirably performed, and reflected great credit on the institution. Several speeches were made and received with great applause. The proceeds were for the benefit of the Sanitary Fair.

Southern.—The Richmond Whig has the following brutal paragraph: "The body of Col Ulric Dahlgren, killed in the swamps of King and Queen, by the 9th Virginia cavalry, was brought to the city Sunday night and laid at the York river depot during the greater part of the day yesterday, where large numbers of persons went to see it. It was in a pine box, clothed in Confederate shirt and pants, and shrouded in a Confederate blanket. The wooden leg had been removed by one of the soldiers. It was also noticeable that the little finger of the left hand had been cut off. Dahlgren was a small man, thin, pale and with red hair, and a goatee of the same color. His face wore an expression of agony. About two o'clock P.M. the corpse was removed from the depot and buried—no one knows, or is to know, where." So much for the chivalry of Lucifer, who punishes the dead body of a son because the father bombarded Charleston.

Naval.—The Navy Department has received the details of two expeditions sent out from the gunboat Tahoma during the past month, the objects of which were successfully accomplished. Having marched through swamps and dense woods a distance of four miles, they destroyed the rebel Government salt works at St. Mark's, Fla. These were seven miles in extent, and connected with them were, among other things, 390 salt kettles, 170 furnaces and 165 houses and shanties. Similar works, 10 miles distant, shared the same fate. The property destroyed is estimated at $2,000,000.

—— The recent captures reported by Admiral Farragut are these: The schooner Henry Colthwist, by the Virginia, near San Luis Pass, 20th Feb.; she was from Kingston, Jamaica, with 200 kegs of powder, 250,000 percussion caps, 500 ounces of quinine and other stores. On the 28th Feb. the English schooner Lily, near Velasco, Texas, was taken by the Penobscot; she was from Belize, Honduras, with powder. On the 29th Feb. the schooners Stingray and John Douglas, with cotton, were taken off Velasco. The Virginia took also the Camille, laden with cotton, and burned a sloop laden with the same kind of cargo.

Military.—The work of re-organising the Army of the Potomac is proceeding this week The number of corps will be reduced to three—the 1st and 3d being absorbed into the 2d, 5th and 6th—to be commanded respectively by Majors-Gen. Hancock, Warren and Sedgwick. This will make three very strong corps.

—— The President, by an official order promulgated March 17, makes the following military assignments: First, Lieut.-Gen. Grant assigned to the command of the armies of the United States; second, Major-Gen. Halleck is relieved from duty as General-in-Chief and assigned to special duty at Washington as Chief of the Staff of the army; third. Major-Gen. Sherman is assigned to the command of the military division of the Mississippi, lately commanded by Gen. Grant, and comprising the departments of Ohio, Cumberland, Tennessee and Arkansas; fourth, Major-Gen. McPherson is assigned to the command of the department of Tennessee, recently commanded by Gen. Sherman; fifth, Lieut.-Gen. Grant will establish his headquarters in the field, with the respective armies operating under his personal supervision.

—— Rebel news from Charleston to the 9th represents the shelling as moderate, and doing no damage. The dispatches say there was unusual activity in the Union fleet on the 6th of March.

—— Col. Bruce has been reinstated as military commander of Louisville.

—— Guerillas attacked and burned a freight train from Nashville, at Eslette springs, on the 16th inst. Capt. Beardsley and seven men of the New York 23d, after being stripped of the property about them, had arrived at Dechard, Tennessee. Three negroes on the train were killed by the guerillas.

—— The Confederates are moving their artillery from Dalton towards Ringgold. Taylor's Ridge gap was picketed by them on the 15th inst. They have a large force.

—— Col. Wolfe has arrived at Nashville, having been released from arrest, and is ordered to report in person to Lieut.-Gen. Grant.

—— Lieut. J. R. Meigs, son of Quartermaster-Gen. Meigs, has been appointed Chief Engineer of Gen. Sigel's department, with rank of captain and A. D. C. Capt. Meigs is but 22 years old, graduated second in his class, and Gen. Sigel has entire confidence in his capacity. Gen. Sigel has applied for Gen. Stahl and Col. Wyndham to be assigned to his command. Gen. Averill has command of all the cavalry in Sigel's department.

Personal.—Gen. Neil Dow and Capts. Flynn and Sawyer have been exchanged, and have arrived at Fortress Monroe.

—— A matrimonial intelligence office has been opened in St. Catharine's, Canada. Ladies sending in their names are requested to enclose a photograph, for the inspection of those about to make a choice.

—— Thackeray's daughters received a kind and handsome letter from Lord Palmerston, offering to recommend them for pensions on the British Literary Fund. The children of the man who had constantly exhorted his literary brethren to rely on themselves, and to discard any notion of State recognition or assistance, respectfully decline the offer, adding, as one amongst other reasons for doing so, their opinion that their acceptance of it would not have been approved by their father.

—— Gen. Sherman is described as being an inch less than six feet high, and about 45 years old. His frame is of good size, but a moderate development of muscle gives him an appearance of being more slender than he really is. His hair and eyes are dark; his forehead high, and so exceedingly fair that, standing as it does in marked contrast with his hair and eyes, it is his prominent feature. His cheeks are marked with deep lines, while age's crow has made a very palpable track at the corner of either eye. A benevolent countenance, together with a kind and genial manner, make him look more like a minister than the war-dog he is.

—— Louis Napoleon's present personal appearance is thus described in a late letter from Paris: "The personal appearance of Napoleon III. would puzzle the most accurate observer of physiognomy. The face of the man with the iron mask is not more devoid of expression than is his. One may study it for hours without deriving the slightest satisfaction as to the emperor's mental characteristics. Those fishy, rayless eyes, the parchment-like cheeks, the stiff, pointed moustache, all suggest a sort of artificial face prepared for the occasion, while the real man, like the priestess of Apollo, lies hidden, and delivers short, oracular responses behind it. He is short in stature, though his body is full the average size. Hence he appears to greater advantage in a sitting posture. Of late years he has grown somewhat corpulent, like the first Napoleon and other members of his family. His habits at the present day are said to be simple and regular, perhaps necessarily so, if the stories told of his early excesses be true. His appearance on horseback does great credit to his horsemanship, which is generally allowed to be the most skilful in Europe. He is very fond of horses, and has that thorough understanding of their nature which establishes a certain sympathy between that animal and his rider."

—— A statue of the Empress Eugenie is to be erected in the market-place of Puebla, Mexico.

—— J. B. Gough has refused 900 invitations to lecture this season.

—— The eldest daughter of Capt. Semmes was married in Mobile on the 18th ult. to Pendleton Colsten, Judge Advocate to the Confederate army.

—— Professor Sullivan has gone to California, to examine the mines of Nevada.

—— A few weeks ago (says the Hartford Post) we made mention of the marriage of the armless color-sergeant of a Massachusetts regiment, Plunkett, to Miss Nellie Lorrimer. The wedding took place in Worcester, though the parties belong in Leicester. When he left for the wars, Plunkett was engaged to a Miss Lorrimer. Upon his return he considered his helpless condition, and offered a release to his betrothed, which was readily accepted. Her sister was so indignant at this that she said she would marry the brave man herself if he was agreeable, and agreeable he was; and they married. Thanks to the generosity of the people he has met since his return, Plunkett is in independent circumstances.

Obituary.—William B. Cozzens, widely known in this country, for many years a hotel-keeper in this city, and proprietor of Cozzens's hotel at West Point, died at his residence at that place, of heart disease, on the 12th inst.

—— Capt. James B. Halstead, of the 102d regiment of New York Volunteers, died in this city on the 12th inst., aged 30 years, of hemorrhage of the lungs. Capt. Halstead had served over two years in the Army of the Potomac, under Gens. Banks, Hooker and Burnside. He had just received his promotion to a captaincy, and was preparing to accompany his regiment to the West when prostrated by disease contracted in the service of his country. His remains were taken to Pittston, Pa., for interment.

—— Lieut. Fred. Zeiter, of Co. H., 84th regiment, N. Y. S. N. G., died suddenly at a ball given by that company, of congestion of the brain.

—— Mr. Eben Merriam, the well-known meteorologist, died at Brooklyn, on Saturday. March 19, of dropsy of the liver. He was born in Concord, Mass., June 17, 1794. Soon after arriving at his majority he proceeded to Kentucky, and was employed for a number of years in the manufacture of saltpetre and other mineral productions of the Mammoth Cave in that State. He subsequently engaged in the drygoods business in Zanesville, Ohio, and about 26 years ago removed to Brooklyn, and pursued the manufacture of soap and candles in New York city. From his earliest childhood Mr. M. was engaged in scientific pursuits, devoting himself more particularly to meteorological researches, the records of which are intact and extend to the hour of his death. The theory of cycles of atmospherical phenomena is exclusively his own, and he has repeatedly been complimented for their accuracy by some of the most profound scientific men in Europe. His notoriety as a careful compiler of these records caused him to be considered an expert thereupon in courts of law. In 1841 Mr. M. commenced the publication of the Municipal Gazetteer, a work which is now complete, with the exception of a few months. He was a contributor to various journals of the day on scientific subjects, under the well-known signature of "E. M."

Accidents and Offences.—Mrs. Callery, the wife of a policeman, was burned to death on the 18th of March, at her house in Scammel street. The fire was occasioned by the bursting of a kerosene lamp.

—— Messrs. B. F. and N. Hapwood, of Acton, Mass., were both killed on the 17th of March, near their home, by a locomotive engine that struck their carriage.

—— Two young men, one claiming to be a son of Secretary Welles, and the other a son of Gov. Morton of Indiana, were arrested on the 16th instant, charged with breaking into the residence of John Sedgwick, Esq., No. 49 East 30th street. Owing, however, to the non-appearance of Mr. Sedgwick, they were discharged.

—— A fearful powder explosion occurred in a cartridge factory in the city of Springfield, Mass., on Wednesday, the 16th inst., by which 16 persons were injured—five of them fatally. The sufferers are nearly all women and girls, of whom about 40 were employed in the building.

—— In the U. S. District Court, Judge Betts, a decree of restitution was entered in the case of the barque Saxon, claimed as a prize, but without costs, charges or expenses. The questions of salvage and probable cause for seizure were reserved for future consideration.

—— A married woman in Salisbury, Eng., aged 27, had been held for stealing a child of five weeks. On her examination she pleaded guilty, and sued for mercy, saying, among other things—"You don't know how I have had to bear the scoffs and sneers of the people!" Those who had derided her on account of her childless condition should have been made to bear their part of the year's imprisonment to which she was sentenced.

Foreign.—Kate Bateman recently met with an accident while taking horse exercise in London. An enamored post in the street attracted the riding-habit of the actress, to which it clung, and the fair young lady was carried away, without adjunct, and in semi-male costume. A gallant gentleman came to the rescue; and the skirt being bound round the waist again with string, and the damage rectified, she mounted and rode off none the worst for the contretemps.

—— A week or two since the Lord Chancellor gave a decision in a case which had been pending for 200 years. The party interested was a laborer at Kemberton, named Lawrence; after the decision he received a letter informing him that he was entitled to the snug little sum of £30,000.

—— The bell of a fashionable residence was rung the other day. When the servant appeared a man politely inquired, "What are you going to have for dinner to-day?" The girl, thinking the man to be one of her tradesmen making the inquiry in a business capacity, innocently replied, "Mutton, sir." "Mutton, with sauce?" "Yes, sir." "Ah, well! I was passing by and thought I would inquire. Good morning." Mary's indignation can well be imagined when she learned the man's motive; but he was too far up the street to hear her angry denunciations.

—— Nine cardinals' hats are at present disposable. Pius IX. has during his reign created 45 cardinals and seen 65 disappear from this world.

—— From a book lately published on tulipmania we extract this amusing anecdote: "A wealthy merchant, who had prided himself on the rarity of his tulips, received a valuable cargo of merchandise from the Levant. Intelligence of its arrival was brought to him by a sailor, and the merchant, to reward him for the tidings, munificently presented him with a red herring for his breakfast. The sailor had, it appears, a great partiality for onions, and seeing a bulb, like an onion, lying on the desk, he slily slipped it into his pocket, as a relish for his herring. Clear off with his prize, he proceeded to the dock to eat his breakfast. Hardly had he left when the merchant missed his valuable Semper Augustus, worth 3,000 florins. A fruitless search was made for the precious root, and at length some one thought of the sailor. The merchant, with all his clerks, hurried after him, and they found the unconscious tar quietly sitting on a coil of rope, masticating the last morsel of his onion, little dreaming that he had been devouring a meal which would have regaled a whole ship's crew for a year."

—— A Russian citizen, named Matianoff, having inserted in the journal Kolokol a letter addressed to the Emperor, in which he blamed principles that guided the policy of the government, has been condemned by the council of the empire to five years at the galleys, and to spend the remainder of his life in Siberia.

—— The Paris correspondent of the N. Y. Times says: "The fact that Queen Victoria did not reply personally to the letter of the Emperor Napoleon to the sovereigns is descanted upon as a national affront, and Her Majesty is reminded that other potentates as good as she did not disdain to write autograph letters to the august head of the glorious nation, whose mission it is to spread liberal ideas all over the surface of the earth." Louis Napoleon lived long enough in London to know that the Queen could not reply to his letter. Every Englishman considers it a great impertinence to write to the Queen at all. Victoria wrote an autograph letter to President Buchanan, but that was on her family matters—namely, about her son.

Art, Science and Literature.—Two rival illustrated papers in England recently selected as the subject for a sensation picture the accident to a man who got one of his arms mangled by lions at the Islington Agricultural Hall. In one picture the lions are crunching away at the poor fellow's right arm, while in the other the ferocious brutes are represented gnawing the left. "You pays your money, and you takes your choice," as the showman said.

—— The Prince of Wales, in sending to the laboratory of Cambridge University, Mass., a copy of the photograph of the Samaritan Pentateuch, taken during the visit of his Royal Highness to Nablous, directed his private secretary to say "That the Prince of Wales will always be glad of any opportunity which may enable him to evince, in however slight a manner, the lively sense which he entertains of the kindness and hospitality he received during his visit to the United States, and that with these recollections he cannot fail cordially to reciprocate the wish to which you have given expression, that nothing may occur to interrupt the friendship which ought ever to subsist between the old country and the new."

—— The Scientific American states that in England the coffins from over-crowded burial-grounds are dug up, dried and ground, and used as an ingredient in the adulteration of coffee. We are inclined to think that Mr. Shoddy would not object to do the same thing in this country.

—— We observe in an Irish paper a very complimentary notice of Mr. Stopford, one of the most popular British artists in water colors of the day. It will be remembered that Mr. Stopford sent several pictures to our Crystal Palace in 1853, all of which were much admired. The present works are Lismore Castle from the meadows, Blarney Castle and the Lakes of Inchegeela. His great specialty is Irish scenery, more especially of the lake counties. The European critics praise his treatment of meadow, wood and water very much, as well as his charming summer skies.

—— The intention of giving Mr. Thackeray's unfinished story—Dennis Duval—to a distinguished litterateur to complete, has been abandoned, in consequence of Mr. Dickens's disapproval. Mr. Thackeray's stories are not so excellent as to be continued by his executors, in which case his tales might be interminable.

—— Adelaide Ristori has engaged an Italian poet, Paolo Franchi, to write for her a drama, to be entitled "Henrico VIII.," in which she intends to play all the king's (five) wives, one after the other.

Chit-Chat.—The new tragedienne, Miss Jean Hosmer, who has made so great a sensation in Philadelphia and Boston, is a sister of the celebrated sculptress. A Boston paper says: "Miss Hosmer possesses not only great personal beauty, but a positive genius, which is displayed by her in a most artistic manner. We especially admire her power, and above all her moderate use of it. She has also immense versatility, which is evidenced by the fact that she is equally admirable in Lucrezia Borgia, Mrs. Haller, Julia, in the "Hunchback," and that very peculiar character, Camille.

—— The New York Herald says: "The arrival of the unpretending victor of Fort Donelson, Vicksburg and Chattanooga reminded Mr. Lincoln of nothing he ever saw before, and he has quite lost his senses in consequence. The people at the War Department never had any to lose, while we all know that there never was method in the madness of Chase. Secretary Welles would be crazy had he awakened from his long nap; but he still sleeps. He gave instructions, when he last turned in, that he was not to be disturbed until the Alabama was caught, and we all know that has not as yet been accomplished."

—— The London Railway News states that not less than 100 tons of crinoline steel are carried over the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway, weekly.

—— It has been decided that a lover cannot legally recover gifts made to a lady while courting her.

INAUGURATION OF GOV. HAHN, OF LOUISIANA,

At New Orleans, March 4, 1864.

The place selected for the inauguration ceremonies was Lafayette square, opposite the City Hall. The surrounding buildings, and the large buttonwood trees which line the square, were all ingeniously worked in as decorations.

In the middle of the square was erected a circular platform, 50 feet in diameter, which served as a base to a tall flagstaff, bearing aloft, above all rivals, the national standard. From this point as a centre, in a sweep of a half mile, towered an amphitheatre of seats, which in height, accommodations and magnitude was never before erected on this continent. On these ranges of seats were comfortably accommodated 10,000 children, together with ample room for 5,000 specially invited guests. At the base of this immense amphitheatre was a platform for Gilmore's 500 musicians, and 40 anvils and their "beaters." In the rear of the amphitheatre 34 upright columns, each surmounted by a glass colored globe underneath a shield; in this way every State of the Union was represented. Behind all this was stationed, by Gen. Arnold, 50 pieces of brass artillery. Over the centre square were the festoons of evergreens and gay signal flags of all nations, and all around were various patriotic mottoes.

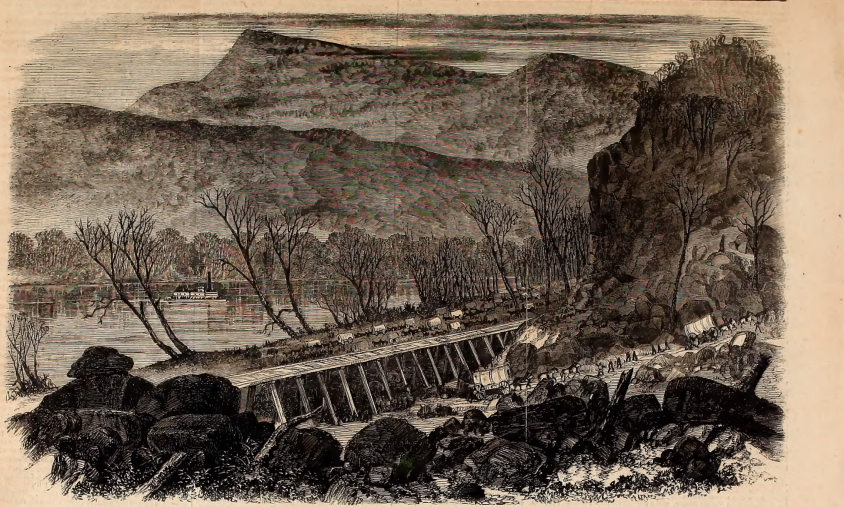
The day of the inauguration ceremonies, 4th March, 1864, was ushered in by a salute of 100 guns from batteries under command of Gen. Arnold. Mingling with this pealed forth merry chimes from all the bells of the city. At an early hour ladies, gentlemen and children commenced wending their way towards the centre of attraction, and before ten o'clock the sides of the square outside were densely packed with spectators. The time consumed in waiting was happily relieved as one delegation of school children after another threaded their way through the multitude, waving their Union flags and, in interminable rows, ascending one above another, took possession of the amphitheatre.

At eleven o'clock, when the school children had all arrived, when the ladies had taken possession of their allotted seats, when the veteran soldiers, two regiments, 1st Regulars and 30th Massachusetts veterans, passed into the square, the excitement grew intense. A procession crossed St. Charles street and entered the square as follows:

The Governor Elect, supported by Brig.-Gen. Shepley, Military Governor; Charles Claiborne, Esq., Clerk U. S. Court; Alfred Shaw, Esq, Clerk U. S. District Court; Hon. E. H. Durell, Judge U. S. District Court; A. C. Graham, Esq., Marshal U. S. Court; Judges B. K. Howell, J. H. Hiestand, C. A. Peabody, J. S. Whitaker, C. Handlin and A. A. Atocha; Recorders H. T. Vennard and Judge Leaumont; Aide-de-Camp; Mayor Hoyt; Aide-de-Camp; Maj.-Gens. Banks, McClernand, Sherman and Reynolds; Brig.-Gens. T. W. Sherman, C. P. Stone, Bowen, Arnold, Lee, Ransom and Cameron, with their several staffs; followed by the officials of the Federal and City Governments, a large number of distinguished citizens and the different committees of arrangements.

Order being at length obtained, Hon. R. K. Howell, Judge of the Sixth District Court, called the vast assemblage to order, and invited the Rev. F. E. Chubbuck to open the ceremonies with prayer.

When the prayer had been offered, "Hail Columbia" was performed in the following manner: First verse, full band, 500 performers; second verse, full band and grand chorus of the 10,000 public school children present; third verse, full band, grand chorus by the children, and a chime of all the bells in the city; fourth verse, full band, grand chorus, the chiming of the bells and a great gun accompaniment of 50 pieces of artillery! It was some time before the delighted and astonished audience could control their feelings, and when silence was apparently restored, there would break out in some parts of the vast assemblage involuntary shouts of applause, which would be echoed back again.



Order being restored, the Governor-elect, amid deafening cheers, stepped up to the table and, amid a profound silence, listened to the words of the oath as they were repeated by Judge Durell. The Governor-elect then kissed the Bible, and was sworn into office under circumstances of extraordinary interest, not only the first loyal Governor of a State once identified with the so-called Confederacy, but also the first Free State Governor of the South-Western States.

The "Star-Spangled Banner," which followed, was never before given with such splendid effect: First time, full band; second time, full band and grand chorus; third time, full band, grand chorus, and a chime of all the bells of the city; fourth time, full band, grand chorus, chiming of bells, and a great gun accompaniment by 50 pieces of artillery.

Judge Howell now introduced the newly-installed Governor of the State, who, in a clear voice, read his inaugural, and closed by again returning thanks to those who had elected him Governor, and promised to do his duties in that office.

Music, "Anvil Chorus," performed by the full band, accompanied by 40 time-beaters upon anvils and 50 pieces of artillery. The novelty of this new musical treat, after what had taken place, was indeed a surprise, and it seemed as if the audience would never tire in their plaudits. Meantime, a beautiful young lady, a teacher in the Barrack street school, accompanied by several beautiful children, miniature representatives of the Goddess of Liberty, came on the stand and presented Gov. Hahn with a beautiful wreath, the flowers wrought so as to read, "M. H., our Governor." The wreath was justly admired for its delicacy and good taste.

At this stage of the proceedings Gen. Banks rose and addressed the audience. At the close the band gave "Our Flag is Still There," first time with full band; second time, full band in grand chorus; third and last time, full band, chorus, chiming of bells, with artillery accompaniment. The Rev. Mr. Horton then offered up an eloquent prayer, followed by a musical medley of our most popular airs, ending with a benediction. Then followed the musical finale, which was one of the grandest affairs of the kind that was ever attempted in this country.

VIADUCT ON THE CHATTANOOGA RAILROAD, TENN., BETWEEN SHELLMOUND STATION AND WHITESIDE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. F. E. HILLEN.

THE VIADUCT ON THE CHATTANOOGA Railroad between Shellmound Station and Whiteside.

THE difficulties to be encountered by our troops, in the long wished for advance on Dalton, may be conceived by the sketch of a portion of the railroad near Chattanooga. No army ever had a more difficult field to operate in, nor one in which a march is attended with greater risks of being cut off from all supplies. At all times the rear of our line has been exposed to attack from rebel cavalry, who have often inflicted serious injury on our trains.

The viaduct spans a rugged ravine surrounded by wild scenery, and the wagon road passes under the bridge which the rebels destroyed, burning the woodwork and coating the stonework with pitch. The steamer Dunbar, moving quietly up the Tennessee, forms a striking contrast to the toiling men and beasts on shore.

THE VALPARAISO AND SANTIAGO RAILWAY

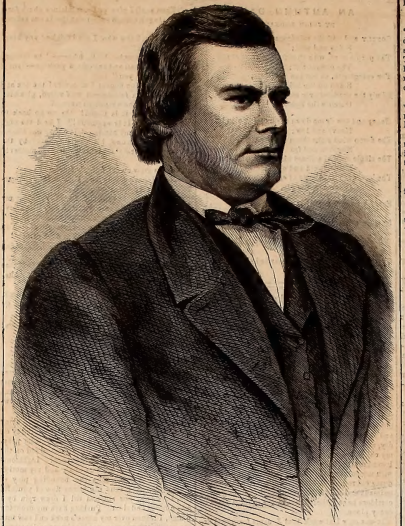
WAS opened by the President of Chili upon the 14th Sept. last with great ceremony. Its length is somewhat over 114 miles, and, as its course lies through a portion of the Chain of the Andes, it offers, in some respects, features seldom encountered upon works of this nature. Upon it are five tunnels, several viaducts of 70, 80 and 126 feet in height, and an incline of 12 miles in length, rising 135 feet per mile, attaining an altitude of 2,840 feet above the level of the Pacific Ocean. It is, therefore, one of the highest railways in the world at present in use; and, with one exception—that of the Copiapo Extension, also in Chili, which is 4,400 feet in height—it crosses the loftiest summit yet passed by the locomotive in either North or South America.

The passage of the mountain range of Tabon, between Valparaiso and the capital, was a very formidable undertaking, and in accomplishing this the chief difficulties have been surmounted. For 80 miles the line climbs along the face of precipitous cliffs, at a considerable height above their base, while above it tower rugged porphyry cliffs more than 1,000 feet in height, the favorite haunt of condors, eagles and other birds of prey. Here there are three tunnels in quick succession; and at one point occurs the Maquis Viaduct—which we illustrate—an iron structure 126 feet in altitude, 600 feet in length, and which presents the rare features of being curved to a radius of 600 feet; and, on account of the incline over it, being about 14 feet higher at one end than the other. The superstructure of this viaduct is tubular, the principal span being 150 feet, and it is the first example of a tubular bridge erected in South America.

THE MAQUIS VIADUCT ON THE VALPARAISO AND SANTIAGO RAILWAY.—FROM A SKETCH BY MR. BOULET.

A SONG FOR THE LOYAL.

BY AMANDA T. JONES.



BELOVED Columbia, peerless one,
Through glory's gates exulting enter!
For thou art Freedom's morning sun,
Of all her stars the shining centre.
The KING of kings, whom worlds revere,
Bent down and from the darkness won thee;
Placed thee in thine effulgent sphere,
And set his radiant seal upon thee.

Ah, well we know Jehovah's love,
When all European flowers did wither,
Bade the swift breezes westward move,
To waft the seed of Freedom hither.
Wild roared the blast; the hardy germ
By secret dews of eve was nourished:
Soft sang the wind; erect and firm,
It rose and by the waters flourished.

Eden of earth! thy generous clime
Gave Freedom's plant sun, wind and shower:
It bloomed—the brightest rose of time;
And on our hearts we wear the flower.
With loyal blood in every vein,
In spirit free, though bond in letter,
We clasp our golden Union chain,
And bless the Power that forged the fetter.

Queen of the seas; when, o'er the flood,
Came armies, mad with thirst for slaughter,
Upon thy hills our fathers' blood,
For love of thee, ran down like water.
And when the blatant cannon stormed,
By Treason's bastard hand directed,
At once thy patriot legions swarmed,
And every stream their swords reflected.

Live on, unshamed and unenslaved,
When all that seek thy hurt have perished!
By Freedom won, by Freemen saved,
And by the God of Freemen cherished.
Heaven's crystal gates, thou peerless one,
Uplift their heads to bid thee enter;
For thou art Freedom's morning sun,
And all her stars around thee centre.

HON. MICHAEL HAHN, GOVERNOR ELECT OF LOUISIANA.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY LILIENTHAL. SEE PAGE 17.

A WOMAN'S HAIR.

By Lucy A. Randall.

IT was the afternoon of a clear February day, blue sky above, capital sleighing beneath, and a keen knifelike wind midway between, when Silas Montagu's superb chestnut-colored horses were checked in front of the plateglass windows of a fashionable coiffeur's establishment, just out of the whirl and tumult of Broadway, and a young lady of about seventeen alighted from the chocolate-colored coupé, to enter the dominion of pomatum and frizettes.

The knight of the comb and scissors advanced briskly from behind the counter to greet his pretty customer, who was dressed in velvet and sables, that might have, and probably did, cost a small fortune.

"Don't let me interrupt you, Mr. Macassar," said the lady, carelessly sinking down upon a crimson broccatelle sofa, and glancing towards two women with whom the coiffeur had been in deep conversation at the moment of her entrance, "I can wait a few minutes perfectly well."

"You are very kind, Miss Montagu, but our business is completed." He added, in a lower tone of voice: "Only some women come to sell their hair. You see they have stepped inside for our cutter to take it off."

"To sell their hair!" repeated Miss Montagu.

"Certainly, ma'am. It's a very common thing, I assure you, more particularly since it has become unusual to wear the hair short. And then, hard times, you know—"

"But surely it is impossible to gain enough to be any compensation for the loss of a fine head of hair?" said the young lady, earnestly.

"Oh, you are mistaken. For long, luxuriant hair, of a good color—such hair, for instance, as yours, Miss Montagu—we give as much as three dollars."

"Three dollars!" repeated the girl, scornfully.

"Hair will soon grow again, Miss Montagu," said the hairdresser, shrugging his shoulders. "In what can I serve you to-day?"

Miss Montagu sells her Golden Locks for Three Dollars!

"I came in to request you to send some one to arrange my hair for to-morrow evening."

"Mrs. Warrener's ball?" smoothly interposed the man, who appeared to be au fait in fashionable intelligence. "Certainly ma'am, to be sure. I will send Francis. What jewels do you wear?"

"Only a small wreath of netted pearls round the braids."

And Mr. Montagu bowed his fair young patroness out of the store with smiling complaisance. She stood a moment on the step as if thinking, then spoke to the liveried servant on the box:

"You may drive home, John. I shall not need you any more to-day," she said, quietly.

John touched first his gold-banded hat and then his horses, and in a few moments was out of sight, very glad to be relieved.

Then, and not till then, Miss Montagu walked briskly away, brushing the pavements of obscure streets with her costly silk, as if she cared not for its lustrous splendor, threading narrow alleys, and at length ascending the uncarpeted stairs of a tenement-house, and knocking at the door on the third story.

It was opened by a pale, shadowy-looking woman, scarce older in the calendar of years than Miss Montagu herself, but, alas! how much more aged in the record of care and grief.

"Flora, dearest, how kind this is of you!"

For Flora Montagu had thrown her arms round the slender figure and was showering kisses on the pale forehead with true girlish warmth of affection.

"You can't be more surprised to see me, Lizzy, than I am to be here! I was out shopping, when suddenly the idea occurred to me of stealing an interview with you. So I sent John home, and here I am."

"But, Flora, what would my uncle say?"

"He will never know it," said Flora, demurely. "And, besides, Lizzy, my conscience does not condemn me for this visit. Papa's conduct has been so unkind, so actually inhuman towards you. Think of it, dearest. After giving you a luxurious home until now, to turn you out of doors just for marrying a poor artist—and you his own sister's daughter, too!"

"True!" sighed the delicate young creature whom Flora addressed as Lizzy. "Yet if it were not for Clement's continued illness and our poverty, I should never for a moment regret that—"

The door was rudely pushed open at this moment without even the trifling formality of a warning knock, and a wiry head, with sharp terrier eyes to match, was thrust unceremoniously in.

"I say, missus, is that ere money ready?"

Lizzy had turned very pale and clasped her wan fingers tightly together.

"I am sorry," she stammered; "but——"

The head and eyes now advanced entirely into the room with the short, thickset figure to which they belonged.

"Look here, marm!" said the man, harshly. "This is the third week you've had these ere two rooms, and not a red cent of rent have I set eyes on. Needn't tell me your husband's sick; there's enough tenants I can get without sick husbands, I don't want to hear no excuses—they don't amount to nothin'. I jest want you to understand this much—if them three dollars ain't paid down afore the clock strikes five, out you go, bag and baggage, on the pavement. I've stood this kind o' nonsense long enough!"

He disappeared, closing the door behind him with a bang that made the walls rattle. Flora had listened to the brief colloquy with paling cheek, which grew still whiter as Lizzy burst into a paroxysm of bitter tears, hiding her face in her hands. Flora rose and bent over the bowed form with caressing touch.

"Dearest, are things really as bad as this?"

Lizzy replied only by her sobs.

"Can't you contrive to raise the money to pay this man?"

"How can I?" moaned Lizzy. "Everything we have, except the very bed Clement lies on, is sold or pawned. I am faint from lack of bread, and it is impossible to get even the most poorly paid work."

Flora's lip quivered; she had never seen poverty in this ghastly guise before.

The Tenement-house Landlord demanding his Rent.

"Oh, if I could only help you!" she sighed. "But papa never gives me money; he pays my bills cheerfully, but everything passes through his own hands."

"It would kill Clement to be moved," sobbed Lizzy. "If I could but obtain the three dollars I would not care for aught else!"

As Flora bent over her cousin one shining braid of glossy golden hair became detached from its fastening and fell from beneath her bonnet. She put up her hand mechanically to replace it, and at that moment she remembered Mr. Macassar's words.

"Lizzy," she exclaimed, impetuously, "wait a few minutes and you shall have the money. I will be back in half an hour."

And she hurried away with crimson cheeks and sparkling eyes.

Mr. Macassar was lounging over a newspaper when Miss Montagu entered his luxurious room a second time.

"Sir," she said, advancing close to the counter, and speaking in a tremulous tone, "I have concluded to have my hair cut off; will you give me three dollars for it?"

The spruce coiffeur stared. Was Miss Montagu in earnest or was this only a jest?

"Why do you not answer me?" she asked sharply.

"Certainly, Miss Montagu," stammered the hairdresser, recovering his tongue, "I shall be most happy, if you wish it. Please to step into the back room, and Francis shall attend you in a minute."

Poor Flora! Never had her golden waves of hair seemed half so lovely and lustrous as they did at the moment that the deft fingers of Francis unbraided them and passed the cruel, gleaming scissors among the bright strands. And when at length Mr. Macassar, with polite alacrity, presented her with a banknote, the big "3" might as well have been an Egyptian hieroglyphic for all that her tear-swimming eyes could decipher it.

She carried the money to Lizzy, and then, woman-like, went home, looked in the glass, and cried heartily.

For she had been passing proud of those pale brown tresses, threaded with gold and blending into auburn lights at every turn of her dainty head. And now they are gone—all gone!

"Who is that pretty girl, just coming in the room, in the white crape, with blue forget-me-nots in her hair, and the little, short, dancing curls, like bits of gold sunshine round her head?"

The speaker was an elaborately-dressed young man, who stood, with gold-mounted opera-glass at his eyes, in Mrs. Warrener's brilliantly-lighted salons. At his side stood a tall, foreign-looking gentleman, with large black eyes and a somewhat haughty, although handsome, face. He had been eagerly forward at his companion's words.

"It can't be possible!" he exclaimed. "And yet—it is Flora Montagu!"

"Faith, Gilroy, you're right!" ejaculated young Manvers. "Flora Montagu, and none else! But what on earth has the bewitching little fairy done with that glorious hair of hers? Cut it off to be in the fashion, I'll be bound!"

"I do not know," said Gilroy, contracting his grave eyebrows, "that Miss Montagu is one to enslave herself to all the idle freaks of the reigning mode."

"I know you're a sworn admirer of the young lady, Gilroy," returned his companion, laughing; "but all women are alike!"

"All women are alike!" The words fell like molten iron on Clarence Gilroy's heart. Was it indeed so? Had the idle dream that Flora was better and truer than the rest of her sex proved but a vanishing delusion after all? He remembered the words he had heard her speak but an evening or two before.

"Nothing shall ever induce me to have my hair cut off in the absurd way that people call fashionable!"

She had not scrupled to perjure herself, then; she was as unthinking and frivolous as the idlest butterfly that ever fluttered around the flower gardens of society! He turned away, silently, and when Flora Montagu's innocent, violet-blue eyes were raised inquiringly towards his face, they encountered a cold repellant gaze that the fair young girl was unable entirely to comprehend.

The evening of the forget-me-nots had fallen from Miss Montagu's hair, and she had gone into the comparative solitude of the conservatory, with saucy Nelly Hyde, to re-arrange them. One chandelier alone diffused its soft lustre among acacias and tea-roses, from shades of crimson-tinted glass, and the two girls stood directly beneath its rosy glow, all unconscious that Clarence Gilroy leaned against the farther door, a few steps beyond, in the shade of a blossoming tropical tree, whose fiery scarlet stars almost touched his forehead.

"Do you know, Flora," said Nelly, as she adjusted the truant flowers, and stepped backward to observe the general effect, "that everybody is wondering what in the world possessed you to cut off those splendid golden locks of yours. Some lay it to the score of vanity—others to that of caprice, and——"

"Nelly!" said the soft, serious voice of Flora, with a tremulous falter in its accents, "I never meant to reveal the secret to any living soul, but I cannot leave that you, dearest, should imagine me capable of such frivolous folly. I will tell you just why it was cut off, if you will promise me to keep the sorrow religiously within your bosom."

"I promise," said Nelly, passing her arm caressingly around Flora's waist.

Clarence Gilroy moved uneasily amid the morning flowers and fiery drooping stars of his fragrant screen. But he could not well retreat now; and besides, it is not a very dignified characteristic to spend much of a stately preux chevalier as Mr. Clarence Gilroy, but there certainly was a keen impulse of curiosity stirring the depths of his heart, to see why Flora Montagu had cut off the lovely amber tresses of which she well knew him to be such an enthusiastic admirer.

And so, with a secret misgiving, he played the part of listener.

"You know," resumed Flora, "all about my poor cousin Lizzy's unfortunate marriage with Clement Percy?"

And she went on to tell the simple story of her adventures in Paris with much innocent pathos that Nelly Hyde was in tears ere the recital was finished. And there was another pair of eyes not very far off almost unmanned also.

"I had no money," pursued Flora. "I felt that it would not be honorable to sell anything that papa had given me, knowing his feelings on the subject, and so——Was it very wrong, Nelly, to sell my hair? If you could only have seen how welcome the money was to poor Lizzy!"

When at last the conservatory's perfumed aisles were vacant and Clarence Gilroy left his nook among the vines, he felt that that one glimpse into Flora Montagu's heart was worth half the fortune that made him the idol of manœuvring mammas and marriageable daughters. The eclipse upon his sun had passed away.

The next day Clement Percy was astonished very agreeably by the receipt of an anonymous letter, containing a banknote for fifty dollars. And the next day after that Flora stole round to tell her cousin that she was engaged to Clarence Gilroy.

"And will I have a bonne of my own, dearest," she said, "you and Clement shall share it. Clarence says so."

Mrs. Gilroy kept the word that Flora Montagu had pledged.

A FARMER, who could not get rid of his crop, said, pointing to his wheelbarrow, "There, that is where the shoe pinches, where the corn is!"

TENFOLD.—Being kept out of a fortune by a prolonged chancery suit.

AN AUTUMN DIAN.

BY JULIE LEONARD.

SOFTLY and still the raindrops patter down,
Softly and still;
The purple haze, with shadowy mists, enwrown
The distant hill;
The evergreens, as warders at sentinels,
Stand on the height;
Dimly the shadows over moor and fell
Obscure the light.

Heavy and low droop down the hanging clouds,
Heavy and low;
The damp wind sighs through lofty trees,
Sweet to and fro.
The single song of solitary bird
Rings sweet and clear;
The low, deep undertone of earth
Chimes on the ear.

Far, far away the restless, surging ocean,
Far away,
In stern unrest, in ceaseless strong commotion,
Its billows play;
While the fierce storm-bird recklessly is flinging
The blinding spray,
Over the rocks, where dank seaweed is clinging,
In Ocean bay.

Insufficiency.

By Catharine Earnshaw.

The years they come and go,
The races drop in the grave,
And fresh ones fill their room;
Which here in my heart I have.

The brown muirland answers sombrely; it offers only one shade of sadness to the bosom, and I have within myself too much of gloom and of cold, and my eyes ache for the picture of a summer gone by, my lips pant for the breath of the warm south that never shall blow again. Down by the stream that used to purl through the moor, I find that the bluebells of remembrance bloom stiff in their bed and never will blossom. The bed of the stream is dry, and the pebbles that shone, diamondlike, to my childish eyes are coarsened and black with earth. I went down there the other day and came back with my sorrow renewed—came back to find, in the dusty old rooms of this house, a voice that spoke pleasantly to me, and of the sorrow that the neglected corridors have hitherto said in the muffled tones of decay alone.

It was my last week that I came from that demure little town in Saxony. I ought to have brought with me its placid goodhumor, its poetized phlegm, but I could not. Sombre, sombre, and they were not congenial. Instead, I came home with the spirit I carried out, the same that nursed its sorrow and its wrath in the Schmerwald, and refused to be comforted among the viney valleys of Gaul. Since I have been in this house, in Scotland, which I only remember walked back to after many years to the day when the sun rose to gild my twentieth birthday. So vividly do I remember myself that morning, that day, that I could see the sun glass, I almost expected to see a head crowned with crimson autumn roses, as when, twelve years ago, that day, I had arrayed myself in the mirror of my sister's dressing-room. My sister wove the wreath, and pressed it down on hair that was then pure bonnie brown. She said, as she turned me round:

"It's a pity, Psyche, that these roses are scentless; I wonder if it's a bad omen."

My father stood at the open door. In the fondness of his pride for his firstborn daughter he had named her Psyche, and now, with pride no whit abated, he said:

"Rather say the crimson of their petals is typeroyal of my Psyche's heart. Your soul shall furnish fragrance, and these blossoms shall be perfumeless no longer."

He fondled my crowned head with his hand.

"Psyche, my darling, you are mine and thinks he reads your eyes, my darling, forget not that your father translates the characters you reveal behind that deep veil. Forget not that none can love that language better than he."

My soul was thickly crossed and veiled with the golden mystery of my father's nature. I loved his flowing sentences better than the sharp cut ones that stung my ear from others. Pleasure made my cheek its own ruddy tint, and I said, as I pressed a kid my face in his tawny beard, and cried like a child for nothing else than because I loved him so, "Foolish father," he said. "But I like you better for bedding them; they keep your eyes all the brighter for the mirth that will come to sit in them when the tenantry come to celebrate your birthday in dance and ale-bawl."

"What a queen you are making of that girl," my sister pettishly said, with the vexation coming out in her tones. "Many's the time our mother has said that your dawdling and petting will do the child no good in the end. It's not wise."

"Then we mauun be silly thegither," he said, with a laugh; "and you, Hester, shall embody the wisdom of our family."

"I did not mean that, you know," Hester said, softening her face. "It's not that I don't love Psyche as well as myself, but it's you who are putting highflown notions in her head. But we will not chasbow her exodus from teendom. So, Psyche, there's this is from me; a present after your own heart, I'm thinking."

She clasped round my wrist a golden serpent, with eyes of rubies, red as fire.

"You are such a child for the horrid, and admire the sinuosities of snakedom so much, that I got you this. Never mind the thanks," and Hester left me in the speaking of my gratitude.

"You do not wish such a hideous image from me, do you?" my father asked.

"It is beautiful!" I said.

"Then shall I give you a miniature shark for a pin? Do you eschew everything that is not venomous?"

"No; you know what I shall think of any keepsake from you."

"Dear flatterer! Well, here——" he stepped back into the hall and brought a package—"see if it be worthy of you."

With fluttering fingers I uncovered the box and lifted the satin foldings—a half-veiled, gleaming figure; at last the features were off.

"Oh, father, it is Cupid! Do we go back to Heathendom? It is exquisite!" I held the pure Parian thing in my hands. His quiver was almost rustling with arrows, his wings feathery by the perfection of art. "He is beautiful as his mother!" I cried.

A smile grew on my father's face.

"Now I have Cupid and Psyche in my household," he said; "was ever man so blest?"

"I never thought of that," I said, renewing my gaze at the form of the boy. "I shall die of love for him! And why was the animate this matrix?"

"No, you will not die," was his answer. "You will be made immortal, even as in days of old."

"May I be fitted for the gift," I said, in sudden earnestness.

I set my Love on the window-ledge, and the roses there languidly gave their pink tinges to his whiteness.

"See!" I said, running my finger over his neck. "You remember, father, in that paraphrase on Apuleius—

On the god's shoulders, too, she marked his wings
Shine faintly at the edges, and resemble
A flower blown, but not full blow'd.
And, sorrow, though these plumes lay reposing,
The feathers of a bird prepared to sail and live,
As if, by instinct, closing and unclosing."

I had my god by the mirror where I stood every morning to take the last look. I put him there that day and garlanded him about with the wreath I had worn on my head, and there he stood, faintly glowing with borrowed roses.

Came nightfall of that same day, I galloped alone across the heath, leaping the stream, and away on to the Parkhill. Never, during my life gray-bound to follow, I scented the air and fed on the moonlight as youthful maiden can. Lightsome and free, my bounding was elixir and my motion elasticity. Feeling thus the bounding play of muscle, drinking thus the winey flow of youthful life, I rode on, nor stopped till I drew rein by a fallen heather rock. Shining back my drooping plume, I leaned over my horse's neck and saw that the prostrate horseman was inanimate and fastened down by his steed. All my gaiety flowed back on heavy tides that slackened my pulse's beating. While I drew my skirt from the pommel, my grayhound came to me, fawning, with dainty nose, the stranger's face and hands. I see him now as plainly as then; one foreparm hid, as though the artist's taste created beard enough to make him a gentleman plebeian. I remember I spoke sharply to him as I jumped to the ground, and he stunk behind me and started reading my face on my long walk as I stooped to the fallen man. His horse was dead. Ridden to death, it seemed to me. The man's head was bleeding against a moonlit stone; his hands seored blackly out, and the night raised a glamour of terror before my eyes. What would my father say, did he know I was out in the night with a sight like this? Inhumanly I half wished that I had not seen the man. Why did he come with his gorenese, like an assassin, on my homeward night? And I must help and help him, if help could avail him now. I drew his crumpled hat from his head, and long, girlish curls fell on the heath plumes.

"The lad is a boy," I muttered, grimly. "Mayhap he's been riding to meet his truelove. Poor thing, long and ugle will she wait his coming."

I remembered a mountain pool close by in the copse, and I parted the boughs and pushed through, knelt down by the bank, and drenched my kerchief in the cool water; then I dipped in his hat, and running back fast, with now and then a slop of the darksome stuff as I stumbled over the ridges and hollows of the heath, I sat down and washed away the stains from his forehead and off his still, shut eyelids. I sprinkled the water in gentle jets on his temples, and bathed and chafed his wrists. I hoped he would revive, but I felt a silly fear of seeing his eyes open. They did open, though, and looked up to the sky in simple wonderment. I stood back and spoke:

"The gentleman will remember that he was falling across the moor and his horse fell."

He turned round and round and him thoroughly.

"And my brave hunter is dead," he said, turning his eyes to his horse's face.

"Even as you say, 'killed to the strain at last;'" my voice had asperity in it; I loved my own horse, and that love widened to his kindred.

"I will ask your pardon," the stranger said; then suddenly and with vivacity, "but pray come into sight, my helping genius, it may be that I can rise with your assistance."

I came forward, but stood back to the moonlight.

"Direct me and I will help you. Here is your hat;" I dropped it on his hands.

With smothered groans and many twistings at length he writhed his foot from under his horse. He lay still a few moments after that. I thought he was faint, for his face grayed again and his eyes drooped. I came nearer.

"No, only wait," he said, with a little motion of his hand.

I went to my horse and led him, and stood with bridle over arm and my bound crouching at my feet. The moonlight was falling on me and him, and it seemed a different thing from the light of an hour ago. I thought I was brave with a courage that trembles not, but I hated to be there alone with this wounded man, so the moon sheen had changed to ghastliness and the fresh night air was sickening. My horse snorted his neck right proudly and dilated his eyes at the sight of his fallen fellow-creature. I hugged his face between my hands, and furtively kissed the star on his forehead. He seemed so human to me then, out on the moor with blood at my feet, and sq unman my hands whose hands I was going to clasp, and whose pains I was bound to soothe.

"Now, lady, give me your hand, if you please; just stand as firmly as possible, and I think I can rise."

He pulled hard, but finally he stood and held to my arm, to steady himself.

"You will mount my horse, and I will conduct you to my home: that is, if you are able to ride."

He was looking at me sharply, and I met his glance to see if he were strong enough.

"Who ever thought that I should be succored by a Scottish fairy," he cried, letting go my arm to smooth back his curls.

"That will do," I said, drily, "you can mount now." I stood at my horse's head and motioned him on.

"I ought to bind up your head," I said, but loth to do it. "Sit down; it shall be done in a minute."

I twisted my handkerchief on, and bade him get on. "He is from south of the Tweed, I know by his ready tongue," I thought.

"I shall not get on and you go afoot," he said, but he leaned against my horse, and was too weak to walk. To cut short our words, I said:

"Then I shall mount and away, and you may go where you please, with no care of mine."

Then he labored up in the saddle, and I and my hound walked by his side, back over heath and long-ago blossomed broom; back through the sheepy yellow of the grass and the steady silver down of the stars; back through the night that came down on my twentieth year, and that never lifted for the perfect sweetness of light again. In the poplar-lined carriage drive we met my father. I knew he was watching and coming, for he always met me when I came back from the heathery, palpitating rides that I almost daily went through. We entered the gate with funereal slowness, and I pulled the bell-rope at my father's solid wall.

"Extend our hospitality to this unfortunate stranger. I found him on the heath beyond the Farther Pool. His horse was falling under him."

I went into the house and left them as the man was beginning a sentence and trying to dismount. I walked to my chamber and sat down in front of my new-found god, whose beauty now shone in moon-lighted perfectness. I fastened my hair, for the riding and the darkness had flown out on my shoulders. I was looking steadfastly at myself in the dim mirror, when my sister came up behind me. My face was pale, and her eyes alight.

"What is it?" I asked.

A satirical laugh rippled out of her lips.

"Why, a very handsome stranger has come from the moors. Did you bring it here to set the jewel in our own home casings? Did you fear it would perish in the night?"

I did not answer her, but my eyes grew hot as the words I wanted to say.

She laughed again.

A fitting companion for your Cupid here. We maynow have love both in flesh and marble." She played with the roses about my statue.

"You may stop your talk, Hester!" I burst out. "If I cannot help a poor man because he is young and handsome, then I should belie my own sex. Shame on me when I am ever hospitable. I know nothing what you mean."

I looked fiercely at her, and swallowed down my tears, that it was hard-to keep the vexing drops from flowing.

"Go down and share the curly-haired lad talk, and see his eye shine when he tells our father of the kind fairy he met on the heath. Sooth to say, he is dead in love with you now, and my father already looks on you as a child thought of losing you."

"Are you all daft together?" I cried, with blushing cheeks. "I thought you had a little sense in your head, Hester."

"And it's because I have that I think it so strange that this stranger should allow himself such freedom as to kiss the hand of a fearful. There, Donald is shewing him up to a room by the south turret; I hear their steps on the staircase. Now come down and see father."

I followed her down, and walked up to my father, asking:

"Who is that man who came home with me? Hester has been as unkind as though I rode out to elope with him."

I said this in anger, and repented as soon, for my sister's face showed distress and reddening.

"A little sisterly envy, perhaps. The youth is impulsive and lacks the discretion that matures in years, father replied, "but I believe he is leal-hearted. He has a winsome face; did you not think so, Hester?"

"Yes; he's pretty enough, but over bold for my ides."

"And his name and home?" I said.

"Lord Ragsidean from the neighborhood of Lancaster, and he calls himself John Derwent. Your first conquest, Psyche," my father said, gravely.

"A dire conquest!" I replied, crossly. "If he publishes his fancies, as this Derwent seems to have done, he may e'en gang his gait without sight of my face again." My countryside Scotch always sprang readiest to my tongue when vexed.

My father laughed constrainedly. "No, no. It was not one of those words we fair and tame. He can't be many months older than you, and likely enough he'll sleep off his first thoughts, and be sober enough in the morning."

I echoed my father's words, but my vanity mused far into the night, and wondered if this "was to receive" would harden into marble—for like many another maiden, I did not despise my own charms nor the victim who was smitten by them. The next daylight showed me vividly the youthful fire of his face and its almost feminine beauty.

A FARMER, who could not get rid of his crop, said, pointing to his wheelbarrow, "There, that is where the shoe pinches, where the corn is!"

TENFOLD.—Being kept out of a fortune by a prolonged chancery suit.

My father carefully inquired after his health and seated him at his right hand at the breakfast table, where he sat throughout the meal, neither eating nor drinking, only barely touching his lips to the wine. His temple was swollen black round its red gash, and his eyes had no sire or brightness in them. He stood by the breakfast-room door, and thanked my father and his daughters for their kindness to him, and said he must beg the use of a horse to the nearest station—then he fainted dead away and fell across the threshold. It was not I who went to him with pungent correctives. I walked out of the room and left my father and Hester to do as they pleased. Let the man stay as long as he liked, I would have no more to do with him; so through the weeks that came I only heard his moans and callings from the hall outside his room, or sometimes when they came shrill and cutting even down to the parlor.

Hester tended him, Hester cut off his long curls Hester sang him to sleep, and Hester loved him. They called me unkind that I would not share the task with her, but my father ceased to reproach me when I had declared, with a pout and a shrug, that I knew nothing about illness and should as soon as not poison the man with his medicines. Tempted to retaliate upon my sister for the blushes she had made color my cheeks, I was satirical and sarcastic, genial, and she told me nothing of her patient. I asked not if he were better or worse, but I listened for her answer when my father asked.

One day she said his fever was gone and he would get well. Could he read the letter that had come for him in his delirium? My father took the letter from his desk and gave it absently to me. I dropped it on the table by Hester's hand, and turned away.

"I have some accounts to discuss with Hester, and you will please carry that up and present my congratulations, Pyche. It would be well if you like to give him your own, also;" my father said.

I curtly thanked him for the suggestion, and went upstairs. My letter was inside, Effie, was sitting by him, and she opened the door to my knock. I walked breathlily in. I had not seen him before since he lay on the floor of the breakfast-room. He did not turn his face, so Effie whispered:

"He also na ken it is ye, miss; he thinks it is Miss Hester."

"Diana ye speak," I said, almost savagely, but very lowly. I stepped to him and spoke:

"My father wishes me to express his pleasure at the prospect of your recovery." I held the letter behind me and watched him slowly move so that he could see me.

"It is not Hester; it is Psyche—the moorland Psyche."

He devoured my face with his sunken, unnaturally large eyes, and boyishly blushed from the temples to the gaze. As for me, I repeated what my father had said, and after a moment's thought added:

"I am very glad you are better."

"I am," he replied, then irascibly—"for I can leave this house all the sooner. 'Oh, the cursed woods of Sussex! where the hunter's arrow found me!' I wonder why that runs over and over in my head so."

"Because you are weak and have been ill. You will be able to go in a week or two, I should think," I said, encouragingly.

"Never you fear," he said, with feeble-sounding energy. "I'll keep from you for my own good; there's little danger of my having to do it for years. I'm hardly more than a boy yet, or I might do something I wished. I'm always foiled."

"Here's a letter that came a week ago for John Derwent." I put it on his pillow and turned to go. His voice arrested me.

"If I lay here a year you would not bless me by a sight of your face?"

"I was not needed."

"May you some day know whether you have been needed or not."

I went out at that and met Hester in the hall. My face was masked in blankness as I passed her, and I said:

"I almost decide to be ill myself, Hester, so that I had you for nurse."

The day came when he could get downstairs, and all the hours of the shortening fall daylight he sat by a window in the drawing-room, paying little heed to Hester or my father. I did not see him. How could I have the lad look at me in his way, and my father there to see?

At last he went off, and he left no troth-pledge with Hester, and he whispered no love-word in her ear, and he never expected to see him again.

I stood at the door on my father's arm and gave the Englishman my hand with my farewell. He wedded all the sadness with me the rest were over, then he bowed low before me and went over the moor with never a last word for me to remember.

"The brave Englisher will be ne'er be a cheery lad," Effie said to me when I called her up to my room.

"And why not?"

"I ken by the glint of his e'e; it's na like other folk; he's far too brave and pure-hearted."

"So much the better, if he's good," I said; "the Lord will give him good cheer if the world does cast him out."

Hester kept her own sorrow, and we never talked of the departure; and for aught she could tell, we had forgotten that we had seen him.

As the winter came on, and the snow killed the roses and lay over the heath, I sat oftener and oftener in front of my marble god, and knew with bitterness that I had no flowers with which to wreathe him—that the air had no softness in which to bathe him.

It was four months since he had stood there—four months since I had found all my happiness, with my father and sister. The glimpse of other world light left gloominess at the country house. The winds went roughing and bent down the poplars; the snow went swirling and choked up the linn at the bottom of the garden—the place which, in childhood, I had feigned to be the Dead Sea, for it was deathlike in its blackness, deadly in its deepness.

I thought often and long of the gloom and the terror of the linn. I walked to the place sometimes when the snow thawed, and saw the inky water sucking in the white fleece and lying dormant and filled after its feast. My heart caught at the place as fitting for its resort, and through the dark months I absorbed its ghastliness and read its dialect of horror, till, well nigh crazed with the solitude and the thought, I begged to go to my cousins in Glasgow, to stay till the warm months.

Hester stopped me with a timid endurance. If she would rather stay with her past, she might, and hear no remonstrance of mine; but for me, the house was a lazar-house of infant joys, and would have no more loneliness.

I took the hurrying, trading Glasgow enthusiastically to my heart. My gay young cousins could not usher me to too many routines; I could not receive too many callers; I could not tamper foolishly with too many young men.

"You have taken the town by storm with your winning Scotch ways and your bonnie blue e'en. Spare our hearts!" laughed cousin Katy, one morning, as I brushed my hair.

"Have you not Scotch ways yourself?" I asked.

"We have lost the winsome ways, my dear; but you have the countenance, shape and fragrance. you are as fresh as a flower from the brass. You know not how sweetly a broad accent slips from your tongue."

"You should know that you can pile up too much flattery on a flower; you'll extract all the perfume and break the stem. See, I am ready."

"Ye ken weel that I'm aboon the art o' phrasin; it ill becomes a truthful lassie."

Katy laughed, answered me not willing to own my vexation. I would be no sweet blooming violet. I must be a city blossom or none. Silly ambition, which I could not have acted upon, try hard as I might.

"Don't pull my hair so, if you are vexed," Katy implored. "I did not mean to offend you; indeed, you ought to take my part. See how jealous I am that you lay the braids smooth, for we have a new visitor to-day."

"Who is coming?" with restored goodhumor.

"A young Sunderland—a son of father's partner at the wharf. So lace your bodice right gaily, and brush your hair right prettily."

Miss Ainslie is a cousin of mine from the moors at the source of the Ayr," Katy somewhat maidenlessly explained when she presented Sunderland.

I flushed and grew proud on the instant, for he was the man whom I had found on the heath, and his voice and face were to me what they had been from the time I first heard and saw.

I had good need to draw pride, as a veil, about me, when Lilian Ainslie met Sunderland at the door out the asking. He had had little time to grow old; so his face was innocent and grew as passionful as in the day we parted. He took my hand in greeting, but he promised so gladly to come again that, for all I could do, my heart would be glad with him.

I wish I had written all this in the days gone away, when the grass was green for me, and the gowans bloomed sweet with the daisies. I wish I had written when the glow of my love went burning and dancing through my veins, and the very heartbeatings like draughts of the red wine. Now I can only write the words that have had plenty of time to cool in, and the years that have even long cannot be animated by the eyes that gave them meaning—by the hearts that folded them warm within their bosoms. We were to bring good to red the enchanted book of love and read its pages with clasped hands and eyes that melted in their meeting.

I wanted my father to know my tremulous happiness, but wished it might be hidden for ever from Hester. I had known her to be jealous of my successes, but the wilful Psyche Ainslie could never make one. How could it be sure that the remembered soul of mutual love would bring good to Hester, whom my lover could not love? My cool, unfeeling reason would not prompt the deed, and no voice spoke to me.

My father came up to Glasgow after my first note had reached him. Now the blackness which had settled me at my birth began to lower around me. Happy to be with my father once more, I waited for him to say why he came.

He said: "So Psyche finds her real Cupid here, and her worldly father's pelf is only a faint type of him. Tell me the story."

"Indeed, I have no story to tell," I whispered, with burdened cheeks; "only love—love a man other than you; but oh, believe me, loving you no thought the less all the while."

And will the babes leave me lone in the bitter dool of this loss, and she go roam in the world with this lad of her heart?"

My father grieved.

"Diana ye call the saut tears to darken this hour," I said. "You cannot help loving him. He's the same who came to our house from his fall on the moor, only his name is more than he told us—it is John Derwent Sunderland."

My father's arm slackened round me, and his face grew dusky. I rose in trembling, and sat down at his feet.

"I want no Ainslie blood mingling with that stream," he said, and walked away from me. Presently he turned his head from the far window where he stood, and asked:

"Do you know his father's name?"

"John Sunderland."

A piercing silence fell upon us. At last he said:

"Go away, my child; you have hurt a wound you know not of. Let your prayers be heartfelt this night."

It was a teary face that pressed my pillow through the dark hours. I waited till morning—what would my father tell me? He would not ban my happiness without good cause. I knew his true soul so well that I believed that. But some terror was coming to shut out my lessome love from my life.

Next day I expected with shivering dread my father's coming. I sat in the parlor alone, and his footfalls blanched my face when I heard them coming up the walk.

"Did you ever know why my brother Alexander Ainslie's name was forbidden to be said by those who loved me?" he asked.

"No; but I often wondered."

"We are a proud race, and he who says we are not honorable lies in his throat."

An angry coruscance danced in my father's eyes. I clung close to him, and said:

"Tell me."

"Your uncle Alexander died a transported convict, only saved from the gallows by the bribed kindness of the jury. I know this well, for it was I who bribed them. We like our Scottish blood to run pure—do we not?"

He absently smoothed my hair, but his brow was not unbent or his mouth unmoved from its stern curves.

"Was he innocent?"

"Why do you ask that of an Ainslie? Yes; pure of the crime as I; and he who procured the trial, who piled up circumstantial evidence from mouths of false witnesses, he who shielded his own minions at the expense of innocence—my poor Psyche, he was John Sunderland. English arrogance came over the Scotch integrity. By the honor of my name, dear bairn, by my love for you, I know this to be truth. I am not so old but I remember where and how it was, so you know what I feel now to tell you—you cannot marry the son of one who ruined an Ainslie."

I sat still in my father's arms, close to the grand heart to which I had drawn me. I clung for him to save me from the horror which rose about me. I felt like the e did in Goethe's Erle-King, but my demons were not facts in the forms of despair would have me if my father did not hold me fast. I know that I kissed his cheeks, and implored him to grasp the tightest, closest love. Did I fear? I do not believe I did. I was only drowned for awhile in the grief that had become mine. I was in my chamber when my father came, my illness; my father was kneeling by my bed with his head on my pillow. Next day I went down to the drawing-room. My father was away when Derwent called—not knowing what I would tell him. I remember no words of that time. Many a time have I sat on the seashore and seen the tempest clouds come up with the darkness in them, but I could not draw with pencil minuteness the edges of the cloud, or tell the volume of the thunder; but oh, I knew as well that the thunder was in my heart, and the lightning scathed it so that it beat red and glowing no more. He begged for one last interview, anywhere that I chose. It was not wrong to grant it. Would he come to the little house we called our own on the banks of the Clyde, two miles outside of the city? Come to-morrow before noon, when the sun se med most as if it would some day bring the summer. I told my father I was going to see Derwent, and that the time never was coming when I should see him again. I rode out horseback and alone, save my greyhound who would come with me to Glasgow, and now would rain see the last of my lover. I should came from the city in a boat, and rowed up to the place of meeting.

"I am going over to France, Psyche," he said, "and I would have you promise never to marry or know if you marry another. Keep it from me for my love's sake."

I kissed his long curls that fell on my cheek.

"My love," I said, "dinna ye ken that you have the troth-plight of a Scotch lass, and she an Ainslie? Besides your mother's love I shall not know. Have you not come to me as the one out of the world for me? Though I never look in your eyes again, I shall know that only there can I read that which my heart prizes best of all? Gin I see through this strife a wary length of years, oh, then, you know full well how leal I shall be. Doubt me as much as it not will enough that we part for a lifetime? So you maunna gang away frae me with mistrust in your heart."

A shower of gold rattled the bank by us and carried its melody far up in the blue lift. Our eyes were turned to it with a vague strain in them. Midway out of sight a lark was poised in the track of its mate, and together in rising curves they passed beyond our vision.

"Diana, strangible, but ever mingling, our souls shall finally reach the great white throne. John swear to be honorable, swear to be good, so that no stain shall be on the bonnie purity of your life. Loof in loof we stand over God's heaven, promise that the man I love shall be worthy of God's great love!"

"Oh, Psyche! I hold my heaven in my arms, and when exiled I'll keep the oath I take for your sake."

"And now go," I said, but without loosening my arms. We "kissed so close we could not speak." Does Paradise furnish recompense for the torments of moments like these?

At last he went. I stood by the bank, and he stepped into his boat. My soul writhed in torture; through his strife a wary length of years, oh, then, I was still and rigid—if I moved I should lose self-control. He stood upright—he raised an oar—dropped it, and cried:

"Oh, let me come back for one moment! Death is before me—I cannot go yet!"

I did not say yes, I did not speak, but he leaped to the shore; I felt his presence an instant with an intensity that scare like lightning. Then I saw him rowing out into the river. The boat rocked and tipped, then, for the first time, I knew that a fierce wind was blowing in gusts. The frail thing careered over the bubbling water. With magnetized eyes I watched him into the middle of the stream. His face was towards me, and he handled the oars without skill or force. Once his boat tipped more fearfully; he suddenly beat himself with a will to his work; but, my God! he did not work right; the craft turned on her side and Sunderland went down in the water. He could not swim; he rose to the top, and I shouted with an energy that thrilled and awakened me:

"Will you swim to the boat? I will get help."

I mounted my horse and scoured over field and road to the nearest house—it was not far. I came to a cottage where who was a swimmer, boating ropes with him. Was I accursed of heaven? The boat was there, but Derwent Sunderland had gone down to the river's bottom and drowned my heart with him. The men brought him home to my cousins, and I rode by their side, and saw that his face was still with the sand in a kinsman and went her ways without my father or I. The years came and went. I have came a day when my father fell sick and died. My brother was in India, and far from him, and it died long and sorely; and where is the need of words that tell so little?

Twelve years since the day I was twenty. I have gathered my sister for slivering lastly will be ever dawn when I may weave the blithesome hawthorn of hope, and see the sun shig mer gaily in the long summer days. I am in Glasgow, where I first drew this breath that is now such a weary thing to me. Here my father's bairns went tranting in glee—in this moor the wee bit things helped each other with blooms. Bitter that I should live to see the day. The sun rises and he sets, and my heart is dead and my occupation is gone. I go up and down, hungry for that which I have not, thirsty for the drinks I cannot reach. My life is a want—my years are a weight. I am in the twenty-seventh and crieth, for I have not yet found that which is sufficient unto me.

BRIG.-GEN. JOHN A. RAWLINGS.

To be Chief of Staff of the Lieutenant-General commanding the armies of the United States with his headquarters in the field, is a position which may well be envied. This rank has been gained by Gen. Rawlings in a steady line of promotion, and by services, modest and efficient, like those of his great chief. He has been attached to the army since the time when the latter took command at Cairo. He was at first volunteer Aide, and then long his Assistant Adjutant-General, with the rank of Captain, and was the sole intermediate in communication between the army headquarters and the President. As may be supposed, Gen. Rawlings is a plainspoken, honest, straightforward military officer, devoted to his duty.

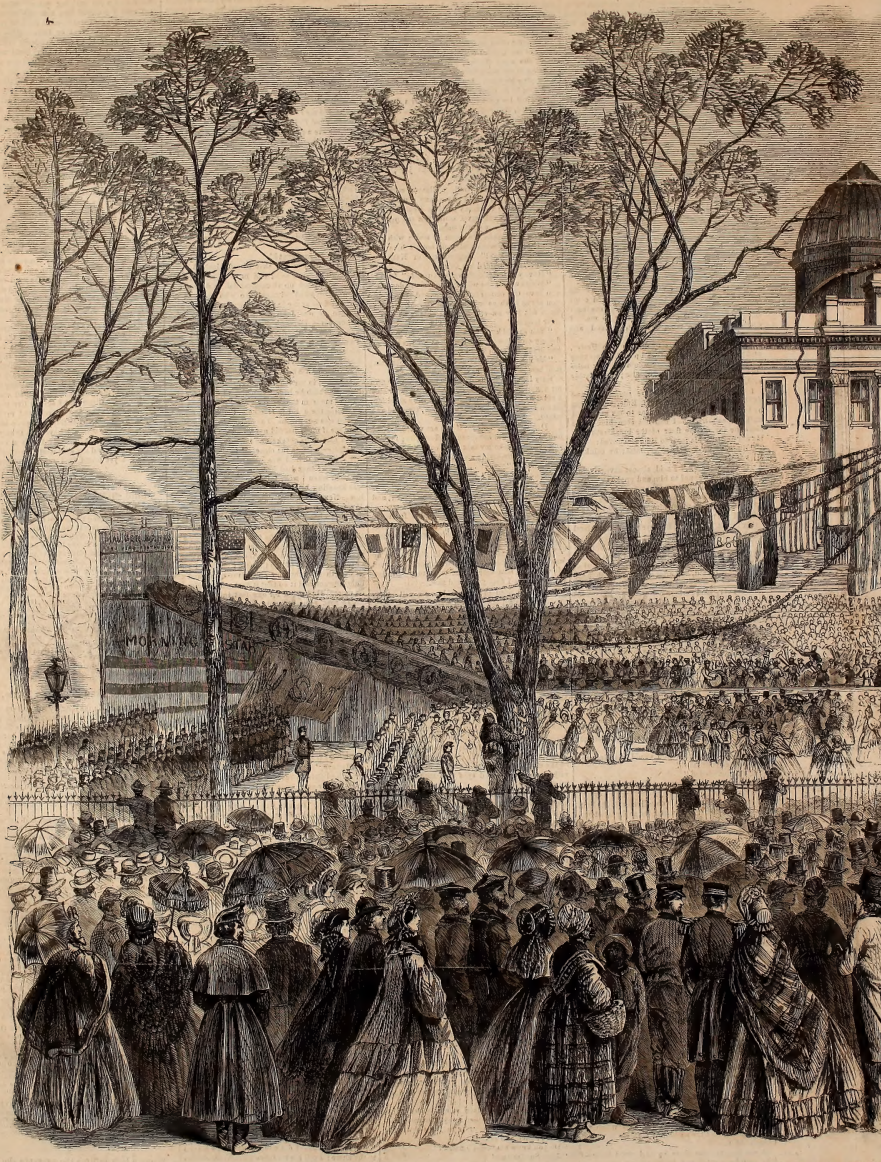
After the glorious capture of Vicksburg, Adjutant-General Rawlings, to the great satisfaction of the whole army, was made a Brigadier-General, become Chief of Staff. He accompanied Grant to Chattanooga, and is now the new General-in-Chief holds his old position at its head.

A Yankee Hotel in Dixie.

WHEN Gen. Banks's army moved on up the Shenandoah Valley from New Market, Quartermaster-Sergeant Reuben W. Oliver, of the Second New York battery, had to be temporarily left in a barn on account of illness. Before he had recovered, news of his departure he made application at the lady's house adjoining for board, but he was informed, in true Virginian style, that she did not "board Yankee barbarians."

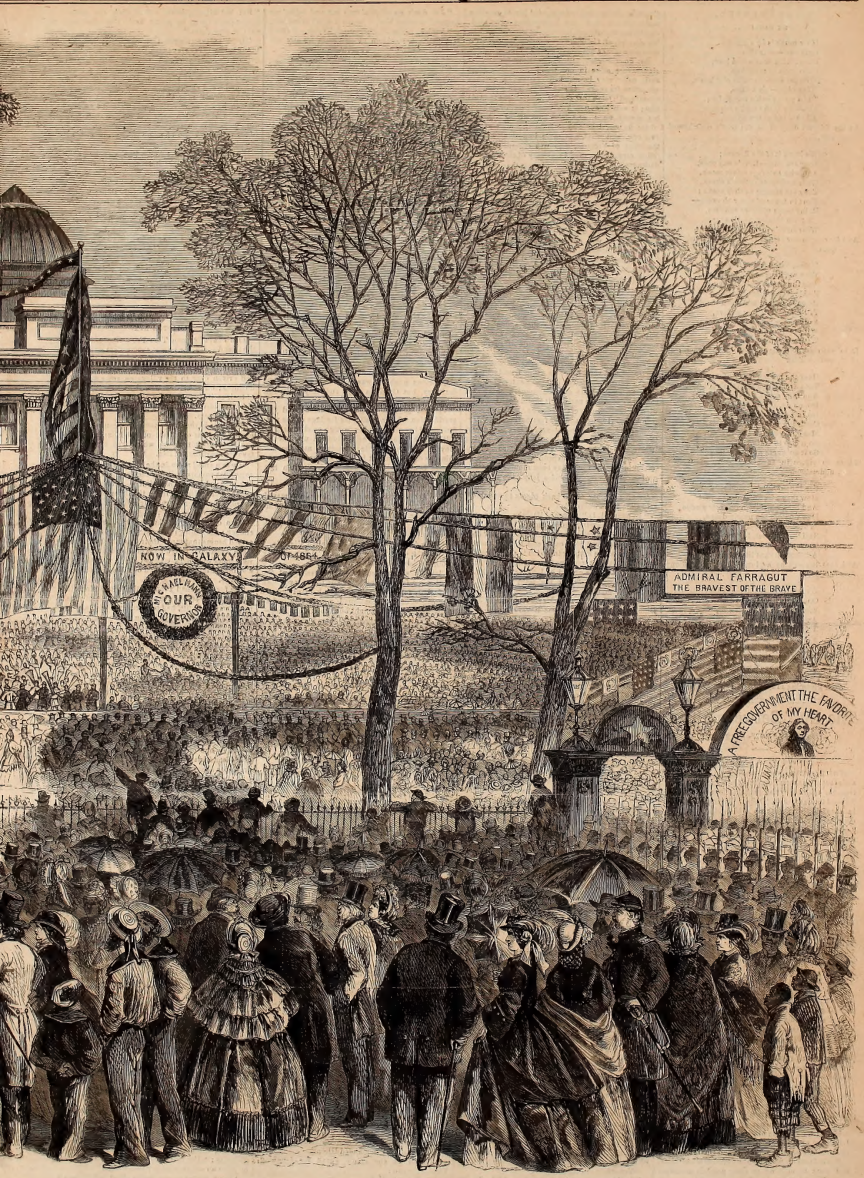
"Very well," replied Oliver, "if you won't board me, I shall keep a hotel in your barn, but shall probably call upon you occasionally for supplies;" and he immediately set to work.

Oliver was every inch a soldier, and he went to work in one. Taking a board from the lady's garden's finest young porker, which his assistant speedily dressed. His able assistant next went to the apiary of the lady, and in a few hours had transformed the honey to the barn; he then went to the lot and milked the cows. The lady's chickens soon met the same going to her servant's house, he made a "requisition" for a quantity of fresh corn-dodgers that had been prepared for the use of the Union soldiers. The article of spices to his ordinary rations placed him far beyond the reach of scurvy, and by the time the battery moved, he invited the lady to take tea with him, at the new hotel across the way. The lady, she became quite a regular inmate; but Oliver was so happy as a lark, and for the time must be laid up in ordinary. Soon he had several sick soldiers added to his list of boarders; and in due time he had a large number under his care, and second hire of boys were gathered under the roof of his "hotel," and were themselves set a-cook round the premium with on the morning dawned. By this time, the lady's curiosity was also "cooked up," and sent word for Oliver, who, as promptly as the nature of his case would permit, appeared at her door.



"See here, young man," said she, "I perceive that you are very happy for me to remain in my house; and if you will accept it, you can have board and a welcome."

"Thank you, madam, thank you," replied Oliver, "but I must decline, as I am happy where I am. I prefer boarding at a first-class Yankee hotel to stopping at the second class in Secessia, regardless of price. You will, therefore, be so kind as to excuse me for declining your generous offer, as I cannot leave my sick;" and back he nodded to the barn, and actually remained there for two weeks, taking in and boarding every sick and struggling soldier that came along, making many new acquaintances to the number for supplies.



Her ladyship was mightily pleased when Oliver's Yankee hotel was discontinued; but as learned in a valuable lesson, and no Yankee soldier ever thereafter applied to her in vain for food or shelter. They always got what they wanted, and evidently not relishing the Yankee hotel system.

WHEN a lady returns the presents she has received from her lover, is she supposed to include a return of his affections?

IT is a fallacious hope to look out for beer because you perceive there's a shing brewing."

THE RESTORATION OF THE UNION—INAUGURATION OF HON. MICHAEL HAHN, GOVERNOR OF LOUISIANA, ON LA

LAFAYETTE SQUARE, NEW ORLEANS, MARCH 4.—From a Sketch by our Special Artist, C. E. H. Bowill.—See Page 28.

SWEETNESSES.

BY PAULINE.

How much is in a kiss?
Only this—only this!
Unto loving hearts and true,
Unto souls of royal hue,
Who the crimson print o'er knew,
'Tis a bliss—'tis a bliss,
'Tis a power—this regal kiss;
Speaking at the soul's request
All that lips can interpret,
In the deepest deep of all the soul's unfathomed rest.

We learn it of the flowers;
They are ours—Love's and ours,
And with shining velvet-meek
Each against the other's cheek,
They are kissing as they speak;
Thus in tones of silver showers—
Rainy tones of silver showers,
They are bidding us, like them,
Wear Love's lucent diadem,
And for ever in our beings to enshrine the princely gem.

Listen, listen to the trees—
They are kissing in the breeze,
And the tender words they say
Float away—float away,
Down the night and down the day,
Telling you and me to love,
As the angels do above,
With their brows entamped with Right,
Their purity so white,
To wrap around our bosoms all the wealth of perfect light.

Hear the molten plash of streams!
They are kissing 'mid their gleams,
And they speak to every heart,
Do, oh do, the nobler part!
Do in Love the nobler part—
Circle life with loving dreams,
Make it gentle as the streams,
So it flow to truth and good—
So it grow where angels would,
There to ripple in the atmosphere of Beauty understood.

See the liquid, diamond rills,
How they kiss amid their frills!
And they whisper, eLhair steeps,
Down within the pearly deeps,
Where the twilight ever sleeps,
Saying, "Child, love thy brother"—
Then shall diamond hues like mine
All your onward life entwine,
And that life will be a glory, girt with harmony divine.

Oh, uplifting Beauty—Truth!
Oh, immortal child of Youth!
Thee I worship as the sun,
And I feel thy kisses run,
Through my heart as purple-spun!
Far within thy golden fire
Snowy winglets beckon higher,
Liquid voices mingling say,
As they wave away—away,
Oh, come, hither, hither! come and drink of gleaming May!

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

CHAPTER XVIII.

WHILE matters were moving on thus above stairs there was an unusual commotion in the lower regions, effected by the machinations and deceptions of Clorinda, Dolph. He had succeeded in accomplishing what no sable gallant had ever done before; he had softened Clorinda's obdurate heart, and made her think it possible that at some future time she might be persuaded to place her fair self, and what she prized more, her money, in Dolph's keeping.

But the worst of it was, Dolph's susceptible fancy led him strongly in another direction, even while he was endeavoring to follow up the success he had achieved with the culinary nymph. Victoria was a stylish, handsome young mulatto, and Clorinda, a comparatively pure African to the very end, I cannot say point, of her flat nose. Indeed, it is quite possible that Dolph's yellow skin went for something in her admiration; but unfortunately Dolph preferred the lightening up of complexion also, and had a masculine weakness in favor of youth and good looks.

Poor Clorinda, Dolph did present a rather dry and withered aspect; her hands more resembled claws than was satisfactory to a man whose flirtations had been with ladies'-maids, and she was sadly destitute of the airs and graces with which Victoria fascinated the grand sex so freely upon all occasions; Cle's wool might have been some profit to her had she been a sheep, but as it was she could only hide it under gorgeous bandannas and pass cavilously at Victoria's long curls, feeling her fingers quiver to give them a pull when that damsel fluttered them too jauntily in her eye.

There had always been trouble enough between the two, but after Dolph's arrival the kitchen department was hot and uncomfortable, and even the wary Dolph himself, skilled as he was in Lotharian practices, frequently had great difficulty in steering clear of both Scylla and Charybdis.

Clorinda was much given to devotional exercises, and went to meeting on every possible occasion; while Victoria, with the lightness of her years, laughed at Cle's psalm-singing, and interrupted her prayers in the most fervid part by polka steps and profane redowas. In order to propitiate Clorinda, Dolph had accompanied her to meeting much oftener than his inclinations prompted, expressing the utmost desire to be remembered in her prayers, all the while denouncing himself as a miserable sinner not worth saving.

But good women with a weakness for helping sinners are alike in one thing, no matter what their color may be—wickedness has a strange attraction for them. It was the peril in which she considered Dolph that made Cle so lenient towards him; it would be such a triumph to win him from his wicked ways, and lead him up to a height where he would be secure from the craft of the evil one, and what was more important, beyond the reach of Victoria, who was regarded by her fellow-servant as a direct emissary of the prince of darkness.

She labored faithfully with Dolph, though it must be confessed she allowed her religious instructions to be diversified with a little more lovemaking than was proper for the first time in her life became extravagant in the matter of dress, wearing the most gorgeous bandannas every day, and even appearing in a bonnet which she managed so badly that it was constantly bringing her into grotesque difficulties, to Victoria's intense delight.

Of course they never quarrelled openly about Dolph, but they found endless subjects of dispute to improve upon, and sometimes that adroit fellow got into serious difficulty with both by attempting to mediate between them.

Then on occasions the sable rivals would hide their bitterness under kind goodnature, and appear almost affectionate in their sudden truce; but Dolph learned to dread those seasons of deceitful calm, for they were the sure precursors of an unusually fierce tempest.

These three restless persons went out on evening to pay a visit to some white friends in the neighborhood, where the colored gentry often met and had choice little entertainments; where the eatables came from perhaps it would not have been wise for their owners to inquire.

Old Mrs. Hopkins and her fascinating daughter, Miss Dinah, were the possessors of this choice, and Cle and Victoria had for some time been promising Dolph a visit there. That night seemed a favorable occasion for the expedition, as a store of pumpkin-pies and that day been furnished by Cle's own expert hands, and half a jelly cake set aside in the closet.

And I nebber sends back pieces to de table," said Cle; "it's vulgar."

"In course it is," returned "Dolph; "I'se sure nothing could be more unmannerly."

Vic did not attempt any deceptions on her conscience; she liked jelly cake, and did not trouble herself about those matters after it was obtained; since her earliest remembrance stolen delicacies such as her palate craved had never given her a moment's indigestion, or the least approach to moral nightmare.

They went over to visit Mrs. Hopkins and Miss Dinah, and the evening was a very pleasant one, what with Cle's pies and the hard cider which Mrs. Hopkins provided.

But Miss Dinah would have it, two or three other of their friends dropped in, and among them was a young woman as much given to coquetry as Dolph himself; and before a great while "Dolph's love of flirtation got the better of his prudence, and plentiful doses of the hard cider rendered him reckless. In spite of the indignation which both Cle and Victoria displayed, he was exercising all his fascinations on the new-comer, while he neglected beau sat looking like a modern Othello, with every glance eczpree of vengeance at his rival.

When the damsel went out with Miss Dinah, for an extra bench from the wash-house, Dolph followed them, and during the absence the company heard bursts of laughter and doleful shrieks.

Cle flew to the door and opened it; Victoria sprang over her shoulder; there was that pestifidious Dolph encircling the stranger damsel with his right arm, and making bold efforts to lay hold of Miss Dinah with the left.

Dolph looked up and saw Cle; he was not so much under the excitement of the cider that he could not understand the evil eye he ran.

"Dere is pretty conducts!" exclaimed Clo.

"I shud tink so," chimed in Victoria. "If you please, Miss Christopher, I tink I will become a member. I isn't accustomed to sich goings on myself; day isn't de fashion in de Piney Cove basement."

The outraged damsels would hear no persuasions, and Dolph was forced to accompany them back, and a very uncomfortable time he had of it.

Cle scolded and the impudent young puppon they had left behind, and nearly annihilated Dolph, when he attempted a word in the young woman's favor.

"I declar," cried Clo at last; "Mr. 'Dolph, yer go 'long as crooked as a rail fence; what is de matter wid yer?"

'Dolph only gave a racy chuckle.

"I guess goin' into the wash-room turned his head," said Vic.

"De piety I'se enjoyin' at dis minit," said deceitful 'Dolph, "is enough to turn de head of any gemman."

"Oh, we know all 'bout dat," said Vic.

"In course you does, dear," returned 'Dolph, forgetting Clorinda, and trying to seize Vic's hand; but so uncertain were his movements that they looked as if he were trying to strike her.

"Dere is sumfin all; it was fuel to the flame which consumed her.

"Miss Victory," said she, "yer needn't push me into de brook."

"Who's a pushin' of yer?" retorted Victoria, with equal acidity.

"Yer was, yer own self."

"I didn't—so dar! Guess somethin' aile yer head too, de way yer go on—pushin' indeed."

"I scorns yer insinivations," said Clorinda, "and despises yer insinations!"

"'Sh! hi! hi! oh, laws, I shall die! Ole folks had'nt oter try to be young uns. I've telled yer so, Clo, fifty times."

'Dolph snickered—yes, Clorinda heard him actually snicker as she lay there, like a second Medea, deprived of her strength. Another struggle, a more furious yell, something broke with a loud crack, and Clorinda sprang to her feet with a yell of triumph and rage.

She made a dart at Victoria, caught that yellow maiden by her much-prized tresses, and for a few moments the battle between the rivals raged furiously. 'Dolph tried to separate them, and came in for a goodly share of blows in the madness of the onset.

Cle quite forgot her religion in the excitement, and her language might have shocked the elders had they heard it, while Victoria was not at all behind her in the use of either of tongue or fingers.

"De hall dor's a openin'," cried 'Dolph, struck with a brilliant thought; "I do believe it's marster comin' out."

The battle ceased. 'Dolph ran towards the house and the combatants after him, but 'Dolph never stopped till he was safe in his own dormitory, not caring to trust himself in the presence of either of the infuriated damsels.

Indeed, the next morning it required the special interference of Mrs. Mellen herself to settle the matter, and several days passed before perfect harmony was restored in the lower regions at Piney Cove.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE next afternoon Tom Fuller came down to the island again, for he was too restless away from that spot to make his absence of long duration.

Elizabeth and Elsie were quite alone, for Mellen had driven over to the village on some matter of business, and the latter was not taking advantage of their solitude to indulge in one of those long, cosy, confidential chats which had been their habit in former years.

Elsie was in the upper part of the house amusing herself after her own fashion, and Elizabeth sat in the little morning room which had become her favorite apartment of late.

It was a small room in the old part of the house, somewhat antiquated in its character, but a bright day relieved by the beautiful view of the Sound which was afforded from the French windows, the only modern feature which Mellen had added to it.

On a dark morning the apartment was gloomy enough; the ceilings were low and massive, the heavy carved beams that made their want of height still more apparent; the upper portion of the walls were hung with dark crimson cloth, and there was a wainscoting of unpolished oak, dark and stained with age.

The furniture had been in the house since the Revolution; it was massive chairs, each one of which was a weight to lift, had been covered with a fabric to match the hangings. The whole room held a similar appearance, and was filled with a host of relics and curiosities which would have delighted a lover of the antique.

Elsie detested the apartment and never would occupy it, but when alone Elizabeth sought it from choice; the drearier and darker the day the more pertinaciously she clung to the classics of the old room, where the shadows lay heavy and grim, and every sound echoed with preternatural acuteness.

But this day was bright and beautiful as summer itself. The apartment looked cheerful and picturesque, and Elizabeth, who made a pretty picture, seated by one of the open windows, with her light dress forming an agreeable contrast to the sombre draperies about her.

She had a workbasket on the little spider-legged table by her side and a muse of embroidery on her lap, but the needle had fallen from her hand, her hands were folded upon her knee, and she was looking out over the bright waters with a dreamy, wistful gaze, which had become habitual with her whenever the necessity for solitude was removed and she was free to relinquish herself to gathering anxieties.

Tom entered the room in his usual haste, and found her sitting in this dreamy attitude; she started at the sound of his tread, and with the caution she had long since learned under her listless position, and drew the mask over her face which it was so dangerous to lift even for an instant.

"Here I am," cried Tom; "back again, like a bad penny. I hope you are not sick of the sight of my ugly face."

"And you are not tired of seeing me, Beasie, you are sure of that?" he repeated.

"You are a silly old fellow to ask such questions," she replied; "you know how glad I am to have you come."

"You're a darling old girl," cried Tom, "and there's no more to be said about it."

"Then, if you have finished, please pick up my unfortunate table. See what a state these poor silks are in."

"I'm always in mischief," said Tom, contritely, restoring the table to its equilibrium with great difficulty. "I'm more out of place in a lady's parlor than an owl in a canary bird's cage."

"Your mistakes are better than other men's elegancies," said Elizabeth, heartily.

It rested her to be in Tom's society; with him she was not forced constantly to play a part, and

"Kil! kil! kil! oh, laws, I shall die! Ole folks had'nt oter try to be young uns. I've telled yer so, Clo, fifty times."

'Dolph snickered—yes, Clorinda heard him actually snicker as she lay there, like a second Medea, deprived of her strength. Another struggle, a more furious yell, something broke with a loud crack, and Clorinda sprang to her feet with a yell of triumph and rage.

She made a dart at Victoria, caught that yellow maiden by her much-prized tresses, and for a few moments the battle between the rivals raged furiously. 'Dolph tried to separate them, and came in for a goodly share of blows in the madness of the onset.

Cle quite forgot her religion in the excitement, and her language might have shocked the elders had they heard it, while Victoria was not at all behind her in the use of either of tongue or fingers.

"De hall dor's a openin'," cried 'Dolph, struck with a brilliant thought; "I do believe it's marster comin' out."

The battle ceased. 'Dolph ran towards the house and the combatants after him, but 'Dolph never stopped till he was safe in his own dormitory, not caring to trust himself in the presence of either of the infuriated damsels.

Indeed, the next morning it required the special interference of Mrs. Mellen herself to settle the matter, and several days passed before perfect harmony was restored in the lower regions at Piney Cove.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE next afternoon Tom Fuller came down to the island again, for he was too restless away from that spot to make his absence of long duration.

Elizabeth and Elsie were quite alone, for Mellen had driven over to the village on some matter of business, and the latter was not taking advantage of their solitude to indulge in one of those long, cosy, confidential chats which had been their habit in former years.

Elsie was in the upper part of the house amusing herself after her own fashion, and Elizabeth sat in the little morning room which had become her favorite apartment of late.

It was a small room in the old part of the house, somewhat antiquated in its character, but a bright day relieved by the beautiful view of the Sound which was afforded from the French windows, the only modern feature which Mellen had added to it.

On a dark morning the apartment was gloomy enough; the ceilings were low and massive, the heavy carved beams that made their want of height still more apparent; the upper portion of the walls were hung with dark crimson cloth, and there was a wainscoting of unpolished oak, dark and stained with age.

The furniture had been in the house since the Revolution; it was massive chairs, each one of which was a weight to lift, had been covered with a fabric to match the hangings. The whole room held a similar appearance, and was filled with a host of relics and curiosities which would have delighted a lover of the antique.

Elsie detested the apartment and never would occupy it, but when alone Elizabeth sought it from choice; the drearier and darker the day the more pertinaciously she clung to the classics of the old room, where the shadows lay heavy and grim, and every sound echoed with preternatural acuteness.

But this day was bright and beautiful as summer itself. The apartment looked cheerful and picturesque, and Elizabeth, who made a pretty picture, seated by one of the open windows, with her light dress forming an agreeable contrast to the sombre draperies about her.

She had a workbasket on the little spider-legged table by her side and a muse of embroidery on her lap, but the needle had fallen from her hand, her hands were folded upon her knee, and she was looking out over the bright waters with a dreamy, wistful gaze, which had become habitual with her whenever the necessity for solitude was removed and she was free to relinquish herself to gathering anxieties.

Tom entered the room in his usual haste, and found her sitting in this dreamy attitude; she started at the sound of his tread, and with the caution she had long since learned under her listless position, and drew the mask over her face which it was so dangerous to lift even for an instant.

"Here I am," cried Tom; "back again, like a bad penny. I hope you are not sick of the sight of my ugly face."

"And you are not tired of seeing me, Beasie, you are sure of that?" he repeated.

"You are a silly old fellow to ask such questions," she replied; "you know how glad I am to have you come."

"You're a darling old girl," cried Tom, "and there's no more to be said about it."

"Then, if you have finished, please pick up my unfortunate table. See what a state these poor silks are in."

"I'm always in mischief," said Tom, contritely, restoring the table to its equilibrium with great difficulty. "I'm more out of place in a lady's parlor than an owl in a canary bird's cage."

"Your mistakes are better than other men's elegancies," said Elizabeth, heartily.

It rested her to be in Tom's society; with him she was not forced constantly to play a part, and he had been a great resource to her ever since he returned.

Many times she said to herself:

"He would love me, whatever came—I could always depend on him."

She was thinking something of the kind, just then, while she began assorting her silks; and Tom stood meekly by, longing to repair the mischief he had occasioned, but perfectly certain that he should only do a good deal more harm if he attempted it.

Besides that, something else was in his mind—there always was before he had been five minutes in the house if Elsie did not make her appearance.

He shuffled about, answered Elizabeth's questions haltingly, and at last burst out:

"Where is the little fairy—has she gone out, too?"

"Elsie, do you mean?"

"Who else, of course! Where is she?"

"Up in her room, I fancy," replied Elizabeth.

"I don't see how you can hear her out of your sight for an instant," cried Tom; "I am sure I couldn't if I lived in the house with her."

"Nonsense, Tom!"

"There is no nonsense about it," thundered he; "it's just the truth."

Several times Elizabeth had attempted to point out to him the folly of going on in his old insane way, but either he would not listen or something interrupted their conversation. Now she determined to take advantage of the present opportunity and speak seriously with him.

"I have brought her a paper of Maillard's sweet things," said Tom; "might I call or send for her?"

He darted towards the door as he spoke, but Elizabeth stopped him.

"Wait a moment, Tom," she said; "come back here."

"Yes, of course; I'll be back in a flash—I'll just send her these traps," and he pulled a couple of tempting packages from his pocket, nattily tied with pink ribbon and put up generally in the exquisite taste which distinguishes everything from our Frenchman's establishment.

"No," replied Elizabeth, "come here first; I have something to say to you, Tom—Elsie can eat her bonbons after."

Tom came back, rather unwillingly though, and stood leaning against the window like a criminal.

"Sit down," said Elizabeth.

"No, no; I like to stand! Well, what is it, Bessie?"

"Tom," she said, seriously, "I am afraid you have forgotten the experience which cost you so much pain before you set off to Europe; I fear you are making other and deeper trouble for yourself."

"Oh, no, Bessie—it's of no consequence anyway," replied Tom, turning fifty different shades of red at once. "What a pretty green that silk is."

"It is bright blue, but no matter! So you won't listen to me, Tom?" continued Elizabeth.

"My dear girl, did I ever refuse to listen in all my life?" said Tom. "But you see, you're a little mistaken, Bessie; I'm not such a goney as I used to be."

"That has nothing to do with the matter."

"Oh, yes, it has; I mean, I don't allow myself to be such a dunce, even in my own thoughts. I never even think about—about—you know what I mean."

Tom broke down and made a somewhat lame conclusion.

"Oh, Tom, Tom!" Elizabeth said.

"Well, there!" cried he, with sudden energy; "there is no use in standing here and telling you fibs! I do love her—I must love her—I always shall love her—hang me if I shan't!"

He was in a state of great agitation now, and trembled all over as if he had been addressing Elsie herself.

Elizabeth sighed wearily.

"I thought so," she said; "I feared so."

"You mean the dear girl will never care for me. How could any one expect her to—couldn't—don't—in reason."

"Tom, she certainly ought not to treat you as she does and lead you on."

"She doesn't lead me on."

"But her conduct does not forbid your attentions, and you are too worthy, dear cousin, for anything but honest dealing."

"It's my fate—all my fault."

Elizabeth shook her head.

"You have the best heart and the worst head in the world," she said.

"You mustn't blame her," continued Tom; "I can't stand that! Fitch into me as often and as hard as you like, you never can say enough, but don't blame her."

"Let us leave her share in the matter, then, out of the question," continued Elizabeth. "If you believe what you say, is it wise to run into danger as you do?"

"There's no help for it, Bessie; I should die if I could not look upon her face! Oh, you can't think what I suffered while I was gone—I didn't talk about it—I don't even want to think of it; but, Bessie, dear, sometimes I used to think I should go out of my senses."

He was speaking seriously now; his face was absolutely pale with emotion, and his eyes—the one fine feature of his face—were misty with a remembrance of old pain.

"Poor Tom," murmured Elizabeth, in her pitying way, always full of sympathy for others' trouble, whatever her own might be; "poor, dear Tom, I know how hard it was."

"No; you can't know, Bessie; you can't have the least idea! You don't know what it is to have something to hide—to go about with a secret gnawing at your heart—never able to open your lips—suffering night and day—"

He stopped suddenly and looked at his cousin with wonder; she was leaning back in her chair, her face was pale as death, and her lips parted in a dreary sigh.

Tom drew close to her chair and bent over her, with a look of anxious surprise on his disturbed features.

"Are you sick, Bessie?" he asked.

"No, no," she answered, controlling herself.

His words brought up her own secret burden so vividly before her that for an instant she had been dreadfully shaken by the keen pang at her heart.

"You look so pale; I'm afraid you are going to be ill."

"Indeed, I am not," she answered.

Tom knelt down by her on both knees, played with her embroidery silks, and finally said:

"Bessie, since we're talking plainly, may I say something?"

"Yes, Tom."

"Somehow, since I came back from Europe," pursued he, "you don't seem so happy as you used to be; there's only one of my blunders—but I have thought you looked troubled—like a person that was always expecting something dreadful to happen."

She forced a smile upon her lips as she forced them to answer:

"Oh, you foolish Tom!"

"Then it is not so?" he urged. "You are not unhappy?"

"How could I be unhappy—is not my life pleasant, prosperous, beyond anything I could ever have hoped for?"

"It seems so; that made me think it must be just one of my fits of fancies."

"Nothing more, Tom."

"Mellen's the most splendid fellow in the world," pursued he; "and you couldn't well be sad with that little darling about you."

Elizabeth took up her silks again.

"Dismiss all such thoughts from your mind, Tom."

"I shall be only too glad. But tell me once more that I am not over-anxious busybody, minding everybody's concerns but my own. You see, Bessie, I love you like a sister, and will stand by you, by Jupiter, always. But these stupid ideas of mine, there's no foundation for them?"

"How could there be?"

"That's what I say to myself always," cried Tom. "Well, dear, I won't think such nonsense again."

"Do not, I beg; and never mention it to anybody."

"There's no danger of that," said Tom. "But you know, if you should get unhappy or in trouble, you will always one shadowing old chap you could lean on."

"I believe that, Tom; I do indeed."

"And you mean to come to me, Bessie?"

"If you could help me, yes. But trouble must come to all, Tom; and, generally, we must each bear our burdens alone."

"How sad your voice sounds, Bessie."

She made an effort to speak playfully:

"You are getting all sorts of ridiculous fancies in your head; don't be so foolish."

Tom was relieved by her manner, and began to laugh at his own ridiculous ideas, rising up from his knees and brushing the dust away with his handkerchief.

"My head is poor old trap," he said. "Well, well, I am glad you are happy, dear glad."

"And I want you to be happy, Tom."

"I am, upon my word, I am! I don't allow myself to think any more or to look forward, but just live on, glad to be in the sunshine. Tisn't a bad world, after all, Bess; things usually come right in the end."

If she could only believe it—if she could but accept his cheerful philosophy and his unwavering trust, how glad she! the sleepless dread at her heart prevented that.

"And about my stupid self," Bessie, added Tom. "You, about your dear, good self," answered Elizabeth, glad to remove the subject from any connection with her secret dread.

"And my various bits of affairs," pursued Tom; "just let things rest as they are, it's the best way."

"I don't wish to do anything to annoy," she replied; "and you know very well I am the last person in the world to interfere—"

"Oh, don't talk like that, or I shall think you are offended."

"Not in the least, Tom; I only meant to say that it was my regard for your happiness that made me speak."

"I know—I feel that, Bessie; but just let things go on! Perhaps I am asleep and dreaming, but the slumber is pleasant, so don't wake me; it's cruel to disturb one."

Elizabeth said nothing more; it was useless to pursue the subject; where Tom was concerned she saw plainly that it could do no good, his heart was fixed.

Just as she was thinking that, and giving another little sigh for Tom and for those who feared for him, a blithe young voice rang in the hall, carolling like a bird.

"Where she is!" exclaimed Tom.

His face lighted up, his whole frame seemed to expand with delight. Elizabeth watched him. She knew better than ever that his heartstrings were twined about that young creature, that his very soul had gone out in worship at her feet.

And where are you hidden, Lady Bess?" sang Elsie, gaily.

Tom rushed to the door and flung it open, upsetting the table again, and this time leaving Elizabeth to pick it up herself.

"Here she is, my fairy princess!" he called, standing in the doorway and looking up at her as she paused on the stairs.

In that dismal den and guarded by a dragon," cried Elsie, peeping at him through the banisters, mischievously. "Pray where did you come from, Cœur de Lion?"

"If you knew what I had brought for my ladybird, you would be on your prettiest behavior and give me your best welcome," said Tom.

"It's bonbons!" cried Elsie with a shriek of delight. "The ogre means pralines and caramels and marons glacés!"

"Come down and see," said Tom, mysteriously.

Elsie danced downstairs and entered the room where her sister sat.

"Ugh, the ugly place!" said she. "It makes me shiver!"

"Better come into the den than lose the sweets," said Tom, opening the papers and pretending to eat greedily.

"He won't leave a drop!" cried Elsie, darting upon him.

Tom prolonged the playful struggle artfully enough; and when a truce was concluded it was only on condition that he should feed her with the sugarplums, and as he did not satisfy her greediness fast enough there was a great deal of sport and laughter between the pair.

Elizabeth sat in the window and watched them, sighing sometimes and regarding Elsie with a strange pain in her eyes, self annoyed and troubled that this hapless creature could not leave her the full affection of this one heart.

"I want to go out on the water," said Elsie. "Will you row me, you ugly giant?"

"Won't I!" said Tom. "I'd take you to the moon if you liked."

"But I don't want to try the moon, thank you; a nice long row will satisfy me. Come along, Bessie!"

"Not to-day," answered Elizabeth coldly.

"You're a poky thing!" cried Elsie. "Well, I shall go, the sun is lovely."

"I'll run down to the shore and get the boat ready," said Tom, excitedly.

He darted away, and Elsie stood for a few moments crushing the candies between her white teeth and looking at Elizabeth, half frightened, half defiant.

"You are very busy," said she.

"One can't be idle," replied Elizabeth.

"Oh, can't one? It just suits me, thank you."

"Elsie," said her sister, suddenly, "I want to say something to you."

"If it is anything unpleasant, I won't hear. I won't hear. I want to be happy. Let me alone!"

"It is about your happiness I am alarmed."

"Well, say it; but you are going to scold or something else dreadful, I know by your voice."

"Don't be such a baby," said Elizabeth, impatiently.

"There! I knew you were cross! How can I help being a baby? I like it, and I will be one."

"Do you think you are acting honestly with Tom?" said Elizabeth.

"I'm not acting at all," replied Elsie fretfully. "I can't help myself, I'm not constantly. You wouldn't have me rude to your own cousin?"

"You know what I mean. He loves you, in spite of your conduct before he went abroad—"

"I can't help it," Elsie broke in again. "If people will fall in love with me it's their own fault; don't ask me."

"But you can help encouraging him and leading him on to greater pain."

Elsie pouted.

"How do you know I shall?"

"You would not marry him," exclaimed Elizabeth, suddenly. "You know you—"

"You don't know anything about it. Let Tom and me alone. I think you are growing a cross old thing."

"Oh, Elsie, do be serious for one moment."

"Let me alone!" she repeated. "You are always spoiling my sunshine. I believe you hate me!"

"Don't talk so wildly, Elsie. But you cannot blame me for feeling anxious about Tom's happiness."

"And, pray, should I not feel when watched if I answered him?" she exclaimed defiantly.

"You ought to do that. You—"

"I'll do what I like, and don't you meddle with me, just remember that!"

The voice was sharp and unlike Elsie's usual tone, but she quickly resumed her childish manner, and added:

"I'll be good—don't scold. There, I'm going now—good-bye!"

She danced out of the room and through the house, and Elizabeth heard her voice on the lawn calling to Tom, to know if the boat was ready.

Elizabeth kept her seat, looking absently across the water. Presently she saw the little skiff shoot out from the shore, the impetus of Tom's muscular arms, while Elsie leaned back in the stern, wrapped in a white shawl, and reminding Elizabeth of the old picture of Undine in the Lurley.

She sat there a long time, with her former mournful thoughts all trooping back, like ravens to a deserted nest. The gloom upon her spirits waxed deeper, and the child that had begun during the past days to creep like a ring about her heart seemed to grow and grow cold, as if it were changing to an icy band, which would soon bind her pulses in its tightening clasp. She looked out through the sunshine, watching the light boat till it became a mere speck in the distance and finally disappeared among the windings of the long curve of land which stretched out into the ocean.

Thinking, thinking, always the same dreary round, till she grew so weary with the ceaseless anxiety, the constant necessity for plots and plans, the need to watch over the subtlest acts, words, and, worse than all, the sleepless fear of discovery which hovered near her, asleep or awake, that it seemed to her sometimes she could no longer uphold the burthen, but must allow it to fall and crush her.

The afternoon was passing, but the little boat had not yet appeared in sight again. There was no danger that Tom would think of fatigue while he could sit looking in the face of his syren and listening to her low, weird songs; nor was there the slightest possibility of her ever remembering that the strongest muscles must at last feel a little need of relaxation, just as long as it pleased her to float over the sunlit waters, carolling her pretty melodies or talking gay nonsense to Tom, and blinding him utterly with the wicked lightning of her eyes.

At last Mr. Mellen's step sounded in the hall. Elizabeth heard it, and she immediately gathered up her embroidery silks, making a great pretence of being busy, lest he should enter and surprise her in the betrayal of that abstraction, and pierce her with one of his dark, suspicious glances, which made her heart actually stand still with apprehension.

He came on towards the room, looked in at the door and saw his wife sitting there apparently quiet, comfortable and wholly occupied with her pretty task.

She glanced up and nodded a welcome.

"So you have come back," she said; "I have been wishing for you."

He smiled at her words, came forward and stood by her, saying:

"I thought you had given up any such weakness. You seem very busy."

"This tiresome embroidery has been lying about so long that I am working on it for very shame," she replied. "Elsie began it and was delighted with it for three days, but she has not touched it since."

"Very like the little fairy," he said, with a smile any such reference to the young girl always brought to his lips.

Elizabeth did not wish to talk, it was difficult for her to hide the real feelings that oppressed her under a playful garb, so she said:

"If you were goodnatured you would sit down here and read to me. There is Bulwer's new book."

"I will, with pleasure; but where is Elsie?"

"Oh, Tom Fuller came, and she made him take her out for a row; so I have been alone in my den, as she calls it."

"The child can't bear the least approach to a shadow," he said; "she must have her sunshine undisturbed."

He drew an easy-chair near the window where Elizabeth sat, took up the novel she had asked him to read, and began the fascinating story.

He read beautifully, and Elizabeth was glad to forget her unquiet reflections in the melody of his voice and the interest of the tale. Mellen himself was in a mood to be comfortable and at rest.

The brightness of the sunset was flooding the waters before either of them looked up again. Then Mellen said:

"These careless creatures ought to come back; it grows chilly on the water as evening comes on, and the least thing gives Elsie cold."

Elizabeth shaded her eyes with her hand and looked over the bay.

"They are coming," she said; "I can see the boat."

Mellen looked in the direction to which she pointed, and saw the boat rounding a point of land and making swiftly up the bay.

"She is as strong as young Hercules," he said, watching the little skiff as it fairly flew through the water under the impulse of his arm, and aided by the inward current of the tide.

They remained watching it till it approached near enough for them to distinguish Elsie's white wrappings. Suddenly Mellen said:

"She is rocking the boat dreadfully! She is standing up—she is crazy to run such risks!"

Elizabeth looked and saw Elsie erect in the skiff, her shawl floating out around her, rocking the boat to and fro with reckless force, and being checked by Tom's gestures that he was vainly expostulating with her upon her imprudence.

Mellen rose from his chair and out on the verandah, with some vague idea of trying to attract the imprudent girl's attention by signals; but the skiff was far off, and she too much occupied to observe them.

Elizabeth threw down her work and followed him out, standing by his side in silent apprehension.

"She is mad!" exclaimed Mellen, "absolutely mad!"

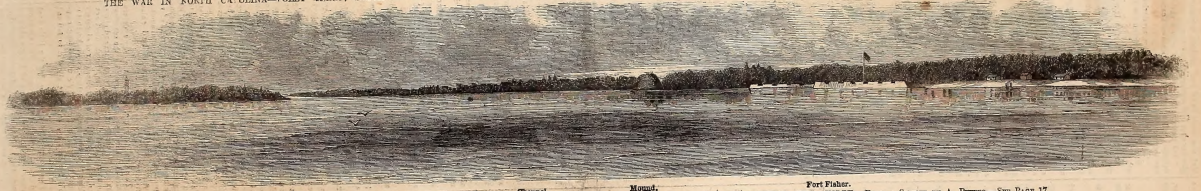
Elsie's gay laugh rang out over the waters, and they could see Tom expostulating with more animated gestures.

"She will capsize overboard, as sure as fate!" cried Mellen. "Oh! Elsie, Elsie!"

But the exclamation could not reach the reckless creature; probably she would have paid no attention had she heard it.

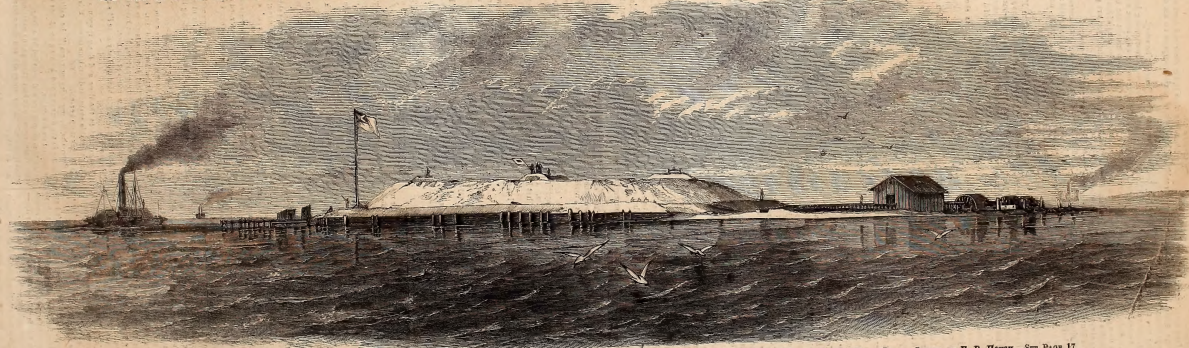
"Oh, see it rock!" cried Elizabeth with a shiver.

"She is frightened at her own recklessness," said Mellen, "but she will not stop, because it disturbs Tom."

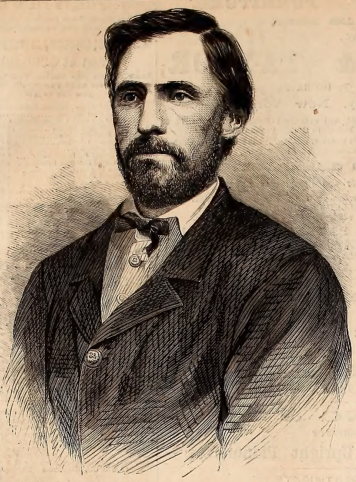


"Perhaps there is less danger than it seems," began Elizabeth, but a cry from her husband checked the words.

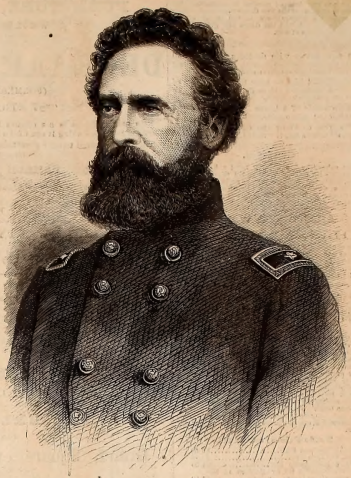
She looked—the boat had tipped till the edge was even with the water; suddenly it righted, but her balance—there was a smothered shriek from the distance—then she disappeared under the crested waves.



THE RHINOCEROS'S FRIEND.—The rhinoceros's friend, and the rhinoceros hunter's most tiresome enemy, is the Sophaga Africanus, a bird singularly known as the rhinoceros bird. It constantly perches on the rhinoceros' back, feeding on the ticks that infest its hide, the bird's long claws and clear whistling alike betraying to whatever enemy it may be behind it its foe. If it rendered the rhinoceros no other service than robbing him of these biting pests it would deserve his gratitude; but, in addition, it does him the favor of warning him of the approach of the hunter. With its ears as busy as its beak, the little sentinel detects danger at a call, and at once mounts up into the air, uttering a sharp and peculiar note, which the rhinoceros is not slow to understand and take advantage of; he doesn't wait to make inquiry, but moves off at once. Cumming asserts that when the rhinoceros is asleep, and the Sophaga fails to wake him with its voice, it will peck the hinder part of his neck and otherwise exert itself to arouse its thick-headed friend.



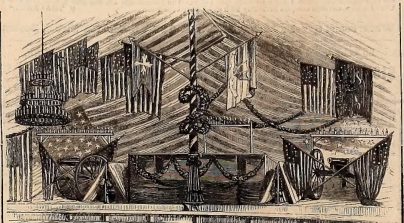
THE WAR IN NORTH CAROLINA—FOLLY INLET, SOUTH OF FORT CASWELL, N. C., SHOWING THE BLOCKADE-RUNNERS DESTROYED BY OUR FLEET.—FROM A SKETCH BY A. PETERS.—SEE PAGE 17.



THE WAR IN NORTH CAROLINA—NEW INLET, CAPE FEAR RIVER, SHOWING FORT FISHER AND THE MOUND ERECTED TO CONTROL THE INLET.—FROM A SKETCH BY A. PETERS.—SEE PAGE 17.

THE SIEGE OF MOBILE—FORT POWELL, AT GRANT'S PASS, NEAR MOBILE, RECENTLY BOMBARDED BY THE UNION FLEET UNDER FARRAGUT.—FROM A SKETCH BY E. B. HOUGH.—SEE PAGE 17.

BRIG.-GEN. J. A. RAWLINS, U. S. A.—SEE PAGE 23.



BRIG.-GEN. GEORGE SYKES, U. S. A.

GEN. GEORGE SYKES, U. S. A.

In the list of officers of the regular army few names will be more honorably mentioned than that of Gen. Sykes, even though at the present time his name is not encircled with the factitious halo of momentary popularity. He is every inch a soldier, an officer thoroughly versed in the science of war; brave, energetic and capable. He was born in Maryland in 1823, graduated at West Point in 1842, and was there appointed Brevet 2d Lieutenant in the 3d Infantry. He was made 1st Lieutenant in Sept. 1855, and brevetted Captain, for gallantry at Citro Gordo. During the war he was Assistant Commissary of subsistence with the division commanded by Gen. Twiggs. In Sept. 1855 he became Captain, and on the commencement of hostilities by the new Confederacy he was commissioned Major of the 14th Infantry, May, 18, 1861; and on the 28th of Sept., in the same year, made Brigadier General of volunteers. In this capacity he commanded in the army of the Potomac the splendid division of regulars in the 5th corps, which won such high renown. He finally succeeded to the command of the corps, enjoying the confidence of all.

THE SINKING OF THE CELEBRATED STEAMER PETERHOFF.

The Peterhoff was a blockade-runner, the capture of which enabled our transatlantic cousins to give us a charming representation of "London Assurance," till an examination of her cargo and proceedings in the English Bankruptcy Courts left not a particle of doubt on the subject. After her condemnation the Peterhoff was purchased by Government, but was run into and sank by the U. S. steamer Monticello off Wilmington, N. C., on the morning of the 6th inst., at 5 A. M. The Monticello left the south side of Cape Fear on the previous evening, bound to Beaufort for coal. At 5 A. M. the officer of the deck saw a vessel on his port beam, he supposed it to be a blockade-runner, as she made no signal, which she ought to have done, being on that line of blockade. The officer of the deck of this vessel immediately bore down towards her, and seeing she did not challenge him he challenged her, on her answering correctly, he—the officer of the watch—shifted his helm to keep on his course, the Peterhoff went ahead at the same time, and before the Monticello could be backed, she struck the Peterhoff just before her smokestack, sinking her in fifteen minutes. Owing to the promptness with which boats were cleared away and sent to her assistance, there were no lives lost. It was just before daybreak and hazy on the water, so that it was hard to tell what distance the two vessels were apart when last seen.

MUSIC STAND AT THE BALL OF THE SECOND CORPS, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

THE MUSIC-STAND IN THE BALL OF THE 2D ARMY CORPS.

The Army Artists, even with poor material, can produce fine effects, as all will admit who examine the sketch sent by our Artist of the music-stand at the ball recently given in the 2d Army Corps. The flags and cannon even, here play their part in decoration, as at New Orleans the latter eater into the class of musical instruments. But under the regime of the new General-in-Chief, who is to make his headquarters at the Army of the Potomac, the ball and the dance will give place to the stern realities of war.

SINKING OF THE CELEBRATED STEAMER PETERHOFF BY THE U. S. STEAMER MONTICELLO OFF WILMINGTON, MARCH 6.—FROM A SKETCH BY AN OFFICER.

A NEGLECTED wife declares that she and her husband are like two milestones, because she may say that he and she are never seen together.

WE should like to hear the sentiments of of the schoolmaster's wife on the subject of her husband being at home abroad.

WHICH side of a horse invariably has the most hair on? The outside.

WANTED—To know the exact length of a rope used when a man is "tied to time."

Carriages.

The subscriber has now on hand a SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF CARRIAGES of all descriptions, warranted perfect both as to style, material and finish, warranted perfect both as to style, material and workmanship, which he offers on reasonable terms. G. WITTY, 459 Broadway and 60 Crosby st., N. Y. 444-9

Apprentices Wanted
TO LEARN ENGRAVING

An opportunity is offered for a limited number of youths to have a taste for drawing, to learn this highly respectable and lucrative business. Apply to Mr. BYRNE, Engraving department of Frank Leslie's Publications, 537 Pearl street, cor. Elm, 4th floor.

Latest Invention
IN GOLD PENS
JUST OUT.

After years of patient research it has been demonstrated now, for the first time, that a genuine Gold Pen, with Iridium or Diamond points, and possessing all the elasticity and durability of the highest-priced Pens, can be produced at prices far below anything of the kind heretofore offered. Years have been spent in trying to produce an Elastic and Diamond-pointed Pen at a low figure, and until now all attempts have been futile. We have nothing to say against parties advertising low-priced Pens and calling them Gold. We know that ours is the only Solid Gold and Genuine Diamond-pointed Elastic Pen in the market that can be afforded at anywhere near our prices.

Trade Prices, per Dozen.

No. 2 Medium Pen.....$3 50
No. 3. Large Pen.....$3 75
No. 4. Engraving Pen.....$4 50
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders, in Morocco Cases (extra).....$4 00

Sample Pens.

No. 2. Medium Pen.....40 cts.
No. 3. Large Pen.....50 cts.
No. 4. Engraving Pen.....60 cts.
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders, in Morocco Case (extra).....30 cts.

WARRANTED.

We warrant Every Pen for one year, and to be Solid Gold, Iridium or Diamond-pointed, and to possess all the Elasticity of the most Expensive Gold Pen made.

We will send these Pens to any address in the United States, paid, on receipt of price.

Money properly Registered and Sealed comes at our risk.

GEORGE A. RLY & CO.,
Sole Manufacturers,
No. 31 Broadway, N. Y.

New Catalogue of Jewelry sent free.
Address THOS. CAFFERTY & CO.,
Providence, R. I.
438-41

Baker's Rheumatic Balm,

BAKER'S FEVER COOLER.
BAKER'S COUGH MIXTURE.
BAKER'S CHOLERA ALLEVIATOR,
are four remedies which no family should be ever without. Price $1 per bottle each. Also,
BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES,
which are invaluable. Price $3.
Principal Depot, No. 164 TENTH STREET, near Fourth avenue. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price. 439-51

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite.
3,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
VICTOR DELAFO, 82 NASSAU ST., R. Y.
000

Whiskers! Whiskers!

MY UNGUENT will force them to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Price 25 cents, or six packages for $1. Address
M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

Have now been before the public for nearly a year. They are universally pronounced the neatest and best fitting collars extant.

The upper edge presents a perfect curve, free from the angles so common in all other collars.

The great reason so packers on the inside of the turn-down collars—they are AS SMOOTH INSIDE AS OUTSIDE—and therefore perfectly free and easy to the wearer.

The Gravette collar has a smooth and evenly finished edge on three sides.

These Collars are not simply flat pieces of paper cut in an oval form, but are MOULDED AND SHAPED TO FIT THE NECK.

They are made in "Novelty" (or turn-down style), in every half size from 15 to 17 inches, and in "Dorset" (or Gravette), from 13 to 17 inches, and packed in "solid sizes" in neat blue cartons, containing each; also in smaller sizes of 10 each—the latter a very handy package for Travellers, Army and Navy officers.

☞ EVERY COLLAR is stamped

"Gray's Patent Molded Collar."

Sold by all Dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The Trade supplied by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
81 Devonshire St., Boston,
J. B. Lourer & Co., 37 Warren St., New York; Van Deusen, Boehmer & Co., 627 Chesnut St., Phila.; Hodges Bros., 23 Hanover St., Baltimore, Md.; Wall, Stephens & Co., 322 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; Leavitt & Davis, cor. Fifth and Vine Sts., Cincinnati; J. Van Burens & Co., 434 Main Street, Louisville, Ky.; Fairchild & Bro., 6 North Main Street, St. Louis, Mo.; Bradford Bros., Milwaukee, Wis.; Wood, Wilcox & Co., 7 to 13 Carondelet Street, New Orleans. 444-52

FURNITURE, FURNITURE,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),
No. 87 Bowery, New York.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.
They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash.
Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;
Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;
Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE;
in Sets, from $22 to $100.

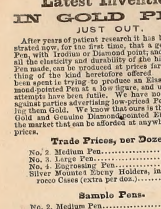
TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED
The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each.
Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

OVER ALL COMPETITORS.

CHICKERING & SONS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Grand, Square and Upright Pianofortes.

THALBERG'S CERTIFICATE

"Since my arrival in America I have constantly used the Pianos of Messrs. Chickering & Sons, and I can only repeat that which I have always said before: The instruments are the best I have seen in the United States, and will compare favorably with any I have ever known. S. THALBERG."



Warerooms, 6 Broadway, N. Y., 246 Washington Street, Boston

25 Cent Legal Tender Circular.

$15 A DAY AND A WATCH FREE!

Reader, delay not; send at once for our New Free Circular whether you want to or not and we will return to you the package on your letter or its equivalent, as we want every person to have a Circular. It astonishes everybody; defies competition, and outstrips competitors.

Address 1,000 Agents wanted. Samples 50 cts. Address
WEIR & C ., 605 Chesnut St., Phila.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

IS HEALTH WORTH HAVING? If it is, protect it. It is a jewel as costly and as virtue, and in some cases is as difficult to recover. Nature, in our climate, and especially at this season, requires to be occasionally reinforced. But everything depends upon the tonic used for this purpose. The medicinal effectues (all of which are based on common alcohol) are dangerous. Calisaya as everybody finds out who takes much of it, is a slow poison. One safe protective tonic will unbridle the stimulant, and hence exists, and one only. This powerful preventive is HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS, a compound of the purest stimulant ever manufactured with the most effective tonics, alterative, regulators and depurators that chemistry has yet extracted from the pharmacopia of the Continents. The languid and feeble from recent sickness, will find the Bitters an incomparable restorative, not disagreeable to the taste and eminently invigorating. No other stimulant produces the same effect as this compound. It does not excite or flutter the nerves, or occasion any undue arterial action; but it acts on soothes and strengthens the nervous system and the animal spirits.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 676 BROADWAY.

$75. MONTH—I want to hire Agents in every city at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new Family Sewing Machines. Address
439-51 S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

The Great Money-Making Article.
Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail for 50 cents. Address
000 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

NATIONAL BATTLE PINS.

McClellan, Grant, Rosecrans, Banks, Meade, Gillmore, Burnside, Hooker, Sigel and Forter. All are the same pattern as the cut, only differing in background and figure. Perfect photographic likeness in each pin, plated with fine gold. By enclosing One Dollar a sample will be sent by mail.

AGENTS WANTED IN AND OUT THE ARMY. The undersigned has the entire control of the manufacture, and the inventor of this beautiful keepsake and record of gallant acts. Also,

Cavalry and Artillery Pins!

The above cuts represent perfectly the Cavalry and Artillery Pins we have been getting up in Silver to answer the urgent inquiries from day to day, from that important branch of the service so long neglected in appropriate badges. The Cavalry are a Silver Pin Sabre Mounted for the Divisions in

Red, White and Blue,

The outer rim highly polished as Silver can be for the Name, Co. and Regiment. These Pins are Silver, and cost One Dollar and Twenty-Five Cents, with the Name, Co. and Regiment engraved upon them, or One Dollar without engraving. Any engraving is desired be-sides the Name, Co. and Regiment, Three Cents per Letter will be charged.

Figure will be furnished at Six Dollars per dozen. The Emblems are raised, and the Pin about the thickness of a two shilling piece.

UNITED STATES NAVY
Monitor Pins.

The cut is a correct copy of the Monitor and Turret as they appear in Silver. The name of the Monitor and purchaser of Pin will be Engraved upon them when ordered for $1.50 each. The Pins are very beautiful and got up expressly by desire of many officers of the Navy. Same pins got up in Solid Gold.

Agents wanted. Every Monitor in the Navy represented.

LOUIS PHILIP & CO., 609 Broadway, N. Y.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers Something New! Burglar-Proof Travellers Lock, Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, Magic Tobacco Box, and 50 more Novel and Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.
S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
45 and 54 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office), offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.
Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	EACH
150 Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	$10 to $50
500 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	$16
500 Sets of Rosin Chains	2 00 to $10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00
3000 Gold Lockets, Plain	2 00 to 5 00
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Garnet and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
5000 Gents' Breast Pins	2 50 to 8 00
3000 Gold Keys	2 00 to 6 00
2000 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00
2000 Sets of Bosom Studs	2 00 to 6 00
2000 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Plain Rings	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Lockets	2 50 to 6 00
10000 Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
3000 Gold Pens, Silver Mtrd Holders	3 00 to 5 00
5000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the neatest and most fashionable styles. Particular attention is paid to the various articles being sent by mail mixed, thus giving all a fair chance. Certificates, at for 25 cents each; and on receipt of One Dollar the list is at your option to send ONE DOLLAR'S worth of goods named in it or not. For one hundred eleven, $2; thirty, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred, $15; Certificates necessary to be enclosed with order.

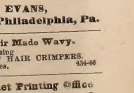
Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate, provided they remit the amounts to $1, and more liberal inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
45 and 54 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and enchain the affections of any person and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, among certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cts., together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest; Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 42 Days." Dont be humbugged with the ROSENBERG SECRET fully explained in the ROSENBERGERS 12,000 sold. 10th Ed. Only 30 cts.; 3 for $1. Address C. K. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.



Ten years in the Business.
Patrons counted by thousands in every State of the Union.
A Premium for all!
Evans' New Enterprise, 1864, $500,000 worth of New Goods, consisting of Gold and Silver Watches, Jewelry, Vest and Guard Chains, Gold Pens, Pencils, Lockets, Medallions, Sets of Jewelry, &c., &c.,
together with a large line of goods especially adapted to the wants of our Soldiers, Army and Navy, to be sold in lots at One Dollar Each, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive. Premium Orders for above goods, sent to any address, on receipt of 10 cents.
Send your orders to
G. G. EVANS, Publisher, 630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

N. B. A classified Catalogue, of Books with Price List of Photograph Card Pictures and Albums, sent on receipt of 5 cents.

Address, G. G. EVANS, Philadelphia, Pa.

Straight Hair Made Wavy.
Without heating it, by using
DEVINE'S PATENT HAIR CRIMPERS.
For Sale at Variety Stores. 434-66

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office
FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Merchants, Bankers, Tradesmen, Amateurs, etc., etc.,
Are warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular
J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Fine Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
262 Broadway, New York.

VETERAN

C.MORTON
Co E 48TH
N.Y.V.

VETERAN SOLDIERS

We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Pins for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field at $1 50 each; also, all the various Army Badges worn by the different armies, by the single one, 100, or 1,000.

Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

Solid 18 k. Gold, $0 50. Solid Silver, $1 00.

Conjuring Made Easy.—Containing full directions for performing 150 of the most astounding and Wonderful Feats of Hocus Pocus, Sleight-of-Hand, Ventriloquism and Legerdemain. Profusely illustrated. Price 15 cents, post free, by mail.
Address M. M. SANBORN, Stanhope, N. J.

Broker's Stock of unredeemed goods for sale at $1 for each article, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable goods worth from 75 cents to $300 each. Circulars giving full particulars sent to any address. Any person sending 25 cents we will inform them in advance what article they will receive, giving a description of the same, with the price as sold at retail. Any article ordered, if it does not prove as described, we will refund the money.
For further particulars address, with 3c. stamp,
ANDREWS & CO., 103 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.

☞ One of the Most Interesting Rebel Letters ever published, sent by the Yankees. Mailed free to any address on the receipt of 25 cts. Address A. LANDELL, Co. H, 103d Regt. Infantry, Rangeley, Me.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Toilet Enamiler. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is used to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, $1 per bottle. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 133 South-Seventh Street, and 41 South-Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

J. G. SCHULL,
MERCHANT TAILOR
33 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings, which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.
A. G. GARLAND, M. D., 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

$80 A MONTH! I want Agents at $80 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pencils, Oriental Surveyor, and 13 other articles. Is Circulars free. JOHN B. LORD, Biddeford, Me.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD

30,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.

WORTH $150,000,

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

Six Certificates can be ordered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty five for $5; and one hundred for $15.
Address C. F. SHULTS,
Box 385 River Street, Troy, N. Y.
437-49

Philadelphia Package Stationery.

ARMSTRONG & SHEPHERD having bought out R. WEIR and taken his rooms in Drexel's Building, No. 34 South Third Street, offer to Travelling and Local Agents attractive inducements in new and improved styles of Stationery Packages, of large profits to Agents. Send orders and for Circulars.
Phila., Feb. 1864.

Dr. B. C. Ferry,
DERMATOLOGIST,
No. 49 BOND STREET NEW YORK,
(Formerly of No. 29 Winter St., Boston.)

Treats successfully all
Diseases of the Scalp, Loss of Hair and Premature Blanching;
ALSO
Removes MOTH, FRECKLES, and other DISCOLORATIONS from the FACE, without injury to the texture or Color of the skin.

☞ NO CHARGE FOR CONSULTATION. ☜

For particulars address, enclosing stamp,
DR. B. C. FERRY,
49 Bond Street, N. Y.

Fine Gold Plate, $1 50. Solid Silver, $1. Solid Silver, $1 50.

I have best issued a New Battle Pin with a likeness of either General in the Army and the principal Battles he has been engaged in engraved in rosewood thereon. Also a new Naval, Engineer, Artillery, Battery and Cavalry Pin. The above are all made either of Solid Silver or Fine Gold-Plate, and I will send them free for $1 50 each.

Also, for $1, I will send a Solid Silver Shield or either Army Corps, Division or Co. Pin, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely engraved thereon.

Agents wanted in every Regiment, Hospital and Vessel. With each sample will be sent a wholesale Circular to Agents.

Also, the Emporium for Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils, Lockets, Bracelets, Chains, Rings, Pins, Sets of Jewelry, Studs and Buttons, and everything in the Jewelry line. One Certificate telling you what you can have for $1 will be sent for 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5.

S. M. WARD & CO., Manufacturing Jewellers,
208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for the skin.

HOYT'S MINNEHAHA HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled in keeping the hair in curl.

HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM oils and colors the hair in the same time; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves youthful freshness to the face.

Sold everywhere.
JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

Swords, Sashes, Belts,
Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords,
431-56 B. KITTREDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy" is a Book of 100 pages, illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy," Plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry whoever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps. Address
E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1525, Portland, Me.
442-48

We have furnished our Women's Rifles as follows:

State of Kentucky	1,760
State of Indiana	760
General Rigby	150
Colonel Collins	320
Capt. Buck's Co.,	Chillicothe, O.
Col. Grant's "	Kansas.
Capt. Child's "	Illinois.
Capt. Whyback's Co.,	Rolla, Mo.
Capt. Hall's "	Jefferson City, Mo.
Capt. Hunter's "	Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Gist'	Perryville, Ind.

LEAVENWORTH, Jan. 12, 1863.

DEAR SIR—The Rifles (33) were put to a severe test on the 7th, at the State Fair, AND WON A STAND OF COLORS, in a contest against THREE INFANTRY COMPANIES. They were to fire in squads of ten, each man having three shots, and to count the best seven shots. We won the COLORS, NUMBERED TWO HUNDRED shots by the infantry. Dodged 300 yards. We hit the target 43 times out of 100 shots. The greatest number of hits by the infantry company was 21. This exhibited the superiority of the KITTREDGE (Wesson) Gun.

M. S. GRANT,
Col. 1st Kansas Cav.

To MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.
B. KITTREDGE & CO.,
433-44 Cincinnati, Ohio.

Excelsior Music-Book.—For Violin, Flute, Fife or Cornet, "I have had a day for Piano or Organ. "When the Boys come Home." "Your Portrait to Send for me." "The Girl I left behind me." "Battle-field." Each 35 cents, mailed. MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. Illustrated type free. Dealer's catalogue 3 cents stamp. FRED. BLUME, 308 Bowery, N. Y.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc.; supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. Published in a sealed letter envelope. Single Copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings county, N. Y. 000

Remington's

Approved by the Government.
Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.
E. REMINGTON & SONS,
435-50 Ilion, N. Y.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PHILADELPHIA 93 Ann St., N. Y.

GREAT TRIUMPH.

STEINWAY & SONS, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker Street, N. Y., were awarded a FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.
The special correspondent of the New York Times says:
"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the JURORS is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European makers." 000

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY'S
NEW UNION PLAYING CARDS,
National Emblems.

Colonel of Eagles.

The suits are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS and FLAGS, Colonel in place of King; Goddess of Liberty for Queen; Major for Jack.
The Union Playing Cards are the first and only genuine American Cards ever produced, and as they are protected according to Act of Congress, they can be manufactured only by the American Card Company.
These Cards are rapidly taking the place of Cards bearing Foreign emblems. The demand for them is unprecedented in the Card Trade, and they will soon become the Leading Card in the American market.
In playing with these Cards, they are to be called by the names the emblems represent, and as the emblems are as familiar as household words everywhere among the people of the American Republic, they can be used as readily the first evening as Cards bearing Foreign emblems.
The Union Cards are the most pleasing and attractive Card ever made. They are produced in the highest style of the art, and each pack is put up in an elegant Card Case, suitable to keep them in when not in use, and then in handsome dozen boxes for the trade.
Two Sample Packs, in Card Cases, sent, postpaid, on receiptof $1. Address
AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,
Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1858. The best and only reliable Billiard Table manufactured. Balls, Cues, and every article relating to Billiards, for sale by
MELAN & COLLENDER,
434-7 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to their advantage. Matrimonial Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 300 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address 58 White Street, New York.

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

Sewing Machines
438-470 No. 505 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Artillery Badges.

Address is for simple design of our Newest Style Artillery Badge. Best free to any address on receipt of price, with Name, Co. and Regiment handsomely Engraved thereon.
Solid Silver (without battles) $1 50.
Solid Silver, letters in Gold Relief (without battles) $2. Solid Gold (without battles) $5. Battles, 20 cents each extra.

Also New Style CAVALRY BADGE, and every style Co. Pins and Corps Badges worn by the Army. Our Illustrated Catalogue sent free. Address
C. L. BALCH & CO.,
000 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Watches
FOR THE ARMY.

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travellers."—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest timepieces ever offered."—N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 16.

"Splendidly finished Watches, the beauty of which is only excelled by their simplicity."—N. Y. Weekly, May 23.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADY'S OR GENTLEMAN'S WATCH WITH PATENT SELF-WINDING IMPROVEMENT.

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepieces ever offered to a reliable use ever offered. It has within it, and connected with its machinery, its own winding apparatus, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16-carat gold. It has the improved ruby-jewelled lever movement, and is warranted as accurate timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $25. Ditto, engine turned in best moroccco boxes, $30. By mail the postage is 25 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!
FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS OF PRICE THEY STAND UNRIVALLED.
MUSEY INSURER

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so fanlless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer one first quality Sterling Silver, while the inner one is German Silver. It cannot be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, making it not only in appearance, but in durability the best resemblance of SOLID STERLING SILVER in existence.

The sale of these Watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they readily do, at $25 and upwards. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single day by a person of ordinary business tact.

☞ AT WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy cut hands, as good running order, by the half dozen, $72; postage, $2 36; registering, 20 cents Gold case by same, $96. Can be sent by express.

☞ TERMS, CASH! INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No Agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent us by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk. Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Sole Importers,
438 189 Broadway and 3 Ann Street, N. Y.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED for the Best and Cheapest Package containing Jewelry, Good Stationery, and a Picture in Oil Colors. Enclose stamp for Circular. Sample 50 cents.
J. L. G. PIERPONT,
442-5 325 Broadway, N. Y.

Soldiers and Everybody!

A great Book for you! Over 2,000 Things Worth Knowing! Mailed free for 25c cents. Address "UNION BOOK ASSOCIATION," Box 369, Syracuse, N. Y. Agents, order our unequalled Stationery Packages. 480-3

Royal Havana Lottery.

50 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information (gratis). Highest prices paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

THE BEST LITERATURE

☞ By the Best American Writers. ☜

Is found each month in the

Atlantic Monthly

LONGFELLOW, LOWELL, HAWTHORNE, EMERSON, HOLMES, AGASSIZ, and others of the leading writers of the country contribute regularly.

Terms, $3 a year, postage paid—25 cents a number.

Liberal reduction to Clubs. Send 10 cents for a specimen number to

TICKNOR & FIELDS, Publishers,

443-5tg 135 Washington street, Boston.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVERS.

Trade Mark, P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jewelled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also very variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be accompanied by the cash, or will not take bills for cash as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,

o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

The only unmetalized "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send 3 cts. for "Turn-over" or 76 cents for "Choice," to C. H. WELLS, 97 Fulton St., N. Y., and receive 12 by return mail.

o

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts., MAGNIFYING 500 times, mailed on receipt of price. Address THOMPSON, GOODE & CO., Agents, P. O. Box 2220, Boston, Mass.

o

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 00, warranted for one year, gentlemen accompanying cash Pen. Send for a Circular. Pens responded on receipt of 75 cents.

435-47t H. C. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, prepaid, for $2 25; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, 7.

HENRY CRAIG,

335 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Bellevue, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all eyes, for $3; with 12 assorted views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

o

250 Rare Receipts.

SEVENTEEN ELECTROTYPE ENGRAVINGS.

Tells What to Do, And How!to Do It.

The best Family Receipt Book ever published. Sent free by mail for 25 cents.

HUTCHINSON & CO., Publishers,

442 Broadway, N. Y.

o

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, AND OTHERS.

20 cents each, $1 80 per doz. Free by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1818, New York city. Send for circular.

o

American, Swiss and English Watches

A superior style and quality of Cases. Orders from the Trade or Army (large or small) promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 10 years.

0000 T. B. BYNNER, 175 Broadway, N. Y.

Great Chance to Make Money!

$850,000 of Watches, Jewelry, &c.,

Given away with our STATIONERY PRIZE PACKETS.

Every AGENT purchasing 100 PACKETS will receive FREE, as a PRESENT from us, a GENUINE SILVER WATCH.

We also publish SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS, which will retail $50. Agents can make more money by engaging in the sale of our PACKETS and ENGRAVINGS than in any other business. For full particulars of the SPECIAL INDUCEMENTS we offer send for our New Circular.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.

30 Beekman St. N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility affecting the Sexual System, in both Sexes—their successful treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in a sealed letter envelope, free of charge. Address Dr. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 Southampton Street, Pentonville, London.

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,

Williamsburg, Kings Co., N. Y.

0000

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in six drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs etc., etc.

S. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

0000

Agents Wanted (Male or Female). Address HALE & CO., Newburyport, Mass. 0000

MR. PUFFER'S CHARITY (to Subscription Committee of Sanitary Fair)—"Yes, ladies, I have succeeded in getting the females of my short establishment to give a day's labor, and although it is a great inconvenience to my business, I cheerfully grant it to relieve our sick soldiers."

FINE WATCH FREE!

And $15 For Day Made Easy.

I by selling the GREAT "original and only genuine" HUKEAPON PRIZE AND STATIONERY PACKAGES, each of which contains "more real saleable articles" than any half-dozen other packages ever sold. Each Package contains Fine Writing Materials, Engravings, Fashion Plate, Fancy Articles, Tickler Notions, Games, Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Rich Gems, Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Rich Gems, Receipts, Many Ways to get Rich, The whole worth Presents of Fine Jewelry, etc., etc. In coin. In coin several dollars if bought separately. Profits large. Sales Wholesale rates to Agents low. Profits large. Sales immense. Every soldier and every family wants them. Agents wanted in every town and camp. $15 per day guaranteed, and a splendid Gold or Silver Hunting-case Watch, presented FREE TO EACH perfect timekeeper, PRESENTED FREE TO EACH Agent. Beware of imitations.

We are the sole manufacturers of the GREAT ORIGINAL HUKEAPON PRIZE PACKAGES. Each of which we have copyrighted according to law. None others are genuine. Beware of exposé of the swindling operations as practised by other parties. See editorial in New York Tribune of Friday, Feb. 26. Send for our great new Circulars for 1864, containing the extra premium announcement. Price

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y.

Original Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

o

Salesmen Wanted.—Salary Paid. Address (with stamp) to Harris Bros., Boston, Mass. 435-47t

o

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, CURED and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address

435-47t CHAS. A. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

o

For Veteran, Army Corps, Cavalry and Battle Pins,

Send to Headquarters,

S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway,

(See Notice Inside

o

INFANTRY PIN FOR THE SOLDIER

In coin Silver, for $1 50, including the Engraving of the Name, Co. and Regiment; also the National Battle Pin, Cavalry and Artillery Pin, Monitor, Regular and Signal Corps Pins.

LOUIS PHILIP & CO.,

442 50 No. 2 Murray St., N. Y.

o

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN

6 Maiden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fire Arms" "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brushes, Meerschaum Pipes, etc., etc.

Military and Navy Equipments in every variety. A large assortment of

RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS,

Constantly on hand.

34-47t

Munro's 10 Cent Publications.

NOVEL No. 9.

THE TURTLE CATCHER

OR,

THE TIGER OF THE OCEAN.

By Ellion Constellano.

This is a magnificent Tale of the Ocean, by the most popular author of the present day. He writes exclusively for us. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 10 cents.

o

GEORGE MUNRO & CO.,

137 William St., N. Y.

o

SEND FOR

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

The most unique, original, and the cheapest collection of splendid Photographic Portraits of Turkish Beauties. Costs only $5. Sent free, by mail or receipt of price, by

C. OSCANYAN,

37 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

Soldier's Money Belts!

THE HOWARD MONEY BELT,

Light, Durable, Elegant—Compartments for Letters, Greenbacks, Photographs. The greatest and most durable belt ever made. Will not sweat or wet through under any circumstances.

Sutlers, Dealers, Agents and Peddlers wanted everywhere. Sample Belt, by mail, $2.

HOWARD BELT CO.,

o 636 Broadway, N. Y.

C. W. FRENCH,

607 Broadway, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.

A large and assortment of Mens Furnishing Goods for the fall and winter wear, combining all the novelties of the season as they appear in Paris and London.

FINE SHIRTS AND COLLARS

MADE TO ORDER.

JUST RECEIVED a large stock of Genuine Shaker Wool Undershirts and Drawers very fine. Also, a large stock of English Underclothing, Warm Gloves, Cartage Blankets, etc. Call and examine our stock.

o

Corns and Bunyons.

Their Cause, Prevention and Cure. Fully explained in the Great Work just published by Dr. MERRIFIELD. Mailed everywhere for 25 cents. Address F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

o

A Secret Worth Knowing—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or other fruit, in 10 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address

F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

o

Munro's Ten Cent Publications.

Novel No. 8—THE INDIAN SLAYER. Nothing can surpass this inimitable Indian tale. It is full of adventures of the most startling nature, hairbreadth escapes and marvellous exploits. Sent postpaid on receipt of price, 10 cents.

GEORGE MUNRO & CO.,

137 William street, N. Y.

o

DISTILLED DEW

FOR THE

SKIN AND COMPLEXION.

Removes Tan, Freckles and Discolorations, and renders the Skin beautifully Clear, Soft and White. Contains no Chalk or Powder. Sold by all Druggists. Principal Depot, 779 Broadway, N. Y.

o

50 FIRST PREMIUMS in 1863

GROVER & BAKER'S

CELEBRATED ELASTIC STITCH

Sewing Machines

Were awarded the Highest Premiums over all competitors at the State Fairs of New York, Vermont, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Oregon, and at every respectable Institute and County Fair held in 1863.

Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Top, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, sent free, by mail, in neat case, only $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper $15

OR COMPASS WATCH.

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" engraved or enamelled Hunting Case Watch—Magic Spring—Genuine English Jewelled or Nickel Movements—"M. T. Wright"—Independent setting—Self-Balance—and has a NEAT MINIATURE COMPASS set in the movements—making it a correct guide for the Soldier or Traveller—A perfect Timekeeper—"Warranted one year," will send safe, and as a

Exact Imitation of a $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

ENGLISH STERLING SILVER LEVER WATCHES, engraved Hunting Cases, full jewelled movements warranted, $18.

$30 American $30 Levers.

In 4 oz. Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Full Ruby Jewelled, Gold Joints, Magic Spring, with Push Pin Movement, only $30.

Real English Duplex Stop Watch.

In Massive Silver Hunting Cases, Full Jewelled, Sweep Seconds, for Artillerists or Timing Horses, Full Guarantee, $30.

Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above styles of Compound Watches. Catalogue of prices sent free.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Nov. 30 says of the "European" Timekeeper: "This is a novelty here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeepers so much in use among the British officers abroad, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers and sailors." Illustrated News says: "Correct timepieces, and for beauty and fine finish they are equal to anything at $100 watches."

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,

38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready-Made or to Measure, at $23, $30, $35 per doz

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices and drawings of different styles of collars and bosoms sent free everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50 each—cut one yard long. A single Shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 63 cents for postage and registering.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,

No. 387 Broadway, New York.

Ivory Jewelry!

Fine Ivory Brooches.....$1 50
Ball Earrings.....$1 50
Ivory Initial Sleeve Buttons.....25
(new style).....
Ivory Fancy Buttons.....$1 00

Sent free, on receipt of price. A great variety on hand, at WELLINGE'S, 50 Nassau street, N. Y.

o Sign of the Golden Elephant.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Annapolis, Fortress Monroe, Portsmouth, Newbern, Fort Royal, and all other Points, forwarded at low rates by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS No. 74 Broadway. Soldiers carried low rates. 0000 700 Volunteers Sick in Camp!

Young men, be warned in time, supply yourself with an HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT. They are guaranteed to cure the worst cases of Sores, Ulcers, Scurvy, Fevers and Bowel Complaints. 30 cts., 63 cts., and $1 per box or pot.

o

FRENCH FLANNEL ARMY SHIRTS

Dress Shirts
TO MEASURE,
SIX SHIRTS
$19, $15 & $12

Dress Shirts,
ready made,
are made a Perfect Fit, Superior Work, and are Unequalled in Quality for the price.

A full extensive assortment of newly imported HABITS, SUSPENDERS, GLOVES and HDKERCHIEFS.

JAMES FARRISH, 323 Canal Street, New York.

Shiits' Onguent—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. SHULTZ, Troy, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 445—VOL. XVIII.] NEW YORK, APRIL 9, 1864. [PRICE 8 CENTS.

THE UNITED STATES SANITARY COMMISSION.—SEE PAGE 39.

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS—Three men and one woman, each over eight feet high; two Dwarfs, each less than two feet high—besides a host of other Novelties. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Ossanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 31 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in best, indoor and outdoor costumes, surrounding York as, Jewish, Armenian, Grecian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Ossanyan's travels.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every fascinating centre table; and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs only $6. Sent free, by mail, on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,
No. 57 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, APRIL 9, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 73 Duane street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Persons supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S JOURNAL and THE NEW YORK LEDGER, by J. BEDIA & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 121 Fleet street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 50
Two copies " to one address	5 00
Four " "	10 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00
Paper, 11 weeks	1 00

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

76 cents a line on the outside or last page.
60 " " on the 14th and 15th pages.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

Gen. Grant has assumed command of the Army of the Potomac, and the first step of the new regime is the reduction of the army to three corps, the 2d, 5th and 6th. The 3d corps is transferred to the 2d. The 1st is consolidated with the 5th. This throws out Gen. Sykes, of the 5th, and Gen. Newton, of the 1st corps, and Gens. French, Pleasanton, Kenly, Spinola and Meredith. Sykes, who has been connected with the Army of the Potomac so long, is sent West; Pleasanton goes to Missouri.

On the 21st 18 guerillas were taken and brought into Fort Lee. Gen Graham made an expedition recently into Matthews county, and returned safely, bringing in horses, cattle, mules and contrabands.

A expedition, consist of the 5d Virginia cavalry wee captured at Wingfield, on the Kanawha, by the rebels, who nearly took the steamer Victress, having on board Major Rucker, with important dispatches.

MISSISSIPPI.

The recent fight at Yazoo city, was one of the best contested and most desperate of the war. The Union force consisted of the 11th Illinois, Col. Schofield, Col. Coates's 8th Louisians (colored), and 200 of the 1st Mississippi cavalry, Col. Edward Osband (colored). The army had eight regiments, under Cols. Ross and Richardson. The fight commenced at eight A. M., and lasted nearly till dark, when the enemy retired; 300 of the 11th Illinois were surrounded in a small fort on the bluff outside the town. A storm of shot and shell was poured upon them all day, when a summons was sent to them to surrender. They replied they didn't know what surrender meant. The remainder of the Union force was in town, where they were met by the enemy, who had gained cover of some of the buildings. The contest raged for three hours, when the enemy retired. Two gunboats were in the river, but could render little assistance.

TENNESSEE.

The rebel Gens. Hughes, Ferguson and Shorter are at the Cumberland, and on the 16th attacked one of Hobson's camps, near Bennett's ferry, and was repulsed.

Some skirmishing parties of the 91st Indiana entered a town on the Virginia road, on the Virginia road, including the notorious guerillas, Green and Esther.

On the 16th an engagement took place near Fort Pillow, in which 600 of our troops were attacked by 1,000 rebels, whom they repulsed with loss.

Grierson is hunting up the rebels near Memphis.

Four hundred of the 7th Tennessee cavalry were captured by 2,000 rebels at Union city after repulsing the enemy three times.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The enemy have mounted six rifle guns on the casemates of Fort Sumter, bearing on the channel.

On the 16th the rebels made an attack on Seabrook, but were successfully repulsed, their only triumph being the capture of a picket-boat.

KENTUCKY.

The rebel Gen. W. E. Jones has entered Kentucky by Fulkerson's gap, with 1,800 men.

On the 25th March Gen. Forrest, whose movements were long threatening, attacked Paducah, and captured it. The U. S. troops, under Col. Hicks, 800 strong, held a fort below the city, and repulsed the rebels, with loss. The inhabitants fled, and the rebels began to burn and plunder the city. Much is ruined, including the marine railway and the wharf-boat Arizona. Two Union gunboats came up and drove the rebels out with loss. We had 12 killed, 40 wounded; the rebels, 150 to 300 killed, including Gen. Thompson. The rebel wounded amount to over 1,000. At the last accounts Forrest was near Mayfield, marching on Clinton.

The rebels have visited Hickman, whence they fired on a steamer.

LOUISIANA.

An expedition starting from Vicksburg on the 8th, under Brig.-Gen. Andrew Jackson Smith, organized Gen. Buck Turner's force marching on Fort de Russy, took it by assault, capturing 325 prisoners and a number of excellent cannon. This opens the river to Shreveport.

After the capture of Fort de Russy the Union force on the Teche advanced and occupied Alexandria and New Iberia on the 15th. Gen. Lee, Chief of Cavalry, holds the latter place, having driven the rebels across Vermillion Bayou.

The Nyanza, Lieut. Washburn, went up to Butte La Rose and dispersed a guerilla band, capturing and destroying their camp.

TEXAS.

Two thousand refugees and deserters have come into Brownsville. A party of 150 rebel soldiers deserted, and 300 were sent in pursuit; they overtook the deserters, but all kept on for Brownsville.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Major H. D. Wallen, 7th U. S. infantry, has recently defeated the Navajoes in two successive engagements, killing 50 and capturing 30, in one of the actions.

NAVAL.

The San Jacinto, recently captured a blockade-runner with 132 bales of cotton.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 21st March, the day was consumed by desultory debate on several unimportant subjects of a routine character.

In the House, the amendment of the Senate, increasing the salary to West Point officers $30 a month, instead of $30, as heretofore given, was concurred in. Mr. Kernan and Mr. Stevenson had a spirited debate on the subject of paying the expenses of troops to their various States to vote for Republican candidates.

In the Senate, on the 22d, Mr. Clark called up the bill amending the act relating to foreign coins and coinage recommended by the Senate Committee on the Redemption, to provide a republican government for Italy, which, after a protracted and, in many cases, elaborate argument, showing the existing condition of the Italian States and the unprecedented effect the bill under consideration. He was in favor of giving the glorious Union cause to the people of Italy, and to promote civilization by the freeing of the wives and children of slave republics, and also to oppose the rebellion against the best government on earth.

In the House, Mr. Henry Winter Davis called up the bill from the Select Committee on the Rebellion, to provide a republican government for Italy. Mr. Davis made a long and, in many cases, elaborate argument, showing the existing condition of the Italian States and the unprecedented effect the bill under consideration. He was in favor of giving the glorious Union cause to the people of Italy, and to promote civilization by the freeing of the wives and children of slave republics, and also to oppose the rebellion against the best government on earth. Mr. Davis read the Proclamation of Washington, and also the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Davis's speech was applauded by the House and the galleries.

In the Senate, on the 23d, the bill establishing a Bureau of Military Justice was agreed to. The bill in relation to deserters was also taken up and after considerable discussion was passed by some unimportant business the Senate adjourned.

In the House, Mr. Arnold gave notice of his intention to introduce a resolution for a Special Committee to inquire whether citizens in the employ of the Government were sent home, at Government expense or otherwise, to vote at the elections. Mr. Arnold objected unless the inquiry should be conducted by the Committee on Public Expenditures. Mr. Wm. D. Kelley and Mr. Kernan would not consent; the resolution was not received. A resolution was offered instructing the Ways and Means Committee to report upon the expediency of increasing the present duty upon foreign wool. The Judiciary Committees were discharged from further consideration of the memorials called for the impeachment of Judge Miller. A violent personal altercation here occurred between Mr. McClurg and Mr. Blair, of Missouri, ending in the adoption of resolutions to appoint a committee of inquiry into the charges made. Messrs. Rigby, Clay and Pruyn were appointed as the committee. The House then resumed the consideration of the Delaware Bay and Raritan Bay Railroad bill. Mr. Davis favored the bill. Mr. Perry opposed it, arguing that there was no necessity for declaring it a military and post road. The discussion was terminated by the expiration of the morning hour. The House then proceeded to the consideration of the bill to amend the Currency and Bank bill, but adjourned without vote.

In the Senate, on the 24th, the entire time was occupied by speeches from Senators Howard and Sumner, upon military interference in State elections.

In the House, the joint resolution for the protection of engineers and naval constructors at the Naval Academy, and reported back by the Naval Committee, ordered to be printed, and recommitted. The construction of a military road, from Fort Lapwai to Nez Perce Bar Railroad a post and military road was then discussed, and Messrs. Wilson, Spaulding, Arnold, all of Pennsylvania, respectively made speeches for and against the proposition. The Select Conference Committee on the Military Academy bill was agreed to. The bill to amend, providing for the appointment of an additional number of Cadets was passed. The joint resolution in relation to the West Point rendering any increase of the number inauthorized by the Military Academy Committee of the Whole on the bill amendatory of the National Banking Act. Messrs. Hooper, Kernan and Brooks, of New York, made speeches in opposition to it. Mr. Hooper moved the amendment establishing a currency bureau in New York city, with a comptroller, to be appointed for four years, and to fill all vacancies for more than 10 or 20 votes. The House then adjourned.

In the Senate on the 25th, Vice-President submitted a communication from the President, inclosing a report from the Secretary of State, in relation to the establishment of a monarchical government in Central America, which was referred, and ordered to be printed. Mr. Trumbull introduced a bill to construct a railroad and telegraph line from the Mississippi River. The Senate then agreed to the report of the Conference Committee on the West Point Military Academy bill, and then adjourned until Monday.

In the House, Mr. Washburne, from the Committee on Commerce, asked the Speaker to prevent fraud in the changing of names of vessels. The House passed the Senate bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue to certain parties duplicates of bonds, to the amount of $8,000, lost by them, having been lost on the steamship Golden Gate. The National Bank bill was then taken up under the call, and several were added to have it postponed until Monday, to enable the supporters of the measure from the New York Clearing House to be heard. This did not prevail, and a motion to stop debate prevailed by a casting vote of the Speaker. The House then went into a sort of humorous debate, which consumed the time finally agreed to that the House adjourned, and the bill went over until the 30th, when it will come up again, as the House has agreed to devote Saturday to public business hereafter, for the present making.

There was no session in the Senate on the 26th, and in the House the time was consumed by several speeches on the rebellion.

BOOK NOTICES.

GEN. GRANT AND HIS CAMPAIGNS. By JULIAN K. LAND. Illustrated by a portrait on steel and four battle views. New York: Derby and Miller, 1864. 12mo. 476 pp.

The elevation of Gen. Grant to a rank held heretofore only by Washington, gives him a place that will be filled by few names. Mr. Land has well supplied our present want. He writes the life of the unpretending hero with grace and skill. The facts are well condensed and interestingly told, and for a history of Grant's deserves, as it will receive, wide circulation.

THE NORTHERN MONTHLY. A Magazine of Literature, Civil and Military Affairs. March, 1864. Portland: Bailey and Noyes.

This is a handsome, well-printed candidate for public favor. The literary merit is worthy of the typographical dress which produced a Longfellow. We shall always see the numbers with pleasure.

TOWN TOPICS.

THE sensation of the week has been the "opening," a species of sensation striking some of our country readers with open-mouthed wonder. For the benefit of such we explain that Thursday, the 24th of March, was "opening day," and that on that day the long-nursed treasures of fashionable modistes were exposed to the gaze and competition of curious ladies and the ladies—themselves. Now that they are to be allowed to wear the next season.

In company with a pair of the fair, we undertook to "do" the opening; firstly, by divesting ourselves of all cash, save half a dollar for omnibus hire, and secondly, by assuming a solemn protest against doing anything more than look at bonnets. How strictly this protest was adhered to we have painful experience in the memory of a pair of eyes that "opened" upon us at the very outset of our career, and so much did our resolution waver, that we soon found that lace and tulle, flowers, silks and ribbons, bright eyes, rosy cheeks and fair faces, became inextricably mixed, that to this moment we have been unable to separate them in our memory, therefore, as to the spring styles range from $20 to $100 each, and that sometimes the $100 bonnet has the $20 one's head in it, we are unable to say.

Oh! Madame de ——, you have much to answer for in the double temptation of spiritual bonnets and angelic sellers of bonnets.

From the sublime we come down by a rapid run to the stern solidities of life, and discuss a matter that is important to all with a fearful earnestness whether they do ask for it. We mean a matter of food. That we are to be agitated with strikes and meetings of mechanics and workingmen for higher prices for their labor, based on the certain high prices demanded by the farmers for the agricultural products of the workingmen has given us little doubt, and yet in this connection it is gone up fifty per cent., and harder for his life than before his increase. A friend of ours, who has a farm in the interior of New York to what it did two years since. The poorest paid laborer receives not less than $40 per month, and he what it will do for him and his little family. He has, therefore, resolved to make a farmer of himself, and the crowds himself into a room and bedroom, and has let the rest to industrious, hitherto, at cost him about 30 cents per diem. Of the morsels called meals he has a dispose of four of these cents. Of meat, if they indulge in the luxury, they will cost a pound; of bread, at least a pound; a small measure of potatoes will be 10 cents, and a small quantity of butter 15 cents. A little warm and cook with, they will want a peck of coal at 8 cents per bushel, and these with our milliner will be about 75 cents for light, tea or coffee, sugar, salt, pepper, and we have a total of $2 32, leaving a balance of 18 cents for clothing, soap and keep in health, to say nothing of sinnes, five persons.

As the above is a matter-of-fact statement we leave it, but we hardly worth while to mention that everything in the world will be found to be paid for at double the rate, sometimes treble or quadruple, and the situation will be understood.

This reminds us to speak once more of the workingwomen's movement. The meeting which was a great success at the Cooper Institute, has attracted attention towards their Protective Association, and has caused some rattling among the dry bones of certain organic fabrics, who holding Government contracts, or the lucrative manufacturing chances, swell their profits by swindling working girls and women out of the trifle they should receive for their labor. We once more commend the ladies of New York who would employ sempstresses to do so through this association.

The great Fair has been postponed for one week. The organization has proved too much for the space of time allotted, and the space of building has proved too small for the many contributions from every climate that have flowed in upon the undertaking. The children's department, now going up on the north side of Union square, alone looks like a full grown affair, to say nothing of the main building, and promises to hold an ocean of toys and pretty things, enough to make Santa Claus die of sheer envy, promising the jolly old fellow can die at all! The season of the Fair commences at 9 A. M. with a parade for the opening night, and the fair will continue open all week.

Once more Maretzek has appeared in our midst with his Italian troupe. The result is full of cheer for the devouring attentions of Boston. Among the remarkable events connected with the great debut of tenor in the hub town is the wonderful cure it has wrought upon Brignoli. In the space of a few days, a few weeks ago the tenor was afflicted, according to New York critics, with a bad throat; was unable to sing or breaking up, we forget which—of the vocal organ, and was in a fair way to abandon private life and leave his depleted powers. He has done better: he has breathed the air of Boston and returned to the once more himself. Gratitude naturally would prompt him to do something for the town that has done so much for him, and hence this certificate, which we only vouch for as doing its handsome duty. Here it is:

"TO THE FIRST MEN OF BOSTON:

"GENTLEMEN—I was suddenly afflicted with a well-nigh total loss of voice, accompanied by diseases of the throat, weakness of the lungs, cold perspiration and loss of reputation in New York. I resolved to leave your city. On arriving I procured a carriage on the Common for one hour, breathing freely of the air so sufficiently for that time, and at the end of that time found myself in the full possession of my voice. Is it not so? But no, it is natural and my duty. Since then I have gained strength in my knees, have experienced no difficulty in singing, and am singing rapidly my once acclaimed reputation as a magnificent tenor. I feel sure to wholly restore myself to the next wind of your noble Common. Believe me, sire, gratefully, BRIGNOLI."

The promises for the week are the debut of Madame Hetfhen-Steheller, at Winter Garden, in Lucia's "Wedding;" an operatic début at Niblo's, and the appearance of Edwin Booth, at Niblo's, in the character of Richard III. Booth is a son of Junius Booth, and the combination by Mrs. Wood of "Lady Teazle" and "Richard" seems a promise still more attractive.

Mrs. Henry C. Watson, whose poetic readings and vocal illustrations are the first time, at Thursday next, to entertain the ladies of Brooklyn. A large order of the 31st, at Dodworth's Hall. If a high order of talent, and moderate and modest pretensions, combined with great personal charms, can make a success, Mrs. Watson's success will be a matter of course.

Wallack will be another week more, now in Niblo, New York is to have two more theatres, the Fifth Avenue and the one under Niblo's. The Fifth Avenue is to be located on the corner of Fifth avenue and Central Park, and not above 60th street, while the other is between 30th and 40th Fifth Avenue, or Broadway, and 7th or 8th Avenue streets. The superintendence of the latter will fall to Mr. Wallack, and that of the first will fall to Mr. Lester Wallack, the favorite Alleyn. Those upon the Rosaries, of the above companies, and will please are to be on the stock companies, and will not be twice larger than anything in the line in country, or in the world.

While the stock gambling and dealings of New York of a day are to be running through all kinds of bible and prayer meetings, we have a proviso on to some of could it not be well to consider the matter for the benefit of those whose time will be sometimes for the infamous system of fine stuffing no e carried on? Let there be a law that no person shall be allowed to be more than one hour by such a conveyance, number it would send a return of the company to keep on constantly. Or, if they may be allowed to take more cars, that they may be allowed to stand up to the last moment, and discuss a matter. The on with what they intended nuisance, but we much fear nothing will be done to stop it until the strong hand of the law seizes it.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic—In consequence of the scarcity of cotton a new crop is to be issued in value of two cents. It will be composed of copper, zinc and tin.

——There were 3,617 emigrants landed at this port last week, which makes the number landed since January 1, 18,857. The number who arrived here in the corresponding period of 1863 was 8,000 more. There is a commutation balance at present in the bank of $53,386 90.

——The Metropolitan Railway Company has applied to the Legislature for the privilege of building on Broadway and run a line of railroad from the Bowling Green to the Central Park.

——Gov. Evans, of Colorado has issued a proclamation calling a Constitutional Convention for the Territory of Colorado.

——The Democratic Convention of Ohio, to name delegates to the Chicago Convention, meets, and seems to have been a struggle between the Vallandigham and the other factions, the latter having as close as 211 to 212. George E. Pugh and W. Burley were nominated for delegates at large. Every ticket was got up to be defeated in October.

——A Washington correspondent of the says that the friends of Gov. Johnson here confidently expect his nomination by the Democratic Convention at Chicago, and will run the ticket with President Lincoln.

——The 22d Union Convention of New York, to select delegates to the National Convention, is to be held on the 25th of May. Each Assembly district will be entitled to eight delegates.

——The census for 1860 and 1863 of the State of Massachusetts shows that the total voting population in 1860, 676,676; in 1863, 702,162—increase, 27,515. In 1860 there were 1,000 males to 1,000 females; 1,000 married persons. In 1863 there were 954,661 white males. 941,151 females; 1,229 free blacks, 1,229 females; 1,000 enrolled militia.

——The schedule spotted fever at Long Branch, where the Legislature of 37 pass all the time. It is believed to be caused by bad food, poisonous rye coffee, and badcompany. Many cases have occurred this week.

——Gold has raised during the week from 161 to 167.

——The exhibition of the Sophomore Class, held at the Academy of Music on Thursday evening, March 24th, in aid of the Sanitary Commission, passed off with the greatest eclat. It was attended by the élite of the city. The presidential address, by Mr. Wm. Wallace, was read by Mr. Thomas Amos, who, the most worthy of notice, were: Edward A. Pidge, who gave Mary Clyde's "Appeal in Behalf of Negro;" was the declamation of "Flogging in" Edward Hicksville. Charles H. Ribbord spoke an oration on "Our Future," with great effect. Mr. Hamilton Aidé very spirited and natural. Edward Sandford "Ballad of Valley Forge," by Henry B. Carr, and Richard Fritchley, by Henry D. Knowles, were both well declared. Rear Gordon, jr., who spoke the closing address, "The Genius of Columbia," did so with admirable force and discretion, and well deserved the encomiums lavished upon him. The music which was selected was warmly applauded. We must not forget to enter our protest against such terrible trash as the oration on the "Progress of Civilization," to be found on the "Dials" must have been written by the literary citizen, who sells penny catalogue copies in the Park.

Western.—Kit Carson was at Santa Fe in excellent health. No complaints against the Navajoes had ended. Nearly 8,000 Indians had been captured, and submitted to being placed on the reservation established by Gen. Carleton.

A party of 40 influential Mexicans left the Canejos country, with a Navajoe woman as guide, who reported that her people had sold so plenty that they make bullets of it.

Our Western exchanges say that the conflict between guerrillas and citizens is being conducted with great bitterness. Mr. Chase's friends are indignant at Secretary Chase's having in being a candidate for the Presidency; and Mr. Lincoln's friends declaring that Mr. Chase is a traitor, and no radical is eligible to be a vice President. McClellan's stock is looking up, and so is Gen. Fremont.

Military.—The 1st New York Engineer regiment, under command of Col. E. W. Serrell, arrived in this city on the 23d March, on board the steamer Aragon, from Hilton Head. The regiment numbers 940 men, all of whom have re-enlisted, and return to their homes on furlough. They were received by the city authorities, and escorted by the 7th regimental, N. Y. S. N. G., to the Fifth-ave. Market building, where a substantial collation had been provided for them. Alderman Hall delivered an address of welcome, and Col. Serrell replied in a patriotic and earnest speech, which was enthusiastically cheered by the men.

In a recent speech at St. Louis, Gen. Rosecrans said, that the day before the battle of Chicamauga he rode right to Gen. Halleck to know if any rebel troops had been sent to reinforce Bragg, and that his instructions had been sent from Lee's army except a few regiments St. Clair sent over the river that when Longstreet's entire corps of 20,000 men had left Virginia, Halleck was that Rosecrans, with 56,000 men, had to meet Bragg's 43,000.

Private Abernathy, of Sussex county, New Jersey, has 400 votes; he has sent 130 more to fight for the Union, has served out their pay at all, and now has raised $225 for the benefit of the Sanitary Commission.

The Norfolk Argus says that the Government has a contract with John Minor Botts to furnish the corps of the Army of the Potomac with wood. The soldiers are cutting and hauling it themselves. It furnishes 3,000 cords a month at $8 a cord.

Naval.—The rebel pirate steamer Florida put in at Funchal, Madeira, on the 26th of February, in a disabled and provisioned, and, being ordered off, she put to sea the next day. The U. S. sloop-of-war St. Louis was at Funchal at the same time.

The Monitors have been launched at Boston with success.

The Attorney General of England has given it as his opinion that the rebel vessels of war have as much right to enter British ports for contraband of war as traders; ports as the Federal ships of war. This opinion he forms on the Queen's proclamation of neutrality, and on reading the Declaration of Paris.

Personal.—The immense order for figures said to have been given by Mr. Frank Blair last summer, and which was so widely published, was the occasion of a collision on the 2d ult. in the U. S. Senate, in debate between him and Mr. McClurg, of Missouri. Mr. McClurg denounced the order Mr. Blair, in rejoinder to his stout denial of over having issued it made bold to say with such directness and severity, Mr. Blair exploded with rage and denounced Mr. McClurg as a contemptible liar, forger and scoundrel!

Recent private letters from Richmond report that Jeff. Davis has become a gloomy ascetic; he has ordered every guard Day for the 22d of April, the same to be rigidly observed in the army. Mrs. Davis spends much of her time in the parlor, denouncing the loss of her comforts and friends. The greatest discontent exists among the people of Richmond, and the city abounds with spies. The investigation into the treason of Secretary Spratt also was suddenly hushed up, on account of its unpleasant revelations.

Mr. John W. Wallace, of Philadelphia, has been appointed reporter of the decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court, and goes to Washington immediately. Mr. Wallace's reputation as a writer and reporter is well known.

Rev. Dr. Bellows has accepted an invitation to fill the pulpit of the late Rev. Dr. Starr King, in San Francisco, temporarily.

Jackson, Mr. Davis's colored coachman, is lecturing in Portland, Maine. There is another colored preacher in England doing business on the same prelect.

It was denied some time since that Mrs. Douglas was acting as a clerk in the Treasury Department. The Washington correspondent of the Milwaukee Wisconsin says, however, that she goes through the Treasury Department the other day; and Mrs. Judge Douglas, who is filling the duties of a $1,200 clerkship in that department.?

Obituary.—The King of Sweden died on March 8th, on the 11th March, of erysipelas, after only a few days illness, Mr. Field. He is succeeded by his son, Ludwig, now in his 19th year.

Mr. John B. Smith, favorably known as a scenic painter, and as one of the best artists in perspective drawing among the many theatrical painters in this city, died in Philadelphia last week.

Dr. John Redmond Coxe, of Philadelphia, Professor of Chemistry in the Pennsylvania University, died a few days since, aged 91.

Mr. Henry Campbell died at Hackensack, New Jersey, on the 11th ult., at the advanced age of 92 years. Campbell was a merchant in New York, and lived long in eventful times. Washington made his headquarters at Mr. Campbell's country house. The deceased was then a little boy. In after life he had a visit to the Father of his Country at Mount Vernon. He was on intimate visiting terms with both Hamilton and Burr; and when the latter was hunted by the officers of law, after his fatal duel, Col. Burr secreted himself in the house of Mr. Campbell in Hackensack, where he was received and cared for, with the full time Mr. Campbell's brother who was Attorney-General for the State of New Jersey, at once came in Hackensack, would have given $5,000 for Burr's arrest. Mr. Campbell never spoke of it till 9 years had elapsed, after the former friendship is seldom seen. With brilliant parts and a recorder memory to the last. Mr. Campbell was a most interesting and entertaining man. He had a home here with many other noble traits of character. He leaves multitudes of friends in tears at his departure.

John Short, a son-in-law of Gen. Harrison, and one of the most eminent citizens of Hamilton county, Ohio, died on the 3d ult., at his residence, near North Bend.

Capt. Isaiah Sellers, a pioneer pilot on the Mississippi river, died at Memphis last week. He ran steamers on that river 40 years ago, in the infancy of steam navigation, and everybody who travelled West knew him.

Joshua Dewey, the oldest graduate of Yale College, died at Watertown, N. Y., on the 30th ult. He was nearly 97 years of age, and graduated in 1787. Mr. Dewey was James Fenimore Cooper's tutor.

Thomas Mills, the oldest pioneer West, died in Kentucky, opposite North Bend, on the 26th ult. He was born on Long Island, N. Y., in 1766. He went to the West in 1795. At that time there was not a single settlement in the State of Ohio.

Charles W. March, a gentleman well known in literary circles in New York, died at Alexandria, Egypt, on the 26th of January, aged 67 years.

Johnny McKay, the prizefighter, and famous among sporting men as the second of Heenan in his fight with Morrissey, and who was backer of Hammill, the champion oarsman, was killed a few days since at Wesson, Ohio, by being struck with a pick-axe, while engaged on a coal barge plying between Pittsburg and Cincinnati.

Accidents and Offences.—An inquest was held upon the body of a little boy aged five years, who died through the inhuman treatment of his step-mother, Mr. and Mrs. Bowman, 457 West 46th street. A verdict in accordance with the facts was given, declaring a series of fiendish cruelties.

A target-shooting match and battery was tried on the 22d, in which Blaine M. Chesebrough, of Brooklyn, and Frederick Schmidt, of Williamsburg, living in East 17th street, figured as the defendant. The complainant's name is Jacob Hertz, a German, and the defendant came home one night at a very late hour, and told her to make room for the prisoners. The plaintiff refused to comply with the request, when the defendant ordered her to leave the house forthwith. She packed up her bundle and was about leaving, when the defendant struck her a blow. The defendant was assaulted because she would not allow the prisoners to be quartered. She was put under a general denial of the allegations set forth in the complaint, and evidence was produced on the part of the prosecution that Mary was laboring under the influence of liquor that evening, but the jury gave a verdict of $100.

There was a destructive fire in the rear of Nos. 215 and 217 West 36th street, March 29, the printworks of Carrington & Snyder being destroyed. Other property was injured, and about 30 families were turned out of house and home. The entire loss is over $200,000.

At Memphis, a few days ago, a block of 20 buildings, used for cotton purposes, was burned, fell in, burying in the ruins a large number of persons. Four persons were killed outright, and eight children have been dug out.

The large and well-filled jewelry and watch shop of Albright & Stropp, at Mauch Chunk, Pa., was entered on the night of last week, and $6,000, on which there is an insurance of $12,000. The large watercase of Albright is left in disdain, and valued at $1,000.

Thomas McGown, while engaged in a quarrel with Patrick Gallagher, in a liquor saloon in Jersey, the forehead with a piece of plate glass, inflicting a wound which he died on March 25. Brennan fled and has not been arrested.

Foreign.—A large number of German soldiers, on their way from Prussia to Schleswig, fell in, burying in the ruins a large number of persons. Four persons were killed outright, and eight children have been dug out.

The Austro-Prussian troops have advanced from Jutland to Fredericia, and communication between them and the Danes have taken place, in which the Prussians are operating against the fortress of Fredericia. The Danish forces have marched northward, and occupied the towns of Veile and Horsens.

An official notification states that from the 15th to the 18th inst. the Danish Government steamers Dagfreiwand, Stralsund and Barth will be blockaded by the Prussians.

The Stuligart, of Stockholm, asserts that Sweden has unofficially informed Russia that she will men to operate against Sweden, in the event of the latter State declaring war against the Russian Czar.

The Cabinet of Vienna has, it is said, issued a circular, protesting against the annexation of any part in a conference and consent to an armistice with Denmark, and declaring that the Federal troops of Austria will retire from Jutland if the Danes will evacuate Duppel and Alsen, and withdraw their armed ships, and will restore all the prize which they may have made.

The christening of the infant son of the Prince and Princess of Wales took place, with considerable court ceremony, at Windsor Castle, on the 25th of March, the anniversary of the wedding-day. Queen Victoria acted as sponsor for the infant, along with the prince Albert Victor Christian Edward.

The Academy of Sciences has memorial view of the political position of England. There is, it says, a commercial as well as a political party in England that would we are not only not shut out, but are besought to supply the wants of the Southern States. But can it be wondered at that England avoids association with members of a race, which, when it was stood aside 89 years ago and allowed Spain to be inhabited by a people of the highest order, and to preserves punished by civil war, revolution, and eternal colonial degradation.

It is said that Queen Victoria, in the exercise of the royal prerogative of war or peace-making, has many secret letters in her possession, which, should that no events shall force her to declare war against her own children and relatives, the publication of which it is said, the English Parliamentary debates avoid a declaration in favor of the Southern States.

Chit-Chat.—The Herald says that the love of gambling is not confined to the Southern States. Parlor wearers of crinolines now divide their susceptible hearts between the passion for gaming and the more fashion and mammon. It is another proof of the tendency of the times to "go it while you're young."

Considerable merriment has been created in Boston by a practical joke played upon a certain gentleman's wife by mistake last week. A gentleman having called at a house in Pinckney st. to fix a water-fall solace while he was waiting for her. All of a sudden the door of the room opened, and a female form wrapped in a shawl got in. The gentleman merely looked at the intruder, and, as the latter remained for about 20 minutes, the gentleman was roused by the lady saying to him, "Now, you may go, my husband's coming up to—he is going to Georgetown!" The gentleman was astonished at this, and remarked that there is a mistake; you are not my wife." The coach man was then called, and informed that he should not have taken the carriage for her husband's, and after depositing the gentleman at his own house, he drove back in time to get his real wife.

West Alexander, in West Virginia, is the Union town which was burned by the rebels. The town May has married nearly 100 couple, and since the rebellion has veteran soldiers. Another town, Fairmont, recently, that J. C. Breckenridge is erecting a block of houses in Meridan. And yet the Copperheads grumble about a want of "toleration."

Perley Vallendigham, a "youth to fortune and to fame unknown," but nevertheless a member of the great Ohio martyr, is married to and lives with a negro woman in Muscatine, Iowa, according to the Journal of that place. His brother, living on the opposite side of the river, is also married to a negress.

Mrs. White, of Alabama, sister of Mrs. Lincoln, has reached Selma, Ala., having smuggled through a rebel uniform, the buttons of which were of gold, worth $40,000.

Mr. La Bourne (a dentist) recommends brushing the teeth with vinegar daily, till the tartar disappears; after that use a powder of charcoal and tincture of rhatany, which will preserve his reverence.

The Springfield Union says that George Thompson intends making this country his home. His residence will be in Boston.

THE BRIDAL MORN.

BY ADA VROMAN.

Lo! in the East the radiant morn
Steals softly through the lattice, and the sun,
And down among the golden corn
The larks wake one by one.

Sweet twittrings break the misty calm,
And odorous buds unfurl in dew;
And fairer far than earth's gay balm
To Arab's eager view,

Upspring the lilies, tall and pale,
To blush at sight of lovers' eyes;
And amorous trills from yonder vale
Float through the trees to the skies.

Sweet day! I watch thy dawning hare
With rapture's sweet prophetic zest;
Oh! golden sun, thy dying rays
Will see me doubly blest.

My lily waits, with blushing cheek,
For her bridal sun to meet her eyes;
And fairer far than lily weak,
She stands in bridal guise.

She comes, with all her hopes and fears,
Clad in the calm of maiden life,
And brings her offering of smiles and tears
To dower the faithful wife.

Sweet dawn and day! Sweet noon and night!
Sweet stars that deck the bridal sky!
Ye come to witness the delight
That waits on constancy.

For us no more shall love's alarms
Raise tumults in each happy breast,
But havened in each other's arms,
We find our perfect rest.

HON. E. W. GANTT,

Lately a Brigadier-General in the Rebel Army.

HON. E. W. GANTT was born in Hickman county, Tenn., on the 17th March, 1822. His father removed from Tennessee, and settled in Prince George's county, Maryland, being among the first settlers in that State. His father was an officer in the war of 1812, and died a few years since. He subsequently emigrated to Tennessee.

The relatives of the subject of this notice were Southern people, and whether on both sides, his father being from Maryland and his mother from North Carolina, he was educated at Cumberland, Tenn., county, Tenn., for the profession of law, and at the age of 19 was admitted to the bar. He removed to Arkansas in 1846, and immediately entered upon the practice of his profession, doing a large business. In 1849 he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of the Sixth Judicial District of Arkansas, which office he held for four years, during a portion of the State. His popularity and promise were rewarded by the Whig party, and settled in Prince in 1853 by the Democratic party, and settled in Prince George's county, Maryland, being among the first George's county, Maryland, being among the first settlers in that State. His father was an officer in the war of 1812, and died a few years since. He subsequently emigrated to Tennessee.

The relatives of the subject of this notice were Southern people, and whether on both sides, his father being from Maryland and his mother from North Carolina, he was educated at Cumberland, Tenn., county, Tenn., for the profession of law, and at the age of 19 was admitted to the bar. He removed to Arkansas in 1846, and immediately entered upon the practice of his profession, doing a large business. In 1849 he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of the Sixth Judicial District of Arkansas, which office he held for four years, during a portion of the State. His popularity and promise were rewarded by the Whig party, and settled in Prince in immense majorities, and only gave up the office when, in 1853, he was elected to the Thirty-first Congress, after a bitter contest against the old politicians of the State.

He was the first man in Arkansas to advocate the doctrine of Squatter Sovereignty, Protection slavery in the Territories" which subsequently became enunciated into the Cincinnati platform, and after years into the platform of the Southern wing of the Democratic party.

From the age of 17 to 22 Mr. Gantt wrote many pieces of poetry, which were widely circulated; and when in 1850, he became a candidate for Congress, Mr. George P. Smith, editor of the Fayetteville Arkansas, said of him: "We have known Mr. Gantt principally as a poet. We have seen some beautiful and touching specimens of poetry from the mountains of Arkansas, from his pen. We have seen him wield the political rapier, like beautiful singing-birds from the bosom of the forest, and we have seen him ardent and mercurial politics of Arkansas. We hope Mr. G. will be the first to give the people of Arkansas a speech that would have a tendency to temper the dark and vulgar passions of the times."

After Mr. Gantt's election he made a canvass for Governor, and, although he was defeated, he compelled the formation of a Government for the protection of negro slavery that neither the Federal Constitution or new guarantees could save slavery in the Union.

In the commencement of hostilities he joined the 1st regiment of Arkansas Volunteers of the Confederate regiment. He was a Columbus at the Belmont, Mo., and commanded the 1st Arkansas brigade division, on the east shore, where the main attack was anticipated. He was wounded in the hip by the explosion of a shell.

Gen. Gantt, Jeff Thompson at New Madrid, in January, 1862, and assumed command when Gen. Pope advanced upon that place; he wrote to Gen. Polk, to assert him there, that he did not intend to surrender the city to the horror of the terrible shelling of Pope's evacuation. He was second in command at Island No. 10, was then surrendered by Gen. Mackall, and was sent to Fort Warren, where he remained a prisoner of war for some months subsequently. His history is known to the country.

Gen. Gantt is a native of North Carolina, whose father is now a resident of Arkansas, and a large slaveholder.

FIGHT WITH A CROCODILE.

I NEED scarcely tell my readers that the most dreaded inhabitant of the water is the crocodile. Any person in proximity to the water is in danger of attack. It he stoops to fill a dipper, the bubbling sound is sure to draw half a dozen crocodiles at once to him. To escape the danger thus incurred, a calabash bowl, with a handle six feet in length, is gyserally employed, and even this is frequently snatched from the hand of the water carrier.

But, in spite of the well-known and terrible characteristics of this dreaded king of the water, there are plenty of men who do not hesitate to meet and encounter him in his own element. Those engaging in it are well aware of the contest in which one of the combatants at least must die. It is impossible for both to escape, or for a "draw battle" to take place. The crocodile never yields the contest as long as he has the ability to struggle, and the amount of human enemy turns his back to flee, that moment is his last.

About 20 years since I was making a journey in the northern part of South America, in company with a Llanero, on business of the utmost haste. A few days miles from our destination, word reached us that the wife of our comrade lay at the point of death, and he was urged to hasten by all possible haste. We once struck our weariest horses to a rapid gallop, and a half hour before sunset we came upon a small river, across which it was necessary to cross. Unfortunately, the ferryman was at a considerable distance with his canoe, and the Llanero was impatient to cross.

"I will not wait for him!" he said at last; "he is at no spot to hurry up, while my poor wife is dying. I will swim across."

"Remember the danger," said I, "from the crocodiles."

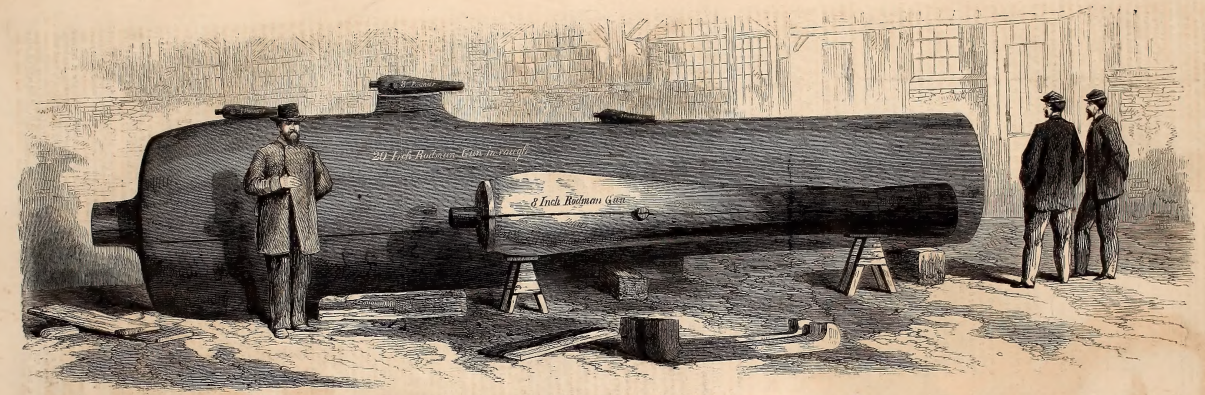
He did not reply, but removed his heavy equipments, threw himself into the water, and he then loosed the saddle of his horse, so that it merely floated behind him. Having prepared his animal for the work, he struck out boldly, with a proper condition. This consisted in stripping himself entirely to the waist, that he might be placed his right between his teeth, and plunged into the river. His faithful beast instantly followed, and the two swam together, the Llanero using his right hand to guide that the horse should run no danger from the monsters. The crocodile came from the bank, but the animal distinct morsel, and at such times invariable makes for the man, attacking the horse only when no other prey is offered.

The Llanero certainly was not more than one-fourth the distance across the river when we both saw the monster come to the surface, near the centre, and make at once towards the approaching man and beast.

The Llanero caught sight of the crocodile at the same moment, and, drawing his knife between his teeth, he made at once towards him. As the two combatants swiftly approached, we watched them with the greatest possible interest. The man, fully aware that he could slay the monster only by stabbing just beneath the eye, and knowing too that this could not be accomplished unless he sank him spring out of the water, exerted his cunning to compel the crocodile to do this.

We saw the Llanero, when a few yards distant from his foe, reach his left hand backward, and place it upon the crupper of his horse then dipping his dagger in his right hand; when six feet or so distant, and on the monster's right side, he made a feint to plunge the side into the air, so that it bid fair to fall directly upon the head of the assailant. Supposing it some covered movement, the crocodile made a lunge of the water, and caught it in his extended jaws. This was the moment anticipated; quick as lightning the Llanero plunged his dagger to the hilt in the monster's vitals. A spasmodic grunt, a loud splash, a few struggles, and the monster sank to the bottom, to rise never to rise again!

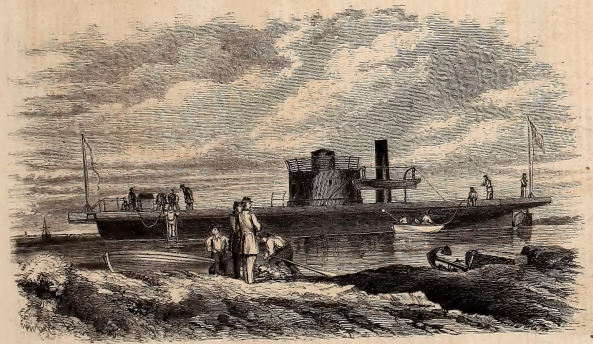
Full of admiration at this achievement, the ferryman hoisted upon the Llanero entering his canoe, and staying to dinner with him; but the brave man refused all refreshment, and, remounting the opposite side, mounted his horse, and hastened onward. He had not half said, that one of the gallant man was found much better than he had reason to expect, and eventually recovered from her illness.



ANCIENT ESTATES.—We find the following facts in a recent number of an English periodical: The interesting and often-quoted statements made some time since by Mr. Robert Patterson, concerning the uninterrupted descent for nearly eight centuries, from father to son, of a small estate in the Irish neighborhood in the N w Forest, relates, as well-known, to the family of Mr. Gulston, of Ballykisteen, brought up the body of William Rufus, and carried it in his arms from the place where he fell to the last sad rites. But we one piece upon record a case of still more remarkable length of time, and one, moreover in no way allied to rank and fortune, and who have, therefore, no motive for falsifying their family. We believe, they have never fallen below it. A certain family, that of Mr. Cheverton, of Thorpe, near Chertsey, still resides a farmer of the estate, which, from the earliest period of which written a break upon the same spot ever since the reign of Edward the Confessor, by whom the land was given to Reginald Wasshier. There are several families in England who can trace a long line of ancestry—who can trace their names and possessions in a direct line from generation to the Saxon times; but how rare we are not aware of a more striking instance of long descent among change than the past history of the Wapshots.

AN ECCENTRIC PHYSICIAN.—A friend relates to us the following anecdote of the eccentricities of a skilful physician, Dr. M——, who is still practising in Rhode Island. He had a way of doing things all his own, and was not to be imposed upon. Once he would come out!" On one occasion he was called to visit a patient living several miles distant, upon a young man living in the country. Arriving there, he found the usual number of sympathizing friends, Physicians and others, who had come from curiosity to witness the operation, or from interest in the case. He was essentially furnished, and other evidences of the poverty of the family. Dr. M—— examined the case carefully, and then asked the mother—widow—was ready to pay the $50 which he charged for his visit. She replied that she had not present, but would do so as soon as possible. The doctor then remarked that he would not leave him a bill, would do nothing until the money was paid, and asked them if they would come up the same evening. She was soon done, but not without many condemnations from the bystanders, who thought he was paid no attention to the remarks, but immediately went on with the operation, which he performed successfully. As soon as it was over, he stepped up to the mother, and remarked, "I have now performed the operation for which I agreed, and stipped the $50 into her hand, and was about to leave the house, when he found a number of those who had just been denouncing him as a grasping miser.

SUNDRY people gain a livelihood by writing on glass. Trying they must indulge in a very public style of advertising.



GENTLE READER.—If you have a remarkably strong constitution, you may the read following: if not, we beg of you to pass it over. If vulgar make a man ill, will a charcoal make a manilla?

"YOU'RE always trying to make game of people, and ain't able to do it," as the sparrow said to the cockney sportsman.

Major Rodman.

OUR MAMMOTH CANNON—HER 20 INCH RODMAN GUN RECENTLY CAST AT FORT PITT FOUNDRY.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.—SEE PAGE 39.

BEACHING A MONITOR.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.—SEE PAGE 39.

THE NEW BARRIES ON FOLLY ISLAND.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

TWO.

BY ETTA W. PIERCE.

MELLOW and faint the lamplight falls
Across the pillows of misty lace,
And, cleaving the curtain's snow-white fold,
Lazily droop the tassels of gold
Over Maud's sleeping face.

Here is a ruby, as red as blood,
Flung from her tresses an hour ago;
And her lilies crushed on the tufted floor,
With the spice of the tropics running o'er
Their beautiful cups of snow.

Hist! and the ballroom odors fall
From her satins there in still repose;
And the slumberous air is haunted yet
By a tender scent of mignonette
And the musk of a dying rose.

The wind goes sobbing across the pane,
The dead vines rattle upon the wall;
Do you hear it, as you lie here, sweet,
Stilly and white from head to feet,
Dreaming about the ball?

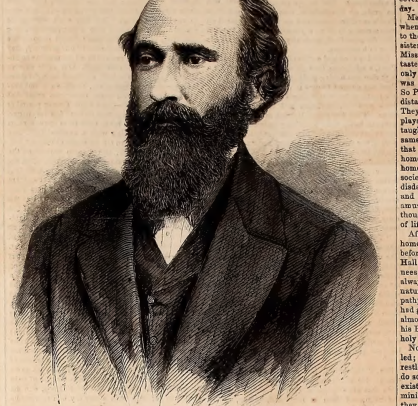
Oh, the grand saloon, with its thousand lights,
The sweeping of silk through the open doors!
And the dancers' feet, as they flashed along,
Tinkling to measures of mystic song,
Over the marble floors.

That subtle perfume of gorgeous flowers,
Stirring the warm air, faint and slow;
And the lustres that burned through the purple dusk
Of the dim recesses, o'errun with musk
From the Indian urns below.

The soft, clear call of the dreamy lutes,
And oh, a voice that was sweeter still!
Filling her ear, and the face bent near,
With the tropical dark of the eyes so dear,
In a pause of the gay quadrille.

And the bold lips, redder than Southern wine,
Dropping their lovewords downlike pearls;
And the beautiful shame, the sweet surprise,
In the glow of her cheek, in the dusk of her eyes,
Through her falls of yellow curls.

Oh, what a night of nights for you,
Dainty Maud, 'mid the laces fine!
Sleep, and dream of that splendid room,
And life kissed into its Maytime bloom
By the lips like Southern wine!



Sleep, and dream of that splendid room,
Not of this dark, or its cold, sad tears;
For an hour ago you won, my sweet,
The crown of your womanhood all complete,
Beneath those chandeliers.

The curtain is down across the way,
But a face at the lattice, still and white,
Is looking abroad on the steady beat
Of wind and rain up the lonesome street:
She will not sleep to-night.

But, by the gold in her half-loosed hair,
She has danced at the revel, too, I trow;
She has danced at the revel, and brought away
Lips so pallid they cannot pray,
And the wraith of a broken vow.

What! a watcher here in the dark and cold,
Waiting so still for the mild gray east
To glow with the dawn? Ah, Maud, did you know,
In the grand saloon, but an hour ago,
That a skeleton sat at the feast?

And did you know how the violets grew
In the meadows only the last, last June;
And the words they heard when your lover pressed
Those half-loosed tresses against his breast,
Under the wild, white moon?

HON. E. W. GANTT, LATELY BRIGADIER-GENERAL IN THE REBEL ARMY.—SEE PAGE 35.

A letter, a ring, and a leaf once hid
Twixt the leaves of an old romance: they lay
There on the sill, pretty trifles and vain.
Oh, the hungry pain, oh, the passionate pain,
That could not be danced away!

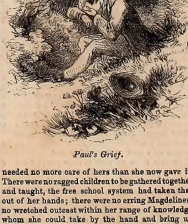
Hush! The haggard stars are plunging deep
In the watery clouds, and the moon is down,
And the wizard sleet is stabbing the night
Through and through, with its spears so white,
Out in the dismal town.

Let those weep who have need of tears,
The happy may rest, for the world is wise;
But, beautiful Maud, when you meet his kiss,
Take heed that you see no ghost of this
In the dark of your lover's eyes!

PAUL REVERE.

By Miriam Earle.

"I AM sorry this Philip Gordon is coming here, Madeline; all our comfort will be spoiled. Our morning readings, our evening music, our afternoon rambles our pleasant moments will all have to be given up, I suppose, for as your guest he will claim your first attention, and what will a prosaic lawyer care for these things?"



They were standing by the library window, Madeline Berford and Paul Revere. He, with his slight, graceful figure, fair hair and skin, and a boyish eagerness and truthfulness in the blue eyes turned wistfully upon her face; and she, with a height almost equal to his, with one hand raised and resting lightly on his shoulder, gazing dreamily out on the lawn. Her face was too pale, her eyebrows too straight, her mouth too large for beauty, but there was a depth, a magnetism, in her soft, dark eyes, a charm in every movement, that attracted far more than mere regularity of feature could have done; while the curve of the short, upper lip, the broad forehead, shaded by braids of dark brown hair, and the erect carriage of the finely-formed head showed a latent strength of mind and purpose which, though unnoticed, unsalled into action in her quiet life, still inspired all her actions.

It was their favorite spot, this deep bay window, shaded without by graceful festoons of running vines, and adorned within by one or two pencil sketches by Madeline's own hand, soft cushions of crimson and gold, and a low chair for Madeline, because she preferred it to the window seat itself. The heavy crimson curtains that separated the window from the library were swept aside, revealing the antique bookshelves filled with choice selections, rare old pictures—for Mr. Berford had been something of an art connoisseur—Madeline's open piano and music-stand, the easy-chairs and velvet lounge, draped like the window in gold and crimson, all covered with the soft, clear light of a bright May-day.

Madeline was an orphan. Both parents had died when she was quite young, and she had been left to the care of a maiden aunt, her father's only sister, and almost his only relative. The elder Miss Berford was somewhat aristocratic in her tastes and prejudices, and the Reveres were the only family in the neighborhood with whom she was at all familiar or permitted Madeline to be. So Paul and his sister, now married and living in a distant State, had been almost her only companions. They had grown up together, played the same plays, shared the same joys and sorrows, been taught by the same governess, and finished by the same tutor, for Mr. Berford had specially provided that Madeline's education should be conducted at home, and Paul could never be induced to leave home long enough to go to college. And in this society the gentle boy had grown still more gentle, disdaining any pleasures the girls could not share, and so their days passed on in a quiet round of amusements and vague castle-building, with many thoughts but few deeds towards the higher purposes of life.

After Paul's sister married and removed from home, he and Madeline were more inseparable than before, and a day that did not find him at Berford Hall would have been a strange event. Her firmness, quiet perseverance and calmness of character always controlled his more sanguine, excitable nature, and as she always gave him the fullest sympathy in all his plans and vague speculations, he had grown to look up to her with a feeling that almost amounted to reverence. She was his Hertha, his Psyche; to him she was all that was beautiful, holy and noble.

Not that Madeline was satisfied with the life she led; she tired of it every day. There was that restless longing that all true natures must feel to do something, to do some one good, to put this existence to some use other than the selfish one of ministering to one's own pleasure alone; to know they were not like the helpless reed, borne along by the current, of no account there and never missed when gone. But what should she do? Her own home was as happy and pleasant as could be, and needed no more care of hers than she now gave it. There were no ragged children to be gathered together and taught, the free school system had taken that out of her hands; there were no erring Magdelines, no wretched outcast within her range of knowledge whom she could take by the hand and bring up from this dark standing to the light and air that purified the plane of their fellow-beings. No, they were all such commonplace sinners, such every-day evils, entrenched behind the broad mantle of common usage, that she was powerless to attack them; and what was to be done? Could she only have gone out into the great world and turned out an Elizabeth Fry or a Florence Nightingale, she would willingly have endured all their hardships, made just as many sacrifices, if she gave utterance to her desires, from her aunt she received a long lecture on the sin of discontent, and Paul would go off into such a burst of enthusiasm as to the great things they would accomplish, that his very extravagance silenced her more effectually than all the obstacles that could have been placed before her. And yet she was very happy. How could it be otherwise, surrounded by beauty and luxury, all that a refined taste could demand, a loving heart ask, even to that which should be the crowning blessing of a life—the entire love and consecration of one worthy heart.

Paul's Grief.

A year before, when the starry clusters of violets were looking up from their low beds, and the warm wind breathed a passion as tender as the words he spoke, Paul told her of his love. He pictured his arid, desolate life if they were separated; and then in glowing words told of the great deeds he could perform if she would be his inspiration—of the beautiful future he would create if she were by his side, and she, not at all moved by his eloquence, but knowing no deeper sentiment than her affection for him, never dreaming there could be a more powerful one, quietly laid her hands in his, and said calmly, "I love you, Paul, I will be your wife." And so they were betrothed, and everything went on just the same. Indeed it would have been impossible for him to have spent much more time with her, to have been much more attentive and lover-like than before. Her property had been left in care of this Philip Gordon, the son of her father's dearest friend, then just commencing the profession that had since brought him wealth and fame. She was to come into full possession at twenty, and as that time had nearly arrived, he had written that he would be there at that time, prepared to settle all accounts; and as he had business that way, he would probably stay a few days in the neighborhood, and hoped to become better acquainted with his ward. Of course he had been invited to make her home his home during his stay, and after a deliberation he had accepted the invitation, setting the last week of May as the time he might be expected. Madeline had never seen him but once, but she remembered him vaguely as connected with her father's death and funeral; and though she had, of course, a little curiosity to see what he was like, otherwise thought little about him. Paul, never thinking of him as a rival, her guardian and old enough to have been so for ten years, yet had a vague feeling that in some way he was to interfere with his happiness, that Providence had sent him to stand by the widow's bed, and, smoothing the slender fingers with his own, said calmly

Madeline and Gordon on the Lake.

"What is it ma-belle—can I help you?"

She turned round facing him, her eyes flashing earnestly.

"I was thinking of him—of this man—of what a succession of stiggles and exercises his life has been. He cares for nothing but a pair of stout hands, a brave heart and a firm will, and now he stands among the heads of his profession. He was admitted to the bar the day I was born, and that is the way my father found him—for he had lost all trace of the only son of his dearest friend soon after his death, and his leaving my property in his care was almost his first business. But what a grand life has been his; fixing his eyes steadily on the landmark ahead, he struggled toward it, unmindful of the temptations at his feet, till he has reached it. Oh, how puny, how unmeasurably selfish are our lives, Paul, in comparison, spending our time in careless over the moments that should be filled with action, wasting the golden opportunities for good that are so gladly sought so carefully. Do you not tire of it even as I do? Can we not do better, Paul?"

He caught the enthusiasm from her sparkling face.

"You shall see what I can do, Madeline," he said, eagerly. "I am a man. I will work for both of us; you shall be proud of me, Madeline; I will go out into the great world, and it shall yield beautiful things to me from its many stores, and when I shall have made a name, I shall come back to claim you, Madeline, for you will be my inspiration and your hand my reward."

She smiled sadly; she knew so well that he would accomplish—nothing, and answered him gently:

"There is much we might do if we would; but, alas, we are mere day-dreamers."

"Day-dreamers, Madeline, that is the word, you have given me it; I shall be the title of my book, and that will be wild, Utopian, bringing fame, doing good from its very originality. But I read a beautiful poem to-day that only this morning, let me read it to you."

He took up a book on the window-seat.

"I brought it to use purpose to show you; let me place your chair here where the light will fall just right on the page; there that will do now."

So his high-handedness always ended in a new dream. She sat down, and he, drawing a cushion to her feet, curled upon it like the petted child he was, and commenced the book. He was still reading when Mr. Gordon came. In the interest of the story his existence had been forgotten till they heard Miss Gordon's words of welcome. A tall, well-made man, with high features, raven hair sweeping squarely across a broad forehead, a pair of dark, irridescent eyes, rich and mouth well set off with beard and moustache, and a manly, self-control air, but neither handsome or graceful, stood before them as she hurried out to the parlor door. He came forward as he entered, and without waiting for the introduction her aunt was about to give, took both her hands cordially.

"And this is my little friend, Madeline, that was," said he, warmly; "you have grown some, but, otherwise, not changed enough so but that I would have known you anywhere."

Somehow the clear ring of his deep voice smote painfully on Paul's ears, but it might have been caused by the embarrassment at the sight of him, for forgetting if Madeline had been his ward ten years he was only a little over thirty, he has pictured to himself a man many grey with age, but this impression was lost in the conversation that followed, for Mr. Gordon had so much to say, and said it so well, that he, with his cordiality, could not help being attracted towards him. Despite Paul's presentiment time had never passed pleasanter at Retford Hall than Paul had the succeeding few weeks, for Mr. Gordon proved himself a most agreeable companion. Each day, three hours of the earliest morning were spent with his business, but that past, he was ready to join them in all their amusements, and surprised them all by planning all sorts of excursions and seeking all sorts of adventures, as he said to commemorate his holidays. He was well-informed, knowing thoroughly many subjects of which Paul had never thought, for never idle, his leisure moments had been spent in study and self-culture. His reading hours acquired a double interest when he was the reader, and in music he more than surpassed their expectations. His rich bass voice accorded better with Madeline's pure contralto than Paul's light tenor, so he took his place, becoming in that as everything else the leading spirit. But in his superiority there was no pride, no haughtiness, that could wound even Paul's sensitive heart, and so the time passed on only seeming to bring a pleasanter change, though, alas, for poor Paul, gradually undermining all his hope of happiness.

One day they had contemplated going to Medney Pond, a miniature lake about a mile distant, for a boat-ride and fishing-party, but at the last moment Paul was obliged to give it up (a rare thing for him), and Madeline and Gordon, not to lose the day's pleasure, Madeline and Mr. Gordon went alone. That day Philip learned the power of his will than in all their preceding intercourse. They had sailed and fished to no purpose till weary, and were at the landing-place on their return, their boat resting idly on the smooth surface. With his lawyer tact he drew her on to speak of herself, and the subject once started, she talked freely and openly—telling all her aspirations, all her desires for a higher development of mind and soul than she possessed. She had been leaning over the edge of the boat, dipping her hand slowly up and down in the clear waters, but suddenly she raised herself up and went on impetuously:

"You cannot think how I despise myself—how I pity and sorrow for every one whose existence is like mine; who pass idly on life's pathway, only living as their wealth is ordered, and filling with flowers, giving no heed to the thorns that may be set another, no thought to the sharp stones over which their feet must stumble; our own feet fall a smooth resting-place, and using the talents given them only for their own gratification. I have been petted, made caressed, but I want action—I want something to do that will require self denial and sacrifice, that will remove this feeling of uselessness, and give me quietude in place of this unrest."

She stretched out her hands as if to grasp a vision. He had been gathering up the oars, and, resting idly, looked carelessly in the shallow water, and he placed them in her hand, saying, as his fingers closed over the stems:

"I think you are like those lilies, diffusing around you a constant beauty and fragrance—though all unconscious of it—there are many such on earth."

She shook her head slowly. "But I am not; and if I was, I hardly think I should be content; I would want to look farther."

She stopped abruptly, and pointed to the West. It had grown dark while they were speaking. A heavy cloud was rising, seeming almost to rest on those sudden storms common to June. He caught up his oars, and a few strokes brought them to the shore. They sprang out, he drew the boat high enough to drag the boat upon the white sand and secure it, hurried on. It was a mile, and they had walked—for Madeline was a famous pedestrian—at a still more pleasanter than gliding. They had gone about half the distance, when a sharp flash of lightning broke through the darkness, followed by a moment by a low heavy peal of thunder. He passed his arm around her, nearly lifting her from the ground, and increased his pace almost to a run.

"Yes, they are sweet—very, but they will sooner die, and it will be lost for ever."

Half way down the avenue they met Paul.

"You are safe, then, ma-belle" said he gladly.

"I have just this moment come, and finding you had not returned, was about to start after you, when we saw you coming."

Something in Paul's tone sounded disagreeable to Philip. "Was she only safe with him?" he asked himself. He took a look and then scanned all Paul's love to him plainer than any words, and Madeline—what of her? There had been no answering light in her eyes for him. Was it only reserving light for Paul? But how would it be? Would not the impulsive eagerness of his boyish love win her heart? He had no time to slowly behind; they were near for him in the porch.

"Don't think me selfish, Paul," she answered, with a bright smile; "but I want to put them in the library, and we can all enjoy them," and she ran out in the great drops just beginning to fall, and laid them on the grass that they might be fresh for the morrow.

Somehow this incident, trifling as it was, did Philip Gordon's heart a great deal of good. It developed unexpectedly to himself many of our lives the most. Is there any truth in the theory of transmigration of souls in the idea that we have lived, loved, and suffered as existence before this life? If not, whence come those dim perceptions that sometimes float before our inner vision, indefinite, without tangible form, yet with such vividness of impression? From whence comes that lightning flash that for a breath will thrill our being with an undefined sense of knowledge, which, lasting only a vague sense of loss behind? The veriest trifle will do this, the opening or shutting of a window, a strange face we meet in a crowd, sometimes open a passage far, far down to a recess of the soul, and giving a momentary glimpse of a fragment imbedded there. Do impressions ever die—do they ever even fade? If the science of phrenology is true, mind, that part of us capable of receiving and retaining ideas, is substance and not the intellectual soul. The bumps, which they tell us indicate our character, must certainly are, and as certainly increase and decrease with our development of mind. And why should it not be seated there? But mind is not ideas, though it is thickly covered with them; but the soul-pen that wrote them there is too near the divine for our weak eyes to read its tracings. But can such writings be erased? We all know how a circumstance, long forgotten, covered over many layers deep by the rubbish that stores the garrets of our memory, may be brought to light, revived in all its pristine splendor, merely by a chance word. Our souls survive all changes, and may they not have brought these things—small in themselves, to be sure, but probably connected with some important event in our once thrilled our life—from some former period of existence, and reunite them on our life's first pages, that may sometimes break forth from the coverings of long years, breaking in on sudden light, that possesses no power to tell its cause or origin?

It had grown dusk, and a lamp burned on the centre table. The rain, in torrents, often out by a loud steam of lightning, followed by a deafening roll of thunder. Madeline stood in the centre of the room, after a childish fashion of hers when excited by thunderstorm, gazing, as well as the darkness permitted, out on the grandeur of the tempest. Once there came a fiery blaze of light-ning, revealing her figure with a brilliant light, as she stood with clasped hands, parted lips and head thrown back, every feature radiant with excitement. Philip Gordon was not a man given to idolatry, but that moment a flash bright as that other glare passed through his soul, illuminating for a moment its secret depths, and he saw his childish fancies of when a child he had dreamed ages ago. She filled every part of it. She had always belonged to him, said the intuition; she was his, he only now. They had been given for each other, but the time had come when he might claim her, when he could clasp her to his heart and say: "Mine at last!" He rose from his seat from a chair with the purpose vaguely in his mind, but Paul stood between them. The electric chain, that by reason of its strength, is the most subtle, at that same instant touched Paul's heart with a sense of pain as acute as the joy that thrilled Philip's, and he sprang to her side with a low cry of irrepressible pain.

"Madeline, Madeline, do not stand there! I cannot bear to see you! Come back from your face, like a goddess controlling fate. Come away from that dreadful glass, that for a moment seemed to carry you off from me. I have placed between me an unfathomable gulf, which no efforts of mine could enable me to cross. Come and sit down here, where I can see that you are real, and that your love is near me."

She sat down in the chair he brought, a soft smile playing on her face in response to his words brought, curving her lips at the resting down at her feet, in his favorite position, looking up tenderly in her face, softly caressing one of her white hands, while the other rested on the head of the wavy hair.

The next week was Madeline's birthday, and with her girlish love of gaiety, she had resolved to celebrate it in a manner fitted to the peasantest manner possible. There was a picnic in the woods around Medley Lake, a boat ride, and dinner in the afternoon in a supper and dance at the hall in the evening. Madeline looked beautiful at the picnic in her white muslin, and in the evening in white silk and lace, while like, that Philip had gathered for her, in her hair. The afternoon passed well enough, but in the evening a new trouble arose. Philip Gordon, who had never danced in the few things he had neglected to learn—but Paul did, and kept Madeline for his partner as constantly as he could. Philip looked to one after the other, but generally made their excuses and left him, preferring to dance, than sit and talk, and at last he seated himself on a sofa, where he would look on, through the open door to the dancers in the room beyond. There is an undercurrent of sadness in every earnest nature, and it welled up strong in Philip Gordon's heart, as he watched Madeline floating through the graceful abandon of the waltz, her waist encircled by Paul's arm, while he bent over her rapturously, and she looking up to him, a bright color and smile on her face at his words. Was it an evil omen that he had come between them at the very moment, when she seemed so entirely his own, and drew her thoughts, as it came from everything else, to him so completely? Was it the handsome face, winning manners, and eager, boyish love, fill a closer place in her heart, than he with his unconsciousness could ever hope to be? It was not, in his far-reaching ambition, neglected that which would bring him greater happiness than fame? In the midst of turmoil and excitement, and questionings, and for the time really regretted the manner in which his life had been spent. There was a lull in the music, and he turned to the door, meeting Madeline just coming in. She took her arm from Paul's and slipped it through his in her pretty familiar way.

"Where have you kept yourself so long?" she said gaily; "I have hardly seen you to-night."

"No wonder you've not," he answered, with a smile, "for your words and action 'set him to rights' at once. "I should not get a chance to speak to you, you have been so surrounded."

"There are a few privileges," said she, naively; "but let us sit down, I am tired of dancing, and want you to talk to me."

She led the way to the sofa he had just quitted, and sat down.

"What shall I talk to you about?" questioned he, as she drew a crimson scarf around her shoulders to protect them from the cool night air coming in from the open windows. "Shall I ask you how many times you danced, who your partners were, what they said," &c.

She laughed merrily.

"No, indeed, I want something new, something I can think about after to-night."

A gentleman came up asking her hand for a polka, but she excused herself.

She "had an engagement with Mr. Gordon," she said, gravely, and there she chatted gaily on, until the blue atmosphere which surrounded him was completely dispelled.

At the conclusion of that set supper was announced, and she took his offered arm, just as Paul made his appearance to offer his services, in his sweet confusion, while Paul hurried off gaily to find some else.

After supper Madeline danced again, and Philip, weary of the noise and glare, passed through the crowded rooms and the lighted library to the window-seat, drawing the curtains close behind him. He was looking out on the soft darkness of the night, vaguely trying to solve the dark problem of existence and look into the misty future, when a hand was suddenly entered his library. There was no knew by the firm step and tone, and a woman by the soft rustling of her garments; but he paid no attention to them as they walked back and forth till his ear caught the words:

"I do not think so. I know Paul in handsome and attractive, but he lacks that depth and strength of character a nature like hers must crave."

"You gentlemen are all jealous of him," was the answer in a light, gay tone; "but I am certain she loves neither, and she—well, her ways are so different, you know; she is more secretive, but everybody says they are engaged."

Every word was mistaken then. Did you see her when she was talking with Mr. Gordon? there was a something on her face different from what it had ever been before; his face was not so easy read as hers, but he assured if either he is the favored one."

"What, her guardian, that homely man! what an idea that is."

"Not so strange after all, considering."

The rest of the sentence was lost as they passed out, leaving Philip Gordon wrapped in a reverie, such as he had not known for years. It was broken by the curtains being suddenly swept back, letting in a strong flood of light. At first he only saw Madeline's face and gleaming dress, then he saw Paul behind her.

"So this is your hiding place," said she, gaily. "We have been looking for you ever so long. I want you to come and dance with me directly, as it is going to be the last set; and you know this is the party of all birthday parties. I know you have not danced with me, and I will not dance with me this time, won't you?" said she, coaxingly.

He came out of his retreat, smiling at the absurd idea.

"What a request, Madeline. I am sorry to refuse you, but it is impossible. I never danced a step in my life."

"Oh, that will make no difference," she answered, eagerly; "just try a plain cotillion—you cannot fail to go right."

"Do not tease Gordon; you cannot think how delightful it is," pleaded Paul.

He shook his head.

"I could not if it. I should be entirely out of place. Why, Madeline, they would all laugh at me, and you would even be ashamed of my awkwardness."

She was a little disappointed. He saw it in her face, and hastened to make atonement.

"Ask anything else of me, Madeline, and I will try to gratify you. What can I do to atone for my lack of gallantry?"

She hesitated, looking up in his face, archly. At last she said:

"We are tired of dancing and are going to have some music, and you may play and sing that Swedish song you sang last night, it is so beautiful, I think."

"Willingly. Anything else?"

"Yes, you are to sing the ballad 'The Gondolier,' with Miss Marietta Ormes; she has a splendid voice."

"I would rather you would take her place."

"I shall not indulge you, sir; besides she admires you very much."

"As I do not return it in the least, that makes no difference to me, but I am ready to obey you."

Madeline would not dance that last set with any one but Paul. She was too busy to stop, though what she did, except open the piano and arrange the lamps, no one knew. They had been lighted, and the rooms, glass, cool, and all kinds of vocal and instrumental music. Philip sang the ballad with Miss Ormes, a short comic piece with Paul, and then, at Madeline's call, he drew the wild lament of a mother for her only son, slain on the battlefield. Nothing could exceed the despairing beauty of the music, the sad expression they evoked around him, with warm thanks, and lavish praise; but he turned from them all, almost impatiently, his eyes searching for Madeline. She sat in the shadow of the curtains, her dark eyes suffused with tears; her hands clasped in her lap, and her face still turned towards the instrument, as if it still gave forth that wondrous harmony. He crossed the room and stood by her side. She raised her eyes to his; saying, in a low voice:

"It is more than beautiful, more than lovely."

And these few words were more to him than all the eloquent adulation that had been showered around him, and when alone in his room that night he repeated them over, and brought before him again her look and tone, he resolved that when his time was given up, when he was no longer her guardian and lawyer, when he could stand before her with no other claim to her respect and affection, save what his own manhood gave, then he would tell her what she was to him, and ask her if she would be still more. He did not wonder that Paul loved her, could not blame him for trying to win her in return; that is, if he did not succeed, that would have been an unlikely different matter.

The next day all were dull and sleepy, and Paul did not make his appearance at all; but the next day just after dinner, when Philip had gone to his room to look over some papers preparatory to settling his accounts with Madeline, and she had covered a table with papers, brushes, bottles, and all the materials for pressing and crystalizing leaves and grasses, he came bright and joyous as ever. He gaily offered his services, drew a chair up to the table, and commenced arranging the delicate grasses in fanciful bouquets and clusters ready for her to beautify. It was getting late, and her basket was nearly finished. He held out the last cluster of pale green sea-grasses and bright crimson leaves.

"Are they not beautiful ma belle?"

"Oh, they are splendid," she said, earnestly; "if we only had some small, dark ferns to put in, the spray would be perfect."

He jumped up, exclaiming:

"I will get you some. A few days ago I saw a large cluster of them down in the woods by the spring, and they were just about the right size; you may clear away here, only leaving this for me to finish when I get back; I shall not be gone long."

He took his cap and went out humming a gay air, meeting Philip just coming in with a formidable array of papers.

"Will you be at leisure to look these over this evening?" said he, as he noticed her employment.

"Certainly, I will be ready in a few minutes; the scene-it is begun the quicker it will be ended, I suppose."

She cleared the table, washed her hands, brushed her hair, and sat down. There was not much to do, the account had been strictly settled each year, and they were only to be compared, and a statement of her property looked over. It was all done in less than an hour, but she looked up with a sigh of relief, as she signed her name for the last time. He handed her another paper.

"This requires the attestation of a disinterested attorney to make it valid; to-day is Thursday; I will bring Mr. Blake from the village to-morrow or Saturday, if you are willing, for I must go back home the first of the week."

She was looking steadily at the western sky, but he thought her voice trembled as she answered:

"Why need you go so soon? We hoped you would make a longer visit."

"My business will suffer if I prolong my days of idleness; and besides Train and Elton, a large mercantile firm, had made us an offer to go to Europe to take charge of a law-suit there, and if I accept it I must be ready to leave the first of next month."

She turned around. Her face was pale enough now.

"Going to Europe, Philip! you cannot mean it?"

He had meant to have been very patient, and adhered to his resolutions, but her words sent a tide of rapture rushing through his veins, he did not attempt to control. He drew closer to her, looking steadily in her face, speaking low, steady tones.

"Madeline! I am obliged to go away next week, but I have a few words to say to you, which may send me away before, they are only these:

"I love you with my whole strength, my whole soul; you are to me what no other woman ever had been, ever can be; will you be my wife?"

There was no response, no astonishment at his words. It seemed so genial and natural that he should love her and tell her so, and there was no pride or coquetry in her heart now towards one she loved, so she raised her face, not blushing, but luminous with light and love, to his, and said, slowly and softly, but with deep tenderness and solemnity:

"I will, Philip. I can ask no happier fate than that."

He drew her to him till her head rested on his shoulder. A delicious calm filled her whole being but it was broken by a sudden recollection, and she struggled to an erect position, a look of dismay covering her face, a moment before so radiant.

"What have I done? What will Paul say? It will break his heart; and how can I do that, or wrong you either? Philip, you must tell me what to do, for I do not know," she continued, wildly.

A sudden pang struck him, but outwardly he was calm.

"What is it, Madeline?" he asked, tenderly. "I do not understand you: you must tell me plainer; but sit down first. You do not look able to stand; you tremble all over. Poor child, what is it?"

"There is not much to tell. We have always been together; he was almost my only playmate, my only companion, and when he told me he loved me, I liked him so well you know—I did not know there was any difference—I thought I returned it."

"And you are then engaged to Paul Hever?"

"Yes, Philip, I suppose I am. Don't look so stern, but tell me what to do—what I ought to do who wrong or one."

How his tones and lips quivered. His dark eyes, burning with a fierce light, had been fastened on her, but now they were veiled in shadow as he turned away and slowly paced back and forth across the room. She watched him anxiously, but his calm, impassable face told her nothing. Finally he came back to her, bending his face close down to her white still one.

"Madeline," said his voice was full of unspeakable tenderness; "I cannot blame you. I see how it all was. It was a sad mistake, but I cannot decide it; your own heart must do that. Paul loves you, I know; but it cannot be with a more fervent, sincere affection than mine. But, remember, in making your decision, that you would do greater injustice to the one you accepted, if you loved him least, than even to yourself or the one you rejected. I am going away now and will come back the day after to-morrow to hear your decision. Think of it calmly, and make it so you will never regret it. Good-bye, Madeline."

He kissed her pale forehead, then went slowly out, down the avenue and up the road, past her line of vision.

Where was Paul? As he came up the porch with the ferns he heard them still talking over their accounts, so he passed on to the little sitting-room adjoining, and flung himself carelessly down on a sofa by the open door. The doors of both rooms opened on the porch, and, without intending it, he heard every word that passed in the library. Indeed it would have been impossible not to have heard.

There are crises in our lives that do not stun, or take away our breath, but calm us down to a state of complete self-possessed despair. So it was with Paul. The greatest woe that can desolate a life, the knowledge that all his hopes and love have been for naught, came upon him without warning, but he did not cry out or even stir, but lay quietly till he saw Mrs. Hever and Mr. Elton and Madeline go by, upstairs to her own room. Then he arose and went out. He met Miss Berford in the outer hall and handed her the ferns, asking her to give them to Madeline with his excuses, as he was obliged to return home immediately. Out in the open air he trembled, not regardless where his steps were tending, till he found himself in the woods, to which an hour before he had gone so gladly for her. He flung himself down on the mossy ground, giving way to his wild grief:

"She loved another; she had never loved him!"

Those were the first words of his mourning distinctly from out the dreadful maze of this conversation, and as they freshly occurred to him he wept and moaned like a child. Even through this bitter anguish, out of his great love to her, came a noble thought of self-sacrifice.

"If he must suffer, we need not. By his endurance a little more happiness would be entire."

At first the thought was too bitter, but it grew more endurable, and when the moon and stars came out, their light fell on a man who, with clenched hands, arose with the determination, strong and enduring, because created and perfected in anguish, to give happiness to others at the cost of his own.

The next morning, as Madeline was studying over her position, trying to decide calmly, she was interrupted that day and the next by Paul, who with an unconquerable dread at the thought of meeting him she went down. He stood at the foot of the stairs, and without waiting for any salutation, said, suddenly:

"Excuse me for disturbing you, Madeline, I have something in way of importance to us both. Will you hear it now?"

"All you wish to say," she answered with dreary calmness. "Come in here."

She turned towards the lighted parlors, but he grasped her hand, drawing her the other way.

"Not in there! not in there! Come out here, down to the grape arbor, and I will tell you."

She followed him unresistingly down the side-path that led to the arbor. He stopped her in the dusky facade and began, passionately:

"Would it grieve you very much, Madeline, if we were to be separated?"

"Separated, Paul! What do you mean?"

There was a ring of gladness in her voice that cut deeply, and he went on hastily:

"I have been afraid sometimes that we are not suited to each other; that as time would come when our natures would cease to assimilate, and I should become a more sore worthy of you; so I thought, perhaps, it would be best for me to release you."

He stopped abruptly, and she added, tremulously:

"You do not think I blame you, do you? You must not. I shall never cease to love you; but I know——"

He stopped again.

"We shall always be friends, shall we not, Madeline?" he pleaded.

It was well the gray twilight hid the pallor of his face, and she was too much excited to notice the unevenness of his tones, else she might have seen his heart, for Paul was but a poor actor at the best. She came closer to him:

"Always friends, true friends, Paul. I am very glad you told me this, I have made me very happy. I will not tell you now, but come over next week and you shall know why."

He was inexpressibly grateful that she spared him time, but he only said:

"I will come. It had better be told when we are both calmer."

Another few words separated the two who once thought nothing could ever come between them.

When Philip came the next morning Madeline met him, but there was no Paul.

"You have good news for me, darling, I know by your looks," he whispered, drawing her arm through his.

She rehearsed the scene of the evening before.

"I am very thankful for this," he said, when she finished her recital, "and I am satisfied against him, I fear there would have been a lingering feeling of wrongdoing towards him in your heart, which would have prevented you from being entirely happy I can never blame him, as otherwise I might have been inclined to, for his fickleness."

That was all. Paul's sacrifice, like thousands of others, was never appreciated, never even known. They were married in the autumn. Paul was in Europe. He had made her happiness his first object, but he could not stay away from her when the wedding day came he shed many bitter tears, but never regretting he had taken from her all chance for self-reproach, and never even knowing of heart-sickness for her presence before he became calm and strong enough to endure it. As a wife and mother, Madeline's life is rounding into perfection, and with her husband's loving tuition she is fast learning to weave the golden thread of opportunities into a web of happiness lasting as life itself. Paul visits them occasionally and talks eloquently of a great picture he will yet paint, of a great poem he is to write, but neither are commenced, and Madeline knows he will accomplish nothing.

THE SANITARY COMMISSION.

In the history of the great American Civil War there will stand forth an organization prompted by divine Charity, guided by Providence, and without a parallel in human annals. Engaged, slow to give America credit for aught, admits the great good rendered by the administrated Sanitary Commission, an institution which sprang up from a meeting of a few ladies in New York and the Rage The sum, when finished, will be reduced to 11,000 inches in length. The length will be 5 inches; the bore being 17 best 6 inches; the maximum diameter 19 inches; the minimum 16 inches. The chase will carry a spherical shot of half a ton, and a shell of 700 pounds. The gun was cast on the principle of Major Rodman. This core is an iron cylinder, with a hollow bore; through which a stream of water is kept running.

THE ARMY BLACKSMITH.

Nor like the country blacksmith, by the highroad on the skirt of the village, with children peering around, and all men, from the squire to the poorly-paid laborer, stopping for a chat as they pass or chat, does the army smith ply his labors. But even, that he is a blacksmith, he knows from the nature of the craftsman in the close lanes of the city, with filth and misery around, a tavern visible wherever he turns his eyes. The army blacksmith sancies of the army, if not a soldier, he smacks of camps and battles, and though he sees the battle generally from afar, and does his needed labor under the shady tree or leaky shelter of a ruin shed in some corner, and is the warmest nook he can find in winter, he will doubtless, in other years, when he sits by his wandering grandsons the story of the great battles in Virginia, if he does attribute the last success to the Army of the Potomac.

The regular army forge is a four-wheeled carriage the frame of which, of timber, is like that of a caisson, being a box about four feet long by two in width, containing the tools and iron. Behind the forge there is a limited supply of iron for immediate use. On the right side of the box is a bellows, which is worked by a lever. In front of this is a castiron sabpan for holding water. The anvil is fixed on the right side, and the back of the box is a receptacle for coal. The wheels of the forge, and in the same way those of every little room, the men riding on the limber-box.

THE CIVIL WAR AT MATAMORAS.

The Rival Governors, Cortina and Ruiz.

We give to-day portraits of the two Mexican leaders at Matamoras. Of Cortina we have already in that city, drawn from life by our Special Artist, and of interest to our readers, who have long heard of them as mere names.

Manuel Ruiz, the defeated Governor, was born in Oaxaca, Mexico, June 19, 1820, and is now a young Lieutenant-Colonel in the army. He was educated in the College of Oaxaca, and then studied law with Benito Juarez, the present President. He was admitted to practice in 1848. He also held a commission in the National Guard of Oaxaca and the Military of Oaxaca in 1842, and by his services in several battles, especially at Puebla, advanced to Lieutenant-Colonel, and was Colonel in the Army Brigadier-General in 1863. He was appointed Governor of Oaxaca in 1861, by his appointment as Governor.

He was a member of the Mexican Congress in 1858 and 1857. Comonfort made him Minister of Justice, Ecclesiastical Affairs, and Public Instruction. In this capacity he advocated the seizure of all ecclesiastical property, the suppression of religious orders, the exclusion of clerical ministry in marriages, and the other steps of the so-called Liberal party.

Juarez appointed him Governor of Tamaulipas, but his claim was ignored by Cortina, who, in January, 1859, expelled him, and, flying from his enemies there, notwithstanding his rank and previous services, he became a private in the Constitutional Liberal patriot. If the leaders of the Liberal party are not men of high character, the condition of Mexico is indeed despicable.

Juan Nepomuceno Cortina, the successful rival of Ruiz, is a man of different mould; and, though born of a family of high blood, is half-educated, and has hitherto figured rather as a freebooter and marauder than as a man of political influence. He was born at Camargo, in 1824, and was reared, as to say, in the saddle. At 18 he fought off, with a few brother and a party of friends, four where Brownsville now is, and from that time to 1859 was never thought till all were killed except young Cortina, who was carried off by his friends in the confusion of the fray for years. He then made his escape, and made it the business of his life to fight the whole of Indians, as well as murder of his comrades. He was soon known as the most daring leader that ever shot on the Rio Grande and the terror of the Indians.

In the war with the United States made him a soldier, and he served with zeal and courage, but after the peace returned to his American rifle. Like the other Mexicans, however, he was, his friends say, constantly wronged by the Texan judges, lawyers and juries, and in 1856 took up arms to obtain the justice denied him.

Our readers will remember the terror caused by his battle with Major Heady, and the havoc of his doings. He was made a colonel for gallantry at Puebla last year, and his hatred, by virtue of seniority, appointed him Governor of Tamaulipas.

Our full-length picture will give a fair view of one of the fights at the barricades in Matamoras, during the struggle between the rival Governors.

BEACHING A MONITOR IN PORT ROYAL HARBOR, S. C.

THE beaching of the monitors for the purpose of cleansing and repairing is not a task devoid of risks or unattended with difficulty. The manner in which it has been done chiefly, if not entirely, under the superintendence of Capt. Theodore E. Hasbrig, whose success has justified his appointment.

After the vessel has been run ashore and moors, a class with whom our readers are already familiar from the amazing strength and skill they have shown, help to clean the hulls. The beseiling saves la this operation, and the vessel is then hauled over and pumped out to give the vessel a cant or point for about two feet, thus exposing the keel, which is then cleaned of the beseiling. The water in the Southern harbor generally rises and falls about six feet, thus favoring on the side, soon, if neglected, destroy the whole.

GOVERNMENT BAKERIES, FOLLY ISLAND.

One of the great economies in the department of the Subsistence is the bakeries erected in the fall of 1863 on Folly island, in the woods to the rear of the former headquarters of Gen. Vogdes. They consist, as will be seen in our sketch, of three rows of building, the centre one devoted to the kneading and making of bread, and the two outside buildings are 100 by 20 each. From these immense establishments of bread are turned out, average 20,000 rations a day, surprising all the troops on Morris and Folly islands, and at Stono.

These temporary structures, important as they are are, will soon pass, but history will preserve the remembrance, as we do the appearance.

ECCENTRICITY IN THE ARMY.—A SCENE IN THE FIELD.—SEE PAGE 9.

THE WAR IN THE SOUTHWEST—CAPTURE OF FORT DE RUSSY, LA., ON THE 16TH OF MARCH, BY THE UNITED STATES FORCES UNDER GEN. ANDREW JACKSON SMITH.—From a Sketch by our Special Artist.—See Page 38.

PRECIOUSNESS OF SECRET LOVE.

Let me in secret come to thee,
Let me in secret from thee go;
Our happiness the less would be,
Were all the world our joys to know.

And let no glance of thine disclose
How far our hearts are lost in love;
The island of our bliss arose
From out the sea it towers above.

Of Eden is true love the fruit,
That must be plucked by two alone;
If it a serpent's eye pollute,
Its sweetness is for ever gone.

Needs any soul to know or care
How once, by ardent love inflamed,
Two tender mortals happy were,
Tho' colder hearts their passion blamed?

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

CHAPTER XIX.—CONTINUED.

Mellen sprang down the steps and rushed across the lawn, with some mad idea of trying to rescue her, and following as well as her trembling limbs would permit, Elizabeth saw Tom throw off his coat and spring into the water.

"He will save her!" she cried, "he will save her!"

Mellen only answered by a groan; he was looking wildly about for a boat, but there was none in sight; he was powerless to aid his darling—he could only stand and watch the struggles of another to rescue her from that death peril. They saw an to rescue her from that death peril. They saw an object rise above the waves—saw Tom swim towards it—seize it—he had caught the girl in his strong grasp. They could neither move or cry out; they stood staring out in breathless expectation, and watched him support his burthen with one arm, while with the other he swam towards the skiff which the tide was bearing in towards the shore. It was a long pull; they could see that he began to falter after his long exertions in rowing; a deathly fear crept over her lover lest those hearts, but they did not speak—scarcely breathed.

Suddenly a higher wave washed the helpless girl from Tom's grasp; she was sinking again. Strong man as he was, Grantley Mellen's courage gave way then; he sank on the ground, covering his face with his hands. White and cold, Elizabeth watched; saw Tom grasp the girl's dress and get her again in the grasp of his strong arm.

"He has caught her!" she gasped. "He has almost reached the boat. Grantley! Grantley! she is safe!"

Still half crouched upon the ground, Mellen looked up. He had not put his hand on the side of the skiff, and was lifting Elsie in it. It was evident the last effort of his mighty strength, for he floated on for some distance, holding on to the boat before he had power to get in. The husband and wife watched him while he got into the boat himself, lifted Elsie's head on his knee, and allowed the tide almost entirely to wash them towards the shore.

As they approached the bank Elsie began to recover consciousness, and as Tom took her in his arms and sprang with a staggering bound on shore she opened her eyes and saw her brother and Elizabeth.

"I'm safe," she said, faintly, "quite safe. Don't be afraid."

It was not a moment for many words. With a broken cry of thankfulness, Mellen snatched Elsie from Tom's arms and carried her into the house. In a few moments their united exertions brought the reckless girl completely to herself. She looked up and saw the anxious faces bent over her.

"Dead, acold," she cried, "Tom saved me, Grant, Tom saved me!"

Mellen grasped Fuller's hands.

"I can't thank you, I can't," he said. "God bless you, my friend."

Tom was shaking from head to foot, his drenched garments dripping like a river god's, and he answered as well as his chattering teeth would permit:

"Don't say a word. I'd have drowned myself if I hadn't saved her."

Elizabeth insisted upon Elsie's being carried upstairs to her room, and sent Tom off to change his dress; there, in his frequent visits, he had always forgotten some portion of his baggage, so he found dry clothes in his room.

Before Mellen had recovered from the shock sufficiently to be at all composed Elsie had been dressed and was lying on the sofa in her own room, quite recovered, with the exception of her unusual pallor. She had been wrapped in a rose-colored morning robe, trimmed with swansdown, and lay in exquisite relief on the blue couch of her boudoir. Mellen was bending over her and holding her hands, as if he feared to let her free for an instant; while Elizabeth stood near, finding time, now that the labors were over, to watch her husband and wonder if danger to her would have brought any pang like this to his heart.

"I am quite well now," said Elsie, "and I don't feel much frightened."

"Oh, child!" said her brother, "promise me never to run such a risk again."

"But you mustn't scold," she pleaded; "think of the danger I was in! Oh, it was horrible to feel the waters closing over my head—to go downdown!"

"Don't think of it," said Elizabeth, making a sudden effort to change the conversation, from a fear that dwelling upon the danger which she had incurred might bring on one of the nervous attacks to which Elsie was so liable under any strong agitation.

"No," added Mellen; "it is all over now, quite over—don't think of it any more."

"You look pale, Grant."

"No wonder, no wonder!"

She looked at him with one of her wilful smiles.

"Perhaps I tried the experiment to see how much you loved me?"

Mellen lifted her in his arms and rested her head upon his shoulder, while many emotions struggled across his face.

"Child!" he said, in a tremulous voice, "you knew before—you have always known. My mother's treasure—my pride—my darling!"

There Elizabeth stood, forgotten, disregarded—or so it seemed to her; bitter maddo no sign which could betray the bitter anguish at her heart.

There came a shock at the door.

"That's Tom Fuller," said Elsie; "tell him to come in, Bessie."

Elizabeth started up and opened the door himself. There stood Tom, clad in dry garments, but still greatly agitated.

"How is she?" he asked. "Is she better?"

"You have saved her life!" exclaimed Mellen, grasping his two hands; "you have saved her life!"

"But is she better?" he repeated, quite too anxious for any thought of the credit due him, and too unselfish to desire it even if he had remembered.

"Come in and see," called Elsie, in a tender voice from the sofa.

Tom brushed by Mellen with a cry, and down he went on his knees by the couch, exclaiming:

"Elsie, darling! right once! Oh, thank God!"

Mellen had been too profoundly disturbed himself for conjecture regarding this feeling on Tom's part; to him it seemed natural that every one should be agitated, and Elsie soon brought them back to safer commonplaces by her gaiety, which not even the peril from which she had been so recently rescued could entirely subdue.

"I declare Tom," said she, "you are as useful in a household located near the water as a Newfoundland dog."

"Oh, I can't laugh," cried Tom.

"But you must!" and the wilful creature. "You will get no pay for it on any less because I am saved, I suppose?"

"Elsie," said her brother, "you ought to sleep for awhile; Tom and I will go down."

"No, no," she persisted, "I am not in the least sleepy—you must not go away—I shall only get nervous if you are left alone; I shall be quite well by dinner-time. Tom Fuller, don't go!"

They did not oppose her, every one there knew that it was of no use, for in the end they would surely yield to her caprices.

"I haven't thanked you yet, Tom," she said.

"I don't know what there is to thank me for," cried he.

"Indeed!" said Elsie; "so you don't think my life of enough importance to have the saving of it a matter of any consequence?"

"You know that wasn't what I meant," said Tom, rubbing his damp hair with one hand.

"You are too bad," said Mellen, laughing, "too bad, Elsie."

"Indeed, I shall cease him more than ever," replied Elsie; "he will grow conceited if I don't. Tell him how much you like me to tease you, old Tom."

"Well," said he, a little ruefully, "you have always done it, and I suppose you always will—I shouldn't think it was you if you stopped now."

Even Elizabeth laughed at his earnest manner, and Elsie said:

"There, there, old Tom, don't get sentimental. Perhaps I'll be good-natured for three days by way of reward for pulling me out of the water."

"I'd like to save your life every day in the week at that rate," said Tom, gravely.

"That's so!" added Mellen; "I think one such exploit is quite enough."

Elsie seized Tom's hand, and said with real feeling:

"Tom, I do thank you—I can't tell you how much."

"Don't, don't!" he pleaded. "If you say another word I'll run off and never show my face again."

Elsie began to laugh once more, and the lingering trace of nervousness died quite out of her face.

"Tom is good at a catastrophe," said she, "but he can't carry on the blank verse proper to the after situation."

"Blank enough it would be," rejoined Tom, and then he was so much astonished to find that he had made a sort of joke that the idea covered him with fresh confusion.

Elsie's disaster passed off without any dangerous consequences to the reckless girl, and she had half forgotten the occurrence long before Mellen recovered composure enough to thank, with feeling and quietness, the noble-hearted man who had saved her life.

From that day Tom Fuller took a place in Mellen's household which he never after left. Service; his gratitude was unbounded, and as he learned to know and appreciate him better he found a thousand solid noble qualities to endear him to his every exterior. And as Elsie softened into gentle earnestness, and grew closer to him day by day, Tom became so completely engrossed in his happy love-dream that he had not a single thought beyond it. In her loneliness and her anxieties which separated her so completely from those three hearts, Elizabeth Mellen watched it all, saying sometimes to herself:

"She has taken even Tom from me. I have nothing left—husband—relative—all, all abandon me for her."

CHAPTER XX.

ELSIE was nearly twenty now, but looking younger from her fragile form and the extreme delicacy of her complexion. The reader knows how winsome and playful her manners were; how she was loved and cherished by her brother, and it seemed hard that a creature like this should have a knowledge of this secret which oppressed Elizabeth's life; and it spoke more for the depth of her character than one would have expected, that she was in any way able or willing to help her sister-in-law to bear her secret burthen.

The vague thoughts which had troubled Grantley Mellen's mind on the night of his arrival had died away, and now he could understand that it was quite in keeping with the restrained intensity of Elizabeth's nature, that the very violence of the storm should have forced her out into it. It was natural, too, that, when her mind was so excited, the sudden sound of his voice and step should have brought on the nervous weakness to which she so seldom gave way.

Then Elsie came back so blithe and blooming, brought such sunshine into the house, and drew them both so much into her amusements, that those first days of Mellen's return were pleasant indeed.

The weather had been delightful; they had enjoyed rides and drives, moonlight excursions upon the water; there had been visits to receive and return among neighboring families; people had heard of his return, and came uninvited from New York, bringing all that festal bustle and change which quite holidays ever have and then into the ordinary routine of our lives. The first days passed and still the sky was unclouded. Grantley Mellen began to think that was at last to be happy, and grew cheerful with the thought. So for a time he cast out all fear.

There had been no further return of that inexplicable nervousness in Elizabeth; the strained, anxious look almost entirely left her face; she was quiet, pale and grave, more customary with her. It was not that the fear and dread had left her mind, but she was on her guard, and there was a reticence and strength in her character which even her husband had not been able to penetrate. But it would keep her through her course, whatever might lie behind.

During those happy days there had been no more confidences between her and Elsie: indeed it seemed almost as if Elizabeth avoided her—not in a way to be noticed except by a quick eye—and if it was so, Elsie on her side did not attempt to break through these little restraints. It was natural that she should be happy, and from the gloom which surrounded Elizabeth, and in this respect the fickleness of her character was fortunate; for, from her look of unconcern, she was able to throw off any trouble the moment its actual danger was removed from her path.

Thus the first days had passed, allowing them to settle down into a quiet routine, but not too much of it, for Elsie could not endure that. Society was her element; trifle and champagne seemed her natural nourishment, and she drooped so quickly if compelled to seclusion, that, with his usual weakness where she was concerned, Mellen relinquished his own domestic habits for her caprices.

You may think this not in keeping with his character and habits, but reflect a little and you will see that it was perfectly natural. The vow he had made to Elizabeth was always in his mind; he never forgot his fears for Elsie's health; she was more like a daughter than a sister to him, and her very selfishness was her greatest charm. The very servants delighted in waiting on her, and her requirements were numerous; but they did it all willingly, and put a great deal more heart into the services she required than they ever exhibited in obeying Elizabeth's moderate and reasonable requests. They had her quiet manners for pride, and held her in slight favor in consequence; so dazzled by Elsie's manner that when she gave them an extra piece of money, or a worthless ornament, it seemed a much greater boon than the real kindness Elizabeth invariably displayed when they were in sickness or trouble. Elizabeth humored her too, but there was a soreness at her heart all the while; for sometimes when she saw this young creature flinging aside her own pleasure, her face wore the strange expression it had done while she watched their meeting after his return. The domestic life of Fleet Place was very happy—too happy for Elizabeth's hidden anxieties, Mellen's return would have made that old house almost like heaven. As it was, this haunting dread would sometimes forget her causes of dread, and break out into glesme of loving cheerfulness in spite of them.

After the night on which the bracelet was lost the sunshine which had brightened the little household at Piney Cove was dimmed by a thousand intangible shadows. In spite of all his efforts, the suspicion of Elizabeth's character was roused and kept on the alert, searching for food to nourish its unhappiness.

You would have said that he was suffering from jealousy; there was nothing upon which his mind settled itself which gave rise to that feeling, but it was impossible for him to cease he had no power to discover every thought of Elizabeth's soul during his absence. Then as he reflected upon the suspicion of treachery which arrived came up afresh the disappearance of the bracelet, and he lost himself in a maze of irritating conjecture, of which his fine judgment grew ashamed in cooler moments.

Elizabeth had worn her old proud look for several days after the night of the dinner-party. Grantley felt that the ice of the past was freezing between them once more, and the idea caused him acute pain.

He sat watching her one day for some time as she bent over her needlework, talking a little at intervals, listening occasionally to passages from his book; oftener sitting there with her fingers moving hurriedly, as if she were pressed for time, but her anxious face proving how far from her occupation her thoughts had wandered.

More than once Mellen saw the dark brows contract as if under actual pain, and as he ceased to speak, and seemed wholly absorbed in his book, he could see that her reverie became more absorbing and painful.

"Elizabeth!" he said suddenly.

She started; in her absorption she had forgotten that he was in the room—forgotten that she was not alone with those dark reflections which cast their shadow over her face.

"Did you speak, Grantley?"

"Yes; how you started!"

"Did I start?" she asked, trying to laugh. "I don't know how it is that I grow so nervous."

"You never were so afflicted formerly."

"No; I don't remember," she replied quickly.

"But you know I had a good deal of care and responsibility during your absence; it may be that which has shaken me a little."

"Do you believe it?" he asked, in a constrained voice.

She shot one glance of indignant pride at him; for an instant she looked inclined to leave the room, as had frequently been her habit during the first months of their marriage, when he had irritated her beyond endurance.

But if Elizabeth had the inclination she controlled it. After a moment's silence she laid down her work and approached the sofa where he was lying.

"Don't be cross with me, Grantley," she said, with a degree of humility she had not possessed in the past; "my head aches dreadfully—I don't think I am well."

His feelings changed as he looked at her; she was not well; he could see the traces of pain in the languid eyes and the contracted forehead, but whether the suffering was mental or physical even a physiognomist could not have told.

He reached out his hand and drew her towards him; she yielded to the action, and leaned her head against his shoulder with a little sigh of weariness.

"I can rest here," she whispered; "it is my place, isn't it, Grantley?"

There was an almost childish pleading in her voice, and as he bent her face and looked into her eyes he saw tears there.

"What is it, Bessie?" he asked. "Have I hurt you?"

The recollection of all the doubts and suspicious thoughts which had been in his mind for days came back, and forgetful of his ideas that errors recent anxiety was the change in her manner, he reproached himself with having brought a cloud between them by his own agency.

"Have I grieved you, Bessie?" he repeated.

"I feared the old trouble was coming back," she whispered.

"No, no; it must not, it shall not, Bessie! I am to blame—but if you knew what this wretched disposition makes me suffer! Every heart I have had in my early life has deceived me. I have only you left now—you and Elsie."

Perhaps it was natural that she should feel a little wilful pride at having his sister forced in, even to their closest confidence; her face was overclouded for an instant, but she subdued the feeling and said kindly:

"I know what you have suffered, dear; I can understand the effect it has had upon your character—but you must trust me—indeed you may."

"I know that, dear wife; I believe that!"

He drew her closer to him; for a few moments she sat with her head resting on the dark, dark curls of his hair, then she said, abruptly:

"Grantley?"

"What is it, dear?"

"I want to ask you something."

"It can't be anything very terrible; you need not hesitate so."

"Only because it sounds foolish!"

"Nothing ever can seem foolish from your lips," he said, softly; and she blushed like a girl at his words.

"That woman you—you loved once," she said; "was she dearer to you than I am?"

"Elizabeth Mellen! how can you ask?"

"Let me blot out all thought of the time," he exclaimed, passionately; "I would like to burn out of my soul every trace of those years in which she had a part. I loved her with the passion of youth—no, Bessie, it was not a feeling so deep and holy as that I have for you, and it is over for ever."

His face softened, and his voice trembled with a more gentle emotion, for he thought of that lone grave on the hillside which he had so lately seen closed over his first love.

"Then you do love me?" whispered his wife; "you do love me?"

"Can you question, darling?"

"Yes, I know it is silly."

"Bessie," he exclaimed, after a moment's thought; "I cannot see the feeling—you seem changed."

"I—changed, Grantley?"

"Forgive my fault; but I feel as if there was a something which kept us apart—a mystery which I cannot penetrate—a gulf which no effort of mine can bridge."

She was a little agitated at first, but that passed away.

"What mystery could there be?" she asked at last. "I don't understand you, Grantley."

"I hardly know what I mean myself. Is it my fault, Elizabeth? Are you angry still at what I said the night you lost your bracelet?"

She did not stir; she kept the hand he held even from quivering, but the face he could not see grew white and contracted under a strong pain.

"Were you angry, Bessie?" he repeated.

"Not angry," she said, in a low voice and hesitating somewhat. "I was hurt and indignant—you ought to trust me, my husband."

"I do, dearest, I do trust you! Why should I not? There is no secret between us, Bessie—no mystery—nothing which keeps our hearts asunder!"

She was silent—she was struggling for power to speak, knowing that every second of hesitation told against her in a way which volumes of protestations could not counteract.

"There is no such cloud between us!" he said again.

"No, Grantley, no!"

She spoke almost sharply.

"Don't be angry with me, Elizabeth."

"I am not, indeed I am not!"

She was speaking firmly now—her voice was a little hard, like that of a person making an effort to appear natural.

"I am angry, but I ask you to reason—to reflect. What secret could I have—what mystery!"

"None, wife, none; I know that!"

"And yet you cannot be at rest?"

"I am—I will be."

For a few moments they sat together in silence, then Mellen said:

"Even in your past, Bessie, you have no secret!"

"None," she answered, and her voice was perfectly open and sincere now. "There is not in all my girlhood one least thing that I could wish to conceal from you; it passed very quietly, it was growing very dreary and cold when you came with your love and carried me away to a brighter sunshine."

"It is so sweet to hear such words, Bessie!" he whispered, and his face grew gentle with the tide of tenderness which warmed his heart. "We have been separated so much, had so little time to realise our happiness, that neither of us have quite learned to receive it quietly—don't you think it is so, dear child?"

"I think," she exclaimed, and her voice deepened with sudden intensity. "Only trust me, my husband; trust and love me always."

"Always, child, always! My darling, I have only you in the whole world—all my hopes, my love, centre upon you—I am like a miser with one treasure in the world to lose."

"Only a treasure to you," she said, playfully; "you would be astonished to see what a commonplace pebble it is to other people."

"That is not so; you know it, Bessie."

"Never mind how it may be; if I am precious in your eyes it is all I ask."

They talked one another into serenity for the time. Their married life had been so strange that it was natural enough much of the enthusiasm of lovers should return—even in their old difficulties there had been none of the commonplace quarrels which degrade love, and wear it out much more quickly than a trouble which strikes deeper ever does.

"Since I came back," Grantley said, "I have sometimes thought it might be a little feeling towards Elsie which made you so strange."

"What feeling but kindness could I have?" she asked.

"True; it would not be like you, Bessie. You love her, don't you? It was through her we knew each other, remember that."

"I do, and very pleasantly; but I have no need to think of that to be kind and gentle with her—when have you seen me otherwise?"

"Never; I am honestly very sorry!"

"Has Elsie complained?"

"No, dear, and never had such a thought, I am certain."

"When I married you, Grantley, your sister became mine—I could not be more anxious for her, more willing to guard and cherish her, if she had been a legacy from my own dead mother than I am now."

"I am certain of that, and I love and honor you for it. But in your place I should perhaps be annoyed even to have a sister share affection with me."

"It is not like your love for me—"

"No, no; no love could be like that! But Elsie is such a child, such a happy, innocent creature, and I never look at her without remembering my dying mother's last words. If any harm came to her, Bessie, I think I could not even venture to meet that lost mother in heaven."

"No harm will come to her, Grantley—none shall!"

"I think she is one of those creatures born to be happy; I trust she may never have a great trial to all her life. I don't believe she could endure it; she would fade like a flower."

"It is impossible to tell how any one would receive suffering," Elizabeth replied; "sometimes those very fragile natures are best able to bear up and find an elasticity which prevents sorrow taking a deep root."

"It may be so; but I could not bear to have any pain come near her—I would rather it struck my own heart."

"Could any one be more lighthearted and careless than she is?"

"Oh, she is happy as a bird—only let us keep her so."

Even into the utmost sacredness of their affection that sister's image must be brought—it did cause Elizabeth pain in spite of all her feeling; Mellen might have discovered that if he had seen her face. But the feeling passed—the face cleared again, and while it brightened under his loving words the strength of a great resolution settled down upon it.

They sat there talking for a long time, and it was the happiest, most peaceful day they had spent since Mellen's return.

After a long gallop over the hills will do you good," he said; "it is a shame to spend such weather in the house."

While he ordered the horses Elizabeth went up to her dressing-room to put on her habit.

She dressed herself without assistance, and with a feverish haste which brought the color to her face and the light of excitement to her eyes.

Tom dropped on his knees while Elsie leisurely selected the flower; she was talking all the while, and Tom on his part would have been glad to prolong the operation indefinitely, for the pleasure of having her little face so close to his, and her hands flirting the blossoms about his lips.

"No," pursued she, "I am tired of brilliant men; they always make my head ache with their grand talk. You know I'm a childish little thing, and I like childish discussions; don't suit me."

"You're a fairy, a witch, an enchanted princess!" cried Tom.

"And everybody must obey me," replied Elsie. "Perhaps a verbena would look better than a rosebud, Tom!"

Tom carefully little what she put in his buttonhole; a thistle, thorns and all, would have been precious to him if her hands had touched it, and he would have torn his fingers against the prickles with an exquisite sense of enjoyment.

"No, the rose is the prettiest," said Elsie, and she threw the verbena away, and began her task afresh.

"Are you tired; do you want to get up, Tom?"

"You know I'd rather be here than in heaven!" he exclaimed.

Elsie gave him one of her bewildering glances.

"You don't mean that," said she; "you know you don't!"

"I do, I do! Oh, Elsie!"

"Keep still, keep still," she interrupted. "You jump about so that I can't fasten the rose; there, I've lost the pin—look what you've done!"

She was so busy in her work now that her face bent quite close to his, her fair curls touched his cheeks, her soft breath fanned on his temples, and the intoxication of the moment carried Tom beyond all power of self-restraint.

He snatched Elsie's two hands and cried out:

"I must speak; I shall die if I don't! I haven't said a word since I came back; I know it's useless; I have no right to speak—but I do love you."

She struggled faintly for an instant, then allowed him to keep her hands in his, and looked down into his face through her drooping lashes till Tom's head fairly reeled.

"Don't be angry with me," he pleaded; "don't drive me away! I'll never open my lips; just let me look at you. You can't think how much I love you, Elsie. I'd cut myself into inch pieces if it would do you any good. I'd die for you."

"Not rather your wife?" whispered Elsie.

Tom caught the words; a mad hope sprang up in his honest heart; he knew it was folly, but he could not subdue it.

"If you could only learn to love me," he went on, hurriedly; "I'd be a slave to you, Elsie! I am rich now; I could give you everything your heart desired; if you could only care for me; such lots of candies and pretty things."

"You sweet boy, Tom," she returned, in that same trifling whisper which shook his every nerve.

"Oh, don't bring that up as a claim," he said; "what was I born for except to be useful to you? But I love you so; if you could only make up your mind to endure my ugliness and my awkward ways."

"You are too great a big fellow to be ugly," said Elsie; "and I don't care if you are awkward. I am sick of men that walk about like ballet-dancers."

"You only say that to cut off goodness," said Tom; "you are afraid of hurting my feelings."

"Don't I always say what I think?" rejoined she.

"But you don't care for me—you couldn't love me!"

"You have told me so three times already."

"Of course I am making a fool of myself," groaned Tom; "it's like me—it's to be expected."

"Of course," said Elsie.

But she had given me something in her face and voice which made him persevere. He had never thought to speak such words to her again, but this was the last, last time; but he must spoil his whole heart now, she should see the exact truth.

In his great love and excitement Tom forgot his bashfulness, his awkward tricks; he did not halt in his speech, he poured out his story in strong, manly words, that must have awakened at least a feeling of respect in any woman's bosom.

"I tell you once myself," continued Tom. "I thought absence—entire change—might make a difference in my feelings. But when the two years ended I came back to find my love grown deeper from the lapse of time, with every feeling more firmly centred there."

"Good old Tom!" murmured Elsie; "honest and true!"

"You speak kindly," he said. "You pity me—at least you pity me! But you couldn't love me; you said it impossible, and we get up—I mustn't talk any more—let me go!"

But Elsie's hand still rested upon his shoulder, and she did not stir.

"You could not love me," repeated Tom; "never, never: you have told me so over so many times."

"I was silly and wicked," she whispered; "I am wiser now."

Her words lifted Tom into the seventh heaven. He cried out:

"Don't trifle with me now, Elsie—not just now—I couldn't stand it!"

"I am not trifling with you, Tom."

"You don't mean that you care for me? No, no—of course not—I'm a fool! You couldn't love me, Elsie?"

His voice was broken and low. He waited for her to push him away, to break the spell rudely, but her hand never moved from his shoulder. It seemed to rest there with a caressing pressure, as a bird settles on a fondling hand, and still the fair curls swept his cheek.

"Elsie! Elsie!" he cried, half-wild with those mingled emotions.

"Good old Tom," she murmured again, "honest and true!"

"Oh, that you are in earnest! May I hope?" he almost sobbed. "Could you take me, Elsie? Let me be your slave—ready to tend you—to care for you—only living for your happiness!"

Elsie's mode changed; she shook her head archly:

"You would grow tired of petting me."

"Never, never! You know it!"

"I should be a dreadful little tyrant—it is in my nature; you would never have a will of your own."

"I wouldn't want it; I wouldn't ask it!"

"I should flirt and drive you wild."

"I would never try to stop you."

"I should tease you incessantly."

"You'd only make me the happier."

"I should tell you all sorts of fibs."

"There would be no necessity, for I would not dispute your wishes."

"You would grow tired of that."

"Only try me and see."

"Indeed, indeed, I love me always, and pet me, and never get out of patience, and think I was perfect."

"I couldn't—I should—I always shall! Oh, Elsie, Elsie, I love you so—I love you so!"

"Get up, Tom; you are a foolish old goosey!"

He started up at her light, happy playful words were a cruel waking. He stood before her painfully white, and there was a suppressed sob in his voice as he cried, in passionate reproach:

"Oh, Elsie! Elsie!"

She gave a wicked laugh at his distress.

"So you really were in earnest!" she demanded.

"You know that I was," he said. "You are cruel—cruel!"

"Ah, now you are angry—now you begin to hate me!"

"Never, Elsie! If you tore my heart and stamped on it, I could not hate you."

"But you are angry; and you said you could be patient."

"I could, if you cared for me only the least bit!"

"Are you a reasonable monster? Then kneel down again; you have shaken my flower out of your coat."

"No," said Tom, passionately; "I can't play now! This is dreadful earnest to me, Elsie, however great your love for me."

"Then you refuse my gift?"

"I can't trifle now—look at it."

"And you mean to rush off and leave me?"

"I had better. I'm too big a fool to stay. Oh, I believe I shall go crazy!"

"Very well, if you refuse me my one little wish!"

"If I stay if you want me to," he said. "I'll do anything you bid me. But do be serious for a minute, Elsie. Just answer me one question."

"Only one? Will that satisfy you?"

"To set the matter at rest," pursued he, "I'll never trouble you again. I won't open my lips—"

"Then how shall I know what you want to ask?" she interrupted.

Tom fairly groaned.

"I do believe you are a witch, Elsie; one of those snow-women in the old German stories."

"Lurlei—Lurlei!" she sang, flourishing the blossom about his head and covering him with their brightness.

Tom dashed off the flowers in a blind despair. The scene was growing too much for him to bear.

"You're very dreary," he cried, "I'll go! I shan't trouble you again. I hope the day may never come when you will be sorry, Elsie."

He was so pale and so excitedly earnest as he strove to rise from his knees that she was absolutely terrified.

"Tom, don't look so!" she exclaimed. "I only wanted to have you by me because you leave me for the world; I should be wretched!"

"Now you are kind again! I will stay. I won't tire you with talking of my love now."

"But I want to hear," interrupted Elsie.

"Oh, Elsie, Elsie, I will confess my good! I suffer, Elsie, I suffer!"

"Tom, you're gone—what you call a goney!"

"I know it, dear!"

"And you are just as blind as a bat."

"I suppose I am," he replied, patiently.

"And you're too stupid to live," cried Elsie, going over to a new sentiment; "don't you know a woman can say one thing and mean another?"

"Yes," said Tom, with more energy, "I do know that. I know it too well."

"Great Mr. Wisdom!" said she mockingly. "Then can't you understand—don't you see?"

He looked at her in bewildered surprise. She was smiling tenderly in his face.

"Elsie!" he cried.

"I let her hands fall in his.

"I don't want you to go," she whispered, "never —never!"

"You love me—you will marry me?"

She did not speak, but she made no resistance when Tom, with trembling hands and tear-filmed kisses on her face, uttering broken words, too utterly bewildered to understand anything except that happiness had descended upon his long night at length.

But very soon Elsie raised herself, pushed him off and said, with a little air of wickedness:

"I'll tease you to death, Tom!"

"Never, never, my love, my beloved. "Oh, say it once—say 'I love you'!"

"I do love you, Tom—there!"

In an instant she flashed up again, while he was covering her hands with kisses, crying:

"My love! My wife! My last last!"

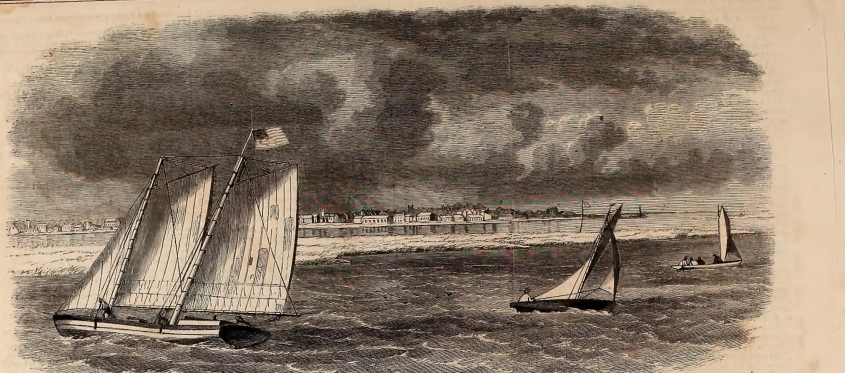
"No more sentiment," said she. "Let's be reasonable, Tom; the catastrophe has reached a climax."

But it was a long time before Tom Fuller could regain composure enough to talk at all coherently, or in what Elsie termed a sensible manner.

"It's so selfish," he said. "And to have so much happiness just when I thought the last rope was going out of my hands. Why, I'm like the fellow who clung all night to the side of a precipice, expecting every moment to be dashed down a thousand feet, and when daylight came found he had hung within a foot of the ground all the while!"

"The comparison is apt and delicious," said Elsie, laughing.

"And you love me! Only say it again, Elsie—just once!"



"I won't!" said she. "But I'll box your ears if you don't stop behaving like a crazy man."

Tom gave one of those bursts of laughter that fairly shook the room, caught Elsie up in his arms and ran twice with her across the floor, paying no more attention to her cries and struggles than if she had been a baby.

"That's for punishment!" said Tom.

"Let me down! Please let me down!" pleaded Elsie. "I know you'll drop me! Oh, you hurt me, Tom!"

But Tom took ample revenge in the way of kisses before he released her, then he placed her on the sofa and seated himself by her side. But she started away and ran upstairs, sending back a laugh of defiance.

BEAUFORT, NORTH CAROLINA, FROM MORSHEAD CITY.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, F. H. SCHELL.

THE DANISH WAR.

Saxon Army Train at Rendsburg.

THE WAR which the German States began against Denmark, ostensibly to support the claims of the Prince of Augustenburg to the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein, is no longer covered even with that mask. The Prince is never alluded to now. The movement is controlled, not by Germanic Confederation which kindled the fire, but by Prussia and Austria. Prussia fights for conquest. Already Holstein is spoken of as about to be annexed to her present dominions. Schleswig may ultimately be left to Denmark. In this duchy the Danish element is strong. As might be expected in so mixed a population, there are Danish sympathisers in the southern portions of the country and men of German "procivities" in the northern; but, in general terms, the divisions of the people are as we have stated. Still further north, in Jutland, the people are nearly unmixed Danes.

Our illustration this week is a good sketch of the Saxon army train entering Rendsburg, a town in the Germanic portion of the territory.

IT IS a gross error to suppose that you rid yourself of a troublesome acquaintance by lending him money. We've tried it; and, by Jove! gentle reader, it only encouraged his visits all the more!

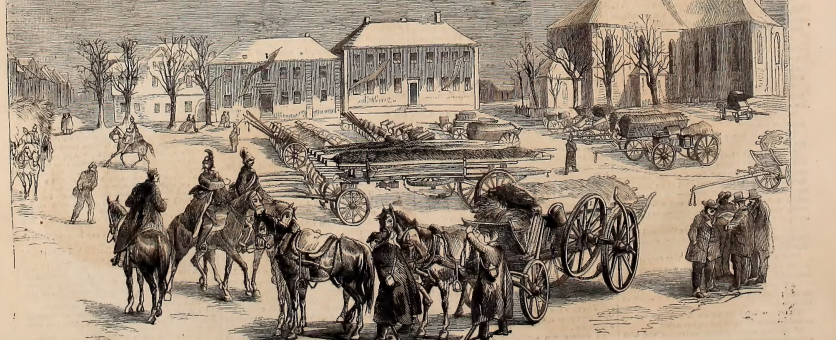
THE U. S. STEAMER ACACIA AND STEAMTUG IRIS

Engaging Rebel Batteries at Bull's Bay, S. C., March 9, 1864.

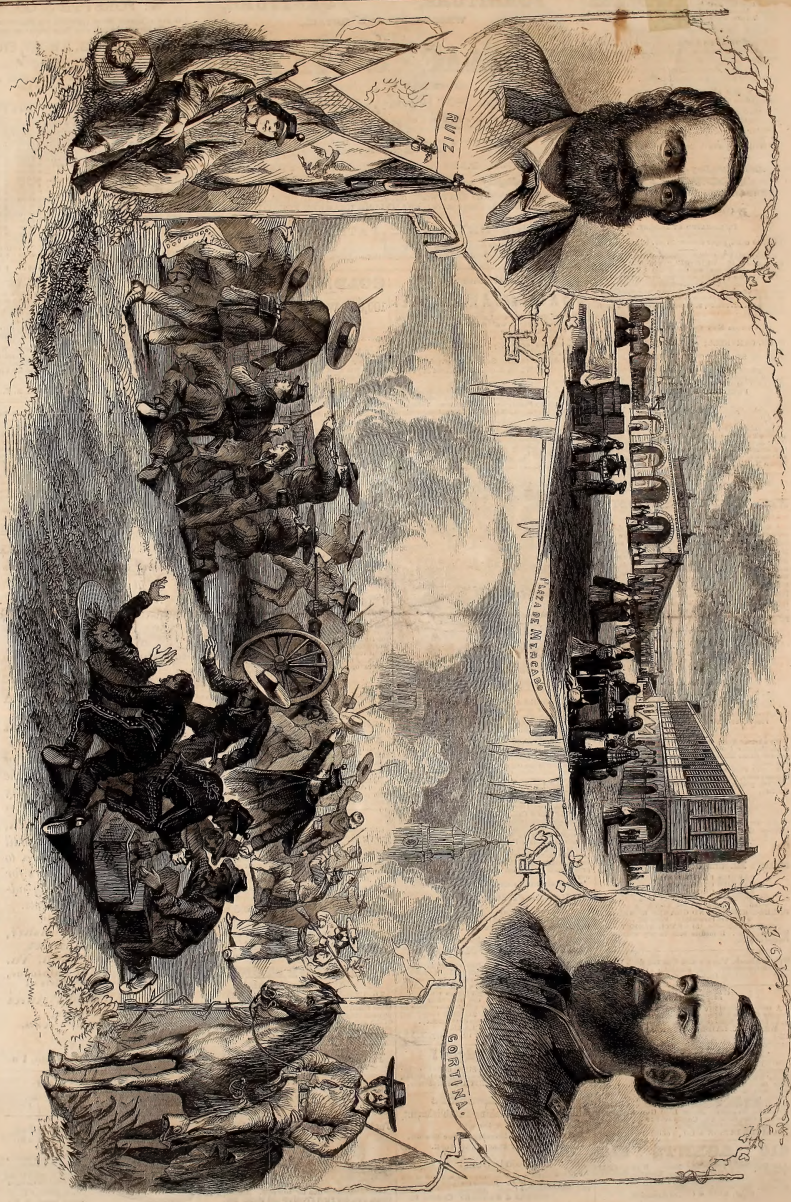
A SMALL force from Gen. Terry's command sailed from Stone inlet on the 8th, for the purpose of making a reconnoissance at Bull's bay, S.C. This was done under the cover of the action shown in our sketch, the engaging of the rebel batteries by the U. S. steamer Acacia and the steamtug Iris. The expedition landed and explored the vicinity for 24 hours. Bull's bay is a good harbor, and it will be recollected was the original destination of the Dupont and Dahlgren expedition. It is about 25 miles north of Charleston.

Our Artist on this occasion is an officer on one of the vessels engaged, and he gives a tribute to the superiority of our marine views. Par contre he describes the merriment caused among naval men by a view in another journal of the "Hoisting of the Stars and Stripes at Sunrise."

"We were not aware," says he, "of any change in existing regulations altering the time for hoisting the ensign from the usual hour (8 A. M. in summer and 9 A. M. in winter) to sunrise. The ceremony is superintended by an officer (by his stripes) of the rank of Lieut.-Commander, who, flurried by turning out at such an unusual hour, has put his sword on the wrong side. No wonder! who ever saw a Lieut.-Commander on deck at sunrise? We refrain from speaking of the remarkable gun-carriage, or of the jolly tar sitting on the rail of the quarter-deck."



U. S. STEAMER ACACIA AND STEAMTUG IRIS ENGAGING THE REBEL BATTERIES AT BULL'S BAY, S. C., BEFORE THE LANDING OF THE TROOPS, MARCH 9.



BEAUFORT, N. C.

BEAUFORT is an important place in North Carolina, periodically threatened by the rebels, who fret and fume over our possession of their sea coast. Our sketch gives a view of Beaufort, from Morehead city.

Beaufort was, in other days, a port of entry. It is the capital of Carteret county, and stands at the mouth of Newport river, a few miles from the sea. The harbor is considered the best in the State, and is defended by Fort Macon, so gallantly taken by our forces. The lighthouse on Cape Lookout is fortunately still standing. Beaufort contained, in 1863, about 2,000 inhabitants. Its chief buildings are those of the foundry, a few churches and seminaries.

THE GERMAN WAR AGAINST DENMARK—THE SAXON ARMY TRAIN AT RENDSBURG.—FROM A SKETCH BY A. BECK

THE LATE CIVIL WAR IN MATAMORAS, WITH PORTRAITS OF GENS. RUIZ AND CORTINA.—FROM SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. ESTEVIL.—PAGE 39

A SCHOOLBOY'S ASPIRATION.—"Oh, how I wish I were a fountain, for then I could always be playing!"

WANTED, a strong adhesive plaster, to make busybodies stick to their own business.

WHY is a sheep like a new dress? Because it does not suffer any harm when you fold it.

WHAT similarity is there between a nose and a violin? They each have a bridge.

"PAPA, do people buy snuff?"

"Yes, my dear. Why?"

"Well, then, why do people say they take it?"

Published this Day.

VICTORIA;

THE HEIRESS OF CASTLE CLIFFE.

By COUSIN MAY CARLETON.

ILLUSTRATED BY DARLEY.

Price 50 cents, paper covers; 75 cts. bound in cloth.

COUSIN MAY has fairly surpassed herself in the composition of "VICTORIA," and peculiar as her writings are known to be, we fancy that "VICTORIA" will make the greatest sensation ever achieved by a female writer. The deepest commiseration with the very first paragraph of the first chapter, and steadily increasing interest involving the most heart-rending varieties of adventure, sentiment, esprit and dramatic climax.

Cousin May Carleton's Novels.

SYBIL CAMPBELL; or, THE QUEEN OF THE ISLE.
SILVER STAR; or, THE MYSTERY OF FONTELLE HALL.
ERMINE; or, THE CURSEY'S VOW.

Are published uniform in style and price with "VICTORIA." Mailed free of postage on receipt of price by FREDERIC A. BRADY, Publisher.
No. 24 Ann Street, N. Y.

Carriages.

The subscriber has now on hand a SPLENDID ASSORTMENT of CARRIAGES of all descriptions, warranted perfect both as to style and material. First-class workmen only will be offers on reasonable terms. C. WITTY, 480 Broadway and 66 Crosby Street, N. Y. 444-8

Latest Invention
IN GOLD PENS
JUST OUT.

After years of patient research it has been demonstrated now, for the first time, that a genuine Gold Pen, with Iridium or Diamond point, and possessing all the elasticity and durability of the highest-priced Pen made, can be produced at prices far below anything of the kind heretofore offered. Years have been spent in trying to produce an Elastic and Diamond-pointed Pen at a low figure, and until now all attempts have been futile. We have nothing to say against parties advertising low-priced Pens and selling them Gold. We know that ours is the only Solid Gold and Genuine Diamond-pointed Needle Pen in the market that can be afforded at anywhere near our prices.

Trade Prices, per Dozen.

No. 2. Medium Pen.....$4 50
No. 3. Large Pen.....$5 75
No. 4. Engrossing Pen.....$8 50
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders, in Morocco Case (extra per doz.).....$4 00

Sample Pens.

No. 2. Medium Pen.....40 cts.
No. 3. Large Pen.....50 cts.
No. 4. Engrossing Pen.....75 cts.
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders, in Morocco Case (extra).....50 cts.

WARRANTED.

We warrant Every Pen for one year, and to be Solid Gold, Genuine Iridium or Diamond-pointed, and to possess all the Elasticity of the most Expensive Gold Pen made.

We will send sample Pens to any address in the United States, postage paid, on receipt of price.

Money properly Registered and Sealed comes at our risk.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
Sole Manufacturers,
No. 161 Broadway, N. Y.

New Catalogue of Jewelry sent free.
Address THOS. CAFFENTY & CO.,
Principal Depot—No. 294 TENTH STREET, near Fourth avenue. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price. 439-51

Baker's Rheumatic Balm,

BAKER'S FEVER COOLER.
BAKER'S COUGH MIXTURE.
BAKER'S CROUP ALLEVIATOR.

are four remedies which no family should be ever without. Price $1 per bottle each. Also, BAKER'S LINIMENT AND GALVANIC REMEDIES, which are invaluable. Price $5. Sent, rear Principal Depot—No. 294 TENTH STREET, near Fourth avenue. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price. 439-51

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite.
Send stamp for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELAFO. 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Diphtheria."

A certain preventive, and sure, safe and simple remedy for this severe and dangerous disease, may be had by addressing (enclosing stamp for reply)
DR. OTIS C. LADLOW, 12 Astor Place, N. Y.
445-8

Popular Glee Books.

MUSICAL LYRA. A New Collection of Glees' Quartets, Trios, Choruses, &c., &c. Young Folks' Glee Book. $1. The Western Bell. $1. Union Star. 60 cents. Tuneful Hours. $1. Family Circle Glee Book, a collection with Piano Accompaniments, 2 vols., each, $1. Boston Melodeon, 2 vols., each, $1. Boston Glee Book. $1 25. Tyrolean Lyre. $1. Concordia. 75 cents. Jenny Lind Glee Book. $1. National Glee Book. $1. Copies sent to any address, postpaid on receipt of the price.
OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers Something New! Burglar-Proof Traveller's Iron Trunk, Fireproof Safe, Egyptian Cement, Marty Tucker, etc., etc. 20 other Novel and Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.
S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau st., N. Y.

FURNITURE,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),
No. 87 Bowery, New York.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash.

Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE AND WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.

TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each. Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

25 Cent Legal Tender Circular.

$15 A DAY AND A WATCH FREE!

Reader, delay not; send at once for our New Free Circular whether you want it or not, and we will return to you the postage on your letter or its equivalent, as we want every person to have a Circular it astonishes everybody; defies competition, and outstrips competitors.

1,000 Agents wanted. Samples $5 cts. Address
WEIR & C...., 505 Chesnut St., Phila.

$75 A MONTH.—I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.
439-51

The Great Money-Making Article.
Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
000 H. HARTIN. Hinsdale, N. H.

Hostetter's
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

REINFORCE NATURE.—After having plundered in the dark for ages, the world at last begins to understand that the human system cannot resist or throw off the attacks of disease through the agency of depleting medicines. Strength of constitution, stomach of nerve, strength in the vital principal organization—these are the only safeguards against the manifold elements which continually surround us. The exhausting heat of summer drain away the vital fluid which is the only security for health, and those who are not aware of the necessity for recruiting their bodily energies at this season, do not understand, philosophically, the laws of their own being. The great Tonic upon which experience has taught the public to rely, as a means of invigorating, regulating and protecting all the important organs of the body is HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS, and there is no season of the year when this inestimable invigorant is more useful than now. In the crowded city, in unhealthy regions where Intermittent and Bilious Fevers prevail, in fact, wherever man are congregated, whether in large or small numbers, the necessity for a pure Tonic and Alterative exists, and HOSTETTER'S BITTERS may be safely pronounced the purest and the best in the known world.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 476 Broadway.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT—A Powerful Stimulant—Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Onguent and finding it not as represented three weeks, as per the Directions, can have money returned to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Sent by mail, free of postage, to any address on receipt of the money.
Address C. CLARK,
445-57 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

Army Badges!

Of Every Description and New Styles made to order. Agents will receive a liberal commission on all orders.
Address R. KEITH, 208 Broadway.

MADAME BENEDICT'S
Millinery & Dressmaking Establishment,
Is now replete with
Every Imported Novelty of the Season.
12 WAVERLEY PLACE, NEW YORK. 000

Gold! Gold!

Full Instructions in Ventriloquism, and how to use the enclosing locs of the opposite sex, sent by mail to any person for Five Cents. Address JAEGER & MANDLEY, Calhoun, Ill.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!

100,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.

WORTH $500,000,

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing a full list of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

Six Certificates can be ordered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $10.
Address C. F. SHULTS,
439-51 33 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

The World's Conqueror!

For Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, &c. No person need despair while a bottle of this medicine is left. Send for circular and you will be convinced that it is no equal. Price $1. Six bottles for $5.
DR. CLINTON KUYPERS,
000 Office, 36 Beekman street, N. Y.

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most Splendid Cards ever published—including the French Dancing Girl; Venus Sporting with Love; Bedtime; Remarkably Charleston; Sinking the 290; etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 13 cards.
G. W. TUMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

MOSKWA!

For Chronic and Inflammatory Rheumatism, Hip Complaint, Paralyzed Limbs, White Swellings, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Sciatica, Pains in the Breast, Thighs, Shoulders, Back and Limbs, Stiff Joints, Sore Side or Loins, etc. etc. The Abundant Testimonials of this remedy have induced the Proprietor to note not only his Thousands but his Tens of Thousands cured in the last 40 years of his practice, and to challenge the world to produce an article of superior merit, as the Ingredients combined possess virtues of the highest order, Afflicted sufferers, try it! Price $1—six bottles for $5. Sold by all Druggists.
DR. CLINTON KUYPERS,
000 Office, 36 Beekman St., N. Y.

Fountain Pens.—No Intestand required. One filling will write 12 hours. Also, all other styles of Gold Pens. Send for Circular.
G. F. HAWKES, Sole Manufacturer,
445-57 24 Nassau Street, N. Y.

A New Book.
Physiology of Love. Cloth; gilt edges. Sent by mail on receipt of price.
000 VICTOR DELAFO., 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

Shuits' Onguent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

Soldiers Robbed!

Thousands of soldiers have been robbed of their money and are daily robbed in time due to time for the want of just such an article as Howard's Pat. Money Belts. They are secure, and no one can get at them, with compartments for Letters, Greenbacks and Photographs. Sent free by return mail on receipt of price—$2.
HOWARD BELT CO., 426 Broadway, N. Y.

Sensible Present
For a Soldier.

One of Howard's Pat. Money Belts—writer and secret pocket with compartments for Letters, Greenbacks and Photographs. They are Light, Durable and Elegant and every part of the country free, by return mail, on receipt of price—$2.
HOWARD BELT CO., 426 Broadway, N. Y.

EMPLOYMENT
At your own Homes.

THOUSANDS CAN REALISE A HUNDRED DOLLARS WEEKLY.—No utensils required except those found in every household; profits 100 per cent.; demand staple as flour. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage. Address C. MUNRO BROWN, No. 78 Hudson Street, N. Y.

Beautiful False Moustaches 50 cents and $1 a pair—by mail. Sent free by mail.
Address C. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

To all who want to engage in a profitable and easy business. I would say send $1 and find how to make $300 in a very short time. No capital is required. Address S. BARKER, Cumberland, Md.

Just What Every Family Wants!

SAVAGE & CO.'S NO CHIMNEY BURNERS for Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene oil with a brilliant light, without chimney, smoke or odor. Saves 40 per cent. Office, 209 BROADWAY STREET, N. Y. Agents wanted. Send for Circular. Sample sent free for 50 cents. American Institute awarded First Premium and Medal, 1863.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office),
offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	Each
150 Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
250 Ladies' Gold Watches	$10
500 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	$18
2000 Vest and Neck Chains	$5 00 to $10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00
5000 Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00
5000 Gents' Breast Pins	2 50 to 8 00
3000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 4 00
3850 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 4 00
3850 Sets of Sleeve Buttons	2 00 to 4 00
3850 Sleeve Buttons	2 00 to 4 00
5000 Pin Rings	2 00 to 4 00
3850 Stone Set Rings	2 00 to 4 00
3850 Lockets	2 00 to 4 00
10000 Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
25000 Gold Pens, Silver Mtd Holders	4 00 to 8 00
5000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 8 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the heaviest and most fashionable styles, and samples of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, that parties at a fair chance. Send by mail for 25 cents each; and on receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to send Over Dollar and take the article named in it, or not. Five Certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty-two, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred, $15; Certificate money to be enclosed with order. Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate, provided their remittance amounts to $1, and more liberal inducement to those who act as Agents. Send for Circular. Address
W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and read will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, free, with correspondence in courtship, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cts., together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest, filled with secrets. Price 25 cents; sealed. Address Dr. A. Edwin T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 42 Days."
Dont be humbugged with ONGUENTS. The GREAT RECORD FULL-FILLING is in BOOK of WONDERS, 12,000 sold. 15th Ed. Only 25 cts.; 5 for $1.
Address C. S. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

Ten years in the Business.

Patrons counted by thousands in every State of the Union.

A Premium for all!

Evans' New Enterprise, 1864, $300,000 worth of New Goods,

consisting of

Gold and Silver Watches, Jewelry, Vest and Guard Chains, Gold Pens, Pencils, Lockets, Medallions, Sets of Jewelry, &c., &c.,

together with a large line of goods especially adapted to the wants of our Soldiers, Army and Navy, to be sold in

lots at One Dollar Each,

and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive. Premium Orders for above goods, sent to any address, on receipt of 10 cents.

Send your orders to

G. G. EVANS, Publisher,
630 Chestnut Street,
Philadelphia, Pa.

N. B. A classified Catalogue of Books will be sent free.

Photograph Card Pictures and Albums, sent on receipt of 5 cents.

Address,

G. G. EVANS,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Straight Hair Made Wavy.
Without heating it, by using
SPENCE PATENT HAIR CRIMPERS.
For Sale at Variety Stores. 434-46

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office
FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers Amateurs, etc., etc.

And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular
J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, Jr. V.

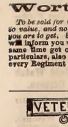
J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!



To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
326 Broadway, New York.

VETERAN

VETERAN

Soldiers!

Solid 18 k. Gold, $6 50.

We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Pins for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field at $1 50 each; also, all the various Army Badges worn by the different armies, for the single one, 100 or 1,000. Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a Circular. Address

DEOWSE & MOORE,
Manufg Jewellers,
308 Broadway, N. Y.
Solid Silver, $1 50.

Broker's Stock of unredeemed goods for sale at $1 for each article, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable goods, worth from 5 cents to $300 each. Circulars giving full particulars sent to any address. Any one sending 25 cents we will inform them in advance what article they will receive, giving a description of the same, with the price as sold at retail. Any article ordered, if it does not prove as described, we will refund the money.

For further particulars address, with 3c. stamp,
A. HAMLEN & CO., 58 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.

$5 For One of Most Interesting Rebel Letters ever Captured by the Yankees. Mailed free to any address on receipt of 50 cts. Address A. LANDELL, Co. H, 10th Ind. Infantry, Kingsdell, Ga.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAM-EL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enameller, will whiten the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of 50 cts. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 183 South Seventh Street, and 41 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

J. G. SCHULL,
MERCHANT TAILOR
32 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings, which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash.

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

Sewing Machines
438-57o No. 505 BROADWAY, N. Y.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pen Cils, Oversold Pens, and 13 other articles. 15 Circulars free. JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Me.

CHLOASMA, OR MOTH PATCHES!

Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion, as the discolored patches on the skin show more strongly on blondes than on brunettes, but they contribute greatly in rendering a handsome face ugly; and anything that will remove moth patches, without injuring the skin in texture or color, must no doubt be considered a great achievement in medical science. Dr. B. C. Perry, a Bond street, having devoted his whole time and attention to Diseases of the Skin, will guarantee to remove Moth Patches, Freckles and other Discolorations of the Face without injury to either texture or color of the skin. His success in this as in other branches of his specialty—DISEASES OF THE SCALP AND LOSS OF HAIR—will warrant him in guaranteeing a CURE IN EVERY CASE. For particulars, address, enclosing stamp,

DR. B. C. PERRY, 49 Bond Street, N. Y.

Stereoscopic Views, Cartes de Visites—New Books. Send for Catalogue. C. B. HARRISON, P. O. Box 2,111, Boston, Mass. 445-52

The Old Established and only reliable Purchasing Agency doing business since 1849. Parties desiring anything they see advertised or any information, can obtain it by enclosing a 3c. stamp for Circular to HENRY STEPHENS, 93 Nassau St., N. Y. 445-8

K. W. BENICKEY,
At his well-known
PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY,
No. 9 New Chambers Street,

Has now increased facilities to take Cartes de Visite as well as other Photographs, in the best style. Notwithstanding the increase in price of different materials, the charges are the same and the quality the best.

Card Pictures $1 50 per doz.—5 for $1.
Card Vignettes $2 per doz.
Large Size Photographs, 2 for $1.
All other Photographs up to life size colored in oil or water at the most reasonable prices.

$5 Particular attention given to Copying Cards or Ambrotypes into Large Photographs. The smallest or most defaced picture can be, by the aid of his experienced artists, copied into a handsome photograph. Every attention paid to visitors—taking to examine the specimens.

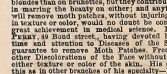
Remington's
Army and Navy
REVOLVER!
Approved by the Government.
Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.
E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.
438-50

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, Rebel imprintations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
609 special correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Beware, Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any Queen baker."
609e

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome dandruff, and to render it free from parasites containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the heated feeling and pain of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S MINERAL HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled in keeping the hair in curl.



HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM gives to the hair the same tint; changes oils and colors the hair at the same time; dresses light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER imparts beauty to the complexion, is harmless to the skin, and preserves youthfulness of appearance. Sold everywhere.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 16 University Place.

Swords, Sashes, Belts.
Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords, &c. B. KITTREDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.
437-52

Do You Want to get Married?
"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, Illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy," or the Art, showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry whoever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps. Address
E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1,826, Portland, Me.
442-48

We have furnished our Wesson's Rifles as follows:

State of Kentucky	1,366
State of Indiana	750
General Hooker's Staff	250
Colonel Collins	220
Capt. Buck's Co.,	Chillicothe, O.
Col. Gandy's	" Kansas.
Capt. Child's	" Athens, Ill.
Capt. Wayland's Co.,	Shelbyville, Mo.
Capt. Hunter's	" Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Hunter's	" Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Oldt	" Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 12, 1862.

DEAR SIR—The Rifles (31) were put to a severe test on the 7th, at the State Fair, AND WON A STAND OF COLORS, in a contest against THREE INFANTRY COMPANIES. They were to fire in squads of ten, each man having three shots, and to shoot at the command "Fire." We were OUT-NUMBERED TWO HUNDRED shots by the infantry. Distance 300 yards. We hit the target 45 times out of 100 shots. The greatest number of hits by the infantry was 19 out of 100 shots, showing the superiority of the KITTREDGE (Wesson) Gun.

M. S. GRANT,
Col. 1st Kansas Cav.

MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.

B. KITTREDGE & CO.,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning and a caution of young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc.; supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope, Single Copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYPAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings county, N. Y. 000

WEDDING CARDS.

Fresh New Papers, Suits and Styles Type, etc.
J. Rosenfeld, 841 Broadway, cor. Duane St.
For specimens by mail, send 25 cents.
000

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY'S NEW UNION PLAYING CARDS.
National Emblems.

Ace of Eagles.

The suits are Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags. Colonel in place of King; Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Page for Jack.

The Union Playing Cards are the first and only Complete American Cards ever produced, and as they are entered according to Act of Congress, they can be manufactured only by the American Card Company.

These Cards are rapidly taking the place of Cards bearing Foreign emblems. The demand for them is unprecedented in the Card Trade, and they will soon become the Leading Card in the American market.

In playing with these Cards, they are to be called by the names the emblems represent, and as the emblems are as familiar as household words everywhere among the people of the American Republic, they can be used as readily the first occasion as Cards bearing Foreign emblems.

The Union Cards are the most pleasing and attractive Card ever made. They are produced in the highest style of the art, and each pack is put up in an elegant Card Case, suitable to keep them in when not in use, and then in handsome down boxes for the trade.

Two Sample Packs, in Card Cases, sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address
AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
15 Chamber Street, New York.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry by means of Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 300 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address 36 White Street, New York.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

Have now been before the public for nearly a year. They are universally pronounced the neatest and best fitting collar extant.

The upper edge presents a perfect curve, free from the angles and points of other collars.

The cravat causes no puckers on the inside of the turn-down collar—they are AS SMOOTH INSIDE AS OUTSIDE—and therefore perfectly free and easy to the neck.

The Garotte collar has a smooth and evenly finished edge on both sides.

These Collars are not simply flat pieces of paper cut in the form of a collar, but are MOLDED AND SHAPED TO FIT THE NECK.

They are made in "Novelty" (or turn-down style), in every half size from 12 to 17 inches, and in Garotte from 12 to 18 inches; and packed in "solid state" in neat blue cartons, containing 12 collars of one size each. Sold by the latter a very handy package for Travellers, Army and Navy officers.

$5 EVERY COLLAR is stamped

"Gray's Patent Molded Collar."

Sold by all dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The Trade supplied by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
81 Devonshire St., Boston.
J. B. Lowrey & Co., 37 Warren St., New York; Van Deusen, Boehmer & Co., 827 Chesnut St., Philadelphia; Hollingsworth, Bancroft & Co., Baltimore, Md.; Stephens & Co., 232 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; Edwin Gavitt & Bro., 79 Lake Street, Chicago; Cincinnati; J. Von Borries & Co., 458 Main Street, Louisville, Ky.; A. Frankenthal & Bro., 5 North Main Street, St. Louis, Mo.; Bradford Bros., Milwaukee, Wis.; Weed, Wilbert & Co., 7 to 13 Three pitonies Street, New Orleans. 441-52

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.
R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

WATCHES.

A handsome Heavy Hunting Cased Silver Composite Watch, Fine Movements, handsome white Dial and steel-polished hand; elegant finish in every respect, and in perfect running order. These Watches are composed of two metals, the outer one being the finest quality of silver, and will bear engraving of every description, and has the appearance of Sterling Silver in every respect. Sold only by the case, at $12.
Sample Watches sent free of expense on receipt of $15.

$14 $14

The great English Army Watch, in Heavy Gold Composite Hunting Cases, a fac simile of the British Army Watch. These Cases are beautifully finished, and the movements first-class and partially jewelled, and warranted good timekeepers. These cases will wear a great length. Being genuine Oride. Sold only by the case, at $20.
Sample Watches sent free of expense on receipt of $15.

$15 $15

The Great New Army Watch, especially for soldiers, in heavy and beautiful Hunting Cases of Silver, Hunting Cases, Genuine Lever movements, finely finished, Engraved, Engine-turned or plain cases; warranted as represented, and a perfect timekeeper, only $18.

$18 $18

A Lady's very elegant English Court Watch, in very small, Gold Composite Cases, Magic Spring and and sunk seconds, and a perfect timekeeper, only $16.

$16 $16

Officer's Watch—Extra Heavy American Lever Watch, in Double Bottom Coin Silver Hunting Cases, well jewelled.—Tradesmen's Watch. $35
Wm. Ellery.

$35 $35

A very handsome Double Time Duplex Stop Watch. New York and London time, sweep seconds, Jewelled in every action. Gold Balance, and in Heavy Sterling Silver Hunting Cases.

$35 $35

The Movements are Beautifully Engraved and have the patent adjusted stop, only $45

WARRANTED.

All our Watches are sent out in perfect running order, and are warranted as represented or the money refunded. A written warrantee given if Required.

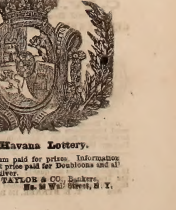
We offer great inducements to Agents. Send for Circular. Constantly on hand Watches of every description.

Postage on Watches, by the case, $2 38; Sample Registering 20 cents. Sample Watches sent free.

GEO. A. ELY & CO.,
IMPORTERS,
181 (late 208) Broadway, N. Y.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED for the New Package containing Jewelry, Gold Stationery, and a Picture in Oil Colors. Enclose stamp for Circular. Sample 30 cents.
J. L. & W. PRESCOTT,
438 Broadway, N. Y.
442-5

New York Monthly.



Get Up Clubs! Get Up Clubs!

To Clubs 60 cents per year.

Single subscription 1 per year. Sends a specimen copy; 3c cents a Song Bird. Sent, on receipt of cash, by return mail.

NEW YORK MONTHLY,
83 Nassau street, N. Y.

AGENTS.—For best chance in the world ad dress J. W. STEPHENS, Morristown, N. J.

Royal Havana Lottery.

50 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest prize paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 8 Wall Street, N. Y.

THE BEST LITERATURE

By the Best American Writers

Is found each month in the

Atlantic Monthly

Longfellow, Lowell, Hawthorne, Emerson, Holmes, Agassiz, and others of the leading writers of the country contribute regularly.

Terms, $3 a year, postage paid—25 cents a number. Liberal reduction to Clubs. Send 25 cents for a specimen number to

TICKNOR & FIELDS, Publishers,
443-55o 135 Washington street, Boston.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVERS.

Trade Mark, P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jewelled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
208 Broadway, N. Y.
o

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine St., N. Y., and receive it by return mail. o

Great Chance to Make Money!

$650,000 of Watches, Jewelry, &c.,

Given away with our STATIONERY PRIZE PACKETS.

Every AGENT purchasing 100 PACKETS will receive FREE, as a PRESENT from us, a GENUINE SILVER WATCH.

We also publish SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Agents can make more money by engaging in the sale of our PACKETS and ENGRAVINGS than in any other business. For full particulars of the SPECIAL INDUCEMENTS we offer send for our New Circular.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
36 Beekman St. N. Y.
o

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both Sexes—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South-Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. o

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
000o Williamsburg, King's Co., N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in six drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs etc., etc.

R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.
000o

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts.,

MAGNIFYING 500 times, mailed on receipt of price. Five of different powers, $1. Address F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass. o

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Send for a Circular. Pens repointed on receipt of 35 cents.

435-47o E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, prepaid, for $2 25; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by

HENRY CRAIG,
335 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Bellevue, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all eyes, for $3; with 12 assorted views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

C. W. FRENCH,

607 Broadway, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.

A large and complete stock of Men's Furnishing Goods for the fall and winter wear, combining all the novelties of the season as they appear in Paris and London.

FINE SHIRTS AND COLLARS MADE TO ORDER.

Just Received a large stock of Genuine Shaker-wool Undershirts and Drawers, very fine. Also, a large stock of English Underclothing, warm Gloves, Carriage Blankets, etc. Call and examine our stock

American, Swiss and English Watches in superior styles and quality of cases. Orders from the Trade or Army (large or small) promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 20 years.

000o T. B. BYNNER, 175 Broadway, N. Y.

"HATS OFF IN FRONT."
What I saw at the Theatre.

FINE WATCH FREE!

And $15 Per Day Made Easy,

by selling the Great "original and only genuine" Rickard's Prize and Stationery Packages, each of which contains "more real valuable articles" than any half-dozen other packages ever sold. Each Package contains Fine Writing Materials, Engravings, Fashion Plates, Fancy Articles, Yankee Notions, Games, Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Rich Presents of Fine Jewelry, etc. The whole worth several dollars if bought separate. Price 25 cents Wholesale rates to Agents low. Profits large. Sales immense. Every soldier and every family wants them. Agents wanted in every town and camp. $15 per day guaranteed, and a splendid Gold or Silver Hunting-case Watch, genuine English movements, perfect timekeeper, Presented free to each Agent. Beware of imitations.

We are the sole manufacturers of the GREAT ORIGINAL RICKARDS PRIZE PACKAGES. Each of which we have copyrighted according to law. None others are genuine. For an expose of the swindling operations as practised by other parties, see editorial in New York Tribune of Friday, Feb. 26. Send for our great new Circulars for 1864, containing "extra premium inducements, free."

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y., Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World. o

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, cured and prevented. Particulars free. Address
435-47o CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

INFANTRY PIN FOR THE SOLDIER

In coin Silver, for $1 50, including the Engraving of the Name, Co. and Regiment; also the National Battle Pin, Cavalry and Artillery Pin, Monitor, Engineer and Signal Corps Pins.

LOUIS PHILIP & CO.,
442 5o No. 2 Murray St., N. Y.

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or other fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address

o F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Ivory Jewelry!

Fine Ivory Brooches........$1 50
Ball Earrings...............$1 50
Ivory Initial Sleeve Buttons, (new style)................ 75
Pearl Initial Buttons........$1 00

Sent free, on receipt of price. A great variety on hand, at WELLING'S, 207 Centre St., N. Y., Sign of the Golden Elephant.
o

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS No. 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 000o

Wives, Mothers and Sisters,

Whose Husbands, Sons and Brothers are serving in the Army, cannot put into their knapsacks a more necessary or valuable gift than a few boxes of HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT. They insure health even under the exposures of a soldier's life. 35 cts., 88 cts., and $1 40 per box or pot. o

"BIG THING!"

SOLDIERS AND EVERYBODY, send for it. Sent free. Address CHAS. A. BALDWIN & CO., Arkport, N. Y. o

STAMMERING

And Stuttering permanently cured by Bates's Patent Prize Scientific Appliances. For (New Edition of) Pamphlets and Drawings describing the same, address

o H. C. L. MEARS, 277 West 23d St., N. Y.

10,000 Agents Wanted.

Business first-class and very profitable. Inclose stamp for letter of agency. Address o JONES & CLARK, 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

The attention of our readers is respectfully invited to the advertisement of Messrs. S. M. WARD & CO., which will be found in another part of this paper. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm, and can vouch for their responsibility in all business arrangements which they may make, as we have a thorough knowledge of their mercantile integrity and their full ability to meet all obligations.—Army and Navy Gazette. o

Ask your Sutler

To show you one of

HOWARD'S PAT. MONEY BELTS.

They will not sweat or wet through under any circumstances. Are Light, Durable and Elegant, and are made with compartments for Letters, Greenbacks and Photographs.

If your Sutler has not got them you can have one sent to you in any part of the army by return mail (postpaid) by sending price ($2), to the

HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.

Sutlers, Agents and Pedlars wanted in every Camp, Hospital and City. o

50 FIRST PREMIUMS in 1863

GROVER & BAKER'S

CELEBRATED ELASTIC STITCH

Sewing Machines

Were awarded the Highest Premiums over all competitors at the State Fairs of New York, Vermont, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Oregon, and at every respectable Institute and County Fair held in 1863.

Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, N. Y.

250 Rare Receipts.

Seventeen Electrotype Engravings.

Tells What to Do, And How to Do it.

The best Family Receipt Book ever published. Sent free, by mail, for 25 cents.

HUTCHINSON & CO., Publishers,
o 442 Broadway, N. Y.

Human Faces

AND "SIGNS OF CHARACTER," illustrated with Portraits of distinguished persons. Psychology. News from Dreamland. Mind and Body. Our Social Relations. A Happy Woman. Six Generations at Once. Rapid Multiplication. Wisdom in Love-making. Standards of Beauty. Savage Warfare. Indian War-Talk. Planning a Massacre. An Escape. Photography. Art and Artists. Sleep, its Necessity. A New Book Wanted. Lines on Noses. Sunday Schools, an address by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Clarke, of R. I. A Hint to Teachers. Law of Association. Teaching adapted to Temperament. Erroneous Idea of Religion. Sunday Schools must be made attractive. Rev. Dr. Bellows, Dr. John S. Darcy and Lieut. W. Pittenger, with Portraits, Characters and Biographies, with heads of Napoleon, Menchicoff, Charlotte Corday, Queen Catharine, Richter, Bishop Eastburn. All this and much more given in the April No. Illustrated Phrenological Journal. Only 15 cents, by first post, or $1 50 a year. Address

2o FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Salesmen Wanted.—Salary Paid. Address (with stamp) to Harris Bros., Boston, Mass. 435-47o

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, sent free, by mail, in neat case, only $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7. Specially adapted to the Army.

$15 European Timekeeper $15

OR COMPASS WATCH.

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" engraved or engine-turned Hunting Case Watch—Magic Spring—Genuine English Jewelled or Nickel Movements—"M. J. Tobias."—Independent action—Self-Balance—and has a Neat Miniature Compass set in the movements—making it a correct Guide for the Soldier or Traveller—a perfect Timekeeper—"Warranted one year," will stand acid, and is an Exact Imitation of a $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

English Sterling Silver Lever Watches, engraved Hunting Case, full jewelled movements warranted, $18.

$30 American Levers. $30

In 4 oz. Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Full Ruby Jewelled, Gold Joints, Magic Spring, with Full Guarantee, only $30.

Real English Duplex Stop Watch,

In Massive Silver Hunting Cases, Full Jewelled, Sweep Seconds, for Artillerists or Timing Horses, Full Guarantee, $30.

Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above styles of European Watches. Catalogue of trade prices mailed free.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper," "It is a novelty here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Illustrated News says, "Correct timepieces, and for beauty and fine finish they are equal in appearance to $100 watches."

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,
o 38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready-Made or to Measure, at $33, $39, $45 per doz

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50 each—all cut one yard long. A single Shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 63 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable. Price 75 cents each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 90 cents.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

Agents Wanted in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,

20 cents each, $1 80 per doz. Free by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1614, New York city. Send for circular.

FRENCH FLANNEL ARMY SHIRTS

Dress Shirts
TO MEASURE.
SIX SHIRTS
$12, $15 & $18.

Dress Shirts,
TO ORDER,
are made a Perfect Fit, Superior Work, and are Unequalled in Quality for the Prices.

An extensive assortment of newly imported SCARFS, TIES, SUSPENDERS, GLOVES and HD'KERCHIEFS.

JAMES PARRISH, 323 Canal Street, New York.
22o

Dyspepsia Tablets.

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. 50 cents per box; sent free on the receipt of 65 cents. Depot, 207 Centre Street, second floor. 000o

Corns and Bunyons.

Their Cause, Prevention and Cure. Fully explained in the Great Work just published by Dr. MERRIFIELD. Mailed everywhere for 25 cents. Address
o F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Agents Wanted (Male or Female). Address HALE & CO., Newburyport, Mass. 000o

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 446—Vol. XVIII.] NEW YORK, APRIL 16, 1864. [Price 8 Cents.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR.

The city of New York has been for weeks busy with the preparation for the Metropolitan Sanitary Fair, the generosity and patriotism of the people for and near pouring in contributions with so lavish a hand that the original proportions of the Fair—as projected by the managers—have become so dwarfed and pigmy, that addition after addition has been made to the buildings.

Now, when too late, it is seen that the true plan would have been to take Union square and erect a large building enclosing the whole. This would have given the necessary space and brought all into a compact and accessible form.

It is now in two distinct portions, one at the Armory on 14th street extending to 15th street, and including two structures on each street covering the sidewalk, and a second building at the northern portion of Union square, between the Park and the Everett House.

The original building on 14th street we represented some time since, but the whole front is hidden now by the structure devoted to arms and trophies, and the Indian Department, hung with Bierstadt's and other collections of Rocky mountain curiosities, wigwams, spoils of the chase, etc. Here the Onondaga Indians give the various dances of their tribe. This section we illustrate fully.

Of the Machinery Department on 15th street an exterior view is given in one of our illustrations this week. Between these is the main department of the Fair, of which we give to our double page a view taken from the "Cockloft Summerhouse" near the New Jersey department, showing the tables of the Turners, the Church of the Resurrection, the German Church, Ohio, New Bedford, Richmond and Westchester counties, and the imposing table of the New York Fire Department, with the contributions of various departments of commerce, Hats and Caps, Rubber Goods, Boots and Shoes. The Floral Temple in the centre of the main hall may also be discerned.

The Union square building, which we also lay before our readers, contains the Knickerbocker Kitchen, the Music Hall, the Children's Department and International Hall. The Fair was inaugurated on April 4th. The Mayor, Hon. C. Godfrey Gunther, in a proclamation invited all to make it a holiday, and during the latter part of the day this recommendation was generally observed.

The Fair was inaugurated by a military display, such as New York seldom witnesses, accustomed as it is to parades. The First Division of the New York State National Guard under Gen. Sandford, with the regulars in the harbor under Brig.-Gen. Stannard, were reviewed in 14th street, and marched through that street, 2d avenue, Astor place and Broadway to the City Hall, where a marching salute was given to the Mayor and Corporation.

The whole parade was magnificent, the regulars meeting every expectation and producing a great effect on the thousands that lined the streets. Never since the reception of the Prince of Wales has there been such an ovation.

The doors of the Fair were opened at six o'clock, and it was inaugurated at eight o'clock by the Star Spangled Banner, by the City Choirs and Military Bands. This was followed by a prayer and the singing of a hymn written by Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Gen. Dix, on behalf of the Committee, then presented the Fair to the ladies, a letter from the Rev. Dr. Bellows, from the California steamer, was presented, and Mr. Joseph H. Choate responded for the ladies. The proceedings closed with the Old Hundred, and the gay and fashionable audience dispersed through the halls.

The Indian Department.

This department, which we illustrate as one of the striking interiors of the Fair, has been placed under the special charge of Mr. Bierstadt, who has adorned it with a multitude of objects of Indian workmanship, articles of attire and furniture, arms, implements, trophies of the war-path and the hunt. Other collectors, army officers and private gentlemen have added to the contents of the room, while the managers of the Fair, to give a living actuality to the whole, have erected a stage, the scenery behind which is a finely executed view of an Indian village; the floor is sodded, and on either side a tent wigwam of skins. In these are a number of Iroquois Indians of this State, the descendants of the haughty tribe who once dictated peace to tribes in Florida, Nova Scotia, Lake Superior and the Mississippi, and had French and English Governors anxious suppliants for their friendship. These Indians will give daily, at stated hours, a number of the war, religious, patriotic and other dances which have so long prevailed in their tribe. In a room hung with elk heads, scalps, buffalo and bear skins, tomahawks, saddles, canoes, snowshoes, robes, Indian cradles, baskets, mills, etc., with Indians performing dances at which Gomez, Verrazani and Hudson may have gazed in wonder, we are carried back to days when New York was but a barren rock, with few scattered Indians temporarily on it for hunting or fishing.

The Main Hall.

The main hall of the Fair, to which we allude, will merit and meet with most attention from visitors. The charming temple of Flora in the centre is a well-conceived and symmetrical mass of evergreens and floral decorations. It is crowned by a revolving temple of Liberty, all in flowers; baskets of flowers, depend from columns, and meet the eye in every direction. Names of the celebrated battles of the war executed in flowers greet the spectator on entering. Around this are the tables, which we can speak of but briefly, referring to the daily papers for fuller accounts. The Police Department occupies the left as you enter, the tables easily recognised by the large banner. The other decorations are tasty and elegant, and two pastoral scenes worked on cloth attract many. Here gentlemen's furnishing goods and an assortment of toys will be found.

The New Jersey Department, further on the left, is divided into four alcoves to represent the Four Seasons, each containing articles suited to it. It stands between the Alhambra and the Cockloft Summerhouse immortalised by the authors of Salmagundi.

On the opposite side, in the north-east corner, is the attractive stand of the Fire Department, in mass of flags and decorations reaching to the roof. A rising sun formed of hooks and ladders, &c., surmounts the front. Models of engines of old and new styles, carvings, &c., will draw customers to the well-stored bazaar, which ought to effect in the fortnight sales to at least $50,000.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR.—THE INDIAN DEPARTMENT.

Next to this is the Roman Department, with the flags and boat of Fine IX. The contributions to this department are arriving slowly.

In the space between these, radiating round the floral temple, are various stands. Those of the Turners and several churches are devoted to fancy articles. Stand 245, directed by Mrs. Courtney, is devoted to WORK-BOX, No. 2, to Hats, Caps and Furs; No. 3, to Draperies; No. 5, Porcelain and China and Glass Ware; No. 36, with its decorations of St. Crispin and Crispinian, to Boots and Shoes. At the entrance is the office of the "Spirit of the Fair," and beside it the "Post-Office," where no one has to wait for the next mail for a letter.

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS—Three men and one woman, each over eight feet high; two Dwarfs, each less than two feet high—besides a host of other Novelties. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 33 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turk, ah, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table; and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs only $3. Sent free, by mail on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,
No. 37 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, APRIL 16, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 72 Duane street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, and FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE P. BADGER & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 100 Fleet Street, London, King Lead, Staple copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 00
Two copies " to one address	5 00
Four " "	8 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00
Paper, 18 weeks	1 00

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

75 cents a line on the outside or last page.
60 " on the 16th and 18th pages.

THE Publisher of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER invites his present contributors and others to send in before May 1st stories and poems suited to the columns, as well as ideas for comic sketches on subjects of the day.

Summary of the Week.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The hospital at Beaufort was burned on the 22d March. On the 19th the rebels made a weak attempt on Port Royal ferry. On the 20th an attack was made on Jenkins island.

KENTUCKY.

Gen. Buckner is concentrating at Pound gap, his troops carrying fire days' forage. Forrest is still carrying in the State, apparently undisturbed, and Gen. McCullogh is on his way North with 2,000 men to join him. The rebels occupy Hickman.

GEORGIA.

The rebel picket lines at Ringgold, Georgia, are within a mile of the Union pickets, but no desire to molest each other is manifested by either party. The rebels are encamped from Tunnel hill to Varnesa station, with about 35,000 men.

TENNESSEE.

A party of rebel guerillas, on the 28th March, captured and burned a trading boat 70 miles below Memphis.

FLORIDA.

The rebels have made a raid on Magnolia. A naval expedition up the St. John's captured, at Lake George, the rebel steamer Hattie Brock, with 100 bales of cotton. Gen. Seymour has been relieved by Gen. Hatch.

ILLINOIS.

The Secession sympathisers in Charleston made an attack on the Union men on the 28th, seven persons were killed and several wounded. A large force has been sent to the spot. At last accounts they were in force at Copairn's mills.

ALABAMA.

Gen. Pillow has been placed in command of the rebel cavalry in Northern Alabama.

ARKANSAS.

Gen. Steele is moving South with 30,000 men. Cabel is at Washington with seven rebel regiments.

LOUISIANA.

Alexandria was occupied by our troops on the 16th, the rebel Gen. Taylor crossing the river and retreating to Shreveport, where the rebels are concentrating.

On the 21st Gen. Mower advanced to Natchitoches, on the Red river. The enemy were in force and gave battle, but Mower flanked them and drove them off, taking 200 prisoners and four cannon.

On the 21st a brigade of Union cavalry repulsed a body of the enemy beyond Alexandria.

Shreveport is said to have been taken by Gen. Steele.

Gen. Gano has some 7,000 or 8,000 Texans at Semmesport.

VIRGINIA.

On the 29th a party from the Minnesota, under Capt. J. M. Williams, went up Chuckatuck creek, and captured a signal station, with a lieutenant and 20 men.

The rebels are digging rifepits on the Rapidan, near Raccoon ford, and tearing up the railroad from Fredericksburg to Hanover Junction.

NAVAL.

The Florida has left Eunchal, pursued by the sloop-of-war St. Louis.

The rebel commissariat barque Minedora has been detained at British Honduras.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 29th of March, the time was given chiefly to the various Senators eulogising the late Senator Lane.

In the House, the Currency Act was debated, but no definite action was taken.

In the Senate, on the 30th, Mr. Davis, of Kentucky, made a speech concerning Slavery, and after some routine business of little importance the Senate adjourned.

In the House, after some unimportant matters, the House resolved itself into a committee on the bill authorizing the Secretary of War to call out and make long speech on the reconstruction of the rebellious States in the Union referred.

In the Senate, on the 31st, the House bill organizing a Territorial Government for Montana was taken up. The amendment offered by Mr. Wilkinson, of Minnesota, to effect allowing negroes to vote in the Territory, was adopted by a vote of 22 against 17, and the bill then passed. Messrs. Sumner and Chandler made speeches on the proposed prohibition of slavery by an amendment of the Constitution, and the Senate adjourned.

In the House, Mr. Garfield, of Ohio, then made a strong speech in favor of the bill making the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad a military and post road, expressing the hope that Congress would crush out the Copperhead Army now in the field. The House then went into Committee of the, Whole on the bill amendatory of the National Bank Act. On motion of Mr. Spaulding, of Ohio, the House struck out the enacting clause, by a vote of yeas, 81, nays, 70. Mr. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, moved to amend by striking out the clauses providing for the location of the National Bank at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, Louisville, Chicago, Buffalo, New Orleans, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Milwaukee, San Francisco, Detroit, Portland, Pittsburg, Albany, Cleveland and Milwaukee and inserting instead places for the redemption of the notes of the National Banks. An amendment proposing New York as the place of redemption was negatived—27 against 63. A proposition that each National Bank should receive the notes of every other National Bank at par was negatived—5 to 85.

In the Senate, on the 1st of April, Mr. Powell endeavored to obtain the floor to get up a resolution calling on the Secretary of War for information in regard to the churches and property of Christian denominations which were destroyed by their own orders, or the order of the Government of the South. Several Senators desired to hear the bill. Mr. Hale called attention to the letter of the Secretary of the Navy printed this morning, and urged that several important Naval bills awaited action. Mr. Powell moved to proceed to the bill. Yeas and nays were called upon a motion to go into Executive Session, which was negatived—Yeas 9, Nays, 16.

In the House, Mr. Blaine introduced a bill to provide for refunding to loyal States certain sums of money expended by them in organizing, arming and equipping troops for the Union army. It provides for a board of three Commissioners, to be appointed in Washington, and reports to Congress the ascertained sum due the States, whose duty shall cease. The bill was referred. Mr. Eliot reported a bill to reduce the rates for passengers, freight and water by signals, fog-whistles, &c. Passed. Mr. Eliot reported a bill regulating the advancement and tonnage of ships and vessels of the United States. Passed. A bill was passed providing for the name of the Collection District of Presque Isle to be changed to the District of Erie. A bill was passed exempting from the payment of tonnage duties, after Aug. 1, all coal, timber, freight barges, screws and other crafts without masts, and confined to inter-state or within collection districts. Adjourned.

In the House, Mr. Blaine introduced a bill to provide for refunding to loyal States certain sums of money expended by them in organizing, arming and equipping troops for the Union army. It provides for a board of three Commissioners, to be appointed in Washington, and reports to Congress the ascertained sum due the States, whose duty shall cease. The bill was referred. Mr. Eliot reported a bill to reduce the rates for passengers, freight and water by signals, fog-whistles, &c. Passed. Mr. Eliot reported a bill regulating the advancement and tonnage of ships and vessels of the United States. Passed. A bill was passed providing for the name of the Collection District of Presque Isle to be changed to the District of Erie. A bill was passed exempting from the payment of tonnage duties, after Aug. 1, all coal, timber, freight barges, screws and other crafts without masts, and confined to inter-state or within collection districts. Adjourned.

In the House, Mr. Blaine introduced a bill to provide for refunding to loyal States certain sums of money expended by them in organizing, arming and equipping troops for the Union army. It provides for a board of three Commissioners, to be appointed in Washington, and reports to Congress the ascertained sum due the States, whose duty shall cease. The bill was referred. Mr. Eliot reported a bill to reduce the rates for passengers, freight and water by signals, fog-whistles, &c. Passed. Mr. Eliot reported a bill regulating the advancement and tonnage of ships and vessels of the United States. Passed. A bill was passed providing for the name of the Collection District of Presque Isle to be changed to the District of Erie. A bill was passed exempting from the payment of tonnage duties, after Aug. 1, all coal, timber, freight barges, screws and other crafts without masts, and confined to inter-state or within collection districts. Adjourned.

In the House, on the 2d, Mr. Pendleton, of Ohio, called up his motion to reconsider the vote by which the House disagreed to the Senate amendment to the Montana Territory bill, and asking a committee of conference. He argued that "the Territory is a great striking out" "white," was to give "negroes" the right to vote in the Territory. The question on the resolution was tabled. The House then resumed the consideration of the bill to amend the Pacific Railway bill. Mr. Sweat, of Maine, spoke against the bill believing it to be unconstitutional. Constitution of the United States or laws of the country.

TOWN TOPICS.

We are well advanced into the spring, and yet the spring owns all to us, by which we mean disgree hounds, gauzy shawls and these dresses, have not yet fairly begun to appear. Should this be attributable to the backward season, or to the intention of our belles to blow into full flower during the Sanitary Fair week, it is impossible to say, but so far nothing has agitated Broadway of a startling style.

With Broadway upon our pen we would say a few words upon this grand promenade—we will not call it thoroughfare, for the reason that it is more and for the first purpose.

Why is it that, with a body of police of great numerical and physical strength always on it, sights and sounds offensive to the eyes and ears of even the hardened are nightly and daily permitted to offend? During a walk from Canal street to Fourteenth street, one day this week, we were witness to these pleasant items. A saw-filer, who had established his machine upon the curb, and regaled the passers-by with his delightful music. A pair of drunken rowdies, one bearing an American flag, and the other with an ensanguined label on his back, elbowing the promenaders, and treating their ears to choice epithets and oaths; and thirdly, two men fighting in the gutter. Now, as there was possibly a policeman out of uniform, walking behind with a revolver in his pocket, we do not know what these men had been doing, and it matters little in a discussion of the subject, but we do know there were other persons who could not take them to their destination than on foot through Broadway, offending and disgusting every one with whom they passed.

In theatricals and opera, the promises for the week are "Lucia," "Robert le Diable," "Fra Diavolo," "Fanny" at the Academy, Booth, in the "Fool's Revenge," at Niblo's, the usual intermixture of old comedy and "Rosedale" at Wallack's; a benefit to John Brougham, in the play of the "Irish Emigrant" at Mrs. Wood's; and Avonia Jones at the Winter Garden.

We notice that huge posters are over the city announcing the appearance of the so-called Ella Zoyara at some of the horse theatres. We trust that the opportunity will not be lost by the public of frowning down for ever the existence that has for years been carried on by this man. There is something especially mean in the prostitution of the name of womhood donning the habiliments of a woman, but when the art is accompanied by a wilful and studied desire to degrade the audience, it becomes doubly reprobation.

One of the events of the week was the début of Madame Mathes-Scheller at Winter Garden. The lady is an Englishwoman, who introduced herself from the German to the English stage. In person she is tall and handsome, and her voice is powerful and has less in manner. She has much of the accent and tone of Miss Dora Wiser, which may be considered by tone, but at present is harsh to the ear of an English speaking audience. To overcome this it requires great praise; even Bandmann was hardly successful, and Madame Scheller is a greater one. Her reception was decidedly bad, and yet within these faults the lady has a powerful conception. She sings pleasantly and has an air of agitations and reliance on the symptoms of her audience. Her benefit takes place on the 18th.

One of the events of the week was the début of Madame Mathes-Scheller at Winter Garden. The lady is an Englishwoman, who introduced herself from the German to the English stage. In person she is tall and handsome, and her voice is powerful and has less in manner. She has much of the accent and tone of Miss Dora Wiser, which may be considered by tone, but at present is harsh to the ear of an English speaking audience. To overcome this it requires great praise; even Bandmann was hardly successful, and Madame Scheller is a greater one. Her reception was decidedly bad, and yet within these faults the lady has a powerful conception. She sings pleasantly and has an air of agitations and reliance on the symptoms of her audience. Her benefit takes place on the 18th.

One of the events of the week was the début of Madame Mathes-Scheller at Winter Garden. The lady is an Englishwoman, who introduced herself from the German to the English stage. In person she is tall and handsome, and her voice is powerful and has less in manner. She has much of the accent and tone of Miss Dora Wiser, which may be considered by tone, but at present is harsh to the ear of an English speaking audience. To overcome this it requires great praise; even Bandmann was hardly successful, and Madame Scheller is a greater one. Her reception was decidedly bad, and yet within these faults the lady has a powerful conception. She sings pleasantly and has an air of agitations and reliance on the symptoms of her audience. Her benefit takes place on the 18th.

One of the events of the week was the début of Madame Mathes-Scheller at Winter Garden. The lady is an Englishwoman, who introduced herself from the German to the English stage. In person she is tall and handsome, and her voice is powerful and has less in manner. She has much of the accent and tone of Miss Dora Wiser, which may be considered by tone, but at present is harsh to the ear of an English speaking audience. To overcome this it requires great praise; even Bandmann was hardly successful, and Madame Scheller is a greater one. Her reception was decidedly bad, and yet within these faults the lady has a powerful conception. She sings pleasantly and has an air of agitations and reliance on the symptoms of her audience. Her benefit takes place on the 18th.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—A meeting was held at the Chamber of Commerce, on the 31st March, to raise funds for the relief of the citizens of East Tennessee. Several speeches were made by Gen. Wallbridge, Roosevelt and others.

The Union Lincoln Association meet regularly, under the auspices of Simeon Draper and Hiram Roosevelt.

A curious case came up lately. A Mrs. Judson was trying to get a warrant from her husband to a Mrs. Judson. It proved that Mr. Judson's name was Edward, and that the latter in question was intended for another of his wives.

The Sanitary Fair was opened on the 1st April by a variety of jokes perpetrated by the small boys of the city, and, by the way, like other performances, it is rapidly dying out.

In the people of New York, by the enormous vote of 210,000 majority, have resolved to allow soldiers to vote.

In consequence of the reports now so generally prevalent that Mr. Lincoln does not write his own messages, he has come out in a card denying it, with the exception of his reply to the British clergymen, every public document purporting to emanate from his pen is really and truly the product of the President's reading, and the ideas of the Cabinet spoken in the inaugural message, which was interlined by Mr. Seward.

—Nearly 3,000 emigrants landed at Castle Garden in the week ending 31st March. The emigration this year from foreign parts will exceed all previous seasons.

—A report favorable to allowing the Cabinet Ministers to be seen on the floor of Congress was sent in, but the subject to be adopted without delay, as it would commence a series of "scenes" responsibility.

—The grand National Fair, under the auspices of the Fenian Brotherhood, commenced in Chicago on the 28th inst.

—The Government prize of gold is 16. Stocks in the city are steady. The Loan for Exchange Government bonds were all strong. State bonds nearly. Coal trade strong. In iron there is less activity, and at 6 per cent. the supply is quite free.

—The delegates to the Republican National Convention, to be held in Baltimore, are Messrs. Seamus Falling, Chairman; Smith, Hirsch and Hiram Smith.

—An immense meeting was held in Baltimore, on the last of April, the speakers being Messrs. Boutwell, of Massachusetts; Gurley and Ely, Lewis, of Md., and Gen. Lew Wallace.

—The Jacob Barker trespass case was concluded on the 1st April, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff of $10,000, with interest from the commencement of the suit, April 13, 1852. The counsel for the defence moved for a new trial, and they will, in the view of filing a bill of exceptions, and ultimately obtaining a reversal.

—Private concerts in aid of the Sanitary Commission have been all the rage during the past few weeks, and have been well attended by the very first society. The last of a series of six was given last week, at the residence of Mrs. Goodhue, on the 2d inst. The price of tickets ranged as high as three dollars, and the struggle to get them was so great that this number was exhausted before half the applicants were satisfied. Mrs. Goodhue, assisted by a number of committe of ladies, who gave their whole time to every detail, saw that they have accomplished. They found willing assistants in the good musicians whose names were given, and the Philharmonic Society also furnished two of their splendid grand pianos for each concert. Everything was arranged that the ocasions were kept as low as possible; but whatever was contributed was paid for, and the profit of the whole will be handed over to the committee.

—The total results of the great Sanitary Fair.

—The Cincinnati Fair opened on the 6th, drawing which Washington used as his headquarters is exhibited at the Sanitary Fair. It is 12 feet 6 inches in length, 23 in width, and 16 inches in height, constructed of oak to the floor, and is exact of the same kind of material as the original, and corresponds in every particular. The ceiling contains a number of roses, corresponding in shape, kind and color; and the walls are covered with paper similar to the regularities in mortar and plastering work. The doors and window are in perfect keeping with the original. The interior is partitioned off, exhibiting the different apartments as they originally appeared. The floor is in place, with its smoky back and huge chimney, the fire-place, with the andirons, the old furniture, the painting, in fact, the whole appearance and structure, is the same as when it was occupied as it was occupied by the Father of his Country.

—The Democracy of Buffalo, announces officially in his organ, the Western New York Catholic, that the Democratic party is the party of the Constitution and Catholic societies, nor take part in Catholic rite and holy sacrifices.

Foreign.—Military authorities at Louisville state that of the rebels who crossed the Cumberland at Eddyville they recently several have surrendered, and others have given themselves up under the Amnesty proclamation. The rebels are reported to be in further apprehension is felt from Forrest's force.

Southern.—Cassville, Georgia, Gen. Davis, Buell, Negley, McCook, Crittenden, Newton and Wood, of the Army of the Cumberland, report to Gen. Sherman for duty in his army. Gen. Buell has been relieved from duty. Schofield is in command of the Department of the Ohio. Deserters report that the force on Johnston is reinforcing Longstreet's Lee."

—A KNOXVILLE dispatch of the 31st ult. says: "The enemy are destroying the trestle at Bull's gap, fell back beyond Greenville. They took all the cattle they could bring across the river. Gen. Carter's force of a portion of the rails and telegraph wire. Gen. Burnside's command is now at Bull's gap. Gen. Sherman left this morning for Chattanooga. Gen. Foster is in command of the district of East Tennessee. Knoxville is so well fortified that a small force can hold it against any force. Longstreet's forces are at Watauga, more than 40 miles east of here, and the enemy's cavalry at Bull's gap beyond the retreat."

—Dispatches from Major Brown, at Abercrombie, to Gen. Halleck, say: Scouts have been sent to Leesburg (son of "Burning Earth," who was the principal instigator of the rebellion) until he died, in 1815) and accepted the terms of peace offered by the Government. Leesburg is the first Secession town that the Secessions are desirous to terminate hostilities, and this is the first instance of a town sent for the restoration of friendly relations with the Government. Leesburg is the birthplace of Gen. Lee and the Missouri beyond a given point, and while men keep away from the Secession army, the enemy have, of course, prospectorous and absurd, and will never be accepted.

—The rush for lands in the Lake Superior country, which are rich in copper and minerals, is unexampled. The entries for February amount to upwards of 60,000 acres, and those for March will be much more. The proceeds of cash sales during the time feet up $21,000.

Southern.—By way of New Orleans we have later news from Texas. Indianola was evacuated on the morning of the 13th of March. On the 12th, the several Union families, principally Germans, left, taking with them in some instances the number of their tenements, as they had hitherto met with of elegance, with the expectation that the army would remain. Gens. McClernand and Dana did all they could to relieve them, as did also Capt. Gorrach and McComas. The troops under Gen. Eric Henry Warren took the land route, crossing the bayous by pontoon bridges. In doing so 21 men and two officers of the 19th Regiment, Lieut.-Col. Perry, commanding, two men of the 7th Michigan battery, and eight of the 3d Engineer (Corps d'Afrique), in all 34 men and two horses, were drowned by the swamping of the boats. Gen. McClernard has gone down the coast, to make a visit to Arkansas Pass and Brownsville.

Military.—The Newberne Times of the 23d says: "We have an eye-witness who saw the hanging of 22 soldiers of the 2d North Carolina Union volunteers, and was within 200 yards of the scaffold at the time of the murder."

—— The President has commuted the sentence of two men, Hendricks and Pollard, condemned to be hung April 1, to imprisonment for life. Marshal Lamon had previously declined to hang them, assuming the ground that it was not his duty to do so, the recent act of Congress having deprived him of the custody of the jail and placed that institution under the charge of a Warden, independent of his (Lamon's) control.

—— A letter from Shubuta, Miss., in the Mobile Register, says that Col. Maury has hung a number of loyalists there; also that "the Colonel has issued an amnesty proclamation, giving three days to report, and after that—the halter indiscriminately."

—— Capt. J. H. Williams, Provost-Marshal of the District of Cairo, was arrested one night last week and taken to Memphis, to answer before Gen. Hurlbut for offences not yet made public. The brother of Williams, Lieut. Throop, and Buell, a criminal attorney, were also arrested.

Personal.—Thomas Francis Meagher lectured in Philadelphia last week with great success.

—— Spurgeon, the popular English preacher, is expected in New York on the 10th of May.

—— The authoress of Cousin Phillis is Miss Thackeray. It is published in the Cornhill Magazine.

—— Miss Laura Harris made a great hit in the rôle of Lucia, at Boston, some few nights ago.

—— The London Court Journal, after quoting Sala's Trollopean account of his interview with President Lincoln and his wife, says: "Mr. Sala's description of his interview with the President and Mrs. Lincoln is in the worst possible taste, and is not mended by the elaborate apology which accompanies it. He was introduced to the White House by Mr. Sumner; Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln evidently tried to be civil to him, and their reward is half a column of ridicule and offensive personality. Yet Mr. Sala has constituted himself the censor of American society, and has undertaken to expose its vulgarity and hollowness! Marry come up! We can't help criticising the critic and pointing out to this censor morum the palpable breach of good manners which he has committed. Mr. Sala can make his letters readable enough without pandering to the vulgar appetite. What would he think and write of an American who described in the same offensive way his presentation to Queen Victoria?"

—— We are glad to learn that the rebel Governor Allen, of Louisiana, is not of Northern birth, as has been represented, but a native of Prince Edward county, Va., where his father and grandfather resided before him.

Obituary.—The wife of President Hill, of Harvard College, died at Cambridge recently. She was the daughter of the late Joseph Bellows, of Walpole, New Hampshire.

—— Nancy James, a colored woman, has just died at Philadelphia, at the age of 110 years.

—— Capt. William C. Barstow, formerly well-known in New York as a shipmaster, died at East Boston on Thursday, the 31st of March, aged 63.

—— Mrs. Lucy Durivage, the widow of Francis S. Durivage, of Boston, died on the 31st of paralysis, at the residence of her son in Jersey city. The deceased, whose remains will be conveyed to Boston for interment, was a sister of Hon. Edward Everett, and was in her 72d year.

—— The Journal de Rennes announces the death in that city, at the age of 71, of Mr. John James Appleton, of Massachusetts, and formerly Chargé d'Affaires for the Unite[illegible]adrid and Stockholm, at which latter ci[illegible]gotiated the treaty of commerce which still serves as the basis of the relations between North America and Sweden. The deceased was born and educated at Boston. A daughter of Mr. Appleton is married to M. Eugene Pinault, Deputy Mayor of Rennes.

—— The death of one of the greatest chemists of the day, Dr. Laurentius, a German, is just announced.

—— The Natchez Courier, of the 18th, chronicles the death of Dr. Charles H. Stone, an eminent citizen of that city.

—— Sam. Cowell, the well-known comedian and comic vocalist, died a few days ago, at Blandford, in Dorset, from consumption. Deceased was 43 years of age, and has left a large family.

—— The death of Mr. B. A. Dyce, one of the foremost of the Royal Academicians, is announced. He was a native of Scotland, and was born in 1806. After passing through the usual curriculum in the University of Aberdeen, he proceeded, in 1825, to Italy, in various parts of which he devoted himself to the study of art. In 1828 he returned to Scotland, where he obtained his livelihood by portrait painting. In the interval of his business, however, he pursued the higher branches of art, and in 1828 made his first appearance on the walls of the Royal Academy in his picture entitled "Bacchus Nursed by the Nymphs of Nysa." Between that period and 1838 he exhibited two pictures at the Academy, "The Descent of Venus" and a "Madonna and Child." In 1845 he was elected a Royal Academician, and he was also an honorary academician of the Royal Scottish Academy, of which institution he had been elected an associate in 1835, and member of the Academy of Fine Arts of Philadelphia. Among his many works may be mentioned as best known: "St. Dunstan separating Edwy and Elgiva," "Titian and Irena da Spilemburgo," "Omnia Vanitas," "The meeting of Jacob and Rachel," and "Lear in the storm." Mr. Dyce was an author as well as an artist. In 1844 he published an edition of the Book of Common Prayer, with its ancient "Canto-Fermo," accompanied by a disputation on that kind of music and its adaptability to English words; and in 1851 a theological pamphlet entitled, "Notes on Shepherds and Sheep," in reply to Mr. Ruskin's "Notes on the Construction of Sheepfolds." He was an extensive contributor to periodical literature, chiefly on subjects relating to ecclesiastical antiquities; and was the author of pamphlets on the keenly-debated subject of the future management of the National Gallery.

Accidents and Offences.—The ship Gallatin, bound to Liverpool, and lying in the North River, has been a scene of brutal murder. It appears that the sailors got into an altercation in the forecastle, and one of them was kicked and beaten to death. The principal, a man named Clark, and five others, were arrested by Sergeant O'Brien, of the harbor police, and taken to the First Precinct station-house. Subsequently a coroner's jury found Clark guilty of the homicide, with a proviso "it was partly justifiable." Clark was thereupon committed to the Tombs to answer.

—— The British barque Falmouth, from New York, for Aspinwall, was found on the 21st in a sinking condition by the ship Empire Queen. The E. Q. laid by until the storm abated, and took off the officers and crew, except one man, who died at the pumps. The Falmouth soon afterwards went down head foremost.

Foreign.—The following interesting statistics have been recently given as to the strength and cost of the standing armies of Europe: Russia's standing army is 1,000,000 men, costing annually £26,000,000 sterling, or 42 per cent. of the national budget; France, has 573,000 men, costing 34,000,000 or 33 per cent.; Austria, 467,000 men, costing 16,000,000, or 37 per cent.; Turkey, 424,000 men; Italy 314,000 men, costing 16,000,000; England 300,000 men, costing 33,000,000, or 39 per cent.; Prussia, 124,000 men, costing 7,500,000, or 30 per cent.; Sweden, 67,000 men, costing 40 per cent.; Denmark, 50,000, costing 37 per cent. The whole standing army of Europe is 3,815,847 men, costing annually 170,000,000 sterling.

Art, Science and Literature.—The opera "The Abbot of St. Gatten," the text of which is taken from a comic poem of the celebrated German poet Burger, has been performed at the theatre of Breslau, and with great success. The composer is Herr Herther.

—— Mr. Frith's picture of the Royal Marriage scene will not, it is understood, be completed in time for the opening of the Royal Academy Exhibition, although the artist is far advanced in the execution of his task.

—— M. Henin, a celebrated collector of autographs, medals, &c., has left more than 10,000 autographs to the library of the French Institute, among which is a series of interesting letters of Voltaire, written to the father of the above gentleman.

—— Mr. Clement R. Markham, author of Cuzco and Lima, and Travels in Peru, has published a grammar and dictionary of Quinchua, the ancient language of the Incas.

—— Herr Bosendorff, of Berlin, has just celebrated a 5,000th birthday—that is, the birth of the 5,000th pianoforte he has constructed since he has been in business. His renown is great, and he is heard in every part of Germany—that is, the voice of his pianos speak for him.

—— A cheap reprint of Mr. Geo. Ticknor's Life of William Hinckling Prescott is announced by Messrs. Routledge & Warne.

—— A history of Louis XVI., with a collection of his writings, and a letter of M. Berryer's by way of preface, is announced as being in the press.

—— Mr. John Leighton has designed a new cover for a pack of playing cards in the fashion of the hour. In the centre of the card is the bust of Shakespeare, and in the compartments of a rich border are illustrations of the Seven Ages of Man.

—— The third edition of the Slang Dictionary, now in the press, will contain, it is said, fully 3,000 more unauthorized words and colloquial expressions than the preceding edition. In France, however, matters are quite as bad as here. An English gentleman, long resident in Paris, is now engaged compiling a French and English slang dictionary.

Chit-Chat.—A little London newspaper has sent a very remarkable goose, named Sala, to write letters for it. In one of his latest effusions he makes a discovery which throws that of Columbus into the shade. It is this—in describing American ladies he actually says: "I said that all the ladies can talk. A flow of sharp, shrewd, intelligent, and, as a rule, well-chosen and correct language, is the shining attainment of all American ladies, and from the schoolgirl upwards. And the schoolgirls themselves talk with an ease of volubility that would astonish the superintendents of many ladies' colleges at home. There is no hesitation, no blushing, no stammering, no twiddling of the fingers, no plucking at bouquets, or nervous unhemming of handkerchiefs. The vapid inanities that pass between partners at an English ball would be here scouted. To be shy is to be unpatriotic. The American young lady goes straight to the point, and has a great deal to say upon it. 'How is your health? How long have you been in the country? Do you like it? Have you had a good time? What do you think of the action of the nation in the present struggle? Are you not struck with admiration at the deeds of valor performed by the nation's armies? Have you read Longfellow's Wayside Inn? When is Tennyson's Boadicea to appear? Was not England convulsed with enthusiasm at the apparition of the Rev. Ward Beecher? Don't you think the room wants oxygen? Are not the monitors triumphs of mechanical construction? Have you been to Niagara?' These are a few of the queries she rattles out. You are at first delighted, then amazed, and at last puzzled: for the intelligent and well read young lady continually addresses you as 'sir,' and every now and then she asks you a question so naïve, so artlessly ignorant, that you pause to inquire of yourself whether she can be more than six years old."

—— At the recent royal christening Queen Victoria wore a black silk dress, covered with deep black crape and edged with jet gimp; a cap of white crape lisse, in the style of the cap of Mary Queen of Scots, with diamonds round it, and a long white crape lisse veil attached to it. Her Majesty wore the riband, star and badge of the garter, a diamond necklace, and large cross containing the Prince Consort's miniature, and a brooch composed of a large sapphire, set in 12 large diamonds. Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales wore a white satin dress, with ruches of tulle flounces of rich Brussels lace, decked with flowers, water-lilies, ferns and grasses; a tiara of diamonds; necklace, brooch and ear-rings of pearls and diamonds; a corsage of the City diamonds round the top of the dress; the Portugese Order of Isabella and the Victoria and Albert badge.

—— The town of Pisa has been doing something in the tercentenary way, but so quietly, and with so much more desire to do homage to the one name than to bruit many names abroad, that the fact has not been mentioned farther than Pisa as yet. The name of the honored one is Galileo, who had he lived till this year, would, like Shakespeare, have been 300 years old.

—— Giuglini, the tenor, recently appeared in St. Petersburg, and by his rendering of a cantata so enchanted a noble lady that she sent him a magnificent sledge, harnessed to a fiery horse, in acknowledgment of the pleasure derived from his performance.

Profit and Loss.—As rather an unscrupulous fellow named Ben was coming down one morning, he met Tom, who stopped him:

"I say, Tom," he said, "here's a pretty counterfeit three. If you pass it I'll divide."

"Let's see the plaster," said Tom; and after examining it carefully put it in his vest pocket, remarking, "It's an equal division—a dollar and a half apiece?"

"Yes," said Ben.

"All right," said Tom.

A few minutes afterwards he quietly stepped into the store of his friend Ben, and purchased a keg of oysters for a dollar and a half, laying down the $3 bill for them. The clerk looked at the bill rather doubtingly, when his suspicions were immediately calmed by Tom, who said:

"There's no use looking, for I received the note from Ben himself not 10 minutes ago."

Of course the clerk, with this assurance, forked over the other dollar and a half in change. With this deposit and a can of oysters, Tom left. Shortly afterwards he met Ben, who asked him if he had passed the note.

"Oh, yes," said Tom, passing over the dollar and a half to Ben.

That evening when Ben made up his cash account, he was surprised to find the same old counterfeit three in the drawer. Turning to his clerk, he asked:

"Where did you get this cursed note? didn't you know it was a counterfeit?"

"Why," said the clerk, "Tom gave it to me and I suspected it was fishy; but he said he had just received it from you, and I took it."

The whole thing had penetrated the wool of Ben. With a peculiar grin, he muttered: "Sold!" and charged the can of oysters to profit and loss account.

Caution to Travellers.—A gentleman, travelling by railroad to the south of France, entered a first-class carriage, where he found a person already comfortably seated, who soon entered into conversation, and civilly offered his new acquaintance a pinch of snuff, which was accepted, but had no sooner entered his nostrils than it produced the effect of a powerful narcotic, of which the wary traveller soon took advantage, by relieving his sleeping companion of 15,000 francs in banknotes, 3,000 francs in other money, besides his watch, chain and ring, with which valuables he escaped undetected.

SPRING-TIME VOICES.

BY HENRY C. WATSON.

How long the dreary Winter
  Extends its chilling reign;
The snow-robed earth, so coldly pure,
  Will't e'er be green again?
We watch the fitful sunbeams,
  For omens glad they bring;
The bluebirds twitter on the bough,
  Sweet voices of the Spring.

The noise of rushing waters,
  The busy insects' hum,
The lengthened morn, the shortened night,
  Proclaim that Spring has come.
We hail these pleasant omens;
  We love the song they sing;
Ye thrill our hearts with summer warmth,
  Sweet voices of the Spring!

A Night in a Strange Inn.

By F. E. Brock.

The night was closing in, dark and gloomy; the sky looked threatening, and everything betokened the near approach of a terrific thunderstorm. The waters of the Mississippi were foaming, while the tall cliffs on its banks seemed to be holding communion with the demoniacal-looking clouds. We knew it would be impossible to remain out in such a storm, so our little party of two determined to find shelter for ourselves and our horses at the nearest inn. I myself am of a nervous, excitable temperament, and my companion being somewhat like me, we urged our beasts onward to their utmost speed, though our hands trembled nervously as we clutched the reins. Not a dwelling came in view for some time, but at last we caught sight of the lights of what we knew to be the little town of Napoleon. Encouraged by this, our boldness returned to us, and as if we had been men of nerve, and had never known fear, we walked our horses slowly towards the village. We stopped at the first inn we reached, not caring whether it were the best or the worst, so that we could find shelter. Before we entered the rain was coming down in large drops, and we thanked our lucky stars that we had reached a haven. We had been travelling for a firm in New York, who were in the habit of trading with the Western merchants, and at the present time had been sent to collect their dues; consequently, we had considerable money with us. After having seen that our horses were well cared for, we walked into the bar-room of the little inn. Here we first saw the landlord, and I was immediately impressed with his strange appearance. I could not obtain a full view of his face, because of a singular fashion he had of turning his bulldog head on one side whenever he looked towards me, but I caught a glimpse of a dark patch on that side of the face which he seemed so anxious to hide. There were several men in the bar-room, some of them drinking very heavily, and conversing in loud, boisterous tones; but the landlord was extremely taciturn, never saying a word unless actually obliged to. I did not at all fancy my host, and though I struggled very much against the feeling, all the dark stories of villainous landlords in little out-of-the-way inns rushed to my mind. His wife also was formidable-looking. She was tall and Amazonian in figure, while her face was one of those hard, cruel, though rather handsome ones which Shakespeare must have had in his mind's eye when he wrote of Lady Macbeth. In one corner of the room sat two men, who were playing cards and betting pretty largely. One appeared to be constantly losing, yet he showed no vexation, but laughed gaily, and nodded occasionally to the landlady.

All the while we were at supper I was debating with myself whether I should propose to my companion to seek another inn, or keep quiet and remain where we were. I had come to the conclusion that the landlord, his wife and the man who was losing his money at cards were joined in a league against the winner, who appeared to be a drover with plenty of money, and would, no doubt, rob or perhaps murder him in his sleep. Therefore I concluded that, although I had rather we had chosen some other shelter, I would not go away and leave the man to his fate; but determined that before I slept I would see that my pistols and those of my companion were in good order, though I also resolved that I would not alarm the latter by telling him of my fears, which might perhaps be groundless.

By this time the storm had become almost a hurricane. The wind howled around the house, and the heavy rain pattered against the windows and down upon the tin roofs of the outhouses. Then would come the deafening crashes of thunder, one following the other in rapid succession. Amidst this din and terrible confusion we were shown to our room in the upper storey. One solitary candle glimmered amid the gloom of the small apartment, and this, I noticed, was already more than three parts consumed. The ceiling was very low, and sloped down to the floor at one end, and in this part of the room was heaped an immense pile of rubbish. The bed stood in about the centre, between this pile and the door; and the one small window in the room looked as if it had not been opened for many months. The view was not promising, and I made up my mind that I would not go to sleep that night, whatever my companion might do, so I ordered the landlady to supply me with another candle. She stared at me, as if surprised, and at first demurred, but seeing that I was resolute she at last consented, and agreed to send me one. This she soon did; but when I saw that it was a piece only about as large as the first I sent it back, saying that I wanted a whole one. "Why, Frank, what do you want of it?" said my friend. I merely answered that I wanted to read a paper for awhile, and did not wish to have the light fail before I had finished. The maid, however, did not bring the candle, and I, resolving not to give up my demand, descended the stairs to procure it. When I reached the bar-room the landlord, his wife and the man whom I suspected as an accomplice were whispering together, but they stopped when I entered, and the man walked off to the other end of the room. The landlady declared that she had not a whole candle in the house, and she had sent me the best she had, adding, "If it does not suit you, you must go unsuited." I felt certain now that something was wrong, and hastened upstairs again, minus the candle, intending to tell my friend all I had noticed, and with his assistance find the drover, and together leave the house.

The storm was now abating, and I knew we could find our way to the next inn. But when I again reached the dismal little room I found Arthur in bed, and though not asleep, yet in such a somnolent state as to heed little of what I said, and after merely laughing at my vagaries (as he called my fears), he covered his head in the sheet and was soon lost in slumber. I was astonished at his disregard of danger, but lost none of my own timidity in consequence.

I closed the door, but when I went to lock it found no fastening of any kind upon it, except a latch. This, however, I soon remedied; for, going to the little ricketty bureau, I pulled out a drawer, split off a piece of wood with my knife, and inserted it over the latch in such a way that no one could lift it.

The little room soon became intolerably warm, and I forced open the window, and split off another piece of wood from the drawer to prop up the sash. I then sat down to read my paper; but my fears, and the bugs of all kinds that came in the window to visit my candle, kept me from fixing my attention upon it.

In a short time the candle went out, and I was left in darkness. Still I did not give up my purpose of watching all night. I lit a cigar and sat by the open window trying to peer into the darkness. All sounds in the house gradually ceased, and Arthur's heavy breathing alone broke the stillness.

But hark! surely I heard a rustling among the rubbish at the end of the room. I threw away my cigar, and seized my pistols. Oh! how I wished that Arthur would stop his loud breathing just for one moment. I listened with eager attention for some time, and then lit a match and held it to my watch, to see how late it was. It was half-past twelve.

Just at that moment I heard footsteps outside my door, and a light shone through the cracks. I stepped softly to the door and listened. There were more than one there, I could hear, but I had my pistols in my hands and I did not fear them. At all hazards I would protect my sleeping friend. I heard a whisper. It was the woman's voice.

"That fool in here wanted another candle, but I did not let him have it."

"Hush!" said one whom I imagined to be the landlord. "Do you want them to hear you?"

Then the footsteps moved on a little way, and I cautiously removed the stick I had placed over the latch, and opening the door a little, looked out. But what was my horror at seeing on the opposite wall, in the dim light of the landlord's candle, a small spot of blood.

The guilty couple had gone into the room next to ours and had left the door open. My blood seemed turning into ice. They have killed him, I thought, and perhaps it will be our turn next. Even now, perhaps, the drover lies weltering in his blood in the adjoining room.

I could stand the horrid thought no longer. Better far to sell our lives dearly, and revenge this murder, than be trapped in our little dungeon by some machinery contrived by this vile landlord. I stole towards the open door. They were whispering together.

"This has been a hard night's work," said the landlord. "Though I'm glad we did it."

"But suppose any one had seen us?" rejoined the woman.

"Ah!" said I to myself. "They little think that the avenger is at hand!"

"Still," said the landlord, "our work is not yet finished. We must get rid of all of them."

On hearing him utter these words I rushed into the room, a revolver in each hand, and shouted:

"Aha! wretches, you are found out. Yield now, or I fire." But the next moment my hands dropped at my side, for I saw what a cowardly fool I had been. The landlord and his wife, giving me credit for being a maniac, were standing terrified before me in their night attire. I saw at a glance that they had merely been killing mosquitoes and roaches, and the stealthy steps and whispering conversation were only intended to shield from sight the flannel petticoat, short gown and ruffled nightcap of my landlady. After this discovery I apologised to the couple, muttering something about bad dreams and nightmare, and then went to my room, undressed and laid myself down at Arthur's side. As soon as my nerves became a little quieted I went off to sleep, and dreamt I was being hung for the murder of the drover.

A Heart that can Feel for Another.—"I give and bequeath to Mary, my wife, the sum of £100 a year," said an old farmer. "Is that written down, measter?"

"Yes," replied the lawyer; "but she is not so old, she may marry again. Won't you make any change in that case? Most people do."

"Do they?" said the farmer; "well, write again, and say, and if my wife marries again, I will give and bequeath to her the sum of £200 a year. That'll do, won't it, measter?"

"Why, it's double the sum she would have if she remained unmarried," said the lawyer; "it is generally the other way—the legacy is lessened if the widow marries again."

"Aye," said the farmer, "but him as gets her'll desarve it."

The nation that will at last destroy all nations—Extermi-nation.

SCENES FROM THE OPERA OF FAUST.—1. MEPHISTOPHELES SHOWS FAUST THE VISION OF MARGARET. 2. GRAND MARCH AND CHORUS.—See Page 55.

THE LAST SUPPER.

BY J. WARREN NEWCOMB, JR.

THERE is a story of a club of 12 friends who agreed together to sup annually on a certain day, at a certain place, when all should meet, no matter how far apart they might be scattered; the survivor to sit at the last supper alone. The compact was kept to the letter, and the last man was found dead in his chair.

SAD at heart he sat, and lonely
In the gaily lighted hall,
With the silence broken only
By the clock upon the wall,
Saying with its dreary tickling: "End of Time must come to all!"

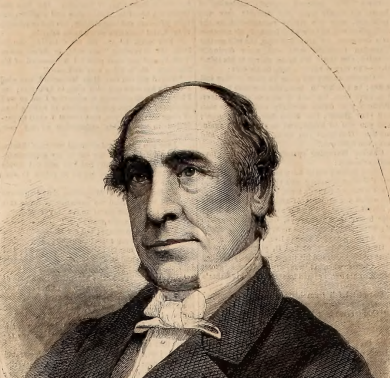
Sad he filled the bumper glowing
With the ruby-flashing wine,
Drank, but felt no rapture flowing
From the spirit of the vine:
Only Death spake from the goblet,
"Thou art old, and thou art mine!"



Vacant chairs around the table
Standing stiffly in the gloom,
And the tapers are not able
So to light the empty room,
That the shadows in the corners shall not Speak of death and doom.

Where are they, the gay eleven
Who once sat here at his side?
Some in Hades, some in Heaven—
All are gone; yes, all have died,
And have left the old man lonely; greater
Ill can scarce befide.

Midnight, stepping through the portal
Of the open banquet door,
Finds within the weary mortal
Sadly waiting for the hour
When the compact shall be ended, and
The Twelve shall be no more.

Waiting—Stay, what is it passes
Gliding to each vacant chair,
Filling high the empty glasses,
Pouring on the midnight air
Scraps of ancient song and story? Lo
The last, the dead are there!

And they drank, and toasted gaily
Many a loved one in the tomb,
Many a beauty they'd mourned daily,
Cut off long since in her bloom,
And the ringing toasts and laughter filled
With joy the banquet-room.

REV. HENRY W. BELLOWS, OF NEW YORK, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SANITARY COMMISSION. FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.—SEE PAGE 55.

When the servants came to tell him
That the night was nearly fled,
Little dreaming what befell him,
And how fast his time had sped,
There they found his body only, for his soul
Was with the dead.

The Last Hazard.

By Mrs. A. A. Baillie,

AUTHOR OF "THE SERPENT WOMAN," ETC.

"I have set my life upon a cast,
And I must stand the hazard of the die."
—Shakespeare.

CHAPTER I.

"ALL'S up with me!"

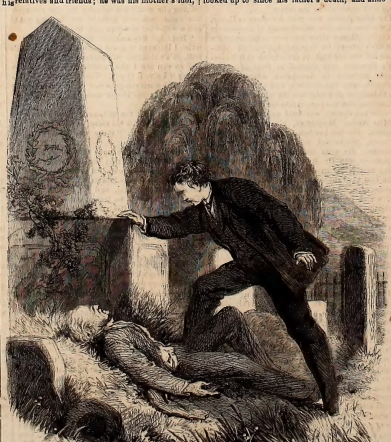
Such was the exclamation of despair uttered by Charles Haverling, a handsome, dashing young gentleman, who had just parted with some of his gay companions apparently in the most buoyant spirits. They knew he had lost heavily at the gaming-table that night, and admired the air of perfect equanimity with which he seemed to sustain his run of ill-luck, but they had little idea that he not only staked his last dollar but the last he could borrow, including all his widowed mother's little property, with which she, in perfect reliance upon his integrity and discretion, had entrusted him.

Despair had now full possession of his soul and left no room for hope. As he looked round on every hand, throughout the entire range of possibilities, he saw not so much as a straw that promised to aid him to escape the pit of infamy that yawned before him. The shame and disgrace that awaited him were more than he could bear the thought of, and to face them he had neither the courage nor the hardihood. He was sensitive and proud; his character had always stood high with his relatives and friends; he was his mother's idol, his sister's and little brother's perfect hero, and he had been jealous of their high regard; how could he endure the degradation to which their pity or their contempt must subject him? When they knew all, how could he meet his mother's look of agony? behold his beloved and beautiful sister's speechless woe? his little orphan brother's tears and flush of shame for the fall of one he had always looked up to since his father's death, and almost worshipped? How could he stand before them with the consciousness that they felt that he, their pride, their sole stay, had betrayed and beggared them? And for what?

Oh, he could no longer keep the truth from forcing itself upon him, bitter and humiliating as it was. He accused himself of having squandered his father's liberal bequest in his favor in ostentatious and profligate indulgence, and of having, in the vain hope of retrieving his fortune, been false to the most sacred trust in hazarding and for ever losing his mother's and her children's only support. He walked across the Washington Parade Ground with an unsteady step, and talked incoherently to himself, at one moment clenching his hands, setting his teeth and bracing himself up with desperation, and soon after relaxing and reeling along loosely, with all the helplessness of self-abandonment. With one breath he exclaimed, energetically:

"Oh, for a few of the hundreds I wasted on the emptiest and vilest pleasures!"

With the next, whining forth:



"Would I had died ere I was born!"

The creditors who had been fuming his mother he had contrived to put off from time to time, but he had promised to settle with them, without fail, on the morrow. His mother had heard him make this agreement, and confidently relied on its fulfilment. His failure to perform it would, he knew, betray his insolvency, ruin his credit, and deprive his mother and her children of house, home and means of subsistence. He beat his steps towards home, for where else could he go? He had, too, a vague idea that in his chamber he could better decide on the course he ought to pursue. It was, however, more an instinctive proceeding than a deliberate one; for his head was turning giddy, his heart sinking like a stone, and his legs affording unstable and uncertain support. He let himself into the house with a latchkey, crept up the stairs into his room, lit the gas, threw himself upon his bed and gave way to his sorrow, remorse and despair.

After writhing awhile in prostrate anguish, he suddenly started up and paced the floor with frenzied swiftness, beating his breast and forehead and calling himself "fool," "idiot," "villain" and "wretch" in every variety of violent and self-stigmatising phraseology. He was as ingenious as frantic in torturing and cursing himself till near daybreak, when he became wholly exhausted and lay in a painful stupor on the bed, till he fell at last into a brief and troubled slumber.

CHAPTER II.

CHARLES HAVERLING gained little refreshment from his sleep, for it was very short, and had, of course, its terrible awakening. He was roused by a persevering and continuous

The would-be Suicide saves the Merchant's Life in Greenwood Cemetery.

Despair.

drumming on his door, and the voice of a child strained to its height.

"Charlie! det up! past nine o'tock!" it cried.

"Yes, Ada! I'm coming!"

"Bakfast ready—un detting told."

"All right! Tell 'em not to wait for me."

As Mr. Haverling had not undressed himself, he had but to wash his face and hands and pass the comb through his hair before he was ready to join his little family circle. He paused a moment in deliberation, and then muttered:

"I will have one more cheerful breakfast with them before I leave them and this world for ever."

Round the breakfast table he found three happy, loving faces, that sent a pang, like the piercing of an arrow, to his heart. There, in her usual place, sat his mother, a handsome, portly lady, with a face beaming with benevolence and affection. Near her a blooming girl of seventeen, her daughter, with bright eyes and merry little dimples and smiles playing over her beautiful countenance. Facing her, and close to her mother, in his high chair, was seated little Ned," a rosy-cheeked, golden-haired little boy, full of life, activity and childish freakishness. He began his chatter to his brother as soon as he entered, and teased him with a hundred questions, which were answered with languid good-nature.

"Are you going to take me to the Prince's Ball, Charlie?" demanded Miss Catherine, the sister, abruptly.

"I will do the best I can for you, Kate," responded the brother, mechanically.

He was at the time thinking whether he should commit suicide by cutting his throat or drowning himself.

"Do you think the prince will ask me to dance?"

"If he is allowed an opportunity to do so, I am sure he will."

"Thank you, Charlie. A compliment from one's own brother is worth having, for it is generally sincere."

Little did the happy girl dream that this brother had just at that moment decided that he would blow his brains out with his pistol. Compared to hers, what a ghastly contrast his mind afforded! What a shock she was spared by her ignorance of his dreadful thoughts! It is indeed a mercy that we cannot see what is passing in one another's minds.

Little Ned, as the youngest member of the family was generally called, now wanted to know whether he, too, could not see the prince; whether he wore a crown of gold instead of a hat, and many other particulars.

"Prince Albert Edward is a good son," observed Mrs. Haverling, rather irrelevantly.

"Not better 'an Charlie," exclaimed little Ned.

"No, indeed; that could not be," replied the partial mother.

Charlie groaned.

"You are not at all well this morning, my son," said the mother, anxiously. "You look pale and don't eat. You study too hard and sit up too late. I heard you stirring in your room last night, long past midnight, I am sure."

Little Ned declared, in his broken way, that he wouldn't be a lawyer if they had to sit up late till they made themselves "tick," and wanted to know why they could not go to bed early like other folks. The unfortunate object of maternal solicitude assured his parent that he needed but a little fresh air and a long walk to set him all right, and rose to go.

"You will not fail to be back at half-past three o'clock, to settle with the landlord and the others you have promised to-day?"

"No, mother; I will not fail, unless something extraordinary should happen, in which case you had better tell them to call in the evening, when I shall of course be at home. I shall, however, keep my appointment if possible."

"Do, my son, for the importunity of these people has grown rather annoying. The landlord has become very impatient, for you know we owe him three months' rent. The grocer's bill now amounts to thirty odd dollars, and the butcher's to forty. Your tailor's bill is the——"

"Largest of all. I know all about my little bills payable, dear mother, and will meet them all if I live to see the day through."

"It will take a great weight off my mind Charles, for though I doubt not your assurance that you have invested my little hoard safely, tradespeople in these times grow very suspicious and impatient at a little delay."

Charles Haverling kissed his mother affectionately; his sister threw her arms around his neck and kissed him, bidding him remember the Prince's Ball, and little Ned insisted upon being taken up and saluted like the rest. Tears gushed to the young man's eyes, and he hurried from his home, now too painful for him to endure.

CHAPTER III.

Charles Haverling felt a moment's relief when he got into the open air. He took, from habit, his usual track and found himself in Broadway, before he thought of the direction in which he was going. The thronging prosperity and happiness, for such by contrast the human tide appeared to him, that overflowed the great thoroughfare, filled him with fresh remorse. Once among the happiest of the gay crowd, he now stalked through it, like a ghost caught at midday. The surroundings seemed at once familiar and strange, removed and near to him, like old friends beheld in a dreadful dream. His misery was mocked by the brilliant and laughing life that overran the street. He was a general favorite, and in spite of his attempts to hurry by his friends with a bow or a nod of recognition, many of them, and the shallowest, insisted upon stopping him, shaking him by the hand, making excruciating puns for him to laugh at, and plaguing him with numerous kind inquiries.

He fled from Broadway towards the North River, and walked along West street to the Battery. It was a cold autumn day, and the spot, once the haunt of fashion and beauty, was comparatively deserted and somewhat in keeping with his feelings. He sat down upon a bench, and after he had rested [illegible]self and examined his pistol, the thou[illegible]ck him that he would visit his father's [illegible]enwood, before he killed himself. He looked into his portmonnaie, which he found to contain two dimes and a three cent piece, and then started upon his little journey.

Within an hour he was wandering through the cemetery that contained his father's remains. The place was in dismal harmony with his wretchedness. The emblems of death surrounded him, and thousands of the silent kingdom were sleeping their long, last sleep beneath him. Few visitors were on the ground, and he could ramble about, free and unmolested, like a distressed spirit on this side of the Styx. He was most wretched, but there was nothing here to mock his misery.

He came at last to a monument erected by a sea captain, yet living, to his own memory. Gazing at the sculptured image of the old fellow, he muttered:

"How successful and expeditious this odd veteran must have been in the discharge of his duties since he can afford to anticipate those that belong to his inheritors. What a dark reverse to him do I present—I who forestall death because I have wantonly bereft myself of all power to fulfil my commonest obligations!"

His father's grave, which was near by, was now quickly reached, and he threw himself upon its cold, heaving turf, and wept and sobbed most bitterly. His deceased parent's nobleness of heart, his manly truth and fatherly care and provision, were now vividly remembered by the delinquent son, and served to intensify his remorse. His deathbed, his great suffering, but still greater Christian fortitude, were still more distinctly recalled; and lastly, his dying charge to his eldest born—the very words now rang in his ears:

"Charles, supply my place to your brother and sister; be a father to them, and continue to be, as you have been, the best of sons to your mother. Perform your duties manfully and well, to man and your Maker; fear death less than dishonor; and you will be happy, and we shall meet again, my son. God bless you, as in my heart I do, and keep you from evil!"

Charles Haverling sprang up from the grave and exclaimed:

"But nothing could keep me from evil; I loved it. For what debasing and vile gratifications did I not break my father's trust, sacred as it was; rob his widow and orphans of all, and betray them to a life of misery I shudder to think of! I loved vice better than them—aye, better than myself. My father would curse me now. They, too, might well do it. I am too base to live, and—"

He drew a pistol, cocked it, placed its muzzle close to his head, and his finger had barely touched the trigger when it was arrested by a groan which, to his ear, seemed to come from his father's tomb.

The pistol fell from his hand, and he dropped upon his knees, exclaiming in a voice of terror:

"God forgive me! the dead is speaking to me!"

CHAPTER IV.

In that fearful moment Charles Haverling offered up a prayer for pardon, and vowed his Maker a life of repentance and amendment. He heard another groan soon after the first, which seemed to issue from a different grave. He rose to his feet, and, approaching the spot from which the sound proceeded, beheld an old man, handsomely dressed, lying on the ground, near a tombstone. Upon a closer inspection, he found him to be in a fit, apparently dying. He took off his cravat, which was choking him, opened his shirt bosom, and sat him up against a gravestone, so that the wind blew in his face. After looking earnestly in every direction, Haverling espied a workman at some distance, and as soon as he had, by shouting, succeeded in attracting his attention and bringing him to the spot, briefly explained the case to him, and dispatched him for assistance. The man, after an absence, which brief as it was, seemed intolerably long to his sender, returned with a doctor and a carriage. Haverling again made his statement of the case, and the doctor replied:

"I could not have done better myself. Do you know the gentleman, sir?"

"His face is so distorted now, that I am not sure I do; but if I am correct in presuming this to be his wife's grave, he is Mr. Jacob Mountford, and lives in Lexington Avenue, Brooklyn."

"You are right sir," said the busy little physician, who, besides doing what he could professionally for his patient, had taken out and opened his pocketbook; "here is his name, but not his address. Do you remember his number?"

"I do not, but I know the house."

"Well, then, perhaps you will be so obliging as to go with us and direct the driver."

The little doctor, who gave his name as Busby, and who has doubtless talked many of his patients to death, did not allow his new acquaintance a moment's interval for thought, and chatted incessantly till the carriage, in accordance with Haverling's direction, was stopped in front of a very elegant mansion in Lexington Avenue. The coachman rang the doorbell, and helped Haverling to bear the sick man into the house, while the little doctor, who had popped into the hall as soon as the door had opened, was busy quieting the fears of Miss Agnes Mountford, his patient's only daughter. She had her father taken upstairs into his room, put to bed, and sent for the family physician. He soon arrived, and held a brief consultation with Dr. Busby, when the latter left, having first taken the pains to explain to Miss Mountford that she owed her father's life to the presence of mind evinced by Mr. Charles Haverling, whose name he had ascertained by direct application, and whom he had already introduced to the young lady. She thanked Haverling more with her eyes than her lips, and begged that he would, if he had no pressing business, remain in the parlor awhile till she could better express her gratitude.

"I must confess," he replied, "that I am somewhat fatigued, and should like to rest myself for half an hour or so, when I trust you will bring me good news of the patient."

Haverling was shown into a richly furnished parlor, and as soon as he was alone his thoughts, which had been diverted from his own affairs, reverted to them, and made him again the most miserable of men.

After the rebuke his attempt at self-destruction had received, he could not renew it. He thought of flight, but discarded the idea the next moment as too dastardly. No; he must face his destiny, and help endure the disgrace and calamity he had procured for others as well as himself. They must bear the miserable consequences of his misconduct, and what a wretch he must be to flee from his share of suffering!

Long and desperate was the struggle going on in his mind, and during its continuance he forgot entirely where he was. He had decided that he would go at once to his mother and confess all, and was about to rise from the sofa, upon which he was sitting, with the view of carrying out his resolution, when a door opened and a young lady entered and stood before him. Her demeanor was that of a person of perfect refinement, but the youthful grace of her figure and the cordiality of her manner bereft her of every trace of formality. Her face was classically beautiful, rather pale and pensive; her eyes soft, dark and languishing; her lips exquisitely shaped, and her smile sweet as an angel's.

"You must forgive me for detaining you so long, Mr. Haverling," she said, in dulcet tones "but I could not leave pa till I felt assured of his recovery. He is doing very well now."

"I need not tell you, Miss Mountford, how glad I am, for his sake and your own, to hear this; but I hope you will allow me to state that I am so well contented with the consciousness of having been of some service to you, that I trust I shall be permitted to enjoy this satisfaction as my only reward."

"I see you apprehend a formal speech of thanks, and would fain cheat me out of my acknowledgments. Well, I submit; but you will not surely carry your abnegation so far as to refuse to stay and dine with me."

"Pardon me, Miss Mountford, but important business will demand my presence at home this evening, and I must therefore take my leave."

"You will call again soon?"

"To-morrow, perhaps; but certainly soon."

Charles Haverling rose to go, but his physical exhaustion and mental affliction caused him to reel across the floor and stagger into a chair. He burst into tears.

"You are ill," said Miss Mountford, in a tone of gentle sympathy. "This excitement has been too much for you. You, perhaps, like my father, have been lamenting over the grave of some dear one for ever lost to you."

"Over my father's grave—but it is not my grief, for he has been dead several years—it is my remorse that overwhelms me."

"It is just so with pa. He thinks that he treated my poor, dear ma harshly, and that his severity hastened her death. You seem very weak, sir; won't you take a glass of wine?"

"Thank you; I will."

She rang the bell, and, as soon as a servant answered the summons, ordered wine.

"I have no wish, Mr. Haverling," she observed, as soon as the servant had disappeared, "to pry into the sorrows of your heart, for if they are secret they should be held sacred; but if there is any way in which I can alleviate them or be of any service to you, I hope you feel that I should be only too happy to avail myself of it."

Haverling looked up through his tears into her mild, sweet face, and the resolution to make her his confidante was suddenly formed in his mind. Wine was brought in, and after drinking off a glass of it to her health and her father's speedy recovery, he said:

"I have a sad story to tell you, Miss Mountford, one never told before, if you have the patience to listen to it, but before I have finished you will learn to despise me as heartily as I despise myself."

"I can despise no sincere penitent, Mr. Haverling, much less one whose remorse is so profound as yours. Speak freely, then, and rely confidently on my secrecy and sympathy."

It afforded Haverling infinite relief to unburden his mind of his secret sorrows to an auditor so lenient as Miss Mountford, who had not a word of blame to utter and tears of pity to bestow. When he had concluded his narration she made no comment upon it, but put several questions to him of a homely, business character, and left the room, bidding him wait a few minutes till she returned. She came back very quickly, and holding out to him a well-filled envelope said, quietly:

"Here are five hundred dollars, every cent which I intended to spend in dress for the Prince's Ball. Pa's sickness will prevent me from going, and so you see I shall neither need or miss the money if I give it to you. Take it as freely as it is given, and when you grow rich again you can repay it, if you like; but if you never do, I shall be the better pleased."

Haverling took the gift, and covered the hand that bestowed it with his kisses and his tears.

"Go," she cried; "those who love you suffer from your delay."

Charles Haverling thought that the railcar progressed like a snail; that the ferryboat stemmed the tide as if it were propelled by horses instead of steam; and, as for the lumbering omnibus, he lost all patience with that, and no sooner reached Waverley Place than he leaped out of it and ran all the way home. His ring at the doorbell was answered instantly, and his family of three showed themselves as he entered the house.

"We were getting so frightened about you," they said in a breath.

"Well, your fears are happily at an end. I told you I should be back at half-past three, unless something very extraordinary happened to me; but something very extraordinary has happened to me, and that is why I have not made my appearance before. Get me something to eat, for I am as hungry as a Russian wolf in the winter season."

"The landlord and the man with your tailor bill are in the parlor," said Mrs. Haverling, anxiously.

"Hungry for money, I suppose. Well, you get my supper and I'll give them theirs."

The elated young man bounced into the parlor, apologised to his creditors for keeping them waiting, and pulling out an imposing roll of bills paid them their dues and took their receipts. At supper he was the Charlie of old, merry as a grig, and parried all attempts to get at his secret with the oddest humor. By-and-bye the grocer's and the butcher's bills were brought in and paid. Charlie handed a fifty dollar bill to his mother, and told her to keep or spend it for his sake, settled himself in his armchair, called for his slippers, lit his cigar, and proceeded to relate his adventures in Greenwood, suppressing, of course, the circumstances relative to the secret cause of his wandering thither. His mother's looks expressed the pride she felt in his good fortune, and his readiness in preventing old Mr. Jacob Mountford from dying in a fit, and her gratification at the evidence of filial piety afforded by his visit to his father's grave. Miss Kate had many questions to ask concerning Miss Mountford's dress and personal appearance, and was surprised at the unusual minuteness of her brother's memory. Little Ned was delighted with the merriment and liberality that characterised the evening, and resolved to profit by it. When the time for the repetition of his prayers and retirement drew nigh he leant his little person upon his mother's knee, and looking up into her face, asked her whether she did not think it wicked for a parent to deceive her child? Mrs. Haverling, who was off her guard, replied in the affirmative.

"Then why, ma," he promptly demanded, "haven't you diven me the tates you promised me ever so long ado?"

This argumentum ad mulierem was hailed with a shout of laughter. Charlie was delighted with the reasoning, and pledged his word to the juvenile logician that the promised skates should be forthcoming as soon as the ponds in the Central Park were frozen over.

Our hero was almost happy again, but still very anxious. He called upon Miss Mountford the next day, and was most kindly received. Her father's condition was improving, and she voluntarily assured her visitor that there was no doubt that her parent would, as soon as his health was sufficiently restored, be most happy to exert his influence to obtain a lucrative situation for one who had been instrumental in saving his life. The hope she inspired was realised, for Mr. Jacob Mountford, a rich merchant and prompt man in his dealings, was no sooner able to attend to his business than he received Haverling into his warehouse and allowed him a handsome salary, at first disproportionate to the value of his services, but which the young man resolved to earn soon by his application and energy. His progress in mastering the essentials and details of the business in which he was engaged was rapid, and his employer soon discovered that he possessed, as the shrewd man of commerce expressed it, the "makings of a thorough merchant." Rapidly as he grew in favor with Mr. Mountford, his advancement in his daughter's regard was not only faster but more profound. The greatness of his obligation to her rendered him somewhat diffident, and although he was not unconscious of her liking for him, he had not the presumption to magnify it into anything more than friendship.

He called upon her on New Year's day, just as a party of three had left her presence. She gave him a hearty welcome, and said merrily:

"I have been wished a happy New Year about a hundred times to-day. Can't you, Mr. Haverling, break the monotony by wishing me something else equally desirable?"

"I wish you an excellent husband."

"That's a good wish. Couldn't you go one step farther, and help me to one?"

"I need not go far to find a husband for you; but as to his excellence, the less said about that the better."

"What is he?"

"A very sad dog—at least he has been such—and utterly unworthy of you."

"I don't care what he has been—what is he? is he reformed?"

"Most thoroughly, to the heart's core, and he loves you better than life."

"Then will I not search any further; I'll have him, for he is just the man I want—one who knows his own faults and can love me in spite of mine. I will take him 'for better for worse,' and there's my hand upon the bargain. Where is he?"

Charles Haverling pressed the soft white hand he held in his to his lips, and then stood erect, and said:

"Pardon me—he stands before you."

Miss Agnes affected a little start, but did not withdraw her hand.

"I see you had little idea you were making so bad a bargain, and 'secede' from it at once."

"Not I, sir. I am 'like to the Pontic and keep due on.' The bargain may be a bad one, as you say, but I prefer it to any other that can be made for me."

"Do you mean it?"

"With all my heart I do."

Her lover caught the blushing beauty to his heart in rapture, and kissed her sweet lips with the very fervor of his soul.

"Agnes!" he cried, "you make me too happy. I have not deserved this."

"Perhaps not, Charlie; but I hate your deserving men who accept every favor as a tribute to their merits. I prefer a good-for-nothing, like yourself, who will be grateful."

"Indeed I shall be, Agnes, for you have been an angel to me, and have saved me from far, far worse than death. But your father, who has been so generous to me, what will he think?"

"Think no sacrifice too great to secure his daughter's happiness. Besides, he likes you. Of his consent I have no doubt, but only——"

"What?"

"Whether you really love me."

"So fondly do I love you, Agnes, that terrible as was the ordeal I was enduring when first I met you, I feel that I could willingly pass through ten such for your sake. I need but remember what a hopeless wretch I was, when you, by an act of transcendent generosity—I even now can hardly comprehend—saved me from a doom that would have ground me into the dust as a worm is crushed beneath my heel. I need but remember this to love you better and better for ever."

"You love me, then, through gratitude?"

"No, no; I love you for yourself, for you are altogether lovely."

This interview of the lovers was here interrupted by the arrival of a visitor, but its consequences were within the month realised in their marriage, which, notwithstanding the proneness of the times to separation and divorce, promises to be a union which death alone can sunder or disturb.

THE SOWING OF THE AGES.

STEADILY the Ages sow—
Ever living seeds—
Many germed seeds;
And the flowers come and go,
Though the blinded generations
Scorn them as the weeds.

Seeds of ruth and seeds of right—
Strong perennial seeds—
Ever growing seeds,
And the harvests ripe bright,
Though the generations count them
Not among their needs.

They are beaten down in wrath—
Madly beaten down—
Vainly beaten down!
And they spring up in the path,
Prickly, of the generations
That their growth disowns.

Sharper levers from tougher roots,
Growing blossoms fairer,
Growing careless fast;
Till a crop of steel upshoots,
Spearing through the generations
Prone upon it cast.

And this last crop of the seeds
Surely must be good—
Must be wondrous good;
Precious crop for sorest needs,
For the prostrate generations
Water it with blood.

A Winter's Tale.

OUR village, in winter, presented an aspect not hardly to be described imposing; and yet it had its peculiarities—which were very peculiar indeed.

It consisted of about twenty houses, each of them some sixteen feet square, and made of thick pine planks, tongued and grooved, and fitting together as accurately as a ship's timbers. Each of them had but one door, and none of them had any windows. There were no fences about them, no outbuildings of any kind annexed, nor was there any sign of life usually visible, except a curl of smoke at a certain hour of the day and night, from the hollow piece of stovepipe that protruded from the roof of each.

There was not a tree near them, nor any vegetation, nor any ground from which any vegetation of any kind could possibly grow. They stood at irregular spaces from each other, and yet so widely separated that the nearest house of the village was distant fully a mile from the one further away.

There were no wells in our village, nor any pumps, nor any stores or tradespeople of any kind; no church sighed up anywhere out of the barren lots; there were no hotels, court-house or jail to announce the presence of wickedness and civilization; and as for police, you might look for policemen in vain in the outside wards of a big city when there is a prizefight going on as in our village, by day or by night.

There were no signs of life about it, I said just now, except wreaths of smoke; but I had forgotten, for the moment, that footmarks in every direction in the snow would be the first thing to arrest the attention of the visitors. A stranger to our ways, dropping suddenly into our village, would have argued from these footsteps—no end of which was less than a league—that the inhabitants were large in proportion to their houses, and yet the tallest man among us was under six feet high.

Our village was built, in fact, upon the ice that covers, for six months of the year, a large bay sweeping from the margin of the mighty St. Lawrence. Our sojourn in it was limited to particular hours of the day and night, which were regulated by a peculiar phenomenon; and our occupation during these hours was catching the small, ugly and not very well-flavored fish known as the "tommy-cod," immense shoals of which visit the bay from the sea during the winter months. Each of the houses was a joint-stock concern, belonging to a little club. There was a small stove in the centre of it; a table composed of a plank laid across a couple of flour barrels; a dresser containing an outfit of plates, knives and forks, and a locker for liquor—which are considered necessaries in such cold climates for the maintenance of a sufficient quantity of caloric in the blood. A long form was ranged against one wall of the shanty from end to end, and about a foot from this there was a movable plank in the flooring, upon lifting which up by an iron ring at the end of it, you were placed in immediate communication with myriads of tommy-cods, waiting tumultuously to be taken from the trackless waters below. Blankets and snowshoes hung upon the walls, giving a wild, aboriginal aspect to the apartment—the perfumes of which were also a most wonderful and aboriginal character, being usually produced by the mixture of tobacco smoke with the savory steam arising from the simmering tommy-cod, beneath whose release from the hook and promotion to the fryingpan there was generally but a brief interval. With us tommy-cod fishing was not a commercial pursuit. It was elevated to the dignity of a "sport." There was none better to be had at that season, and men who prided themselves upon their skill in salmon-fishers and deer-stalkers would be seen coming along upon their snowshoes to Tommycodville, where they would sit for hours at a stretch over the trench in the ice, pulling up wretched little fishlikins with hook and line. At night the parties were apt to be convivial, and the weird sound of amateurish songs from the scattered shanties had a singular effect as you traversed the village in the clear, cold air of the zero night.

There was a man who had lately come to mingle in our society, but to which he was by no means a welcome addition, from the circumstance of his being an unmitigated bore. Puckeridge, for that was his name, was a very fat man, a loud and incessant talker, and the question of his nativity could have been no problem to those who observed his misuse of the letter h. There was enough where ever attributed to anybody in feats of skill or strength that Puckeridge could not beat. So he said, at least. If Smith had once caught a salmon that weighed thirty pounds, Puckeridge had landed two in one day, one weighing forty, the other forty-eight pounds. The mooseh orns, of which Brown was justly proud as his finest trophy, measured six feet from tip to tip; Puckeridge's depreciated them. Puckeridge owned a pair which now lung in his father's all, in Hengland, and measured nine feet. He was taken up very short now and then, of course, and put down very flat, for a fat man. Once, when the great pedestrian of our party alluded modestly to a little stroll of forty miles taken by him a day or two before, Puckeridge despised him. Puckeridge had once walked forty-five miles in twelve hours when he was only nine years old.

"Are you not mistaken as to the figures?" asked the great pedestrian, with a quiet smile.

"Give 'em hexact," replied Puckeridge; "sure as heggs is heggs."

"Perhaps you have reversed them, though," continued the pedestrian, gently. "I don't you want to say, now, that you once walked twelve miles in nine hours, when you were forty-five years old?"

But even this, which was a very severe cut for the moment on Puck, as we called him, who promiscuously stated his age at from thirty to thirty-five, failed to effectually suppress him.

It soon became necessary to do something for the abatement of Puckeridge, and ere long the opportunity was afforded by himself. He wove his own net, and walked into it over head and ears.

At a small but convivial party, one evening, in a friend's house, Puckeridge, as the term is, was more debating as to what ought to be done for the deportation of Puckeridge from the community, when that person made his appearance. He was standing out in the cold, according to our habitual but objectionable way of his, though we had hitherto excluded him successfully from the fishing parties. Now the conversation ran upon the subject of tommy-cod fishing, and one of our party, according to a preconcerted plan, made some remarkable statements with regard to the enormous size of them, so to speak, of that persecuted visitor to our inhospitable shores. He had once caught two hundred of them, he said, at one haul in one hour. This, of course, was nothing to what Puckeridge had often done in several remote parts of the world, and in the tropics, where fish of every kind are generally recognised as an inhabitant. He began by betting a hundred dollars on his catch, if they would give him the use of the ice, tackle and materials, and he ended by dwindling his wager down to twenty-five cents—another way he had—that he would get more than one hundred tommy-cods in three hours by the watch.

The stakes were deposited with due solemnity, and it was arranged that Puckeridge should commence fishing at nine o'clock the following night, in the shanty nearest the town.

At nine o'clock the following night the scenes were lit up in that charming manner, a brisk fire was piled up in the stove, for there was an "eager and a nipping air" upon the bay, and the stout, obnoxious Puckeridge ascended the ladder of his shanty and commenced fishing precisely at the appointed hour, having been hospitably provided by his enemies with a bottle of rum and a pipe of tobacco, about four pounds of raw liver with which to bait them.

There we left him to his work, and proceeded to visit some of the shanties further down the bay, from which a deputation of our party would occasionally issue to report the state of Puckeridge and report. They found him excited and still very sanguine of success, though at the expiration of an hour and a half he had only taken three fish, experienced several bites, however, he said, and he expressed his fears that the liver was of an inferior quality, upon which he intended to make a fresh supply, wishing to be strictly fair with him in all our dealings.

At precisely o'clock two of the scouts of our party heard him swearing, and on entering the shanty found him involved in a difficulty with a large water lizard—a hideous, amphibious monster, sometimes, though rarely, hauled up by the tommycod fishers of these bays. The lizard, as it persambulated the floor with that ungainly waddle peculiar to fishy-footed beasts, he was making the fishing-line into a hopeless tangle, and it hit Puckeridge's thumb nearly off, and succeeded in getting the hook into the seat of his pants, while he was attempting to extricate himself from his difficulties. His visitors kindly aided him, however; he baited his hook with liver, and settled down into serious fishing once more.

And now twelve o'clock approached, and Louis, who had been watching the proceedings of our shanty, was sent to communicate to Mr. Puckeridge certain information, which, it was supposed, might shorten the interesting to that person.

Seating himself upon the plank that served for a table, Louis kicked his moccasined feet to and fro, and fixing his black, piercing eyes upon the fat fisherman, gave utterance to the stilly, cunning laugh peculiar to his kind.

"Louis, are you laughing at, you scoundrel?" roared Puckeridge, as he looked at his watch, and saw that his time was nearly up.

"Laugh at you!" replied Louis, with marked emphasis. "Make dog laugh wuy you fish!"

"Old your jaw, sir, or I'll throw the 'atchet at you!" shouted Puckeridge, making a feint at an axe that hung upon the wall.

"Got something tell you like Know, maybe," returned Louis, not at all disturbed by the threat, "something 'bout way you fish."

"Something about what way I fish, you greasy savage!"

"About way you fish two, tree hours on dry ground. Tide run out four hours ago. Tide no come up ever so long yet. No water, no tommycod. Make dog laugh see way you fish two, tree hours when no water come!"

Not another word was spoken now. There were a dozen of us round the shanty listening; we heard a rapid shuffling of feet, hard breathing as of a stout man getting into a tight blanket coat, and in a moment Puckeridge emerged from the shanty, waddled rapidly away into the gloom without his snowshoes, and he darted with a hard and strip now—and disappeared from our view for ever.

And amid the laugh that greeted his ungraceful exit in which even the ladies clear and silvery as that of Bella Percival), who had come down with some other merry girls to witness the discomfiture of the pedestrian, heard the echoes of Puckeridge's feet for some time after. Some of the girls had their brothers with them, of course, else they could never have trusted themselves with the perilous ice of our bay at midnight. It was all right. At least Bella Percival seemed to think so, as Clarence Willoughby daintily baited a hook for her and commenced to fish for a little fishing, now that the tide was coming up.

The porter at the hotel where Puckeridge was staying used frequently to declare on oath, that he never had such trouble packing off a man, bag and baggage, as he had next morning when that gentleman took his departure by the mail sleigh for some distant unknown land.

REV. HENRY W. BELLOWS, D.D.,
President of the U.S. Sanitary Commission.

DR. BELLOWS, who has been from the first identified with the great Sanitary Commission, is a well-known Unitarian clergyman of New York. He was born in Boston, June 11, 1814, and after pursuing preliminary studies at Round-hill school and Geo. Bancroft and Dr. Cogswell, entered Harvard in 1830. After teaching for a time, subsequent to his graduating, he studied divinity, and in 1838 was ordained pastor of the First Congregationalist church in New York. He has resided in that city the best of his years.

He originated and for a time edited the Christian Inquirer.

As a preacher he is bold, impassioned, 'untrammeled by creed, precedent or his own former views. He is often charged with heresy, but he has no objection to what his real views are. In fact, his sermons are the part of the literature of the day which we have to shrink back from the full consequences of his own logic.

He is, nevertheless, a man born to lead, and his crowded audiences. His social utility are strikingly manifest in the great work which will be his glory in the future—the U. S. Sanitary Commission.

THE OPERA OF "FAUST."

FEW operas have created a greater furore among our musicloving people and dilettanti than Gounod's "Faust." The music is rich, varied, consistent, and, though at times almost monotonous, full of charming portions, which will long be favorites.

All know the legend of Faust—who knows anything of the national and popular poetry of Germany—how the mysteries of ancient sciences, became disturbed with mankind, conjured the Evil One, with whom he made a contract, by which he wrote a league in his own blood, for a long period, at the expiration of which the soul of the magician was to be delivered to eternal damnation. In the version we have to compact, as we all remember, there came to Faust a "familiar spirit," Mephistopheles, an attentive accelerated, who led him through all kinds of unbelievable exciting events. Faust is, in fact, a German tradition, a combination of the wonderful and the legend of man in the old superhuman mental and physical power by a compact with Satan. We have this idea also in the "Wandering Jew," and in the remarkable poem called "Festus."

Gounod's immortal poetical version attempts to show that man's longing after knowledge cannot destroy Love in the religion. Calling to mind, perhaps, the ridiculous thought. But then he makes Faust one not to be lost, and is saved by pure love, purely inspired. Hence his deathless Margaret.

All the opera has for its great German is laid bare, his thoughts are "wreaked upon expression," they come to us through the medium of the music of the earth, earthy. It is as if the Spirit of Harmonies, which is the music of the world and of the universe itself, had graciously condescended to interpret the German's soul. This is the way with the opera all which Goethe felt—which he suggests to our imagination. Any other way it is a special, dense, material too feeble for such an office, but sheathe his inexpressible longings in a sword. We have in Faust here the soul of that deep, wild, awful poem that Mercy-Shelley gave to the world, which most persons read, but which Music, for the first time, has thus translated to the understanding of the million. Now that Faust has created such excitement, that it has called forth such a host of critical admiration, that it has entranced its tens of thousands, and that it has been played in every city in the land to-day.

Our readers will see, by the striking illustrations this week, how well the opera has been produced at the New York Academy of Music, by Strakosch's troupe. The vision of Marguerite, as Mephistopheles and Faust behold her, is splendid. The Grand March, the chorus by the Arion Society are the most striking features in the whole, and will be recoglised by all in these truthful delineations.

A BACKWARD COWRIDE.

DURING the Revolutionary war, when a corps of the American army was encamped near the borough of Elizabethtown, New Jersey, an officer, who had been guilty of a breach of some rule or other than of wars, paid his addresses to a lady of distinction, whom he was in the habit of visiting slightly, via a balcony in the second story of the office, and of the place where interviews with his Dulcinea were had. The lady was accustomed to receive from the handsome trick at his expense, which should deter him from a repetition of his visits.

She caused a ladder to be in very small horse of the pony kind, which he left untied with the reins reins over his neck, near the door, in order to ride off without delay, when the business of courting and kissing was over, and the horse always remained, till hailed by the owners, without attempting to change his position.

On a certain dark and gloomy night, when the officer, as usual, had gone to pay his devotions to the object of his tenderest affection, and was enjoying the approving smiles of the lovely fair one, his waggish companions went privately to the door of the house where the officer was, took his bridle and saddle from the horse, which they sent away, placed the bridle on the ..... and the saddle on the back, and the crupper over the horns of a quiet old cow, who stood peacefully chewing her cud near the spot. Immediately thereafter they retired some distance from the house, and separating, raised the loud cry of alarm, that the enemy had landed and were marching into the village.

Our hero, on hearing this, took counsel from his fears, and snatching a nasty kiss, he shot out of the door with the velocity of a musket ball, and mounted into the saddle, with his back towards the head of the cow, and plunging his sharp spurs keenly into her sides, caused her to bawl out with excessive pain, and she darted with no less rapidity than the stamp. The officer still plying his spurs with all his might—and being himself unable to conceive the rapidly backward, manages of all his efforts to advance, and imagining that the bellowings of the frightened beast, imagined that he was carried off by magic, and roared out lustily for help, as the devil, in fact, was thus carried into the very centre of the camp. The officer's friends, on the cries, discharged their pieces and fled, and alarm-guns were fired, the drums beat to arms, the whole camp was in a state of fear and cried "turn out," with all the strength of their lungs. The soldiers, startled from their sleep as if a ghost had disturbed their dreams, and the whole body running half naked as quick as possible, in a galloping gallop, prepared to repel the terrible invader. When lo! the unfortunate officer was discovered astride on one eye of the gallant officer mounted on a cow, with his face towards the tail, and his finger hanging out, his eyes shut with the gouging of the spurs, and he himself almost deprived of reason and half paralyzed with horror.

A loud roar of laughter burst from the assembled band at the rider and his steed—the whole corps gave him three times three cheers as he bolted into camp.

He was carried to his quarters in triumph, there ordered a dose of the most immediate backaway rites, stars way advances and alarms of invasions, and countermarches, and retreated with astonishing rapidity, a splendid treatise on the novel adventure of a cowride.

THE ELEPHANTINE MOUSE; OR, THE RAT WITH A TRUNK.

A GREAT French natural historian, one of the leading members of the Zoological Society of France, was lately taking a tour in Algeria, and had occasion to call on an officer commanding a garrison there. Passing through the yard, which was a large shed, he was naturally crowded with soldiers, his attention was drawn to two Zouaves who were playing with an animal, which at the moment he saw was a perfect novelty. He stood and stared—it evidently belonged to the species of Rodentia—but to what class it was neither the Muskrattus—for it had no tail—nor the Arvicola Amphibius, for thaterrantly has no appearance of webbed feet like that rodent—puzzled professor saw in the specimen before him. He asked the officer, "an intelligent soldier," as he afterwards discovered:

"What animal is that?"

"Monsieur, it is our trunked rat."

"You find it here?"

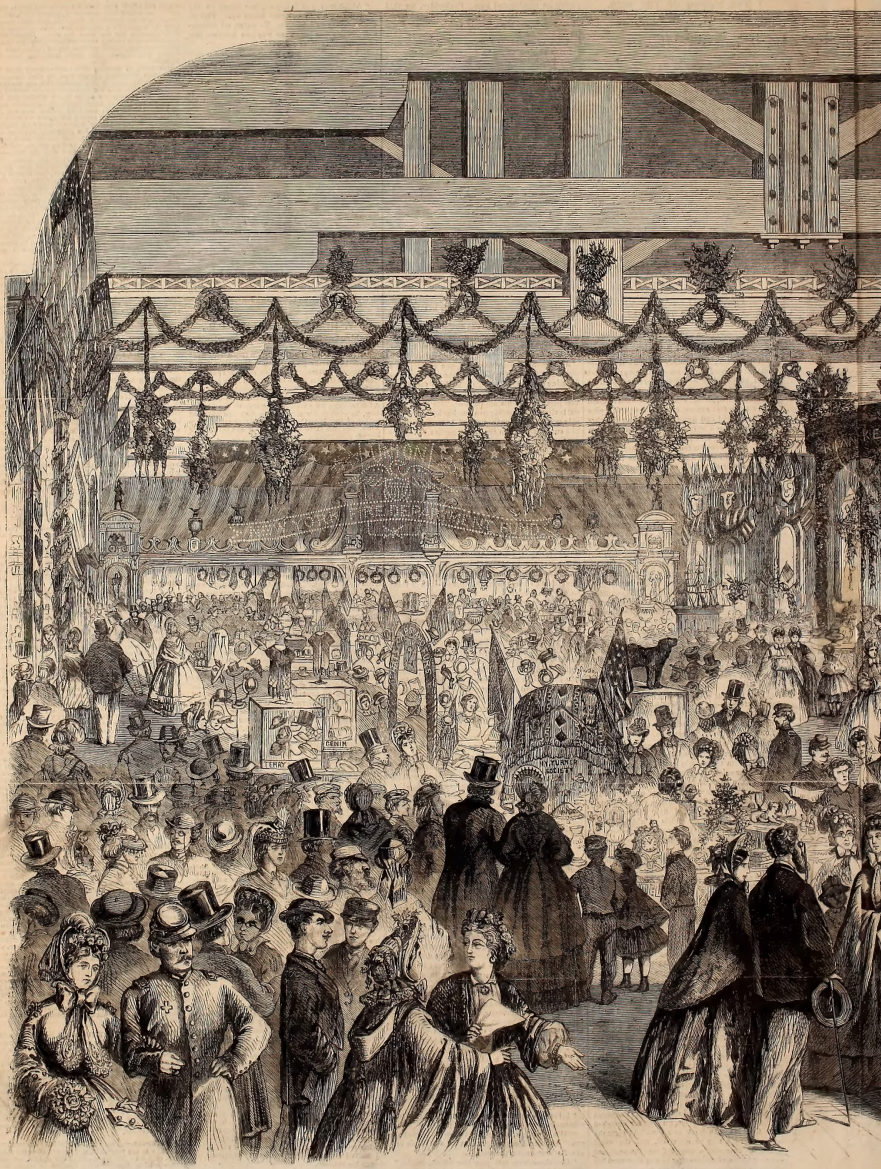
"Oh, not unfrequented, but very rarely. The natives say that they are dying out, and the breed will soon be lost."

"You would sell that one, perhaps?"

"Ah! monsieur, the mischief is, I would. What would you? It is our little amusement. The poor soldier must have some fun for dearly—but I would gladly spare one hundred and fifty francs for the one rat, and four hundred francs for the two rats, and one from a female of the same race. He was absent for a week, and then back, paid the female rat, and handed the two hundred francs, architected them the class mus elephas of Linnæus, and wrote a long account of the new discovery to a scientific body, posted his letter, and went to sleep that evening with the idea of a new medal or Pawnee, who happened to "receive."

In the course of the week the colonel was telling a story to the evident delight of the company. The professor joined the party.

"Ha," said the colonel, "my fellows are the sharpest officers in the whole army. I said the other day to Professor Bolivet that two of them had just sold two common rats for three hundred francs."



"Monsieur le Colonel is partly wrong, partly right," replied the professor, "they were not two common rats, no! They are unique, and I am the lucky purchaser."

Roars of laughter followed this confession; and in came out that the Zouaves had made the rats. He gives a dodge for making those curious creatures. Here is the recipe: Cut the tail off a rat, and fix it in the nose, stick the tail—it is like nodding a rose—into the nose, and in a quarter of an hour it will grow there naturally. The vrai elephas is a fact—as to this one rats for sale, and the professor is one of the dupes not go to his Society, for there is his "trunked rat!" And he down to Paris with it, and sold it. I will be his social death. He is already known in Paris as Particulier mus.

BLONDIN OUTDONE.—One, and perhaps not the least successful of the performers sent by the Turk seen by Evelyn, in 1657 (query, at Bartholomew Fair?) was a rope dancer. Last time, remembered. When Edward VI. passed through London, the day before his coronation, there was "a rope stretched and descended on a rope stretched from the battlements of St. Paul's steeple and fastened to another near the gate of the Deanery; "tying on the rope, he went to Ludgate, and returning with arms and legs abroad, running on his breast on the rope from the battlements to one another," then on to the steeple. The performer on the last occasion soon afterwards went with the ambassador to Spain, was received, and paid with his life for his foolish temerity. The Turk was a wonder in his day as Leotard and Blondin are now, and, about 1750, performed a similar feat in different places in the country. Between Hertford, where his "rope was stretched from the top of the tower of the church" and Ware, he changed clothes twice, and crossed about four score yards from the top of the tower.

ORIGIN OF THE SYMBOLS OF NUMBERS AND MEASURES.—Ten, as the radix or numerical sempiternary, has been selected to the dignity it now holds by the circumstance of its expressing the number of a man's fingers. Eight is a finger's breadth; a nail, the length of the thumb; a nail, from the tip of the middle joint of the elongated finger; a palm, the breadth of four fingers; a hand, the fist, with the thumb compressed; a span, the space between the thumb and finger extended to the utmost; a foot, that of a man; a cubit, from the elbow to the end of the longest finger; a yard, the girth of a man's body; a pace, two steps; a fathom, width to which a man's arms and hands can extend.

LOTTERIES.—The earliest lottery on record took place in the year 1509; it consisted of 40,000 lots, at 10s. each lot. The prizes were silverplate, and the profits arising from it were applied to repair the havens of the kingdom. It was drawn at the west door of St. Paul's Cathedral, and the drawing, which commenced in January, continued night and day till May 8, in the same year. There were then sixty two lottery offices in London.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR—VIEW OF THE INTERIOR O

NTERIOR OF THE MAIN BUILDING.—Sketched from the "Cockloft Schoolhouse."

THE TWELFTH COMES BACK TO-DAY.

BY J. W. WATSON.

To-day, up yonder turnpike road,
Past clover waiting to be mowed,
Past fields of growing grain,
With banners waving proud and high,
And music singing to the sky,
The twelfth comes back again.

It comes with all its record clear
To write its history on the year,
Each man himself a brave.
And we, forgetting in our joy,
How many a mother's darling boy
Has found a Southern grave.

Two years ago, in springtime bloom,
From out the shadow of this room
My tear-dimmed eyes were bent.
The twelfth went marching down that road,
Each casting forth his own heart-load,
And singing as he went.

That day, amid the wild hurrah,
There softly opened yonder door,
And in came one alone.
He looked so handsome in his blue,
And in his eyes, so soft and true,
A light unusual shone.

He spoke as though he had been sent
With tidings of some good intent;
And thus the message ran:
"Maggie, I held against my heart
Till now a false and selfish part,
And failed me as a man.

"This morning in the ringing shout,
In every blast the band sends out,
In every tap of drum,
I hear the voices of the dead,
The echoes of their ghostly tread,
Persuading me to come.

"And so I've donned this glorious blue,
And come, unsoiled, to speak with you,
The last one in this town.
Maggie! with all my heart and soul
I love you—Maggie, hear the whole,
My own! before you frown.

"Since those bright days when we forsook
The sunny road for some lone nook,
And conned the self-same task,
I've loved you, Maggie, true and long,
But—be it right or be it wrong—
My heart has worn a mask.

"I knew how good and pure you were,
I can do naught deserving her,
My faltering heart-words said.
And as I loved years sped away,
While I, to see thee day by day,
My faltering heart obeyed.

"But Maggie, with this morning's light,
There came a glorious second sight,
A vision from on High!
It said, 'Your heart's delusion quell,
And win the one you love so well.
Hark! to your country's cry!'

"My place is vacant in the line,
I wait but for a single sign,
To know if this be true;
I wait but for a glance, a word,
To know if this emotion stirred
Is shared, my own, by you."

A moment more, and on his breast
I calmed his doubting heart's unrest,
And sped him on his way.
Since then that one that came alone
Has made me feel his deeds my own,
And proudly wait to-day.

'Tis I that now must doubter be,
Until I know he still loves me,
Since he has grown so great.
A hero coming from the South,
Whose praise is full in every mouth,
Is he for whom I wait.

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

CHAPTER XXII.

When Elsie entered her boudoir, flushed with laughter and breathless with running, she threw herself on the azure couch, and gathering her ringlets in a mass between her hand and the warm cheek under which it was thrust, fell into a deeper train of thought than was usual to her.

"It's done, and I don't care. He loves me, and I must be loved. He's rich, generous, devoted, worships me and always will, that's one comfort. There'll be no one to halve his devotion or his money with me, no one to look glum if I want to be a little bit extravagant. Grant never refused me anything in his life, but I'm always afraid to ask half that I want. But with Tom everything will be my own. He won't ask a question. Such laces as I will have! As for cashmere shawls and silks, he shall get them for me by the dozens. Elizabeth won't say that such things are out of place then, for I shall be a married woman, free of her and this old house too, free of everything, but—but——"

Elsie started up, breaking this selfish train of thought with the action.

"I wish she'd stop talking to me; I don't want to hear about it. Why won't she bear her trouble alone, if she will make trouble about what isn't to be helped? I'll have no more confidences with her, that's certain. It is like breaking one's heart up in little pieces. I don't want to keep secrets, but forget them; and I will, too, in spite of her. She shan't make me eternally miserable with her pining and remorse."

Elsie paused before a mirror as these thoughts rose in her mind and half broke from her lips. She was threading out her curls and trying the effect as they floated, like golden thistledown, over the roses of her cheek. All at once she started, and a look of pale horror stole to her face; the hand which had been wandering among her hair dropped to her side, turning coldly white, like marble; the lips, which had been just parted with an admiring smile at her own beauty, lost every trace of color. She still gazed intently into the glass, but not at herself. Beyond her pretty image, reflected from the distance, sat a man with a pen in his hand, as if just arrested in the act of writing. Rich shadows of crimson drapery lay around him, and a gleam of pure light from a half-closed upper blind fell across his head, lighting it up grandly. It was a magnificent picture that Elsie gazed upon, far beyond her own image in the glass. But she only saw the man, without regard to his surroundings, and the very heart in her bosom turned sick with loathing or with fear.

It was North, looking at her through the open door, with a sneering smile on his lip—North in the very chamber of her brother's wife, quietly seated there as if he had been master of the house. For a full minute Elsie stood, forming a double picture in the glass with that bold, bad man, then her color came hotly back, and she turned upon him, brave with indignation.

"You here!" she said, advancing into the room till its crimson haze overwhelmed her. "You here, and in this chamber! Get up at once and begone. If my brother finds you under his roof he will shoot you on the spot."

"Never fear, pretty one," said North, with an evil gleam on his face. "Two can play at a game of that sort. If he made the first assault nothing would give me more pleasure. Self-defence is justifiable in law, and his will is made."

Elsie was trembling from head to foot, but she leaned one hand heavily on the table that he might not see her agitation.

"Man, man, you would not—you dare not meet my brother. You that have wronged him so!"

"Excuse me," said North, biting the feather of his pen and looking down on a sheet of note-paper on which he had been about to write; "I do not see this wrong so clearly. If a woman's heart will wander away from its legitimate object, am I to blame because it flutters into my bosom? And if other hearts follow after——"

"Stop!" cried Elsie, stamping her little foot passionately on the carpet. "How dare you speak of a fraud so black, of treason so detestable! I am his sister, sir, and have something of his courage, frivolous as people think me. Persecute her or provoke me too far and I will tell him all."

"Indeed you would not," answered North, quietly.

"What should prevent me?"

"The will. You dare not break a solemn promise to her."

"I dare!" she almost shrieked, clenching her little hand in a paroxysm of rage. "I will, if ever you come here again."

"No; I think not. Women are weak creatures, but they generally find strength to keep secrets that bring ruin in the telling. You cannot be over anxious to see this proud brother of yours commit murder on——"

"On a villain—a household traitor—a—a——"

Elsie fairly stopped for want of breath.

"Be quiet," said North, rising sternly and towering over her. "I have no dealings with you. One might as well reason with a handful of silk weed thrown upon the wind."

"But I will have something to say—everything to say. You have pursued her, plundered her, tortured her long enough. More than once she has been on the brink of discovery by your persistence in prowling over the grounds, and from her attempts to conceal your rapacious extortions. All this must end."

"With all my heart; let the lady accede to my terms and I disappear."

"What are those terms?"

"I will write them, and your own fair hands shall give her the note."

Elsie did not answer, but her white lips closed firmly and her blue eyes glittered like steel in the glow of a hot fire, as he dipped his pen deliberately in the bronze inkstand and began to write.

"There," he said, folding the note and presenting it to her with a princely air, as if her courage had impressed him with respect; "place this in her hands and she will know how to carry it out."

Elsie took the note and hid it away in the folds of her dress.

"Do not fail," he said, before taking his hat from the table.

"I will not," answered Elsie. "But these cruel visits must cease now and for ever. I will give the note only on this condition."

"Her answer will decide that. Now, good-bye."

He reached forth his hand, smiling pleasantly upon her; but she clenched hers, as if tempted to strike him for the insolent offer, and turned away biting her pale lips.

The hand, rejected with such disdain, fell towards the hat which North placed lightly on his head, casting one glance in the opposite mirror as he did so. Then, with the elastic step of a man retiring from a festival, he left the chamber, while Elsie looked after him with wondering eyes and parted lips, astonished by an audacity which was absolutely sublime.

The young creature stood with bated breath till his light footsteps died away in the nearest passage. She listened anxiously, but heard no door close or further movement of any kind. His exit was noiseless as his entrance had been.

When Elsie was left alone she sat down in the dim light of Elizabeth's room, pushed the hair back from her forehead and pressed both palms on her temples, whose pain was throbbing like a pulse. She moaned and cried out under the sudden anguish, for resistance to suffering of any kind was killing to this young creature, and the reaction which followed that passionate outburst of feeling left her helpless as a child.

During fifteen or twenty minutes Elsie sat pressing both hands to her head, while her eyes filled with tears and her lips quivered like those of an infant grieved by some hurt it cannot understand. A voice from the outer passage aroused her. It was that of Tom Fuller, who had worked himself into a state of intense excitement from fear that his rough tenderness had mortally offended its object.

"Miss Mellen—Elsie, do come down and speak to a fellow. I'm sorry as can be that I made such a donkey of myself and frightened you away. Just give one peep out of the door, darling, to say that you will forgive me by-and-bye, and I never will kiss you again so long—that is if it's very disagreeable."

The door of Elsie's chamber opened and a face all flushed with tears, through which a smile was breaking, looked out on the repentant Tom.

"Oh, Elsie, darling, I didn't mean it, and you've been crying all this time. If somebody would take me out and lynch me I'd be obliged to 'em—upon my soul I would."

"Never mind, Tom. I'm not angry—only such a fright, with crying," said Elsie, reaching her hand through the opening, which he forthwith fell to devouring with kisses. "It's only a headache."

"A headache! dear me, what a brute I am. But wait a minute. I'll send right to the city for a dozen bottles of bay rum, or schnapps, or something of that sort."

"No, no," answered Elsie, laughing herself into semi-hysterics, "I shall be better in a minute."

"And come downstairs—will you come downstairs?"

"Yes, yes; wait a minute while I get the tangle out of my hair."

Tom retreated to the staircase and waited with his eyes fastened on Elsie's door like those of a goodnatured watchdog. As for the girl herself she bathed her face in cold water, chilling the pain away, straightened out her curls, twisted all her hair in a great knot back of the head, and came out softly, like a dear little forgiving nun, filled with compassion for other people's sins.

Tom followed her into the little morning-room where his confesssion had been made, and sat down on the sofa to which she retreated with great caution, as if she were afraid of breaking it.

"Won't Bessie and Mellen be astonished," he insinuated; "I do wonder how they will look, when we tell 'em how it is."

"You won't have an opportunity of judging just at present," replied Elsie.

"Why won't I?"

"Because I don't choose you to say one word about the matter to any human being until I give you permission."

"Now, what is that for?" asked Tom, somewhat discomfited.

"Just because I prefer it," answered his meek grant.

"But I want the whole world to know how happy I am," said he.

"Tom Fuller," cried Elsie, menacingly; "are you going to begin already to dispute and annoy me after what I've just suffered too?"

"Lord bless you, no! I am as sorry as can be."

"Then do exactly as I tell you," continued she, "and promise me not to mention what has happened till you leave."

"It's a little hard," said Tom, "not to be able to show how happy a fellow—why, I shall tell in spite of myself."

"If you don't promise I'll take back every word I've said—"

"I will! I will!" he interrupted, terrified at the bare threat. "Don't be angry, pet; I'll do just as you say."

"That's a nice old Tom; now you are good and I love you."

"But you won't keep it long, Elsie?"

"No, no; but just at present I choose; I told you what a terrible tyrant I should be."

"I like it," said Tom, with the thorough enjoyment of her mastery, which only an immense creature like him can feel in a pretty woman's graceful tyranny.

"So much the better for you," said Elsie.

"Oh, little girl, we will be as happy as the day is long!" cried he.

"And you'll never contradict me?"

"Never!"

"And I shall have my own way more and more every day?"

"Well," said Tom, thoughtfully; "I don't see how you could easily; but you may try."

Elsie laughed; his oddity amused her.

"You are a perfect ogre of a lover," cried she. "What a head of hair!"

"It never will keep in order," said Tom, pressing down the shaggy locks with both hands.

"Let them alone," said Elsie; "you look more like a lion that way; I like it."

She was gracious and playful as possible, but Tom's happiness was disturbed all too quickly by the entrance of Victoria, crying:

"Misses' horse runned off wid her; but she y'arnt hurt; she's a comin' in the carriage."

And out they both rushed to see what her words meant.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The husband and wife galloped joyously on for miles and miles in the soft light of that delicious afternoon; with every step the gloom and the shadows seemed to lift themselves from each heart, till they were jesting and gay almost as Elsie as herself.

A few happy hours which must soon be clouded, but which were so bright and sweet that, even in the midst of after trouble, their memory would come up like fragments of exquisite melody haunting the jarring clouds of every day life.

Whatever the secret was which oppressed Elizabeth's lips, its recollection was put aside for the time, and Mellen gave himself up to the enjoyment of the hour with all the intensity of a nature which enjoys and suffers so keenly, that even trifles can make for it a keener excitement than even a great happiness or acute suffering can bring to more placid characters.

"You are not tired, Bessie?"

"Tired, no! I could ride on for ever!"

"See how the waters shine in the sun; they seem so full of joyous, buoyant life that it gives one strength to watch them."

Elizabeth could fully share in his enthusiasm, and she allowed her poetical fancy full play, indulging in all sorts of beautiful comparisons and earnest talk, which revealed a phase of her nature seldom revealed except to those who knew her well.

"I never heard a woman talk as you can," said Mellen, admiringly; "we shall have you writing books, or coming out as a genius yet."

Elizabeth laughed gaily.

"You need not be afraid; I know you would not like it."

"Indeed I should not; it springs from my selfishness I know, but I like to keep your real self entirely for my own life."

The afternoon was wearing away when they turned homewards, but it still retained its brightness and beauty, as their hearts kept the new glow which warmed them.

They galloped down the long hills and through the level groves till they were nearly home.

The sunlight faded—a chill breeze swept up from the ocean, and a sudden cloud obscured the sun; one of those abrupt changes so common in autumn fell upon the sea, robbing the day of its loveliness, and making it so cold and gray that it was more than dreary from the contrast.

They were near the gates which led into their own domain, when a man came running swiftly towards them, and as he passed looked up in Elizabeth's face.

Whether her horse was frightened at the stranger rushing so abruptly by, or whether she gave some nervous jerk to the reins, was not apparent; but a sharp cry rang from her lips, the horse made a simultaneous spring, and though a good rider, she was quickly unseated and thrown from her saddle. Mellen sprang from his horse with a cry and bent over his wife.

"I am not hurt," she said faintly, "not hurt."

The old woman who lived in a little house at the entrance of the grounds which they had transformed into a lodge came out at that moment, and being a Yankee woman of energy and resources, caught Elizabeth's horse, came up and was ready to lend a helping hand wherever else it might be required.

While the woman led the two horses within the gates and fastened them, Mellen raised his wife and carried her into the lodge. She was deathly pale and trembling violently, though in reply to his anxious inquiries, she repeated the same answer:

"I am not hurt—not at all hurt."

She drank a glass of water, lay down for a few moments on a wooden settee which the room boasted as its principal elegance, then insisted upon rising.

Mellen had sent the woman on to the house, with orders for the people to send down the carriage, as he would not have permitted Elizabeth to walk even if her strength had seemed more equal to the exertion than was the case.

"Did that man frighten the horse?" he asked, when she appeared composed enough to talk. "The whole thing was over before I knew it—even before I saw him clearly he was gone—you cried out and the horse started——"

"No!" she interrupted with feverish earnestness, "the horse started first—I should not have cried else—why should I?"

"The scoundrel must have frightened the horse; did you recognise him?"

"He was running so fast, you know, and darted into the woods so suddenly."

"I should like to have lain hands on him!"

"He meant no harm. Gipsy has grown shy of late. Don't think about the matter—there is no mischief done."

"But there might have been; I cannot bear even the thought of danger where you are concerned."

Elizabeth close her eyes wearily; her recent elation of spirits was quite gone. She looked so pale and ill that Mellen could not feel satisfied that she had suffered no injury.

"You are sure that the fall has not hurt you, Bessie?"

"Quite sure," she answered, in the same changed voice; "don't trouble yourself about me."

He could not understand her manner, but he said nothing more. She lay back on the settee and closed her eyes, while he stood there regarding and wondering whether she lay thus from weakness or to escape farther conversation.

At last the woman returned and announced that the carriage would be down immediately.

"That are man frightened the horse," she said; "I was a looking out of the window—it's my belief he's been a hanging about the place."

"Had you ever seen him before?" asked Mellen.

"Why, I think it's the chap you was a talking with one day, Mrs. Mellen," said the woman.

"I thought you said you did not know him?' observed Mellen, turning quickly towards his wife'

She sat upright, gave him one of her quick, indignant glances, and answered coldly:

"I simply said he ran by me so fast I could not tell whether I knew him or not."

"Wal, it was the same fellow," pursued Mrs. Green; "I 'spose he was a begging of you that day."

"Do you remember?" questioned Mellen.

"I do not," she replied haughtily. "It is not possible that I should recollect every beggar that tops me."

Mellen colored and bit his lip at the sarcasm in her voice, but he saw the woman looking curiously at them and said no more.

"I wish, Mrs. Green," he said, "you would take great care to close the gates at night; we are near enough the city for all sorts of characters to stray down here."

"Law, sir, we're just as careful can be. There ain't a night we don't shut and look the gates. I hope we ain't a-running to no blame; I'm a lone woman and Jem's a cripple. It would be hard on us."

Mellen tried to stop her flood of protestations and apologies, as she insisted on telling the whole story of every misery she had endured during her life before she would stop, and by that time the carriage fortunately arrived and they were able to escape beyond the reach of her tongue.

The husband and wife drove somewhat silently home. Mellen was very anxious about Elizabeth, and she had recovered her usual serenity of temper, and could do her best to reassure him, though the color would not come back to her face, nor the troubled, startled look die out of her eyes.

When they reached the house, Elsie was standing on the steps, and ran down to the carriage full of alarmed questions, having just learned that Elizabeth had met with some sort of accident, while Tom danced about in a frenzy of excitement.

"Are you hurt? are you hurt?" she demanded.

Elizabeth assured her that she was not in the least injured, tried to laugh at Mellen's solicitude, but looked nervous still.

"You are sure you are not hurt?" urged Tom.

"Perfectly sure."

"Maybe I had better run after a doctor though?"

"Nonsense, Tom," she said, a little impatiently, "when I tell you I am not hurt in the least."

Tom and Elsie cried out together to know how the accident had happened, but Mellen gave a very brief explanation, while Elizabeth entered the hall and sat down in a chair to rest.

Tom ran to bring her a glass of wine, which she did not want, and they all worried her with their solicitude, till Elizabeth all her stock of patience to restrain herself from breaking away from them rudely and rushing into the solicitude she needed so much.

"If I had hold of the creature that scared the horse, I'd will him," cried Tom, irately.

"I don't suppose he was to blame," said Elsie.

"Of course not," added Elizabeth; "of course not."

Mellen made no remark; he was watching Elizabeth, who still looked pale and oppressed, filling in with anxiety.

"Do you feel better?" he asked.

"Much, I assure you; don't be frightened any more."

"Bessie is such a heroine!" cried Elsie.

Elizabeth gave her one of the irritated looks with which she had sometimes regarded her of late, but made no remark.

"She's a trump!" said Tom; "and that's all there is about it."

"Why don't you say a re,ular brick?" laughed Elsie.

"I shall go up to my room and lie down," Elizabeth said; "an hour's rest will restore me completely."

Mellen assisted her upstairs and Elsie accompanied them, quite ready to accept Elizabeth's assurance that she was not injured and doing her best to make them both laugh.

"Accidents seem the order of the day," she said; "it's lucky it is, Bessie, that we always have some one near to help us."

"Yes," she replied, wearily.

"Do you think you could go to sleep now?" Mellen asked.

"Perhaps so," she said; "I will try, at all events."

"The best thing for you," said Elsie. "I'll sit with you a little while and be still as a mouse."

Elsie was very sorry to escape from sickness or unpleasant occurrences of any sort, and would be of no more use in trouble than a canary-bird or a bothered blossom. But just now she had an object in remaining.

The moment Mellen had withdrawn she took North's letter from its hiding-place, and thrust it into Elizabeth's hand.

"Thank heaven I've got rid of it at last," she exclaimed, during the fluster of her dress as if the note had left some contamination behind.

"How did you get it?" faltered Elizabeth, looking at the folded paper with strained eyes, as if it had been an asp which she held by the neck.

"Oh, Elizabeth, he was in this very room."

"Here! here! Great heavens! why will no one shoot this man?" exclaimed the tortured woman.

"I thought of it, upon my word I did," said Elsie. "But, then, I don't know how to fire off a pistol."

"How many are talking!" said Elizabeth, pressing one hand to her throbbing forehead.

Elsie pressed her own soft palm upon the sprained hand, striving to soothe the evident pain. But Elizabeth shrunk away from the half caress, and said, in a low, husky voice:

"Leave me, Elsie, leave me; I will deal with this alone."

The young girl went away with a sense of relief. Then Elizabeth started up in bed, tore open the hateful note, and read it through.

CHAPTER XXIV.

ELSIE went off to find Tom; he was walking up and down the veranda, looking anxious still, but his face cleared when he saw Elsie, like a granite rock lighted up by a sudden flood of sunshine.

"How is she?" he asked.

"Oh, a great deal better; she is going to sleep; that is, if Grant will be sensible enough to leave her alone; you men are dreadfully stupid creatures."

"Yes, dear," replied Tom, meekly.

"Well!" said Elsie, "you might show a little spirit at least."

"I thought I was to agree with you!"

"There is nothing I hate so much; if you don't contradict me, I shall die certainly."

"Then, since you want the truth, I must say I think you are a little hard on men in general."

"And you in particular, perhaps?"

"Sometimes you are."

"Indeed!" said she, tossing her curls. "Very well, Mr. Fuller, if you have such a dreadful opinion of me you had better have nothing more to do with me; I'll go away."

"Oh, don't; I didn't mean it," cried Tom, in a fright.

Elsie laughed at his penitence and teased him worse than ever, but Tom could hear it now with undisturbed equanimity. She had given him his happiness, lifted his soul into such a flood of light as he had never thought to reach in this world, and he was in a state of rapturous content that utterly defied description.

They walked up and down the long colonnade, jesting and merry, Tom unable to think or talk of anything long except his new bliss, and doing all sorts of absurd things in spite of Elsie's expostulations.

"I shall go in and leave if you don't behave more sensibly," she said, snatching her hand from him, as he tried to kiss it. "What would Grant think if he happened to come down."

"Oh, dear," sighed Tom; "how long before you will let me tell him, this having to steal one's happiness is dreadful."

"Oh, you selfish, insatiable monster! not an hour ago you said you should be perfectly content if I would only say I might care for you sometimes, and there now you go!"

"I am a selfish wretch," said Tom, struck with remorse.

"And selfishness is such a dreadful failing," rejoined Elsie.

"It is, is it not?"

"Yes—in a man."

"Oh!" exclaimed Tom, a little astonished at the close of her sentence.

"Yes," continued Elsie; "it's a woman's privilege."

"It seems to me," said Tom, eagerly, "that women claim a great many privileges, and very odd ones, sometimes."

"Isn't it our privilege!" demanded Elsie, bellicosely. "Do you mean to deny that that we haven't a right to be just as selfish and whimsical as we please, and that it's your duty to submit?"

"If you'll let me have your hand I'll acknowledge anything you see fit," said artful Tom.

"Then I won't, and if you value your peace in the slightest degree I should advise you to behave with more decorum."

Elsie drew herself up, and looked as prim as a little Quakeress, who had never indulged in a worldly thought in all her days.

"I wish you would come into the music-room and sing to me," said Tom, struck with a bright idea.

"Nonsense, you don't care about music!"

"Indeed I do; your voice is like an angel's."

"You couldn't tell whether I was singing something from Trovatore or Yankee Doodle if replied Elsie."

Tom rubbed his forehead again, fairly cornered; but whether he knew anything about music as a science or not, he listened to Elsie's singing with as much delight as if he knew all it was.

"You shall teach me," he said.

"A perfectly hopeless task, Tom! And you really have some voice, you had any ear."

"Oh," said Tom, putting his hands on his auricular appendages, as if taking her words literally.

"Oh," said Elsie, with a shriek, "they prove your race beyond a doubt; don't have any fear."

Tom laughed with her, grimacing at his ears.

"But come in," he urged; "you will get cold with nothing on your head."

"You are not to become a Molly," said Elsie.

"I won't," replied Tom, "nor a Betty, nor any other atrocity; only just come in, like a duck."

Elsie was about to refuse, but perceived the one and they went into the house, seating themselves at the piano in the solitary music-room, enjoying their own society and their own laughter, and with no apparent perception of the shadows which lay upon the hearts of the husband and wife in that darkened room.

Their natures were so essentially different from those of Elizabeth and Mellen, that they might go through a world of trouble without one such dark hour as daily occurred in theirs.

Some time after Elsie had gone Mellen returned to his wife's chamber. She lay with one hand pressed tightly over her face, but was watching him all the while; there was an eager expression in her eyes, as if she longed to have him go away, but was afraid to express the wish.

"Do you feel sleepy, Bessie?" he asked.

"I think so," she replied; "don't remain shut up here any longer—go down and play chess with Elsie.

"You will come down after your nap?"

"Oh, certainly; I will be down to tea."

He kissed her and turned to leave the room.

"What are you going to do?" she asked, huskily.

"I have some letters to write; I shall go down into the library in order to do it in peace—Elsie is certain not to come there."

"Good-bye," said Elizabeth, laughing with hysterical sharpness, but the merriment did not sound natural—it jarred a little on Mellen's ear.

He was gone and the door closed; Elizabeth raised herself on her elbow and remained listening till the sound of his step died upon the stairs, then she threw impatiently aside the shawls he had flung over her and sprang to her feet.

"Not a day's rest," she exclaimed, "not an hour—not one! I must go out and answer the demands of this villain. If Grantley should meet me—oh, I don't care—I must have it out! I shall go mad in the end—I shall go mad!"

She wrung her hands in a sort of fury and paced up and down the room with quick, impatient steps.

"I might go now," she said at length; he is in the library—it is growing dark, too."

She stopped before one of the windows and looked out; the afternoon was darkening under the clouds and a heavy mist that had swept up from the ocean.

"Coming nearer and nearer," muttered Elizabeth, pointing to the waving columns of fog as if she were addressing some unseen person; "just as the danger and the darkness gather closer and closer about my life!"

She turned away with a shudder, threw a shawl about her and left the room.

She ran through the hall to a back staircase seldom used and which led into an entry, from whence she could pass at once into the thickest part of the shrubbery.

At the foot of the stairs she paused an instant, listened eagerly, then with a quick, choking sigh, opened the door and passed out.

Seated in his library, Mellen found it impossible to fulfil his task of letter writing. He could not account for the feelings which crept over him. The quiet and comfort of the afternoon were all gone, and in their place came, not only the anxiety for his wife, but a host of wild suspicions so vague and absurd that he was ashamed of the folly which forced him to insult his reason by dwelling upon them.

The confinement of the house became absolutely hateful to him. He opened one of the French windows and stepped out upon the veranda, watching up and down, in the darkening gloom, looking across the waters where the fog shifted to and fro like restless sails.

He passed down the steps and entered the grounds; he was some distance from the house when he heard a sound like a person moaning aloud in distress.

He looked about—the mist and the coming night made it impossible to distinguish objects with any distinctness—but he saw a woman's garments fluttering among the trees.

He darted forward, with what impulse he could hardly have told, but the woman had disappeared, whether wraith or human being, with the hasty movement or urged forward by some other motive he could not tell.

The thought in his mind was—

"That is Elizabeth!"

Then the folly of the thing struck him; not an hour before he had left her almost asleep in her room, how could he have seen her wandering about like a demented creature in the misty twilight?

"I will go to my wife," then he thought; "I will cure myself of these absurd fancies."

He entered the house and ran upstairs quickly. He opened the door of his wife's room and looked in. She was standing before the fire—at the noise of the opening door she seemed to thrust something into her bosom—a paper it looked like to Mellen—then she turned and stood silently regarding him.

"You are up," he said.

"Yes," she replied, a little coldly. "Did you want anything?"

"Only to see if you slept—if you were coming down soon."

"I shall be down directly."

He hesitated an instant, then he said:

"Were you not in the grounds just now?"

Elizabeth did not answer—she had let her hair down and was beginning to arrange it, shading her pale face with the floating tresses.

"Were you in the grounds again.

"What did you ask?" she demanded.

He repeated the question.

"It does seem quite probable," she said, walking away towards the mirror.

"I thought that I saw you there only a few minutes since," he said.

Elizabeth was busy lighting a candle; after she had succeeded, she replied:

"If you had seen me in the grounds I don't know that it would be any thing very singular."

"No; only as I left you lying down——"

She interrupted him with an impatient gesture.

"I am tired of this," she said passionately. "What is it you wish to know—what do you suspect?"

"Nothing, Elizabeth; I only thought it was foolish of you to go out on such a night."

He was ashamed of himself now, but she did not suffer him to say more, but broke in:

"I will wait tea for you," he said.

"Very well."

As he passed near the sofa his foot got entangled in a shawl which lay on the floor; he picked it up with quite unusual care.

"And you said you had not been out," he exclaimed, holding it out towards her.

For an instant Elizabeth looked confused, then she snatched the shawl from his hand, crying angrily:

"Well, sir, I was out—now are you satisfied?"

"Always deception," he said, "even in trifles."

"Of course," she exclaimed, in the same passionate tone, "you make it necessary. I went out because these nervous attacks make me feel as if I was choking—you are so suspicious that you see something to suspect in the most trivial action."

"So you——"

"Told you a lie," she added, when he hesitated.

"Are you through with this examination—have you any more questions to ask?"

"That tone—that look, Elizabeth; you are not like yourself!"

"And no wonder—blame yourself for it. I cannot and will not endure this system of espionage—will have my liberty—that you may understand!"

Mellen's passionate temper flamed up in his face, but he controlled it and did not speak.

"Be good enough to say all you wish and have done with the subject," she continued in the same irritating tone, utterly unlike her old manner of meeting his evil words.

"I have nothing to ask," he said; "you are nervous and excited—we won't quarrel to-night."

He went out of the room, and Elizabeth groaned aloud.

"Oh! I am no longer myself!" she moaned. "What wonder! what wonder!"

She drew a letter from her bosom and began to read it, moaning and crying as she read; then she threw it in the fire and stood watching till the last fragments were consumed. She sank into a chair, buried her face in her hands, sat remained for a long time in that despondent attitude, her whole frame trembling with intense pain, her nerves tremors, and her breath struggling upwards in shuddering gasps. There was a knock at the door at length.

"Who is there?" she called sharply; "what do you want?"

"Miss Elsie wished to know if you were coming to tea," said a servant's voice. "Miss Elsie began to become some to see Mr. Mellen from the city, ma'am."

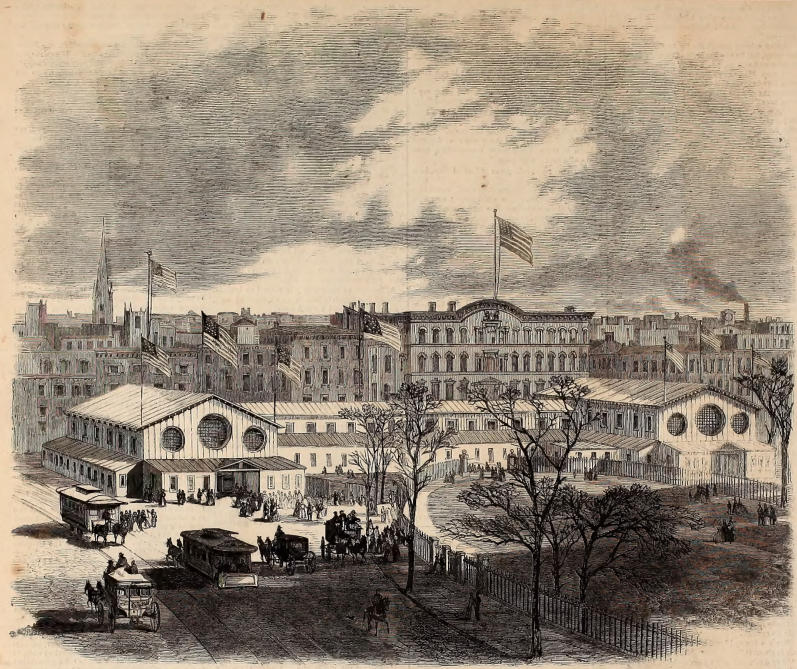
She started up and went on dressing; as was usual with her after one of those strange excitements, a sudden fever crimsoned her cheeks and brightened her eyes.

She went downstairs and received her guest with affable grace, which contrasted painfully with her late excitement, and before the evening was over seemed to have entirely forgotten the scene she had spoken to Mellen, and was like her old self.

THE "BLIND MEN" OF THE LONDON POST OFFICE.

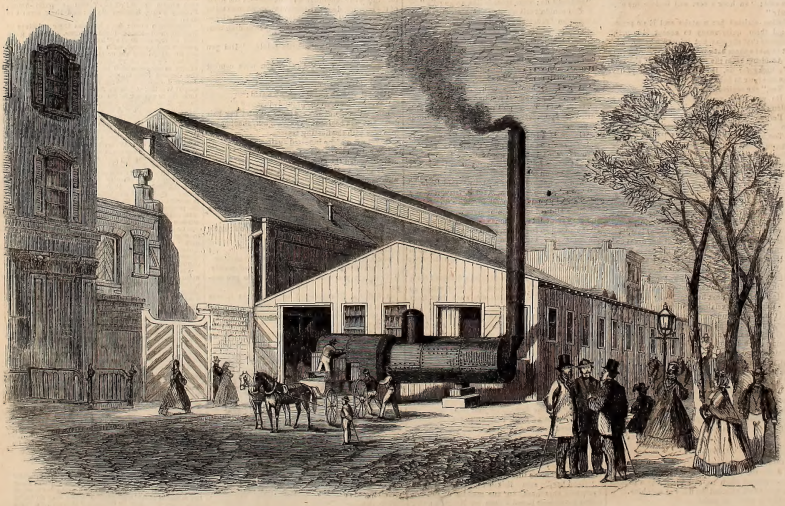
FROM an English publication—the Leisure Hour—we obtain the following interesting description of the peculiar duties of the "blind men" in the General Post Office, London:

The table of the "blind men" is the calmest spot in the building. Theirs is no work of mere mechanical dexterity, that can be brought by constant practice to a dazzling rapidity of execution. It requires much searching in directories, much guessing, much mental effort, to solve each of the riddles in writing and spelling that come upon the table. The irregular combinations of the alphabet alone present a bewildering field of variety to the ignorant and the unready; and when the eccentricities of Christian names and surnames, and those of towns and countries as well as the forms of letters, and the parts of a letter's proper superscription, come to be added, arith metic can hardly convey the results.



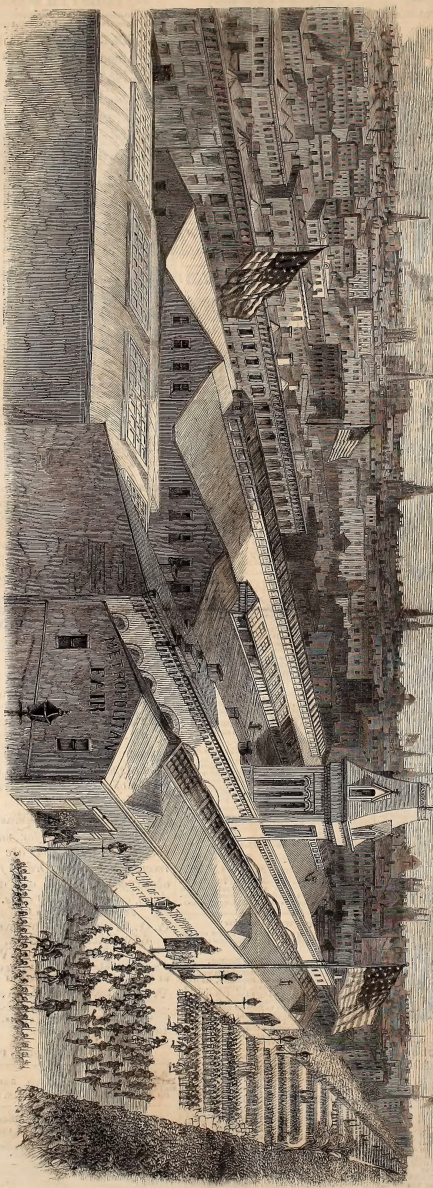
It is to this table that all those riddle letters find their way which the illegible scrawls of the rich and written "East Lixton;" and the late Iron Duke is addressed, long after his death, as the "Duk hor wellington, Ip wich, Inglan," and many an hurried sweat." The "blind men" are often called upon to decipher the most extraordinary addresses engraved in the most undecipherable handwritings: "To Mrs. Slater to the Prince of wales in its Roy, place Kinsston London paid." The "blind men" know that this means the "Prince of Wales" public-house, Princes Place, Kensington Town, and the matter is final.

Sometimes come boys address their relatives in London in the rudest pictorial form, giving a good deal of trouble to the blind men. A picture of a garden and a street, with a fancy portrait of the person for whom the letter is intended, fills outside the note by a not very artistic youth of seven years of age, is not calculated to ease the nervous duty of the Central Post Office. Addressed to "dy Uncle Jon, in London," a King Street, Golden Square, solicitor writes "Mary Ann Street, East Hive Lane 85 no door to the corner To the Sine Cross bibry. Row to the Female which the Servant up Stairs Stairs" is a letter that at Mount Pleasant No. 28 excited much merriment. "Mr. Goodin! ad St. Nicks Fountin to Shoo Makes Mis ma ancle" is known Mrs. Cooper's larger and smaller shoemaker's shop. Another rodent sainstoned box so" ail Pitts Gaol Cambridge Warder" is a letter which the warders of riddles which come before the "blind men" to read. "Mr. Gilbert Ish big to passing through London on his rout to Kent, is anxious to communicate with a friend in some part of the native country.



The Sorting Office for newspapers and packets is upon an upper floor, and is reached by an endless stairway worked by machinery, which revolves and ascends, like the spokes of the treadmill. The business of the Sorting Office is very similar to that below, except that the sorting proceeds more slowly, and the sorters, who, as a rule, are more literary than "blind man" here is chiefly engaged with the newspapers, which are addressed in a hand which, if often partially torn; and this work, like that of the department, is the heaviest at some part of the day, newspaper dispatch night of the week. He employs himself in sorting and in pressing the kind of newspaper which would probably go to certain individuals, when he finds himself with a number of addresses without papers, and a number of papers without addresses.

No magazine is allowed to be delivered to the resident as to miss his weekly budget of news and reading, when he comes down to breakfast on a Saturday morning, or to tear open a cover and find a Tory paper in the place of the Whig organ, in place of the Whig organ, which he loves. The newspaper "blind man" performs that work with a rapidity as near as may be make an occasional mistake, in sensing the wrong paper to the wrong man, his countryman must forgive him, when they know the difficulties with which he has to contend.



PERFUMES.—So perfect were the Egyptians in the manufacture of perfumes, that some of their ancient ointment, preserved in an alabaster vase, in the museum at Alnwick, still retains a very powerful odor, though it must be between 2,000 and 3,000 years old.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR.—THE BUILDING ON UNION SQUARE CONTAINING THE CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT, &C.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR.—THE MACHINERY DEPARTMENT ON 15TH STREET.

THE OPENING OF THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR—BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF FOURTEENTH STREET.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

CAWS AND EFFECT.—A row in a rookery.

WHEN does a goodnatured man resemble a soldier on parade? When he stands a mess.

THE churchwarden who took up a collection has had it down again.

WHY is a widower like a house in dilapidation? He wants to be repaired.

THE young lady with "speaking eyes" has become quite hoarse, in consequence of using them so much.

THE Borough Market intelligence says, "Hops are very dull." We are glad to hear it, as this is decidedly a step in the right direction.

THE contradictions of pronunciation in the terminations "ough" are amusingly displayed in the following lines:

Wife, make me some dumplings of dough,
They're better than meat for my cough;
Pray let them be boiled till hot through,
But not till they're heavy or tough.
Now I must be off to the plough,
And the boys (when they've had enough),
Must keep the flies off with a bough,
While the old mare drinks at the trough.

THE lady whose sleep was broken has had it mended.

WHEN is rent like a land tax? When it's ground rent.

TO ARTISTES.—To find the carnation's tints in a mulberry complexion.

WHY is yeast in bread like electric fluid? Because it's light leaven.

WHY is Hamburg beef like an executed criminal? Because it's well hung.

WHAT is a high-complexioned girl like an honest man? Because she's very fair.

WHY are lawyers like professors of the small-sword? Because they're in the habit of fencing.

EPIGRAM.

"If Nature never acts a part in vain,
Why," said an Atheist, "shall this fact explain?
Why is the glow-worm does her power produce
Such lambent lustre for so little use?"
A plain, blunt fellow, who by chance stood by Hears what he said, and made him this reply
"Nature," quoth he," explains her own design;
She meant to mortify all pride like thine.
When over an insect's tail such light she spread,
And joints in the backs in a coxcomb's head."

LEAP YEAR.—This is "Bissextile, or Leap Year;" the year in which ladies are privileged to "leap" the bounds usually prescribed in their intercourse with the sterner sex, and pop the question to whomsoever they fancy.

Artillery Badges.

Annexed is a fac simile design of our Newest Style of A.R. TILLERY BADGES Sent free to any address on receipt of price, with Name, Co. and Regiment handsomely Engraved thereon.

Solid Silver (without bottles) $1 50.
Solid Silver, letters in Gold Relief (without bottles) $2. Solid Gold (without bottles) $5. Bottles, 20 cents each extra.

Also New Style CAVALRY BADGE, and every style Co. Fire and Corps Badges kept on hand by the Army. Our Illustrated Catalogue sent free. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO.,
308 BROADWAY, N. Y.

ELLIPTIC SEWING MACHINES.
They are the Best.
See them before purchasing.
Office, 537 Broadway.

8 Card Photographs Only $1.—All different. Sent free by mail. Address J. H. FOUNTAIN, "Photo.," Hawley, Pa. 535-7

Carriages.

The subscriber has now on hand a SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF CARRIAGES of all descriptions, warranted perfect both as to style, material and first-class workmanship, which he offers on reasonable terms. C. WITTY, 650 Broadway and 66 Crosby Street, N. Y. 444-8

Latest Invention
IN GOLD PENS
JUST OUT.

After years of patient research it has been demonstrated that the Gold Pen Stub, that a genuine Gold Pen, with Iridium or Diamond point, and possessing all the elasticity and durability of the highest-priced Pen, made, can be produced at prices far below anything of the kind heretofore offered. Years have been spent in trying to produce an Elastic and Diamond-pointed Pen at a low figure, and until now all attempts have been futile. We have nothing to say against parties advertising low-priced Pens and calling them Gold. We know that ours is the only Solid Gold and Genuine Diamond-pointed Elastic Pen in the market that can be afforded at anywhere near our prices.

Trade Prices, per Dozen.

No. 2. Medium Pen.....$3 50
No. 3. Large Pen.....4 50
No. 4. Engrossing Pen.....$4 50
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders, in Morocco Cases (extra per doz.).....$4 00

Sample Pens.

No. 2. Medium Pen.....60 cts.
No. 3. Large Pen.....50 cts.
No. 4. Engrossing Pen.....65 cts.
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders, in Morocco Case (extra).....50 cts.

WARRANTED.

We warrant Every Pen for one year, and to be Solid Gold, Genuine Iridium or Diamond-pointed, and to possess all the Elasticity of the most Expensive Gold Pen made.

We will send sample Pens to any address in the United States, postage paid, on receipt of price.

Money properly Registered and Sealed comes at our risk.

GEORGE A. RLY & CO.,
Sole Manufacturers,
No. 181 Broadway, N. Y.

New Catalogue of Jewelry sent free on Application. THOS. CAFFERTY & CO., Providence, R. I. 452-41

FURNITURE, FURNITURE,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),
No. 87 Bowery, New York.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash: Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;
Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;
Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, RUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE,

In Sets, from $22 to $100.

TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each.
Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

25 Cent Legal Tender Circular.

$15 A DAY AND A WATCH FREE!

Reader, delay not; send at once for our New Free Circular which we send out to all, or not, and we will return to you the postage on your letter or its equivalent, as we want every person to have a Circular. It astonishes everybody; defies competition, and startles competitors.

1,000 Agents wanted. Samples 50 cts. Address
WEIR & CO., 205 Chesnut St., Phila.

$75 A MONTH.—I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address 459-51 S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

The Great Money-Making Article.
Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 36 cents. Address
000 E. M. BEVIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

A POINT ON WHICH ALL PHYSICIANS AGREE.—Out of ten thousand regular physicians you cannot find one who will not say that Stimulants and Invigorants are absolutely necessary in medical practice. And yet in bygone years human practitioners have hesitated to administer them, because the fiendish ingenuity of wretches who make merchandise of human infirmities led so pointedly and deteriorated them that the remedy was deemed as dangerous as the disease. This paradox is happily done away with. Physicians know, because the best analytical chemists of the age have demonstrated the fact, that HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS are absolutely free from the presence of all pernicious elements. Hence they have been, and continue to be, the United States Army, and are accepted, wherever the testimony of the world is intelligent and the inhabitants are said to be of any value, as the best protective against and cure for the diseases arising from impurity in the air or other unhealthy climate influences, that has ever been tested by long experience. In cases of Dyspepsia and Chronic plaint, we state without qualification or reservation, that the Bitters are as nearly infallible as anything prepared by human skill can be.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 676 BROADWAY.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant.—Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Any person by information of the same, will be rewarded by forwarding it to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price 25 cents, sent post-paid to any address on receipt of the money.
Address C. CLARK,
P. O. Drawer 18, Albany, N. Y.

MADAME BENEDICT'S
Millinery & Dressmaking Establishment,
Is now replete with
Every Imported Novelty of the Season.
12 WAVERLEY PLACE, NEW YORK. 000

Baker's Rheumatic Balm,

BAKER'S FEVER COOLER.
BAKER'S COUGH MIXTURE.
BAKER'S CROUP ALLEVIATOR,
are four remedies which no family should be ever without. Price $1 per bottle each. Also BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES,
which are invaluable. Price $5.
Principal Depot—No. 194 TENTH STREET, near Fourth Avenue. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price. 439-51

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!

100,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.,
WORTH $500,000,

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you will have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles manufactured, and sold by Agents, which we want in ever Regiment and Town in the Country.

Each Certificate is redeemed for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $12.

Address C. F. SHULTS,
285 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

The World's Conqueror!

For Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, &c. No sick person need despair while a bottle of this medicine is left. Send 25 circular and you will be convinced. It has no equal. Price $1. Six bottles for $5.

DR. CLINTON KUYPERS.
Office, 26 Beekman street, N. Y.
000

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most desirable Cards ever published—including the French Dancing Girl; Venus Sporting with Love; Diamond; Rotating Chromotrope; Dancing the 29th, etc., etc. Price only 5 cents each, or $1 for the set of 10 different.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
211 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

MOSKWA!

For Chronic and Inflammatory Rheumatism, Hip Complaint, Sciatica, Lumbo, White Swelling, Contracted Cramp, Spinal Disease, Pain in the Breast, Side or Loins, etc. etc. The almost Magical effect of this remedy has enabled the Proprietor to cure not only his Thousands, but his Tens of Thousands within the last 40 years of his practice, and he challenges the world to produce an article of superior merit, as the ingredients combined possess virtues of the highest order. Afflicted sufferers, try it! Price $1—six bottles for $5. Send for Circular.
DR. CLINTON KUYPERS.
000 Office, 26 Beekman St., N. Y.

Fountain Pen.—No inkstand required. One filling will write 12 hours. Also, all other styles of Gold Pens. Send for Circular.
G. F. HAWKES, Sole Manufacturer,
445-57 64 Nassau street, N. Y.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enameler. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc., produced by much exposure, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 138 Bleecker Seventh Street, and 41 South-Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

J. G. SCHULL.
MERCHANT TAILOR
32 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings, which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash.

If you want to Know
A little of everything relating to the human system, diet, air, marriage, etc., etc., read Graham's enlarged edition of Medical Common Sense.

Among the many diseases treated in this work are the following:—Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, the Catarrh, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Organic Diseases, Liver and Kidney Complaints, Cancer, Paralysis, Diseases of Rupture, Salt Rheum, Fever, How to Recover the Sight and Throw aside Spectacles, The Causes Curing Marriage Disappointment of the Sexes, Philosophy of Elopements, Causes of the Decline, Choosing a Companion, The Philosophy of Children, Philosophy of Courtship, Management of Children, and many other important subjects.

The work is sent by mail to all applicants, or the book forwarded by express, post-paid, on receipt of $1 50.
Address E. B. FOOTE, 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps and Lanterns, gives a brilliant light, free from smoke or smell, and needs NO chimney. We are now prepared to supply the increasing demand for this superior burner, which everywhere gives satisfaction. Sample sent, postpaid, for 50 cents.
Agents wanted. Send for Circular.
P. ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers,
2 THIRD STREET, N. Y.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
82 and 84 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office), offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.
Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	EACH
150 Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	$15
500 Ladies and Gents' Silver Watches	$15
2500 Vest and Neck Chains	$5 00 to 10 00
3000 Gold Lockets	5 00 to 10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Coral and Jet Bracelets	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Mosaic and Gold Brooches	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Gents' Breast Pins	2 50 to 8 00
3000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 6 00
3000 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00
2500 Sets of Bosom Studs	2 50 to 6 00
2500 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Plain Rings	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Lockets	2 50 to 6 00
10000 Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	6 00 to 10 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mtvd Holders	2 50
5000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Case and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the neatest and most fashionable style. Certificates of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail for 25 cents each; and on receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to send ONE DOLLAR and take the article named in it, or not. Five Certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred, $15. Certificates money to be enclosed with order. Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate, provided their remittance amounts to $5, and more liberal inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address W. FORSYTH & CO.,
82 and 84 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, affections, or confidence of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, and secure certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cts., together with a guide to the manners of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest; Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 40 Days."—Dont be humbugged with ONGUENTS. The GREAT SECRET fully explained in the BOOK OF WONDERS, 13,000 sold. 18th Ed. Only 25 cts. by mail. Address C. E. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

Ten years in the Business.
Patrons counted by thousands in every State of the Union.
A Premium for all!
Evans' New Enterprise, 1864, $500,000 worth of New Goods,
consisting of
Gold and Silver Watches, Jewelry, Vest and Guard Chains, Gold Pens, Pencils, Lockets, Medallions, Sets of Jewelry, &c., &c., together with a large line of goods especially adapted to the wants of our Soldiers, Army and Navy, to be sold in lots at One Dollar Each,
and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive. Premium Orders for above goods, sent to any address, on receipt of 10 cents.
Send your orders to
G. G. EVANS, Publisher,
630 Chestnut Street,
Philadelphia, Pa.
N. B. A classified Catalogue of Books with Price Lists of Photograph Card Pictures and Albums, sent on receipt of 5 cents.
Address,
G. G. EVANS,
Philadelphia, Pa.

A New Book.
Physiology of Love. Cloth; gilt edges. Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cents.
VICTOR DELAPO, 80 Nassau St., N. Y. 000

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office
FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY,

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers Amateurs, etc., etc.
And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular
J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
326 Broadway, New York.

VETERAN

VETERAN Soldiers!

We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Pins for the Regiments and Corps now in the field at $1 50 each; also, all the various Corps Badges worn by the different armies; for the single one, 100 or 1,000. Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE, Manufg Jewellers,
338 Broadway, N.Y.
Solid 18 K.Gold, $6 50. Solid Silver, $1 50.

"Diphtheria."

A certain preventive, and sure, safe and simple remedy for this sudden and dangerous disease, may be had by addressing (enclosing stamp for reply)
DR. OTIS C. LAIDLOW, 13 Astor Place, N. Y.
446-8

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New! Burglar-Proof Traveller's Lock, Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, Magic Thread Box, and 30 more Novel and Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.
S. W. KICK & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

LOCK STITCH

Sewing Machines
438-476 No. 505 BROADWAY, N.Y.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pencils, Oriental Burners, and 19 other articles. Particulars free. JOHN F. LOID. Biddeford, Me.

Dr. B. C. Perry,
DERMATOLOGIST,
No. 49 BOND STREET, NEW YORK,
(Formerly of No. 29 Winter St., Boston.)

Treats successfully all
Diseases of the Scalp, Loss of Hair and Premature Blanching;
Also
Removes MOTH, FRECKLES, and other DISCOLORATIONS from the FACE, without injury to texture or Color of the Skin.

☞NO CHARGE FOR CONSULTATION.☜

For particulars address, enclosing stamp,
DR. B. C. PERRY,
49 Bond Street, N. Y.

Stereoscopic Views, Cartes de Visite—New Books. Send for Catalogue. C. B. HARRIS, Bank, P. O. Box 2,111, Boston, Mass. 445-52

The Old Established and only reliable Purchasing Agency doing business since 1860. Parties desiring anything they see advertised or any information, can obtain it by enclosing a 3c. stamp for Circular to HENRY STEPHENS, 83 Nassau St., N.Y.
446-8

E. W. BENICZKY,
At his well-known
PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY,
No. 2 New Chambers Street,

Has now the newest facilities to take Cartes de Visite as well as other Photographs, in the best style. Note well:—Nothing like the increase in price of different materials, the charges are the same and the quality the best.

Card Pictures $1.50 per doz.,—3 for $1.
Cartes de Visite $2 per doz.
Large Size Photographs, 2 for $1.

All other Photographs up to life size colored in oil or water at the most reasonable prices.

☞Particular attention given to Copying Cards or Ambrotypes, Large Photographs. The smallest or most defaced picture can be, by the aid of his experienced artists, copied into a handsome photograph. Every attention paid to visitors wishing to examine the specimens.

Swords, Sashes, Belts.

Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords, $31-68 E. RITTRIDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Something New in Playing Cards.
LOVE SCENES.
LOVE SCENES.
LOVE SCENES.
LOVE SCENES.
DESIGNS FROM FRENCH ARTISTS.

The above new Card has 52 beautiful pictures, of elegant design, and they can also be used the same as ordinary playing cards, thus combining pleasure with amusement. Enclose 10 cents and two red stamps and send for sample pack. $5 per dozen. Liberal discount to dealers. A. H. CASWELL,
446-7 50 Nassau St., room No. 1, upstairs.

FORTY PRIZE
MEDALS
OVER ALL COMPETITORS.

CHICKERING & SONS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Grand, Square and Upright Pianofortes.

THALBERG'S CERTIFICATE

"Since my arrival in America I have constantly used the Pianos of Messrs. Chickering & Sons, and I can only repeat that which I have so often said before: The instruments are the best I have seen in the United States, and will compare favorably with any I have ever known.
S. THALBERG."

Warerooms, 694 Broadway, N. Y., 246 Washington Street, Boston

Remington's
Army and Navy
REVOLVER!
Approved by the Government.
Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.
E. REMINGTON & SONS,
438-50 Ilion, N. Y.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PIERRE SIBON, 33 Ann St., N. Y.

Hoyt's Rhaytha Hair Restorative—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and grey hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, acetate of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.
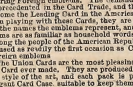
HOYT'S MINNEHAHA HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled in keeping the hair in order.
HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM
dies and colors the hair of the most fine; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.
HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER
imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves youthfulness of appearance. Sold everywhere.
JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place, N. Y.

Do You Want to get Married?
"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy," Plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, when, where, during love, and survey whoever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 10 cents and two red stamps. Address
E. D. LUCKE & CO., Box 1852, Portland, Me.
442-48

We have furnished our Wesson's Rifles as follows:



State of Kentucky	1,366
State of Indiana	760
General Ripley	320
Colonel Collins	230
Capt. Buck's Co., Chillicothe, O.
Col. Gaunt's "	Marietta, O.
Capt. Child's "	Athens, Ill.
Capt. Whybark's Co.,	Rolla, Mo.
Capt. McGee's "	Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Hunter's "	Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Olds' "	Marysville, Ind.

LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 12, 1862.

DEAR SIR—The Rifles (23) were put to a severe test on the 7th, at the Stand Fall, AND WON A STAND OF COLORS, in a contest against THREE INFANTRY COMPANIES. They were to fire 5 squads of ten, each man having three shots, and to be shot at the command "Fire." They were OUT-NUMBERED TWO HUNDRED shots by the infantry. Distance 200 yards. We hit the target 45 times out of 100 shots. The greatest number of hits by any infantry company was 14. This establishes the superiority of the RIFTREDGE (Wesson) Gun.
S. GREEN,
Col. 1st Kansas Cav.
To MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.
B. RITTREDGE & CO.,
Cincinnati, Ohio.
435-44

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning and caution to YOUNG MEN who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc.; supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. Address, in a postpaid addressed envelope, Single Copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings county, N. Y. 000

WEDDING CARDS.
French Note Papers, Seals and Presses, Silver Plates, etc., at 2 Tremont Row, Boston. Send for Specimens.
For Specimens by mail, send 3c cards.
000

GREAT TRIUMPH.

STEINWAY & SONS, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker Street, N. Y., were awarded a FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.
The special correspondent of the New York Times says:
"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is complete, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker." 000

WATCHES.

A handsome Heavy Hunting Cased Silver Composite Watch. Fine Movements, handsome white Dial and steel-polished hand; elegant finish in every respect, and in perfect running order. These Watches are composed of two metals, the outer one being the finest quality of silver, and will bear comparing of every description, and has the appearance of Sterling Silver in every respect. Sold only by the case, at $72.
Sample Watches sent free of expense on receipt of $15.

$14 $14

The great English Army Watch, in Heavy Gold Composite Hunting Cases, a fac simile of the Brittish Army Watch. These Watches are beautifully finished, and the movements first-class and carefully jewelled, and warranted good timekeepers. These Watches will wear a great length, being massive Gents. Sold only by the case, at $72.
Sample Watches sent free of expense on receipt of $15.

$15 $15

The Great New Army Watch, especially for soldiers, in heavy and beautifully finished Solid Silver, Hunting Cases, Genuine Lever movements, Real Jewelled, Engraved, Engine-turned or plain cases; warranted as represented, and a perfect timekeeper, only $18.

$18 $18

A Lady's very elegant English Court Watch, in very small, Gold Composite Cases, Magic Spring and seconds, and a perfect timekeeper, only $16.

$16 $16

Officer's Watch—Extra Heavy American Lever Watch, in Double Bottom Coin Silver Hunting Cases, full jewelled.—Trademark Wm. Ellery. $35

$35 $35

A very handsome Double Time Duplex Stop Watch, New York and London time, sweep seconds, jewelled in very action, Gold Balance, and in Heavy Sterling Silver Engine Turning Cases. $35
The Movements are Beautifully Engraved and have the patent adjusted stop, only $38

$35 $35

WARRANTED.
All our Watches are sent out in perfect running order, and are warranted as represented, or the money refunded. A written warrantee given if required.
We offer great inducements to Agents. Send for our Circular. Constantly on hand Watches of every description.

Postage on Watches, by the case, $2 36; Registering 20 cents. Sample Watches sent free.

GEO. A. ELY & CO.,
IMPORTERS,
181 (late 208) Broadway, N.Y.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Model Adviser, by WM. H. HARE, M. D., 260 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address W. Wilde Street, Reading, Pa.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED for the New Colored Album Gem Package. Send Stamp for Circular and Sample to
J. L. G. PIERPONT,
446-9 326 Broadway, N. Y.

Whiskers! Whiskers!
MY ONGUENT will force them to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Price 25 cents per package for $1. Address
M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

Poor Man's Secret, with which any one (either male or female) can make $10 per day easy. Sent every where for 25 cts. Address
W. FRIZZELL, Baltimore, Md.

"Pinigan's Wake."—Why I Loved Her. "My Love is on the Battlefield." "Kind Friends are Most Her." Piano Accordion Music Book, for Violin, Flute or Cornet, each 25 cts. MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of every description for sale by mail on receipt of stamp. FREDERICK BLUME, 326 Bowery, New York.

Ten Thousand Wonderful Things!—Is published every May-day and Nate, Odd, Curious, Quaint, Eccentric and Extraordinary. Send stamp for Catalogue. T. W. STRONG, Box 1894, P. O., Philadelphia, Pa.

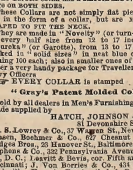
New Army Watches.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers, 212 Broadway, N. Y., want Agents in every County and every Regiment, for the sale of their new styles of Watches. Unusually liberal terms are offered to Agents. Send for Circular.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different sizes. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELAFO, 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

Ace of Eagles.



The suits are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS and FLAGS. Colonel in place of King; Goddess of Liberty for Queen; Major for Jack.
The Union Playing Cards are the first and only genuine American Cards ever produced, and as they are entered according to Act of Congress, they can be manufactured only by the American Card Company.
These Cards are rapidly taking the place of Cards having Foreign emblems. The demand for them is unprecedented in the Card Trade, and they will soon become the Leading Card in the American market.
In playing with these Cards, they are to be called by the names the emblems represent, and as the emblems are as familiar as household words everywhere among the people of the American Republic, they can be used as readily the first occasion as Cards bearing Foreign emblems.
The Union Cards are the most pleasing and attractive Card ever made. They are produced in the highest style of the art, and each pack is put up in an elegant Card Case, suitable to keep them in when not in use, and then in handsome dozen boxes for the trade.
Two Sample Packs, in Card Cases, sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1.
Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
74 Chatham Street, New York.

Send 25 Cents to C. W. Philo, Brooklyn, N. Y., and receive the CIRCULAR OF WONDERS, containing SECRETS worth $50 to any one.

Have now been before the public for nearly a year. They are universally pronounced the neatest and best fitting collar extant.
The upper edge presents a perfect curve, free from the angles noticed in all linen collars.
The crawl ensues no puckers on the inside of the turn-down collar—they are AS SMOOTH INSIDE AS OUTSIDE—and therefore perfectly free and easy to the neck.
The Gazette collar has a smooth and evenly finished edge on every seam.
These Collars are not simply flat pieces of paper cut in the form of a collar, but are MOLDED AND SHAPED TO FIT THE NECK.
They are made in "Novelty" (or turn-down style), in every half size from 12 to 17 inches, and in "Marvels" (or Gazette), from 13 to 17 inches, and packed in "solid sizes" in neat blue cartons, containing 100 each, and in smaller ones of 10 each—the latter a very handy package for Travellers, Army and Navy Officers.
☞ EVERY COLLAR is stamped
"Gray's Patent Molded Collar."
Sold by all dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The Trade supplied by
HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
81 Devonshire St., Boston.
J. S. Lowrey & Co., 37 Wagon St., New York; Van Deusen, Boehmer & Co., 67 Chesnut St., Philadelphia; Drew, 32 Hanover St., Baltimore, Md.; Wall, Stephens & Co., 132 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; Leavitt & Brown, cor. Fifth and Vine St., Cincinnati; J. Von Borries & Co., 431 Main Street, Louisville, Ky.; Frankenthal & Bro., 6 North Main Street, St. Louis, Mo.; Bradford Bros., Milwaukee, Wis.; Wead, Wilcox & Co., 7 to 13 Tehoupitoulas Street, New Orleans. 444-52

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of money.
M. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

Royal Havana Lottery.

50 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest cash paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

THE BEST LITERATURE
☞By the Best American Writers.☜
Is found each month in the

Atlantic Monthly

LONGFELLOW, LOWELL, HAWTHORNE, EMERSON, HOLMES, AGASSIZ, and others of the leading writers of the country contribute regularly.
Terms, $4 a year, postage still—now a number. Liberal reduction to Clubs. Send 25 cents for a specimen number to
TICKNOR & FIELDS, Publishers,
443-559 135 Washington street, Boston.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVERS.

Trade Mark, P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jewelled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be inclosed, as the Express Companies will not take goods for collection on delivery.
J. T. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Munro's 10 Cent Publications.
NOVEL No. 11.

The Hunter's Triumph;
OR,
THE WARRIORS OF THE SWAMP.
A Sequel to the Indian Slayer, a forest tale of marvelous interest.

Novel No. 3.—THE PATRIOT HIGHWAYMAN, Jerry Leahy, or JACK SHEPPARD IN AMERICA. This story is founded on much popularity. This serves by a chance in the manuscripts as to induce the proprietors of one of the theatres in this city to have it dramatized to suffication. Sent formed before houses crowded to suffocation. Sent postpaid on receipt of price—10 cents.
GEORGE MUNRO & CO.,
o 17 William St., N. Y.

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all throat and lung affections. The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread the information which he considers to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.
Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
o Williamsburg, Kings Co., N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in six drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs etc., etc.
E. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.
0000

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts.,
MAGNIFYING 500 times, mailed on receipt of price. Lenses of different powers, $1. Address P. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each pen. Terms for a CIRCULAR. Pens repointed on receipt of 35 cents.
326-379 E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

The only genuine "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Sold at "Turn-over" 75 cents or 6 "Choice," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine St., N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

Great Chance to Make Money!
$650,000 of Watches, Jewelry, &c.,
Given away with our STATIONERY PRIZE PACKETS.

Every AGENT purchasing 100 PACKETS will receive, FREE, as a PRESENT from us, a GENUINE SILVER WATCH.
We also publish SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $30. Agents can make money by engaging in the sale of our PACKETS and ENGRAVINGS then in any other business. For full particulars of SPECIAL INDUCEMENTS we offer send for our New Circular.
G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
o 36 Beekman St. N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both sexes—how to cure and prevent them. Address the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes recommended by SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instrument with Amusement, is mailed, prepaid, for $2 50; or with 6 beautiful Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by
HENRY CRAIG,
323 Broadway, New York.
Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Stereoscope, or Parlor STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Frame and Fluid Focus, accommodating all eyes, for $3; with 12 assorted views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

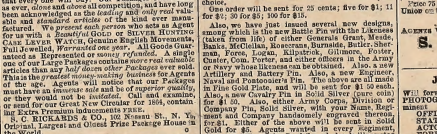
American, Swiss and English Watches a superior styles and quality of cases. Orders from the Trade or Army (large or small) promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 20 years.
T. B. SYNNER, 175 Broadway, N. Y.
0000



A DELICATE QUESTION—THE MARM AND THE MIDDY.

[Among the charges brought against Admiral Wilkes by Secretary Welles is that he refuses to tell his age.]

BIDDY WILKES—"Now really, Marm Welles, you'll have to excuse me telling you how old I am. That's a question one lady should not put to another."

GOLD WATCH FREE!
AND
$15 Per Day Easy $15

Made by acting as our Agent for the sale of the GENUINE ORIGINAL and only Genuine RICKARDS'S GOLD COMBINATION PENCILS. Each of these Wonderful, Large and Useful Packages contains Large quantities of Fine Writing Paper, Envelopes, Steel Pens, Pin Holders, Lead Pencils, Blotters, Fine Steel Pens, Pin Holders, Lead Pencils, Blotters, Fine Steel Pens, Fashion Plates, Designs for Engravings, Large Beautiful Emblems, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companions, Parlor, Toilet, Kitchen sakes, Household Companions, Parlor, Toilet, Kitchen sakes, Garden Guide, Evening Amusements, Letter Writers Instructors, Rare Old Recipes, Many Ways to Get Rich, Miniature Calendars for 1864, Tonics of Notions, Lessons of Mining Heroes, Comic Humor, Complete with Pay, Bounties, Rations, Allowances, Pensions, &c., Gems, Rich Presents of Fine Jewelry, &c., the whole worth, if Bought Separate, Many Dollars, Price Each Package, only 25 cts. Wholesale Rates to Agents very Low, from 100 to 500 per cent. profit made. Smart Agents sell 100 Packages in a few hours. They are good and useful to all, and a novelty that every one will buy. Our Packages stand unrivaled, alone and above all competitors, and have long been acknowledged as the leading and only real valuable and standard articles of the kind ever manufactured. We present each person who acts as Agent for us with a Beautiful GOLD or SILVER HUNTING CASE LEVER WATCH, Genuine English Movements, Full Jewelled, Warranted one year. All Goods Guaranteed as Represented or money refunded. A single one of our Large Packages contains more real valuable articles than any half dozen other Packages ever sold. This is the greatest money-making business for Agents of the age. Agents will notice that our Packages must have an immense sale and be of superior quality, or they would not be imitated. Call and examine, or send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing the Extra Premium inducements.
R. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y., Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

Soldier's Money Belt!
(HOWARD'S PAT.)

This Belt is designed especially for Soldiers. It will not wear or wet through under any circumstances. Has three compartments—one for Letters, one for Greenbacks, and one for Photographs or Keepsakes of the loved ones at home. They are Simple, Secure and Elegant, and will last a lifetime. They are sent to all parts of the army by return mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, $1 50 each.
HOWARD BELT CO.,
o 239 Broadway, N. Y.

Soldiers, Attention!

Pain, Disease and Exposure, with a hot climate, muddy water and bad diet, will soon undermine a strong constitution. HOLLOWAY'S PURIFYING AND STRENGTHENING PILLS, you can rely upon, for these and all other complaints. 25 cents, 88 cents, and $1 80 per box or pot.

Shuits' Onguent—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in a few days, or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

250 Rare Receipts.
SEVENTEEN ELECTROTYPE ENGRAVINGS.
Tells What to Do, And How to Do It.
The best Family Receipt Book ever published.
Sent free, by mail, for 25 cents.
HUTCHINSON & CO., Publishers,
o 142 Broadway, N. Y.

Salesmen Wanted.—Salary Paid. Address (with stamp) to Harris Bros., Boston, Mass. 436-476

A WATCH FOR ALL!
S. M. WARD & CO.,
MANUFACTURING
JEWELLERS!
208 Broadway, New York.

100,000
Watches, Lockets, Chains, Gold Pens and Cases, Rings, Pins, etc., etc.

To be sold for $1 each, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get, and not to be kept unless you are perfectly satisfied.
Orders specifying the various articles are put in Envelopes and Sealed, and sent without regard to choice.
One order will be sent for 25 cents; five for $1; 11 for $2; 30 for $5; 100 for $15.
Sales, we have just issued several new designs, among which is the new Battle Pin with the Likeness (taken from life) of either Generals Grant, Meade, Banks, McClellan, Rosecrans, Burnside, Butler, Sherman, Foote, Logan, Kilpatrick, Gillmore, Foster, Custer, Com. Porter, and either officers in the Army or Navy whose likeness can be obtained. Also a new Artillery and Battery Pin. Also, a new Engineer, Naval and Postmaster's Pin. The above are all made in Fine Gold Plate, and will be sent for $1 50 each. Also, a new Cavalry Pin in Solid Silver (cure coin) for $1 50. Also, either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, Solid Silver, with your Rank, Regiment and Company handsomely engraved thereon, for $3. Either of the above will be sent in Solid Gold for $5. Agents wanted in every Regiment, Vessel and Hospital. Send for wholesale illustrated descriptive circular.
o

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, CURED and REMEDIED. Pamphlets free. Address
436-476 CHAS. H. LAWS, New Haven, Conn.

Ivory Jewelry!

Fine Ivory Brooches..... $1 50
Roll Earrings..... $1 50
Ivory Dominoes, Rations, (new style)..... 75
Pearl Initial Stations..... $1 00
Sent free, on receipt of price. Great variety on hand, at WELLING'S, 94 Pine St., N. Y. o Sign of the Golden Elephant.

Human Faces

AND "SIGNS OF CHARACTER," illustrated Portraits of Distinguished persons. PHYSIOLOGY. News from Dreamland. Mind and Body. Your Social Nature. A Happy Wedding. Considerations at Once. Rapid Multiplication. Wisdom in Love-making. Slander of Beauty. Savage Warfare. Indian War-Talk. Planning a Massacre. An Escape. Flirtation. Art and Artists. Sleep. Its Necessity. A New Book Wanted. Lines on Noses. Sunday Schools, an address by the Hon. Rev. Bishop Clarke, of R. I. A Hint to Teachers. Law of Association. Terrible Stories. Wit and Humor. Humorous Idea of Religion. Sunday Schools must be made attractive. Rev. Dr. Bellows, Dr. John B. Dorsey and Lieut. W. Pittenger, with Portraits. Characters and Biographies, with Sketches of Neighbors, Mendicant, Charlotte Corday, Queen Catharine, Richter, Baker, Beethoven. All this and much more given in the APRIL NO. ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Only 15 cents, by first post, or $1 50 a year. Address
FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.
324

STAMMERING

And Stuttering permanently cured by Bates's Patent Fine Relentic Appliances. For (New Edition of) Pamphlets and Drawings describing the case, address
H. C. L. MEARS, 377 West 23d St., N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Enamel and Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Patent Set, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, English Movements, and Correct Timekeeper, sent free by mail, in neat case, only $7.
A SILVER HUNTING CASE as above, only $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper $15
OR COMPASS WATCH.

A SUPERB "DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" engraved or engine-turned Hunting Case Watch—Magic Spring—Genuine English, jewelled Lever Pocket Movements—"M. J. TOBIAS"—Inscribed on inside of Case—and has "REAL MILITARY COMPASS" set in the movement—making it a correct Guide for the Soldier or Traveller—a perfect Timekeeper, Warranted one year, will send safe, and in an Exact Imitation of a 10 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.
ENGLISH STERLING SILVER LEVER WATCHES, engraved, Hunting Case, full jewelled movements warranted, $18.

$30 American $30 Levers.

In 4 oz. Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Full Ruby Jewelled, Gold Joints, Magic Spring, with Full Guarantee, only $30.

Real English Duplex Stop Watch,

In Massive Silver Hunting Cases, Full Jewelled, SWEEP SECONDS, for deliberate or Timing Purposes, Full Guarantee, $35.
Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. Write to us for a Catalogue of the principles of European Watches. Catalogue of trade prices on application.
Prize Essay, Illustrated Newspaper of Facts, 20 pages, entitled "European Timekeepers," specially sent to Army Officers. Every celebrated timekeeper here, and satisfaction in the watch our every object, as our name is our guarantee in the principal cities and watch makers in the wards of our readers in the fields. Illustrated Mens says, "Correct Mens" Watches, Jewelry and Arms which they are equal in appearance to $100 watches."
Address CHAS. P. MORTON & CO., Importers, o 38 and 40 Ann St., New York.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERY WHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready-Made or to Measure, at $33, $30, $45 per doz
SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.
Printed directions for self-measurement, Rule of rules and Chart sent to different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.
FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50 each—all cut one yard long. Single Shirts sent by mail. Mens' Drawers, 75 cents each and 63 cents postage for each shirt.
Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS

SOLID WELDED WHITE.
Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.
To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.
Price 75 cents each; sent by mail to any part of the Union on the receipt of 90 cents.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE FOLLOWING at the prices annexed:

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
MILITARY MEN,	DIVINES,
STATESMEN,	ACTORS, ACTRESSES,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,

20 cents each, $1 50 per doz. Cabinet, 25 cents each, $2 50 per doz. Address
J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1614, New York city.
Send for circular.

Dyspepsia Tablets.

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. Or sent, postpaid, sent free on the receipt of 63 cents. Depot, 287 Canal Street, second floor.
0000

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN
6 Maiden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fine Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Goods," "Fancy Goods," "Jewelry, Soap, Brushes, Mercshaum Pipes, etc., etc.
Manufacturers of Navy Revolvers.
A large assortment of
RIFLE PRESENTATION SWORDS.
34-70 Constantly on hand.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newbern, Port Royal, and all points where should Newbern, Port Royal, and all points where should be sent by mail, address MENS'S EXPRESS No. 74 Broadway, Baltimore. Rates reduced low rates. 0000

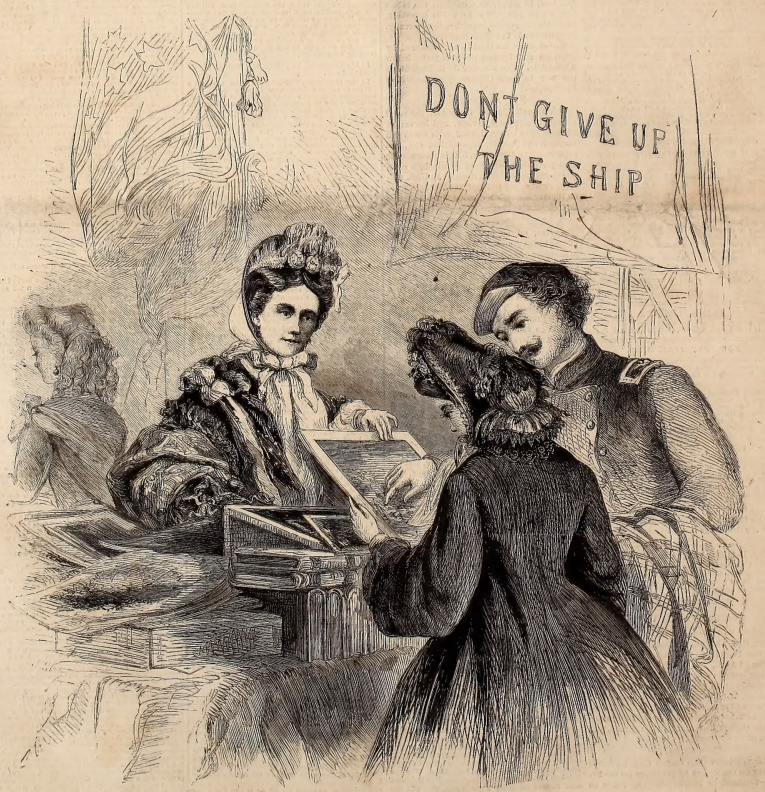
A Secret Worth Knowing—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or other fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 447—VOL. XVIII.] NEW YORK, APRIL 23, 1864. [TERMS: $3 50 YEARLY, 14 WEEKS $1 00.

THE GREAT METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR.



OF all the attempts made during the war to raise means by the voluntary contribution of the people, none has met a more cordial approval, been more warmly taken up or more enthusiastically carried to the mountain height of complete success than the Metropolitan Sanitary Fair. When the ladies of New York undertake a great work they do it greatly, and their Fair will be an epoch in the future history of the city. The buildings where the wealth and beauty of the city gathered to act day by day the part of sales-women may soon pass away, but the memory of the great Fair will endure, and, we trust, as has been wisely suggested, in the form of a permanent Soldiers' Home, where, half a century hence, the veteran, still bearing on his aged form the honorable scars of his wounds in the great war for his country's existence, will find a home.

From far and wide the trains bring in visitors and purchasers. To let all far and near see what the Fair really is, we lay a series of pictures before them, which cannot fail to interest. They may arouse some of the tardy to make their offerings. Let each ask himself what have I yet done?

Our readers are already familiar with the exteriors of the various buildings, from the views which we have given, and with some of the internal arrangements. This week we give more in detail:

The Department of Arms and Trophies.

The Department of Arms and Trophies is a military museum of great interest, embracing Revolutionary relics, the uniforms, swords, camp-chest, etc., of Washington; arms and equipments of Continental officers and men; flags borne in the Revolution, the war of 1812, the war with Mexico, the torn and tattered banners which our volunteers have carried through fields of blood. Battleflags wrested from the rebels.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR—MRS. M'CLELLAN'S TABLE IN THE DEPARTMENT OF ARMS AND TROPHIES—SALE OF FRANK LESLIE'S SKETCHES.

arms of other days and the newly-invented cannon and missiles line the walls of this room.

In the centre crowds gather around two splendid swords, presented by Tiffany, one for a naval commander, the other for a General. Persons paying $1 inscribe a name as they may choose. For the military swords the competitors are almost exclusively Gen. McClellan and Gen. Grant, the former leading; for the naval, Admiral Farragut and the staunch, capable and thoroughgoing Com. Rowan, of the Ironsides. The competition between the friends of the hero of Antietam and of the hero of Vicksburg is exciting and entertaining in the highest degree. On our page of character sketches (page 76) will be found this scene, as sketched by our Artist; and on our front page a sketch of Mrs. McClellan's table, not far from it, our Artist having sketched her when disposing of some of the sketches sent by our Artists in the field, during the war, and presented to the Fair by the Proprietor of this paper. The likeness cannot be mistaken. On page 72 will be found the bugler giving the first notice of the evening close of the Fair.

The Art Exhibition

is most readily entered after passing from the Department of Arms and Trophies, and never, here, has so much of the triumphs of the pencil been gathered together. Around the magnificent works of Leutz, Church, Bierstadt, Kensett, Huntington, Winterhalter, Muller, "Washington Crossing the Delaware," "The Heart of the Andes," and "Niagara," "The Rocky Mountains," "Florinda," "Mercy's Dream," "The Conciergerie Prison Group;" others by Meissonier, Gignoux, Dubufe, Frère, Paul Delaroche, Caillear, Verboeckhover, Weir, Retzch and a hundred others are grouped upon the walls. Our Artist gives a view of this department.

Scene in the Main Hall.

In the Main Hall we show the New Jersey Department, with its four stands, illustrative of and devoted to the Four Seasons; the Cockloft Summerhouse; Jacob's Well, near the door, well patronised; the Hairy Eagle, made from hair of the President and prominent political men; and a fine view of the Floral Temple, taken at the moment when Gen. Burnside was making a purchase there.

The Restaurant.

Passing into the Restaurant, we present the Normandy Confectionery Stand, where ladies, in the high Norman cap, familiar to the readers of "Evangeline," dispense their sweets; ladies selling fruit and cigars; and the ladies who act as the cashiers, receiving the money from the visitors.

The Union Square Building.

Taking the stage to the structure at the head of Union Square, our eye catches the Bell Tower or Observatory in front, and entering, we find the International Department, which we show fully, giving a separate view of the Fountain in the centre, and another of one of the stands.

From this attractive department a passage leads to the Knickerbocker Kitchen, which we show in a manner to let all appreciate, giving a separate sketch of the fireplace.

The Children's Department, always well attended, forms the closing group of views. Besides a general feature of this department, we represent some of the Tableaux given for the amusement of the younger visitors, and the Soda Water Fountain.

The treatment of the pickpockets and shoplifters is more amusing to the bystanders doubtless than to the culprits, and they evidently were not anxious to have their portraits so faithfully given to our readers.

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS—Three men and one woman, each over eight feet high; two Dwarfs, each less than two feet high—besides a host of other Novelties. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 23 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turkish, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table; and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs only $3. Sent free, by mail on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,
No. 37 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, APRIL 23, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 72 Duane street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE P. BEMIS & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 100 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 50
Two copies " to one address	5 00
Four " " "	9 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00
Paper, 14 weeks	1 00

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

One Dollar a line on the outside or last page.
Sixty Cents a line on the 14th and 15th pages.

THE Publisher of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER invites his present contributors and others to send in before May 1st stories and poems suited to its columns, as well as ideas for comic sketches on subjects of the day.

Summary of the Week.

THE GENERAL-IN-CHIEF.

Gen. Grant, having visited Fortress Monroe and the Peninsula, returned to Washington on the 3d April, and on the 5th proceeded to his headquarters in the field. He has since reconnoitred, in person, Lee's works on the Rapidan, and a movement may be looked for as soon as the roads are practicable. The recent storm has swept away many of the bridges on the Orange and Alexandria railroad, and done other damage.

VIRGINIA.

Commissioner Ould visited Gen. Butler to confer on the matter of prisoners on the 2d, and returned to Richmond. The roads in Virginia are in such a condition as to prevent operations. Lee's fortifications at Mitchell's station, Clark's mountain, can be seen from our lines.

The transport Fairhaven, with several hundred soldiers of the 79th, 88th and 90th New York volunteers, was driven ashore on the 1st, near Cape Henry, but the troops were fortunately all saved.

A gunboat expedition to the Chickahominy returned safely with 40 negroes.

TENNESSEE.

Col. Marsh, with 600 of the 6th Union Tennessee cavalry, engaged a rebel force of 1,500, near Summerville, on the 29th March, and was driven back, losing 75 men and three officers. The wounded and prisoners were apparently butchered.

All the veterans of the army of the Cumberland and the army of Tennessee are ordered to the front.

ALABAMA.

The rebel ram Tennessee, lying near the fort at Grant's pass, was struck by a squall on the 1st, and, keeling over, sank. Only her smokestacks can now be seen. This formidable antagonist, with her six 100-pound rifle Parrotts and as many small pieces, is thus disposed of.

LOUISIANA.

Gen. Franklin, with the main body of his army, has reached Alexandria. On the 29th of March Gen. A. J. Smith pushed on, followed by the gunboats, and 35 miles above Alexandria came up with Gen. Dick Taylor Gen. Mower, with 8,000 men, led the American army, and after three hours' fight drove Taylor, with his 12,000, from a strong position. Our loss, 18 killed, 60 wounded; the rebels lost above 200. We took 500 prisoners. Dudley's brigade distinguished itself greatly. Nachitoches is in our possession.

The steamer La Crosse was captured by guerillas and burned on the 25th, below Alexandria. The steamer J. H. Russell, on her way to New Orleans, was burned at Plaquemine.

ARKANSAS.

Col. Powell Clayton destroyed the rebel ponton bridge at Fairview, and burned a train of 35 wagons, loaded with camp and garrison equipments, ammunition, etc., and captured, by a stratagem, 370 prisoners. Our men pretended to belong to Shelby's command, his troops being dressed in U. S. uniforms, and called out that the Yankees were on them. A number crossed the bridge and were disarmed at once.

KENTUCKY.

Forrest, whose bloody system of war, killing his prisoners in cold blood, is praised in Richmond papers, has found that his course may be requited. Champe Ferguson, one of his leaders, was wounded in action, near Manchester, and pursued by Col. Stokes. He was found in a house near Short mountain, and dispatched. The recently published work of Col. Fremantle admits that it was a rebel custom to refuse quarter, and he gives his English readers some diverting stories on the subject.

After his repulse at Paducah, Forrest retired on Mayfield, and having repulsed Grierson, in Tennessee, is dispersing, to retire more easily. Some of his men were captured at Shelbyville, but were rescued.

The gunboats had a fight at Hickman, with guerillas, on the 5th.

MISSISSIPPI.

On the 8th the rebels, 1,500 strong, attacked Rook's plantation, near Snydersville, and destroyed the machinery and buildings, but were at last driven off by the 1st Massachusetts (colored) cavalry.

NORTH CAROLINA.

On the 9th 40 rebels landed on Cape Lookout, secured the lighthouse keepers, and exploded a keg of powder in the lighthouse, injuring it greatly.

FLORIDA.

Gen. John P. Hatch has succeeded Gen. Seymour in command in this State.

CONGRESS.

IN the Senate, on the 4th of April, the Neutrality laws were discussed, and a bill was reported appropriating $5,000,000 for the satisfaction of claims for spoliations committed by the French prior to July 31, 1801, and appointing a Commission to adjudicate said claims. The House bill authorising enlistments in rebellious districts was taken up, and Messrs. Grimes and Trumbull made speeches against it, while Messrs. Sherman and Wilson spoke in favor of the bill. Mr. Howe, of Wisconsin, then made a speech in favor of prohibiting slavery by an amendment of the Constitution.

In the House, resolutions calling for information as to the amount and disposition of the commutation money received from drafted men, and as to the number of colored regiments in the service; also, as to the number of persons arrested for political offences, were laid on the table. The Secretary of War was called on for a statement of the number of men who have entered the army since March, 1861, and the quota of each State under each call. The Committee on Foreign Affairs reported a joint resolution declaring that "the Congress of the United States is unwilling by silence to leave the nations of the world under the impression that they are indifferent spectators of the deplorable events now transpiring in the republic of Mexico; therefore, they think it fit to declare that it does not accord with the people of the United States to acknowledge a monarchical government erected on the ruins of any republican government in America, under the auspices of any European Power." This was adopted unanimously—109 members voting. An effort was made to have the resolution granting the use of the hall of the House to George Thompson, the English abolitionist, for a lecture, rescinded; but the House refused to entertain the proposition.

In the Senate, on the 5th, the Judiciary Committee reported the bill providing for the collection of taxes in insurrectionary districts, with amendments striking out the provision authorizing grants of 40 acre lots to soldiers, and that empowering the Tax Commissioner to set aside sales deemed to be unfairly made. A proposition was submitted providing for the retirement of Supreme and District Court Judges when they attain the age of 70, if they so desire, upon liberal salaries, graduated according to the length of their terms of service. A motion to postpone the regular order of business and take up the Naval Appropriation bill was negatived—22 against 16. The joint resolution to amend the Constitution so as to prohibit slavery for ever in the States and Territories was taken up, and Mr. Reverdy Johnson, of Maryland, delivered an able speech in its favor. Mr. Davis's amendment declaring that no negro shall be a citizen, or be eligible to any office, received but five votes, while another from Mr. Powell, providing that owners shall be paid the value of slaves emancipated, found but two supporters. A proposition offered by Mr. Davis, to divide the negroes set free among the Northern States, was also rejected.

In the House, a bill was reported authorising the construction of two bridges across the Ohio, to enable the railroads of Indiana and Illinois to connect with railroads on the opposite banks of the river in Kentucky. The railroad companies are ready to build the bridges without cost to the Government. A motion to lay the bill on the table was negatived by four majority, and it was then recommitted to the Committee on Roads and Canals. The Committee of Ways and Means were instructed to inquire and report as to the expediency of increasing the duty on foreign wool. The Naval Committee asked leave of absence for 10 days, in order to visit the West and examine sites for a navy yard on the Mississippi, and after some discussion it was laid on the table. In Committee of the Whole the National Bank bill was taken up, perfected and reported to the House, whereupon Mr. Stevens offered a substitute, being substantially the bill as agreed to by the Committee of the Whole, but fixing the rate of interest on loans, etc., at 7 per centum, and omitting the clause giving to States the privilege to tax the capital of National Banking Associations.

In the Senate, on 6th, there was nothing of any public interest.

In the House, Mr. Pendleton, of Ohio, reported a bill providing that the heads of the departments shall be entitled to occupy seats on the floor of the House, with the right to participate in debate upon matters relating to their respective departments. It was ordered to be printed. The National Bank bill was then taken up, and the amendments of the Committee of the Whole agreed to. Mr. Stevens offered a substitute for the bill, being the same as the original bill, with the exception of restoring the uniform rate of seven per centum interest on loans, &c., and omitting the clause giving States the privilege of taxing the capital of the banks. This was rejected—59 against 78. Mr. Spaulding offered a new section to the original bill providing that each bank shall receive the notes of other banks without discount. This was agreed to. Mr. Stevens thereupon moved to lay the bill on the table, which was carried by a vote of 89 against 44.

In the Senate, on the 7th, after several unimportant matters were disposed of, the debate was renewed on the joint resolution to amend the Constitution so as to prohibit slavery. Mr. Hendrichs, of Indiana, arguing against it, and Mr. Henderson, of Missouri, in its favor.

In the House, the Secretary of War was directed to report the number, names and rank of officers dismissed from the army by order of the President without a court-martial, and also how many such dismissals have been revoked during the war. The remainder of the business was unimportant.

In the Senate, on the 8th, the debate on the amendment to the Constitution, whereby slavery is to be for ever prohibited throughout the land, was concluded, and after some futile efforts on the part of its opponents to delay final action, the joint resolution of the Judiciary Committee was adopted. A two-thirds vote was necessary to secure the success of the measure, but the record stands as follows:

For the amendment	38
Against the amendment	6
Total	44
Absent	5

The negative votes were cast by Messrs. Davis and Powell, of Kentucky; Saulsbury and Riddle, of Delaware; McDougall, of California; and Hendricks, of Indiana. The absentees were Messrs. Buckalew (opp.), of Pennsylvania; Carlile (opp.), of West Virginia; Hicks (opp.), of Maryland; Richardson (opp.), of Illinois; and Wright (opp.), of New Jersey.

In the House, Mr. Patterson, of New Hampshire, and Washburne, of Illinois, had a very severe passage of arms. The House then went into Committee of the Whole, and Mr. Long, of Ohio, made a speech on the war, and in course of his remarks boldly declared in favor of the recognition of the rebel Confederacy. Gen. Garfield, of Ohio, replied with much patriotic warmth and eloquence.

On the 9th the Senate did not sit.

In the House there was a very exciting discussion in the Committee of the Whole on a resolution offered by Mr. Colfax to expel Mr. Long, of Ohio, for disloyal sentiments uttered in his speech of the day before. During the discussion Mr. Harris (Democrat), of Maryland, arose and boldly avowed his gratification at the secession of the South, justifying it fully, and rebuking the Democratic party for not daring to come up to his standard of political morality. Mr. Washburne, of Illinois, instantly offered a resolution to expel Mr. Harris, which received 81 votes against 58, but two-thirds being required, the resolution was not adopted.

TOWN GOSSIP.

THE great and absorbing talk of the week is, of course, the Fair—not the fair we are accustomed to meeting in our daily rambles upon Broadway, in the parlors and drawing-rooms of our friends, or in the quiet of our homes—but the Insanity Fair, as our cousin, Jerusha Peabody, who has come all the way from Wethersfield, Connecticut, for the double purpose of looking into the matter and selling out a few barrels of onions, calls it.

It has taken this week fully to get the Fair in full blast, and even with the going down of the sun on Saturday night there were still vacancies to be filled by expected contributions from abroad, and contemplated improvements and pleasures that will make the great enterprise one long spring day's song, to be remembered as a great event in the history of New York, and something to be related to our children and grandchildren, as those among us whose locks are just beginning to silver tell now of the terrors of the great fire of thirty years ago, or the festivities of the Croton celebration.

When duty and pleasure go hand in hand in accomplishing so grand an object as that now before us, there is a moral sublimity in it that challenges the admiration of nations, and does more in establishing the righteousness of a cause than any battle that has been fought and won by our brave soldiers since the opening of the war. All politics, creeds, religions and nationalities are forgotten, and the great people, whether, as individuals, they believe in its conduct or not, vie in their efforts to give that which will ameliorate the horrors and suffering of the occasion, and stamp our city and our country as the most enlightened, liberal and humane of any of which we have record since the creation of the world.

The receipts for the first week are half a million, and that with disadvantages, which are being rectified every day. The sales have not as yet fairly commenced, though the crowds have been immense, even to that degree that a large majority have failed to see one-half the attractions from that cause. So far the visitors have not been buyers, but the buyers will come as the crowds slack off. The man who waits until the price of admission comes down to 50 cents is much more likely to become a purchaser of something he may see there than the wealthier sightseer who does not mind his $5 for his season-ticket or his $1 for a single admission. All the country has yet to come, and with its coming the goods of the Sanitary Fair will melt away like snow before the sun.

Upon entering the vast buildings in 14th street, a few weeks since, we were struck by the appearance of their great extent, an appearance that, since their occupation, is somewhat lost. This effect is naturally caused by their decoration and by the masses of goods and crowds of people that throng them. In fact, through the first week the last was so great an objection that thousands, after fairly forcing their way into the buildings, have been obliged to come away unseeing and unseen, leaving the satisfaction of their curiosity until the edge of public appetite has somewhat worn away.

The price of admission has been through the week nominally $1, but the actual cost of "doing" the whole affair is exactly $2 65: Main Hall, $1; Picture-room, 25 cents; Arms and Trophies, 25 cents; Curiosities, 25 cents; Indian-room, 25 cents; Knickerbocker Kitchen, 10 cents; Cockloft House, a representation of the Irving summer-house, 10 cents; Skating Pond, 10 cents; looking through a brick, and a view of a lady's hand, each 10 cents, the first an unexplainable experiment, the last a two—not too minute—minute examination of a fair lady's digit under a microscopic lens, an idea worthy of some great genius, and one for which we should not begrudge the 10 cents, if we could have the selection of the hand we desired to examine, in which case we should be willing to dispense with the microscope. This large sum for viewing the elephant has naturally excited dissatisfaction, and yet we do not see how it could have been avoided. At present something must be done to keep away the crowds or the exhibition would be a nullity by reason of the rush, and the scenes of the Prince of Wales's wedding in London would be reenacted in New York, in the way of crushing and smothering to death. There will be plenty of time, for public curiosity and excitement cannot be allayed in less than a month, and during that time all will have a chance, not only without being uncomfortably crowded, but at moderate prices, even within reach of the poorest person.

The leading items of excitement are the two swords, one of which is to be presented to the General receiving the largest number of votes, and the other to the naval officer who is the recipient of the same. These votes are registered in a book, and each voter, on putting down his name, pays $1 for each vote he gives, with the privilege of voting early and voting as often as he or she pleases, for ladies in this case carry a political privilege. Up to the close of the week the voting, bulletins of which were posted in prominent places, stood, for the Generals: McClellan, 2,312; Grant, 1,880; and scattering, 33; while the naval sword had only, for Farragut, 119; Rowan, 63; Dupont, 20; and scattering, 21

About this original poll excitement runs high and conversation sparkles. A brilliantly dressed angel floats up to the table, and, drawing off a delicate No. 6 Alexandre glove, seizes the pen, and in neat Italian chirography puts down her opinion to the amount of a V., saying, as she does so:

"There's five to help along the greatest soldier in the land."

"An' who may that be, mim?" asks a burly Irishwoman, who has been looking curiously on for some moments.

"Why, Gen. Grant," says the aristocrat.

"Oh! bliss me heart!" responds the Democrat, "an Giniral McClillin alive! Sure, whin did Giniral McClillin die that iny other should be great? I haven't much money, mother," addressing the keeper of the sword, "but I've two boys in the army, an' for their sakes yees kin put me down for five votes for Giniral McClillin, an' the boys kin make it up to me, an' I know they will, macushla;" and the old woman, after seeing the votes fairly entered, stalked away, feeling that she had a stake in the country, though she might lack a chop at home.

At other times, especially in the evening, when the crowds contain more men, the General competition runs high. A stout gentleman, with something about him that looks as though his pocketbook had not been trodden on by an elephant, stands gazing on the book as voter after voter enters his name and dollars for Grant, and then, with a spasmodic jerk he brings out the plethoric pocketbook, and with "Can't stand this, nohow! I'll just take a turn at that pen when it's disengaged."

And the old gentleman, after writing his name at the head of a clean page, scores down two entire sheets with dittos, and forks over a roll of greenbacks to support his practical admiration of little Mac. This brings up another to the rescue, who draws a zigzag line over a page of 28 lines, and says:

"That's the Mississippi river, and that's for the hero of it!" planking down at the same time $28 as the cost of the line.

With that a blooming maiden, leaning on a manly arm, flashes a pair of brown eyes, and says to the said manly creature, to whom she is affording her society,

"William, did you see that? I thought you were an admirer of McClellan?"

And straightway William's roll is out, and a greenback lies upon the table.

"What!" once more speaks up the maiden, "don't you admire him more than five dollars?"

"Certainly, Flora, if you say so. Suppose we say 15 votes for you and five for me. How will that do?"

"You're a dear fellow," and then came a squeeze of the arm, and something whispered that sounded very much like, "Consider yourself kissed," or "Claim a kiss when you get home," or some equally absurd thing which young ladies with brown eyes will say sometimes.

Occasionally a soldier records his admiration for his old General, at the same time expressing his belief that he must win, from the very natural idea we all have that everybody must think as we do.

It is very possible that before the close of the Fair 20,000 votes will be registered on this sword, showing a curious record, if not one of great significance.

The next object of attraction is "the hairy eagle," an anomalous article manufactured by Mrs. Wright, the wife of Senator or Governor Wright, from human hair scissorised from the heads of Abraham Lincoln and his cabinet (all but Secretary Welles, who had none to spare), and a couple of score of Senators. The hairy eagle—long may she wave—is to be presented to Father Abraham himself, and repose in his bosom for evermore, as soon as 1,000 persons have entered their names in a book at one dollar each. At the present showing the chance is slim that the hairy eagle will take his airy flight to Abraham if it is dependent on the thousand names. A good story is told of this hairy eagle, that the maker of it, while collecting material, sent to Thaddeus Stevens, Senator from Pennsylvania, for a lock of his hair.

The joke comes in when it is told that Mr. Stevens's ead is innocent of a single hair, and has sported a wig for the last 20 years.

The next interesting item is the Knickerbocker kitchen, an apartment fitted up in the old Dutch style for the dispensation of refreshment to the body corporate. There ladies of our old Dutch families in the costume of their grandmothers attend the cooking, and serve the solid eatables for the faint stomach, as well as the ancient delicacies of doughnuts, crullers, oliekoks, waffles, gingerbread, potcheese and suppawn and milk. Caudle can be had at the moderate tax of 50 cents per cup; lunch at 75 cents, and dinner at $1, or more, according to the strength of appetite. Within this room is gathered a heterogeneous collection of relics of "ye olden tyme," an ancient Bible in the Holland script, 225 years old, pictures of New York worthies, and ancestors of the present stock quite as old; while from a corner beside the kitchen fire stares up an ancient stuffed tabby and kitten, trying hard to make believe that they are alive. A venerable Uncle Ned, with a villainous violin, makes night—and day too—hideous, with attempts at old dance tunes, while two youthful American citizens of African descent add to the noise by twanging out curious sounds from jews-harps.

And then comes the Children's Department, a treasury of useful articles, toys and knick-knacks, almost realising the fables of fairyland, and even surpassing that wondrous tale we were wont to tell when we would win the affections of some fair miss of four summers, that we lived in a gingerbread house with molasses candy furniture, and that—if she would only give us a kiss—we would take her home with us to stay a week. There are families of dolls, so natural that they want only speech to make them real babies, and having this advantage over the real article that they are only troublesome at the will of their owners. There are the contributions from every clime, and the real little ones, who perambulate the building, will, perhaps, when three score years have passed away, repeat again and again to their grandchildren of the marvels they are now looking at, and declare that "doll babies and toys, my dears, are not what they were in my day."

Then comes the room of Arms and Trophies, filled with objects to excite curiosity, patriotism and respect. The old musket borne by our grandsires at Bennington, Bunkerhill and Yorktown; the sword around which is woven an imperishable romance; the uniform of Washington and his camp chest, teaching a lesson of simplicity to our own shoulder-straps; the cane presented to him by Franklin; and the clothes of Jackson, made doubly interesting from being the same suit worn at New Orleans; and last, though far from being least, the blood and powder-stained, the weather-beaten and battle-tattered banners of our own brave boys, borne in every fight since the war. In this room is Mrs. McClellan, supervising her little shop as busily and intensely earnest as any professional saleswoman, and as blind to the attention she attracts while immersed in business as though buried in the solitude of her boudoir.

Another room is fitted as an Indian Wigwam, and here are arranged the arms and dresses of the red men, their wampum and beads, and their articles of domestic use, and here a band of original denizens of the soil pound out doleful sounds on domestic-made drums, and dance figures not laid down by Ferrero or Brooks, as often as they gather an audience to witness their mournfulness.

Next comes the Curiosity Shop, in which are gathered the hoarded nothings and somethings of ages. Among the latter is a lump of gold, the finding of some fortunate digger in California, and valued at $40,000. Magnificent Japanese embroidered robes, a watch that once belonged to Louis XV. of France, with ancient clothes worn in all their magnificence hundreds of years ago, and ancient missals from which our forefathers said their prayers three or four hundred years before the discovery of America; while among the first we note a pinch of snuff given by Mary Queen of Scots to a member of the Seton family, and by him handed down, along with another pinch given to another Seton by George III., to the present representative of the race; a fact which shows clearly that Queen Mary with all her beauty, and King George with all his dunder-headedness, were up to snuff, or—that the Setons were. Trifles from every corner of the world fill this room, and prominent among them is a specimen of "Confederate cake," the identical article fed to our soldiers at the Libby prison, and called bread.

Near the Curiosity Shop Grafulla's band sends forth its pleasant strains, but he who hears must march, for there is no stopping in such a throng. His labors are like those of Sisyphus, always moving. We pray that the same squad of policemen that are now learning the duty of making people move on who would otherwise obstinately obstruct the thoroughfares, may, as soon as the Fair is ended, be transferred to Broadway, and there be made to perform the same duty, so that two or three stupid persons—even though they be women, young and pretty—cannot stop to gossip in the middle of the pavement when they meet, and by so doing throw out and annoy a whole line of promenaders. Pardon the digression.

Beside the Knickerbocker Kitchen there is another dispensing place of edibles, a mammoth Restaurant, capable of feeding its thousands, and presided over by experienced people who not only know "how to keep a hotel," but have kept one; while in still another apartment Duryea's Maizena is fed unto those who are willing to disburse currency for the same, cooked in various ways by a person carefully educated on Maizena principles, and solemnly sworn to do equal and exact justice to all eaters thereof.

The space of our topics will not allow more than to say that we have not said a moiety of the attractions, but that time, pens, ink, paper and types will eventually relieve our mind, and let the world know what a great city can do when its sympathies are fairly aroused, and let our soldiers in the field know that their wants are for ever with us, and that nothing which humanity can do to alleviate them will be left undone, even though a dozen Sanitary Fairs have to be held every day in the year.

And now for the other excitements of the week—a tale that is easily told. It seems almost strange that anything can attract attention in the face of the absorbing interest of the Fair, and yet we must allow that the debut of Miss Avonia Jones did so, and notwithstanding it occurred upon the opening night of the Fair, drew a tolerably full house. She made her first appearance before a New York audience in the character of Judith.

The story of the play has been very freely rendered. As given in the play the scene opens in the Jewish city of Bethulia, with a distant view of the camp of Holofernes, who is besieging it. The inhabitants are starving and thirsting, with all their sacrifices and prayers rejected; the people are in revolt, and wish to open the gates to Holofernes the Assyrian. In the midst of this clamor Judith—who has been slandered by the people—rushes into their midst with the intelligence that in her wandering in the suburbs she has found a spring, and that water can be had. This puts a stop to the revolt, and the populace hasten away to seek the water. The spring proves to have been poisoned, and Judith, accused of the crime and pursued by the people, flies to and takes refuge in the cave of Ramesis the Egyptian, a magician. Here she is found by the mob, and under the pretence of conferring the gift of invisibility is given a potion by Ramesis which throws her into a stupor and counterfeits death so closely that the mob leaves her with Ramesis, as they suppose, a corpse. From the cave she escapes to the Assyrian camp, full with the design of saving her country and destroying Holofernes. There she succeeds in inspiring a passion in Holofernes that is uncontrollable, and leads to his determination to place her on the throne as his queen. With her stern purpose in view, Judith hears the most terrible curses and reproaches heaped upon her by the high priest of her tribe, and by Othoniel, her lover, both of whom are made prisoners by Holofernes, and finally while in the midst of the wedding feast, and while the Assyrian is delirious and drunken, cuts off his head, and by the act frees her people.

Of the play we will say nothing more than to repeat the story; it is not worth criticism, and Miss Jones has done herself injustice in making a first appearance before a critical audience in it. Of the lady we would say that she has a good face and appearance, and makes up richly, though not with taste. The sombre, ill-appearing dress worn in the first acts, militated greatly against her, and the head-dress—even though it be faultless in costume, detracted from the effect of her face and spoiled its expression. Her voice is loud and distinct, but occasionally affected and stagey, and her general action is not calculated to please at the start, though it improves upon acquaintance. To sum all up in a few words, Miss Avonia Jones is hardly the coming tragedienne who will wipe away our recollection of Ellen Tree, Charlotte Cushman and Kate Bateman, though she has many requisites to please. The coming week she will give us "Fazio," "Lady Audley's Secret," a new version, and "Medea," after which we shall be better enabled to judge of her powers.

The promises for the week are "Loyalina," a new version of "Fortunio," by Mr. Oakey Hall, at Mrs. John Wood's; Mr. Booth at Niblo's, in "The Fool's Revenge;" "The Follies of a Night," "The Heir-at-Law," "The Secret," and some more "Rosedale" at Wallack's; with "Robert le Diable" and "Faust" at the Academy.

Barnum holds back "Cudjo's Cave" another week, possibly to make the cave larger, and in the meantime Aphrosa enters upon its 11th week, with all its attractions, fountain included.

Why is it the managers of our theatres will permit boys, who seem to have been selected for no other requisite than the possession of harsh, unmusical voices, to go about the house, before and during all the pauses of the play, disturbing the audience, and interrupting conversation by crying, "Books o' the play," or in the summer by the perpetual yell of "Fans!" If it be necessary that these two articles should be sold in the house, cannot these loud-voiced and unmusical youths do their dickering without making a continued announcement of it. We do not believe they sell one playbook or fan more by their crying aloud, but on the contrary so disgust and disturb every respectable person that they will not buy, even though they might require their wares.

One of the main topics of conversation just now in all circles is the fact that the stock gambling mania has seized upon the fairer sex, and that Wall street is the scene of some financial transactions rather startling to those having old time ideas of business. It is an unquestionable fact that women have taken to operating personally on 'change, and one case is openly cited of the wife of a well-known banker, who has been playing with Harlem to that extent that not only had she ridden herself of a very fair little property, but had even despoiled herself of diamonds and jewellery before her financial tastes were discovered and stopped by her liege lord.

What an excellent thing would it be just now could we but be like the bears, retire into a hollow tree and suck our paws until the war and hard times be over, thereby saving all the expense and trouble of living. It is somewhat startling to the man of limited income, which has not been improved of late, to find that what he thought rather a liberal stipend two years ago is now barely enough to exist on, with but little hope of improvement.

Gradually every necessity of life is creeping up, so gradually that one dares not think of remonstrance, until the man who formerly went to market with $5 and came home loaded with delicacies, now almost realizes the story of one who went with a dollar to buy sugar, and being questioned by his wife on his return as to what he had done with the saccharine, hunted all over his person, and finally declared that he must have left it in his other vest pocket. We hope to excite the sympathy of readers all over the land when we assure them that unfortunate New Yorkers are using beef at 22 and 24 cents per pound, butter at 60 and 64, sugar at 24 and 25, coffee at 55 and 60, and all things else in proportion, with a like rise in house rent. There is a legend somewhere extant, that in the city of Boston for many years everything was a hundred dollars, and that any one looking into a shop window at goods would be charged half their price without getting them. We very much fear that New York is getting to be as bad as Boston, if such a thing can be realised.

Last week we had occasion to speak of the parade of two handcuffed men through Broadway, followed by a policeman holding a pistol, and this week we have another instance of the same brutality, in an incident at the opening night of the Sanitary Fair, when a man was paraded about the buildings, escorted by two policemen, and labelled "Pickpocket!" and since the same act perpetrated upon two women. Now, outside of the disgusting nature of all such exhibitions, which are an outrage upon those who attend public places, and in many cases utterly destroy the pleasure they would otherwise enjoy, we contend that even a thief has rights, and that no policeman should for an instant be allowed to arrogate to himself the functions of judge and jury, and, even though the offender be caught in the act, convict the culprit and brand him before a community. Such outrages as the two we have mentioned should be the subject of especial inquiry by the new Commissioners, and made an example of.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The Legislature of Maine have defined "the Lord's day" to extend legally from midnight Saturday to midnight Sunday.

—— Emma Webb gave a very spirited lecture at the Cooper Institute on the 5th of April, in reply to Miss Dickenson's recent discourse. Miss Webb is as strong on the Democratic side as her fair opponent is on the Republican.

—— The contest between the admirers of Gen. McClellan and those of Gen. Grant at the Sanitary Fair promises to be a very close affair. The ladies take far greater interest in it than the men.

—— Count de Johannes gave a lecture on the 6th of April in the Cooper Institute Hall, on Napoleon and other people. It was very amusing, and caused roars of laughter. He was particularly severe upon Abraham Lincoln, and finished the evening's entertainment by electing Gen. McClellan as next President.

—— A man named Phelps, who died at Salem, London county, Conn., recently, by his own agreement, sold his body to a surgeon in Boston for $1,000, the money to be appropriated to the use of his widowed mother, and his body to purposes of scientific investigation. His death was produced by an enormous tumor growing upon his back, larger than a bushel basket, and apparently nearly 100 pounds in weight. It had been growing for 8 years.

—— An election in Maryland for delegates to a convention to amend the State Constitution was held on the 6th. It is estimated that the majority in favor of unconditional emancipation is about 15,000.

—— The State election in Rhode Island on the 5th resulted in the success of the Republicans.

—— At the meeting of the Board of Education, Commissioner Hitchman presented a communication from Anson Herrick, giving the Board of Education the appointment of a midshipman to the Naval Academy from the Ninth Congressional district. The sum of $4,500 was appropriated to build a wing to a school-house in the 14th Ward. A resolution was adopted appropriating $61,220 for building a new school-house in the 16th Ward, and $58,900 for another in the 18th. After disposing of some minor business the Board adjourned.

—— The emigration from Europe to this port continues to increase from week to week. The number of arrivals last week was 997, making the number since Jan. 1, 25,400, against 10,696 to the corresponding period of last year. The balance of the commutation fund now to the credit of the Commissioners of Emigration is $62,924.

—— The City Inspector's report states that there were 481 deaths in the city during the week ending April 4—a decrease of 4 as compared with the mortality of the week previous, and 52 more than occurred during the corresponding week last year. The recapitulation table gives 3 deaths of alcoholism, 1 of diseases of the bones, joints, etc.; 90 of the brain and nerves, 13 of the generative organs, 17 of the heart and blood vessels, 160 of the lungs, throat, etc.; 3 of old age, 54 of diseases of the skin and eruptive fevers, 5 premature births, 54 of diseases of the stomach, bowels and other digestive organs; 49 of uncertain seat and general fevers, 2 from unknown causes, 16 of diseases of the urinary organs, and 14 from violence, etc. There were 301 natives of the United States, 114 of Ireland, 15 of England, 3 of Scotland, 35 of Germany, and the balance of various foreign countries.

—— The new steamer St. John made the trip from New York to Albany the other night in 8 hours and 44 minutes.

—— The gross proceeds of the Sanitary Fair in Boston reached oply $145,000, about one-fourth of the sum realised in Brooklyn.

—— The average price of gold during the week ending April 9th has been 167; it has reached 170. The Government price was 165.

—— An onslaught was made the other day on the shadpoles placed in our rivers and bay, where they interfered with navigation, by order of the Pilot Commissioners. A steamtug was employed to draw the poles, while the harbor police boat, Capt. Todd, protected her from any demonstrations that might be made by the fishermen. After drawing several poles, a committee of fishermen came off to the tug, and in order to save their property, made promises to clear them off. They were then given a specified time to do so, and if not done the poles certainly will be drawn and cast adrift by the tugs.

Western.—Silver has been discovered in the pineries in Burnett county, Wisconsin.

—— A letter to the Wisconsin State Journal says that there are 40,000 "Bohemians" in that State.

—— The message of Gov. Lewis, of Wisconsin, was printed and circulated in English, Dutch, German, Norwegian, Welsh and Slavic.

—— There has been a general rise in the price of the Cincinnati newspapers, as had before been the case at Chicago and St. Louis.

—— The Kentucky Union State Convention at Louisville is to meet on May 25, to appoint delegates to the National Union Convention.

—— A party of coal workers have left St. Paul, Minn., for the Cottonwood coal fields, and expect to have a large load at the levee early in the season.

—— A man has been arrested in Cincinnati on the charge of being a resurrectionist, he having a body just disinterred from a grave in his express cart.

—— The town of Solon, Mich., polled just 57 votes in 1861; it has since sent 56 soldiers to the army of the Union.

Southern.—A handsome octoroon girl on a Miss. plantation was married eight years ago to a mulatto on the same plantation, and was afterwards sold to another planter, owing to her master's pecuniary difficulties. The couple were plainly told that she was intended as the new owner's mistress. Entreaties only resulted in her husband being savagely beaten and her being taken away. The wretched girl attempted suicide without success, and had no chance of escape, being ultimately forced to submit to her fate. She had one child by her brutal owner. George, the husband, afterwards escaped, and succeeded in getting to Europe on board an English ship. He travelled much there as a servant to families, and a short time since returned to Cleveland. Meanwhile, on the capture of New Orleans, the woman's owner had fled, and she escaped to Philadelphia, where she has since resided in a family as servant. Having gone to Cleveland a short time since on a visit, she met her long-lost husband in the street, and both manifested the most intense joy. Thus after so long and cruel a separation they are happily reunited.

Military.—The following officers are officially announced as of the staff of Lieut.-Gen. Grant, in General Orders No. 126, from the War Department: Lieut.-Col. C. S. Comstock, senior Aide-de-Camp, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel; Lieut.-Col. D. E. Babcock, and Major F. T. Dent, 4th U. S. infantry, Aides-de-Camp, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel; Lieut.-Col. W. L. Duff, 2d Illinois artillery, Assistant Inspector-General; Major W. R. Rowley, Aide-de-Camp, and Capt. Adam Badeau, additional Aide-de-Camp, Private Secretaries, with the rank of Lieutenant-colonel.

—— The rebel commissioner Col. Ould and Capt. Hotch returned to their flag of truce boat on James river on the 5th, en route for Richmond. A perfect understanding was come to between Col. Ould and Gen. Butler, whereby the exchange of prisoners will be hereafter conducted honorably and humanely.

—— Several officers of the "extinguished corps" expressed such rebellious sentiments lately that they were put under arrest.

Personal.—Andrew Jackson Smith is the General who captured Fort de Russey. He is a native of Pennsylvania, was appointed a Cadet from that State in 1834, and graduated at West Point, June 30, 1838. His commission dates—2d Lieut. of the 1st Dragoons, U. S. A., July 1, 1838; Lieut., 1845; Lieut.-Col. of Ohio Vols., Aug. to Oct., 1846; Capt. U. S. A., Feb. 16, 1847; Major 1st Dragoons, May 13, 1861, and afterwards 2d Col. Cav. Vols. and Brig.-Gen. of Vols., March 17, 1862. His record is filled with honorable service. As there are five Gen. Smiths in the army, this explanation may be timely.

—— The Hon. C. J. Faulkner, ex-Minister to France, came as far as Winchester recently to take the oath of allegiance, but was there met by his brother-in-law, who persuaded him to change his mind.

—— Senator Hicks has so far recovered from the amputation of his ankle, as to be taken to his home at Cambridge, Maryland.

—— Dr. Bellows sailed for California on the 5th of April, to succeed the Rev. Starr King.

—— The pioneers of Rochester, a few days ago, paid their respects to a remarkable character—Alexander Milliner, now 104 years of age. He was born in Quebec, March 14, 1760. His father died when he was but six months old. His mother went, when he was still an infant, to New York to reside; so that he was almost a native of this country. When a mere boy he enlisted in the Revolutionary army as a drummer. For more than four years he served in that capacity in connection with the body guard of Gen. Washington. He was also five years in the navy; ate bread in seven kingdoms; six years a prisoner in the hands of the French. He married when nearly 40 years of age; lived 60 with his wife; had nine children—seven of whom are still living.

Obituary.—Frank Wood, a very pleasing author, died lately at Haverstraw, in his 26th year, of consumption. He was a very peculiar and clever writer, and would undoubtedly, had he lived, have made his mark, as the phrase is. His translations from Michelet, published by Carleton, are admirably done. He was the editor of Vanity Fair during the early life of that hapless comic, and had been connected with several of our leading publications. He leaves a young widow.

—— Suddenly, of apoplexy, on the 6th April, Mrs. Kirkland, the well-known authoress. She was the widow of Professor Kirkland, of Hamilton College. Her principal works are "A New Home," "Forest Life," and "Western Clearings." In 1843 they removed to New York, where for the most part Mrs. Kirkland has since resided. Here she received a number of young ladies into her house, and devoted herself to their education. After the death of her husband, in 1847, she became the editor of the Union Magazine, which she conducted for eighteen months. In 1848 she visited Europe, and the result of her observations appeared in two volumes the following year, under the title of "Holidays Abroad; or, Europe from the West." Among her other works are: "The Evening Book; or, Fireside Talk on Morals and Manners, with Sketches of Western Life," (1852); "A Book for the Home Circle" (1853); the letter-press to "The Book of Home Beauty," a volume containing portraits of twelve American ladies; "Personal Memoirs of George Washington" (1848); "An Essay on the Life and Writings of Spenser," prefixed to the first book of the "Fairy Queen" (1846); and the "Schoolgirl's Garland," two series, a selection of choice poetical extracts from the wide range of English literature, just published by Scribner.

—— At Albany, on the 5th April, Mr. W. Drinker, a well-known lawyer of New York, suddenly fell down and expired while arguing a case. An inquest was held, and the cause ascertained to be disease of the heart. He was much respected by both clients and opponents.

—— Mrs. Hauteville, daughter of ex-Gov. Fish, of New York, died abroad recently. The Prince of Wales led off with Miss Fish at the ball given to him when in this city.

—— Dr. H. S. Levert, a well-known physician in Mobile, died recently. The Levert name will be remembered by many of our Northern and European fashionable circles, from the distinction which the widow of the deceased, the distinguished Madame Octavia Walton Levert, imparted to it for several seasons in succession.

—— Lord Ashburton died recently in London. He was the son of the diplomatist who arranged the treaty with Webster.

—— Lord Aberdeen, son of the Premier who was in power when the war with Russia commenced, commonly called the Crimean war, died lately in England.

Accidents and Offences.—A terrible tragedy has occurred in Jefferson county, Ky. Two friends, Heybeck and Frank, had been strolling through the garden of the former, who cut some vine slips for the other. They then went into the parlor. The first intimation the family had of anything unusual was the spectacle of Heybeck fleeing from the house bleeding, Frank, with a huge bowie-knife being in pursuit. Frank overtook the other, stabbed him thrice in the throat, killing him on the spot, and then cut his own throat so fearfully that he instantly died. The cause of the quarrel is not known, and never, perhaps, will be.

—— A woman has been arrested at Woolwich, England, for marrying five husbands. When informed of the many proofs of her delinquencies, she replied—"that when she had done her bit of imprisonment she had no fear of not getting another husband or two to comfort her."

—— Two women, sisters, who had at different times eloped with married men from Youngtown, and being deserted went back there to reside, have been tarred and feathered by the female inhabitants of the town.

—— A woman has been carrying on a curious confidence game in Milwaukee, Green Bay, etc., Wis. She dressed in male attire, married young ladies and ran away with their money.

—— A firm of recruiting brokers, named Marsh and Bates, of Troy, formerly of Albany, N. Y., have, after arrest by order of Gen. Dix, and being taken before the Provost Marshal of Rensselaer county, disgorged $850 belonging to five recruits enlisted by them at Troy.

—— They execute people very delicately in Utah—by shooting them privately. A recent case occurred at Great Salt Lake City, in which the culprit, a murderer, was so dispatched behind canvas screens, the executioner firing from a window in the court-house, so as not to be visible to guests or criminal.

—— A little boy in Chicago having been left lately to take care of the baby, failed to keep it quiet, and hit upon the happy expedient of sitting on a pillow with which he had first covered the child's head. The mother came in just in time to rescue the infant Desdemona from death.

—— A few days ago Mrs. Jane Bartlett, of Charleston, Missouri, shot herself through the heart with a pistol, incited thereto by "incompatibility of temper" between herself and her husband. She left three letters, in one of which she expressed her desire to be laid out in her wedding garments, and designated the kind of coffin she preferred. The foolish woman was only 25 years old.

—— A large boiler in Merrich & Sons' foundry in Philadelphia exploded on the 6th of April, killing 7 and wounding 30 of the workmen.

—— The Union powder mills at New Durham, N. H., were blown up on the 5th of April, killing 4 men.

—— The Freemason's Hall and the Winthrop House, corner of Boylston and Tremont streets, Boston, were burnt down on the night of the 5th of April. Loss $200,000.

Art, Literature and Science.—A letter from Rome states that a very interesting discovery has just been made in continuing the excavations in the narthex of the old Basilica of San Clemente—a painting, representing our Saviour seated and in the act of giving the benediction to two personages kneeling before him, presented by angels. The outstretched hand of the Saviour is placed according to the Greek form, viz., the thumb and the third digit united. The head is surrounded by a deep nimbus, on either side are full length figures of St. Clement and St. Andrew, with their names and a long inscription underneath. It is very possible that this fresco may be older than the other hitherto discovered in the narthex of the Basilica, possibly dating from the middle of the 11th century.

—— The telegraphic line, says the Moniteur, comprised between Bagdad and Hilla, on the Euphrates, was inaugurated on the 3d February, and the works necessary for the completion of the line, which is to extend as far as Bassora, are being carried on with great activity. When completed India will be united to Europe. Hopes are entertained that this important means of communication may be opened to the public about the month of May next.

—— Wagner, the famous composer of "Tannhauser," is about to visit London, in order to direct in person the performance of that opera.

—— David's "Lalla Rookh" has been revived in Paris with great éclat.

—— Children who do not like castor oil can have it prepared in the recent Paris fashion; the quantity of the oil prescribed is placed in a pipkin over a fire, and an egg broken into it and stirred up. When cooked a little salt or sugar or currant jelly should be added. The patient cannot possibly detect the medicine, and will most likely cry for some more of the mixture.

Chit-Chat.—Louis Napoleon accidentally nearly rode over a little boy not long since, and finding him unhurt asked if he wished to see the Emperor. "No," replied the child, "for my father says he is a scoundrel" (gredin). "Indeed," said the Emperor; "I am sorry to hear that, but I think your father cannot be much of a judge." "Oh, yes!" said the boy, "he is a Senator;" upon which one of the Emperor's train asked his name, but was peremptorily interrupted by his master, who declining to ask or hear it, rode on.

—— Five Massachusetts men, six feet high, were lately presented by Messrs. Alley and Gooch, who are not remarkable for their height, to the President, who, after inquiring whether they were all from that State, and being assured that they were, said, "why it seems to me that Massachusetts always sends her little men to Congress."

—— A New-Zealand physician was lecturing lately on the ignorance of people about their own complaints, and said that a lady once asked him what his next lecture was to be upon, and being told "the circulation of blood," replied that she should certainly attend for she had been troubled with that complaint for a long time."

—— A Detroit paper tells of an amiable man and wife in that city who have just become reconciled after living together five years without speaking a word to one another. The wife made the rash vow that she would not speak to her husband until he apologised for having reproved her quite harshly for giving an expensive party in his absence, and she kept her promise for the length of time named.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR—THE FLORAL TEMPLE—GEN. BURNSIDE MAKING PURCHASES.—SEE PAGE 65.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR—THE ART GALLERY.

DEAD.

BY THEO. P. COOK.

HAVE you seen the long procession
Marching to the silent grave?
Moving slowly—moving slowly,
All the wicked, all the holy
Joining in the grim procession
Marching to the gloomy grave?

Did you see the pale, sad angel—
(Death the name of that dread angel)
Write her name in the Evangel—
Doom her to the silent grave?
He would take no fierce denial
As he bore her to the grave;
Scarce my heart could bear the trial
When I saw her join the concourse,
Join the concourse of the dead.
All the pale stars overhead
Looked at me with pitying faces
From their far-off hiding-places
In the bosom of the night.

But my heart gave back no answer
To the pale stars overhead,
For she took it in her keeping,
Bore it to the haunted grave.
So I groped about in darkness
For my heart was in the grave.
Other men for grief were weeping,
But I wept not through the night
(With my soul 'twas constant night,
And the memories of her presence
Were the stars above my head).

Oh! I pray you, holy angel,
Write my name in the Evangel!
Let me join the long procession
Marching to the peaceful grave,
Let me seek my heart and lover;
Into Morning Land pass over,
With the solemn, sad procession,
Through the portals of the grave.

MARITANA.

By Lizzie Campbell.

I HAD come up to town from a remote corner in the country, to spend the Christmas holidays with a rich city uncle. It was my first visit, and everything was new and brilliant to my ignorant young eyes. The bright lights of the streets at night, the gay shop windows, the gorgeous preparations in pastry and confectionery stores for the approaching festival, the occasional bands of music and the marching through the streets of various orders—even the Italian organ-grinders—all seemed to me delightful and brilliant auxiliaries to the fairyland I had dropped into.

"Surely," I thought occasionally, "they only have Christmas here once in a great many years." It seemed impossible to my inexperienced mind that such a magnificent display could be got up once every twelve months. On Christmas Eve, after dinner, my uncle, who was kind and good-natured, and seemed to enjoy my wonder and delight at everything, said:

"Georgie, how would you like to go to the circus to-night?"

My heart jumped at the thought. The circus! Ever since I was seven years old it had been the dream of my life to go to a circus. I expressed my joy at the prospect now before me in no measured terms. But suddenly a cold chill ran over me.

"Uncle," I said, with a horrible misgiving "haven't you made a mistake? There's no circus in the winter time."

"Oh, yes, my boy, there is; don't you be alarmed on that point. They've just opened a grand new building a few streets up-town. This is the first night; so get on your overcoat, for you'll want a good seat if this is your first circus."

It is little exaggeration to say that I "flew" upstairs. In less than a minute I was down again and equipped for the street.

We were in good time and secured excellent places. I sat down almost breathless with excitement, and at first scarcely dared to look around me. When at last I summoned up courage to take notes of my surroundings, I found the place to be what seemed a perfectly round room; the ceiling was concave, and from the middle of it hung a great chandelier glittering with light. It made my eyes ache to look at it. Gaslights in a circle all round the front tier of seats completed the lighting of the room. The floor of the ring was covered with fresh sawdust, and everything had a new, fresh smell, and a clean, new look. Presently the performance began. I was spellbound.

The Announcement of the Marriage.

At first I suffered agony at beholding two tall, agile fellows spinning round on the backs of horses, and performing extraordinary feats in the way of standing on their heads, balancing themselves, feet upwards, on one hand, jumping over each other's heads, and half a hundred other feats of the kind, which I can't begin to enumerate. But after awhile I gained more confidence in them, as they neither broke their necks nor drove the horses frantic, and I fully enjoyed the novel sight. How I laughed at the clown's jokes—what an embodiment of fun he seemed to me; how exhilarating the music sounded, and how my hands ached with the plaudits I so plentifully bestowed. After the clown's jokes were duly laughed at, and the two brown horses with hair riders led off, the arena was cleared. I thought the performance had concluded, and rose to go.

The Equestrienne fainting after the Accident in the Ring.

"Are you tired, Georgie?" asked my uncle.

"Oh, no sir!" I said, and I wondered how he could ask me, and why he looked so calm and uninterested.

"Oh! Then sit down again. There's something else to come."

I sat down, glad enough to know my night's enjoyment was not yet over. In a few minutes a large coal-black horse was led on. He was beautifully caparisoned. A cushioned saddle, covered with white velvet, and embroidered in brilliant colors, and a bridle of white ribbon and silk glossy blackness; and my heart beat with a new thrill as a murmur of expectation hummed through the assembly.

A loud clapping of hands, and then a tiny figure, bright, sparkling and glittering like a star, was seen to enter by the horse's head at a slight bound; and there, poised on one foot, the silken bridle held between her teeth, and her two arms extended to fly with the flying horse round and round the ring a dozen of times before she paused, amid the cheers and applause of several hundred people. I was thankful to see her for one minute in repose. All had passed so quickly that I was in a whirl of delight, astonishment and enthusiastic admiration.

I would have asked my uncle whether this lovely vision was a fairy, but then I might be mistaken, and how could I like to be laughed at. How beautiful she was—the exquisite little creature. A skirt of white gauze, spangled with gold and embroidered with crimson, reached half way below her knee; and crimson sandals on her dainty feet were strapped with narrow ribbon over the instep and tied around the delicate ankle. A crimson bodice, embroidered in gold and white, enclosed her childish waist, leaving to view the whitest neck and shoulders, on account of which it was impossible to imagine. Her face was so lovely that any man might have wished for a daughter or a little sister like her, and children look innocent as it was beautiful. No rouge concealed the beautiful glow on her round cheeks, and her parted lips were like ripe cherries. Her dark eyes looked out from under drooping silk curls with shy confidence; and a rich wealth of pale brown hair in loose ringlets waved down from her pearly brow, reaching below her waist.

"Oh, uncle!" I exclaimed in extasy, "is she not beautiful?"

"Poor little girl!" said my uncle, in a low, sad tone, looking at the child with moist eyes, "unfortunately for herself, Georgie, she is very beautiful."

I would have asked for some explanation of a remark which sounded to me inexplicable, but again the black horse went flying round the ring, and all my attention was given to the lovely rider. I shall never forget the sensation of terror that swept over me when I saw her jump the skipping-hoop with a rapidity that precluded the possibility of counting, and then go flying through a half dozen papercovered hoops in succession. Every moment I expected to see her go over the horse's head and lie trampled beneath his hoofs. When the trying performance was over I could not applaud; my heart almost stopped beating; my hands were cold and numbed, and beads of perspiration stood on my brow. I was conscious of an overwhelming feeling of gratitude to Heaven that the beautiful child was unhurt, and was seated there easy and graceful on her ornamented saddle. In a few moments she sprang down, sent a quick bow and smile, as it seemed to me, to every part of the house at once, and disappeared. Her horse was led off after her.

The rest of the performance had no attraction for me. I summoned up courage to ask my uncle if she would appear again that night, and on being assured she would not I announced myself ready to go home.

I could not forget her. I described the sight of her—her grace, beauty and cleverness to my little cousins at my uncle's, and went to bed to dream of her. In the visions of the night I saw her fifty times, always lovely, entrancing, bewitching; and the Christmas festivities lost half their charm for me, dimmed by the constant thought of her.

On the night of Christmas I begged my uncle to take me to the circus again, and he humored me. I bore the first series of the performance with the patience of a martyr. It had no pleasure for me now. How stale the clown's jokes had become, though I had heard them only once before.

At last she came. I was less frightened for her safety than I had been on the first night, and I admired and enjoyed her performance more. Again I left for home a little retired from the arena, and my heart beat with a wild and feverish desire to know her, to speak with her, to call her by her name. She had a name—she must have a sweet name—what a privilege to have known it. I could then have shrined it for ever in the heart whereon her image was indelibly graven. My sweet, lovely, heart's first dream, my boyish love, my darling Mariana!

Mariana was her name, I learned it afterwards. I became better acquainted with the city day by day; and at last I ventured to go alone to places of amusement in the evening.

Every other night I was to be found at the circus during the second part of the performance; and every time I left it, my heart thrilled with a wilder desire to know and speak with Mariana.

From fearing that she might come to harm in jumping the skipping-hoop, or flying through the hoop covered with paper, I almost prayed that some slight accident might happen which would give me an opportunity to do something that would make me known to her.

The last week of my holiday was drawing to a close, and with a sad heart I reflected that I had not yet gained the acquaintance for which I so longed. I resolved to visit the circus for the last time on Thursday night—on Saturday I was to leave the city.

I went early, in order to get a seat on the first row, though the half hour before her appearance had become an intolerable bore to me. But I must see her on the closest observation for the last time. At last she appeared.

Greedily I feasted my eyes on her beauty, the graceful form of her little head, the arch smile and bow when she turned to the house; and wretched and desolate I felt when I remembered that I might, perhaps, never see her again.

Suddenly, as she was flying through one of the hoops, a stupid fellow threw a bouquet towards her. It struck the horse between the eyes—he was a well-trained animal, but not all his native fire, and the throwing of bouquets not being among the items of his training he plunged forward, with a wild neigh, and with difficulty caught and pacified. But I only saw the girl. She had fallen, of course, and being struck by the horse's head as he leaped forward, lay there quite motionless on the floor. A sudden panic seemed for a moment to possess every one. I was in the front row, but a few feet above the orchestra circle from my seat, I raise the insensible child, and hold that lovely form in my strong arms, close to my beating heart, was my first thought, and very quick as thought it was done.

"Where shall I carry her?" I asked breathless.

Somebody—I think it was the clown motioned to me—led the way, and I followed him, and presently I found myself in the little girl's dressingroom—a place about three feet square in size, cold, comfortless, repulsive. On a wooden bench there chanced to be a broken pitcher containing some water, and with that I bathed her forehead and hair, and her cold hands and delicate temples.

She was not severely hurt, and soon revived enough to open her eyes and speak, faintly.

"Oh, sir," she said, "I am very good to throw the flowers. I love flowers, but I'm sorry they started Dobbie. He has some spirit, Dobbie has, but he'll be sorry when he knows how he hurt me."

She spoke quite distinctly, in a very sweet tone, and with an enchanting foreign accent. I made inquiries as I had not thrown the flowers, and had never seen them till I saw them strike her horse.

The clown perceiving she was not dangerously hurt, now returned to his post, and we were left alone.

"So you didn't throw the flowers, eh? And how came you down there?" he asked.

"I jumped down the moment you fell, and if you will forgive me for saying it, I am very glad the accident occurred, since you are not greatly hurt."

How I ever said it I can't tell, but all I said to her came as naturally as speaking.

"Why?" she asked, opening her lovely eyes till they looked like two great stars.

"To give me the pleasure of speaking to you. Something I have wished for since the first time I saw you."

She looked pleased and pleased coquettishly. Evidently it was not the first compliment she had received, young as she was; but I made no such reflection then. I only saw that her face had flushed the next moment, and a groan escaped her.

"Oh, forgive my forgetfulness," I said, "keeping you speaking here, when you are in such pain. You can go home."

"I should," she said, "but I feel too ill to go alone, and I must wait till some one can take me home."

"If you will allow me—I will be so glad—"

"To go home with me?" she said, shyly, sir I thank you. But you will step out one moment I will be ready."

I left the little place, and stood outside waiting for her. In a short time she appeared, having, apparently, thrown a dark skirt over her circus costume, and enveloped herself in a voluminous waterproof cloak, the hood of which was drawn up over her head.

She looked older than she was! I had first seen her on a Saturday, but very pale, pained little face, as I looked out from the hood, was the loveliest I have ever seen, and her smile was like sunshine on a bed of lilies of the valley.

From her appearance now, I judged she must be about fourteen years old.

"Do you know anything about the bouquet?" she asked as she came out, and waited by my side a moment.

"I was no doubt trampled under the horse's feet," I said, and I was glad to say it, though she sighed and returned:

"I am sorry; I so love flowers, and it isn't so often I get any."

I mentally resolved to spend all my next day's money in flowers for her bouquet.

"Well," said the little maiden, "we better had go," and slipping her hand through my arm, she led me through many devious passage-ways, till at last we were out in the street.

"What is your name?" she asked, as we went on—we went on, with a right step, "and is that I may know what to call you in my thoughts when I think of your kindness."

"George Arlton."

"That's a handsome name—as pretty as my own. Don't you think Maritana Dorlice a pretty name?"

At least as pretty as she to whom it belongs."

"I like that—you speak like a French boy I once knew," (I was torn with jealousy), "but he's dead now," she went on, with a slight sigh, "and I often miss my dear little companion. I liked him so much—may I like you?"

"If you only will," I said with a fluttering heart.

We were at the corner of the street now, and I had discovered on inspection that I had sufficient of my last allowance of pocket-money to hire a carriage, and I hailed one that chanced to be passing.

Maritana exclaimed against it, but I felt like a lord, and lifted her in without deigning a word of reply to her remonstrance. Then seating myself beside her, she gave the direction of her home to the driver, and off we rattled.

"Why, how nice this is!" she exclaimed, though she put her hand to her head once or twice. "No one ever took me home in a carriage before. Are you rich?"

"Never mind," I answered, mysteriously.

She evidently thought I was, and I had not the courage to deprive myself of the importance, I supposed, my fancied wealth gave me in her eyes.

It seemed to me but a few brief minutes—the hurried drive, but we were at her home, and I could not prolong it.

I helped her out, and led her up to the door.

"If it is too late to ask you in," she said, "my mother has gone to bed early, or she would thank you. So good-bye."

She held out her little hand—I seized it, and emboldened by my despair when I thought I might never see her again, I pressed my lips to it, and then, frightened at myself, dropped it. She smiled, and I thought blushed, and from the sidewalk showed me a faint color flush over her face; the next moment the closed door was between us, and I experienced a feeling of loneliness I had never known before. There was no need to look at the house—the name and number of the street, which I had heard her words given to the carriage-driver, were graven on my memory for ever!

The next day I purchased the handsomest bouquet I could find in the city; it was really a beautiful collection of flowers. How well I remember the snow-white tuberoses composing the centre, the sweet-violets, the delicate mosscurrent, the rich carnations that made up the rest of it, and then the silver paper with a white silken fringe that hemmed it all, and the delicate white sight of such flowers sends a tremor through me. I leave it to youthful hearts—I was sixteen then—to imagine the joy with which I set out that afternoon to present the abode of Maritana, the bouquet wrapped in a cover of silver tissue, held jealously in my hand.

Maritana was not in the dressing-room in her room, with a slight fever and a bad pain in the head. I saw her mother, who told me this, and with a sad heart I confided to her the bouquet, to which was attached my name, for I had provided against the possibility of not seeing her.

Madame Dorelice, who had but a limited stock of English, could only find words to thank me, and to say she would carry the pretty flowers to ma fille at once—immediate.

She did, though she may be uncertain whether I should go or wait for her return. While I thought of it I heard a dear, sweet voice exclaim in tones of the keenest delight:

"Oh, mamma! How beautiful! how lovely! how sweet! the dear flowers—the pretty flowers—how I love them!"

I was repaid even for my disappointment.

A moment later I heard her reading my name out to her card, and then she raised her voice to tell from the other room:

"Oh, thank you—thank you, sir—I shall keep them and love them for your sake."

Madame Desirée returned, and she tried to give me Maritana's thanks, but I said "Good-morning," and hurried away. I could not stay to hear her stammering efforts to make me comprehend her, after hearing the expression of Maritana's delight.

The next day I left the city.

I was too young to comprehend the change that had taken place within me; but I realised in some confused manner that I was no longer a piece I had entered as a boy with the feelings of a man.

How tame, dreary, heart-sickening I found my home and business when I got back to it again. I soon assured myself that I was not intended for the life of a farmer, and my father declared I moped, which was true enough, I moped about my failing health. But at length they were both persuaded that I pined for a life of more stirring activity, and at my own earnest desire I was entered as a junior clerk in the head's counting-house.

The same train of cars that a few weeks before had taken my breath away on my first visit to my uncle's carried me back to the city on my second journey. But my heart bounded like a ball that had been kept under pressure and suddenly removed, when I recognised I left the city behind me, and the intermediate streets that told me I was again in the great city.

I did not dare go to a place of amusement on the night of my arrival; neither did I go for two or three nights after, for I was anxious not to give my self the pain of disappointment. I had been tortured by the galeties of a city life. But at last I found myself in the circus. I tried to still the beating of my heart, and to calm it by her to come, and at last the black horse was led on. Oh, moment of intoxicating anticipation—two men moved aside, and a tiny figure appeared in a dark riding habit, and sprang into the saddle before any one could offer her assistance.

A feeling of faintness oppressed me. My head grew dizzy, and I closed my eyes.

"Perhaps," I thought, "the programme has been changed, and Maritana comes later in the evening," and I looked within me. But after the tall woman in a riding-habit came an infant prodigy, in the shape of a very small boy, who did a great many things I knew nothing about, for I closed my eyes, and my heart panted for the sweet young girl whose image was graven upon it. All through this dreary hour that followed I waited and watched for her, but the people rose, and the lights were slowly turned off, and I had not seen her.

I was a bitter disappointment; and I wearied myself on my way home with conjectures as to the cause of her absence from the circus troupe.

Not that I was in a state of it sooner. She was, doubtless, ill, and it was too late to go then and inquire for her. But on the morrow, before my hour for entering the counting-room, I sought the dwelling of Maritana, trembling between the hope of seeing her and the fear of finding her ill, or — I dared not think the worst, though determined to learn it.

Alas! it could scarcely have been worse than what I discovered. Madame Desirée had given up her apartments—Maritana had been taken ill with some terrible disorder, just when she seemed to be entirely recovered from the fall from her horse, and the doctor had said she would die. Madame Desirée, at the risk of her child's life, had removed her; the woman from whom they had rented the rooms would tell me no more; where they had gone she could not even guess at; madame had acted like a true mother—refusing to let anybody see her daughter or to tell what her illness was, or, in short, anything concerning her; and as for the poor child—she was doubtless dead by that time.

I could listen to no more. I don't know how I found my way to the counting-house; and I hope no one will laugh at me when I say that my uncle found me at my desk, weeping bitterly, when he came in.

"Why, George, my dear boy! what has happened?"

"Oh, uncle, you remember that lovely little girl you saw at the circus?—she is dead!" and I could not keep back the sobs that choked my utterance.

"Dead! Well, poor child, I don't know that any one should grieve to hear it. She was young and innocent—she has probably escaped a much worse fate."

This was philosophy, perhaps; but I only felt that Maritana was dead, and my heart-ached with a bitter, heavy pain.

A prevalent malady has decreed that youth recovers sooner than age from sorrow—it did with much more keenly. The first few months, after the sad tidings I had heard of Maritana, were dreary and sad to me; but after a while that heavy shadow, growing out of my first visit to a circus, was remembered as a sad but beautiful picture that I could not forget, but which mellowed over, and once or twice a bright thought illumined it like sunlight.

After all—who knows—Maritana might not be dead; and some time in the fur future I might see her again, and tell her how I had mourned for her loss, for she had also said she would like me, and I had loved her dearly."

Six years had passed away. I had become quite a business man; and my uncle, having no sons, and being fond of me, had taken me as partner into his business.

People spoke of me as an exemplary and rising young man, and sometimes wondered that I should be so quiet and studious—never caring for balls, or ballets, or suppers, or the sixteen other specialties supposed to be attractive to all young men.

Strange to say my earlier taste for the amusements of a city life had died a sudden death; and I rarely spent an evening even at the best of the theatres. But I had a very lavish disposition and had to do in beginning this disinclination for the ordinary evening entertainments of a city, I will not venture to say; it is certain that habit and habit at length made it a part of me.

One evening my eldest cousin, a very pretty girl, (just out), decided her intention of visiting the theatre, and I must go—no one could please mamma so well, and no one else suited cousin Carrie as a gentleman.

"Nonsense, George," returned Carrie, with an overwhelming display of fan and feather and jewelry, and besides, there's a new dancer—Mademoiselle Maritana—everybody's raving about her. I don't believe you've ever seen a genuine French dancer. So it will be a treat for you."

Mademoiselle Maritana! Should I blush to confess it? At first I could not remember that such a similar sound of that name, and it was some moments before I could connect it, with a faint glow at my heart, with the little girl I had seen in the circus more than six years before. It was as a romantic tribute to the dancer's name, for a feeble spark of her memory remained, and passing through, the cloud of years, that I consented to act as my aunt's and cousin's escort.

It was long since I had been in a theatre. There was something almost exhilarating in the bright lights, the music, and the well-dressed and handsome women. I amused myself with looking and studying the various faces than in watching the acting or the development of the plot, and I was rather glad when the curtain fell, and the orchestra played some fine selections from a favorite opera. Presently up rolled the curtain again, and "Here comes the dancer—there!" my cousin, with a little rustling of silk, and bending forward to see better.

Yes: there was the dancer. I could scarcely believe my eyes—it was Maritana, indeed—my Maritana! the lovely girl of the circus, with every charm and beauty increased—the beautiful child, in all the glory of regal, gorgeous womanhood.

The old tide of feeling swept over me, drowning the lapse of years in a moment, and again I bent forward, as on that first night, and watched her. Spell-bound, entranced—her wavy grace, her translucent beauty, the soft light of her starlike eyes, the rich color of her rounded cheeks—where could it be equalled? There was not another such lovely woman in the world. I could have endured other delicious thoughts passed through my mind in a minute; and I scarcely breathed till the curtain fell, and she was lost to me.

I rose, and with a hasty apology to my companions, left the box. In another minute I was asking permission to go behind the scenes, and was admitted. This showed that she rarely permitted visitors behind the scenes. I was very glad of it. I was obliged to wait in the green-room for some minutes—mademoiselle was in her dressing-room.

She came at last, and I thought her more beautiful than ever. She wore a close-fitting suit of black velvet, and a hat with a drooping brim, which shaded the exquisite beauty of her face, but left to full view the rich abundance of her waving hair.

"I fear you don't remember me, Miss Destrée?"

"Monsieur is right," and she spoke with the same foreign accent, rather stronger than when I saw her last.

"Perhaps you have forgotten my name, too," I said, with a feeling of mortification at not being cognised.

"If monsieur will speak it I can tell better," with a bewitching smile.

"George Alcroft."

"It's possible? I am so glad," she said, and caught my hand in both of hers, and a bright color that made my face also glow at sight of it flitted over her cheek and brow.

"Ah, now that I look at you closely," she went on, "I do see my little friend. But you are changed—you are—well, never mind!" and she laughed gaily; "men are so naturally vain it don't do to pay them compliments."

How charming she was—so beautiful, so arch and winning, so perfectly ladylike, too. I felt too much to say much, but I thought was it possible, after all, I had loved Maritana for six years, though to myself I had almost ceased to remember her? It was a question I could not answer.

She spoke again before I had well recovered from the bewilderment of meeting her.

"Well, I must say good-night, Mr. Alcroft; my mother is waiting."

"And may I not call on you?"

"Certainly," and she pencilled her address on a card, "we will always be glad to see you; and I have yet to thank you for those lovely flowers. Au revoir!"

She waved her hand and was gone.

I was savage with myself for my stupidity. She had gone to her carriage, and I had not even accompanied her to it. All my customary ease seemed to have forsaken me.

The stupid afterpiece was half over when I returned to my artist's box, where I got a scolding from my cousin for my absence.

My attendance at the theatre was so regular now that it soon became as great a marvel as my avoidance had hitherto been.

I did not call on Mademoiselle Maritana, as I had at first thought of doing the very next day after I had answered my acquaintance with her. I had a prescience of what would happen if I did. But I went nightly to see her dance, and yet I dared not ask myself why I went, or why I refrained from calling upon her.

One evening I was passing through the hall and I heard my name spoken by my uncle and some other voices came from the parlor opposite where I stood, brushing my hat, and I listened without thinking of what I was doing.

"Nonsense, Mary, it will do him good. I am not over fond of these model young men who never do anything that any one else does."

"But, my dear, he goes to the theatre every night," returned my aunt.

"So much the better; he has discovered in himself a natural taste for acting, as all young men should; and I'm glad to see him cultivating it."

"Oh, nonsense, Alcroft! He only goes to see the theatre; and if he was not such a very exemplary young man, I should think that French dancer had something to do with it."

"Stuff! What creatures you women are. There must be a love scrape at the bottom of everything. You may take my word for it, George is an exemplary young man, and he has too much good sense to be really in love with a dancer."

I crushed my hat on to my head and hurried out. That scrap of conversation had given me a deeper insight to my own feelings than I had dared to take for myself.

I did love Maritana, and I trembled to think how madly. I easily foresaw the opposition I would meet from my uncle, but it mattered not; I was my own master, and as such I determined to pursue the continued on my way, and reached the theatre just as the curtain rolled up for Maritana's appearance.

The fussy of jealousy possessed me when I heard on every side the admiration that was lavished upon her—admiration justly due, which could not have been too flattering, but still I burned with rage and jealousy. I determined to stop this exhibition of herself at once. She was beautiful beyond description, graceful beyond compare, but no one must have the right to say so, no one save me alone.

Miss Frances Osgood is the author of a poem called "Fanny Elsler." If you would have my idea of the living embodiment of loveliness and grace presented by Maritana, read that little poem and apply every line of it to her.

I went behind the scenes when she had retired, and waited for her in the greenroom. She came to me, I thought, with a shade of coldness; I could not quite decide whether it was pique or indifference.

Might I have the pleasure of conducting Miss to her carriage? Yes; mamma was ill and unable to accompany her this evening.

She replied with the same politeness, and I was asked leave to call the next day when I took her hand at parting.

Why need I have leave when I did not avail myself of it, and again the shade of coldness in her manner. It was pique then. A thrill of pleasure quickened the pulse of my heart. I apologised, got leave to call and parted from her.

Early the next day I called at the hotel where she was staying. What a contrast from the stiff, proper troupe, and very handsome and fascinating person. I had often looked at him and listened to him with delight, for I went to the opera frequently; but the sight of him, under present circumstances, froze me. Maritana, I thought, jealously, was more lovely than ever in her white cashmere morning-robe, trimmed with swansdown, and her fair hair gathered up with a coral comb. The attentions of the signor did not displease her. she even seemed to encourage him. I could not leave after a hurried call, resolving, as I waited, with angry haste, towards my office, never to see her again. But yet I could not forget the faint glow upon her cheek, the tender light in her eyes, and the lingering pressure of her fingers when she bade me good-bye, and said:

"You are in great haste, monsieur. Pray come again when you can spare me a little more of your time."

That night found me a looker-on while she danced, and on the next day I called again. This time she was alone; and I was in Elysium while I listened to her pretty talk, her acknowledgment of which she could be sharp on occasion, and her low, delicious laughter.

I said little, quite pleased to listen.

While I sat, leaning my arm on a little table beside me, I chanced to move suddenly, and overthrew a little basket filled with flowers.

Maritana started up with a suppressed cry.

"I always keep that casket locked," she muttered, a flush overspreading her face. "How could it be open now?"

And she skilfully threw herself between her treasure and me, and the flowers and contents back again into their place. But I had seen a lot of withered flowers, I had caught the gleam of silver paper, and the faded yellow of what had once been silk fringe.

I caught her two hands and drew her away. A flush of anger still burned on her face, and tried to see the light in her downcast eyes.

"Maritana!" I said, in a tone that love and joy made to sound as a heavenly music.

"Well, sir?" she said, throwing back her head, and flashing her eyes up in my face.

"Can it be a possible that you have kept those old flowers all this time?"

"Why not?" she retorted, sharply, and then, with a demure smile: "Monsieur known I love flowers."

"Ah, Maritana! And may not monsieur know that you love him too?"

A rigid look came over her face; she grew very pale, but answered nothing.

With all the eloquence of passionate love I poured out my heart before her, crushing the little hands within mine while I spoke, but no answering love came into her white face, she only grew more cold and rigid at every word I said.

"Speak to me! Speak to me, my love! Maritana, my darling! Say that I have not mistaken you. You will not break my heart, and mine also. One word—I will wait—any conditions you please—only promise that you will be my wife."

A rich warm color, like the heart of a rose, reddened all her face, then faded out, leaving her quite pale again, as she said, with a smothered gasp:

"You—you don't mean that you want to marry me, George?"

"Certainly."

"But not like you, George Alcroft, don't marry women like me—dancers!" she said, with a mingled accent of contempt and sadness.

"I beg your pardon, mademoiselle; men like me always marry the woman they love."

She wrenched her hands from my grasp, and, covering her face with them, burst into a passion of tears. Then, catching both my hands in hers, she covered them with a shower of warm kisses and tear-bedewed words that I can not repeat.

"Do I love you?" she said. "Do I love you? Look into my face—see these tears—see—oh, you dear kind, George, and you do see how I love you!"

I drew her close within my arms and held her against my happy heart—my Maritana—my own for ever—my betrothed wife.

When at length we could discuss things somewhat mundane it was decided that Maritana should finish her engagement, which, as it was not very long, she declared she could not break her word, even to be married; and with that I was obliged to be content, though I was at first inclined to be severe.

I always went with her to the theatre now. It was a pleasure to me, for it insured her safety. I comments passed upon her by vulgar loungers. I waited in the greenroom for the reappearance, and the entrance of Signor Bratelli, and three weeks were gone; and with what joy I thought that only six nights more must pass before I could for ever withdraw my darling from the vulgar gaze of the theatre-going public. I called for her one night, as usual, earlier than was necessary, to take her to the theatre, as I was to dine with her uncle, and interview with her during the twelve hours she called day. Her maid told me that mademoiselle was too ill to see any one, and would not be able to dance that night.

I was shocked at the intelligence; but certain the illness was not serious, I sent her back again with my card. She returned with the message that mademoiselle was very ill, and could on no account see Mr. Alcroft.

Twenty different emotions possessed me as I left the hotel, in which amazement, grief and jealousy predominated; amazement at her sudden illness, grief for it, and jealousy that I was not admitted. What reason could there be that her husband who was to be, should not see her? Did she mean to claim her as his wife, should not see her, however ill she might be?

As I asked myself these questions, walking along blindly, I stumbled against Signor Bratelli.

I watched him; he entered the hotel. I was certain he went to see my love heart, though I could not know why; but I resolved to await the appearance of the tenor. I paced to and fro in front of the hotel; an hour passed away, and he did not come out again, and I turned from the place with sick heart and a bitter smile. It was all too plain; the illness was a pretext; she had denied me for the sake of Signor Bratelli, and doubtless though I would not go to the theatre. But I took my seat there with rage and jealousy tearing at my heart, resolved to sit through the whole performance for the sake of seeing her there, and then confronting her with her own lie. But the curtain fell, and before it rose up again the manager appeared with an apology for the nonappearance of Mademoiselle Maritana, who had unexpectedly taken ill a few hours before. A sudden revulsion of feeling took my breath away; I gasped with joy. She was ill, then; and was I mad, not to have thought of that before? Signor Bratelli had rooms in the same hotel in which Maritana lived! I seemed to walk on air as I returned to my uncle's. Surely never before had the certainty of a beloved one's illness brought such comfort to the heart of a lover.

I was taking a hasty glance at the morning paper next day, as I made a hurried breakfast before going to inquire after Maritana. She would be better, I thought—I was sure she would be better, for I was in buoyant spirits; and as I thought of my own approaching marriage I involuntarily glanced over the list of the happy couples. Suddenly the room seemed to spin around, the floor to open beneath my feet; I had a sensation as of falling, falling down through immeasurable space, but still I clung to that fatal paper, and with staring eyes read again and again the terrible paragraph:

"Married, at —— Church last night, Mademoiselle Maritana Desirée, the well-known and deservedly-admired danseuse, to Signor Antonio Bratelli, first tenor—'s opera troupe. Madame Bratelli, who was so suddenly taken ill yesterday afternoon, is now convalescent, and we have every stand that the happy couple, instead of betaking themselves to the honeymoon, have begun with their ordinary avocations. The name of Mademoiselle Maritana is on the bills for to-night, and Signor Bratelli's delightful voice will be heard."

A mist came between me and the paper, and a thick darkness fell down upon me. When I recovered it was like returning to life from the gates of death, and with a wild yearning, long, long, I had passed through those gates, to return to this earth no more.

But I lived again, was it not some horrible delusion—some fearful trance which had overtaken me, and not a real misery? But there it was still; the paper lay at my feet, and it was always the same. Was it not some cruel jest of my merchant friends, some one who had heard and disapproved of my inadvertent passage I had spoken, perhaps? A ray of hope lighted up the darkness of my heart. It was a jest—a cruel, cruel jest, but yet a jest. Maritana was not married.

Leaving my untasted breakfast, I set off to walk to the hotel immediately, and almost flew on my way thither.

The maid, whom I knew very well, admitted me to Maritana's parlor. She was pale, and her eyes were red, I thought, as I looked at her, but I didn't stop to think why.

"Where is your mistress?" I asked.

"Madame has gone out," she faltered.

"Madame! I ask for Mrs. Desirée; I want mademoiselle. Where is Maritana, my wife —my wife? You know who I mean, girl."

"I could not tell monsieur that it might be some; and if she was I don't think she would see you."

"Is it true, then, that which I thought a foul, a horrible lie?" I said between my teeth, grasping her arm.

"It is true," sobbed the girl, bursting into tears, "and my mistress's heart is broken."

I staggered out of the room without a word. Before I reached the bottom of the stairs the girl was beside me again.

"There is something madame wished me to give monsieur."

It was a little rose-covered book, marked "Diary," which I had often sportively threatened to steal. I had not sufficient life left to refuse this melancholy gratification, and took it with a place to overwhelming grief. I took the book, and with a shiver and a groan I could not suppress I found it into my breast pocket. Mechanically I went to my office and busied myself with my ordinary duties. I saw that my uncle looked at me compassionately, but I made no sign that could induce him to put his sympathy into words. All that day I moved and acted like an automaton, and when the evening came I took my way towards the theatre as of old.

She was there; was and ghostlike, her face deadly pale, her hollow eyes ringed about with dark circles, her luxuriant hair dressed and drawn, but with pale and lustreless, and her form, even, shrunk and bereft of its willowy grace, its lithe suppleness, since I had seen her last.

It was a pale spectre of Maritana. Whatever had separated us, she was as wretched as myself, and I felt that there was comfort in the thought, if none heart as I took my dreary way homewards.

Alone in my own room, as I threw off my overcoat, I felt the unopened book tumbled out of my pocket. I took it up with sad curiosity. Perhaps it contained some solution of the enigma of my sudden misery.

I turned over the first pages, on which were written the joyous outpourings of an innocent heart, unconscious of the fate that had fallen that night when I had renewed my acquaintance with her up to the last night on which I parted from her in happy and confiding love. Tears were on the leaves as I read and turned them over. Then I came to the last day of which there was a record. The date was written, but even frank, free hand writing, and then came writing on paper blistered with tears, and that writing, though cramped, and evidently written with stiffened, pulseless fingers, I still recognised as hers. And here is the secret of the diary:

"George's uncle called to see me to-day. I was much pleased, though a little frightened. I had felt hurt and sorry, but not offended—what right had I to be offended?—but none of his relatives had showed any disposition to become acquainted with me. But I was scarcely prepared for the revelation made to me in Mr. Alcroft's first words, that George had not spoken to them at all about his intended marriage with myself.

"After saluting me and taking the seat I offered, Mr. Alcroft broke the awkward silence by saying:

"'Is it true, young lady, as I have heard it rumored, that my nephew, Mr. George Alcroft, proposes to marry you?'

"I suppose George's uncle did not intend to convey so much insult in the tone of his inquiry as I felt in it, but I am sensitive, and I take fire readily. I answered, with a haughty manner:

"'I believe that monsieur's nephew intends me that honor.'

"Then I am very glad that I have called on you, Miss Desirée; for the sooner you know that George can never marry you the better it will be for all parties concerned.'

"Sir!' I gasped, almost fainting, and holding on to the arm of my chair.

"'I do not mean to hurt your feelings, poor girl; I will not say more than is necessary, but before I go into proposing marriage with you for the sake of a fine establishment, and the world's good, why and bye be the possessor of, for this I do not believe of you—you do not look like an intriguing and heartless woman of the world, such as I was prepared to find you. Innocence and candor are expressed upon your face, and I am sure that you love dear George.'

"'Sir,' I thank you, sir,' I interrupted him with tears for that confidence in me. 'I do indeed love George, truly, dearly, with all my heart, and as the position I scarcely know what it is, except that I know him to be a gentleman, and I never knew the thought of his being wealthy or ever likely to become so.'

"'I believe you, poor child! I believe you, and my heart aches at the thought of bringing such sorrow upon you. But if you truly love my nephew you would not be the first to bring disgrace upon him—for the world would call it disgrace—you would not stand between him and all the brightest prospects in life—you would not blast a brilliant and successful future which opens before him?'

"'Oh, Heaven forbid!'

"'Yes, my good girl, and you will never yourself to hear the truth when I tell you that George is a ruined man the day that makes you his wife.'

"I involuntarily covered my eyes with the sound of those dreadful words, and his voice, which seemed to be the voice of fate, came pouring down upon me. The room grew dark, and a rushing sound was in my head, as if all the blood in my body throbbed in my temples. Almost as sudden as it had come this feeling passed away, and I felt a strange, calm, and cold sense of pain that had dropped from my head and lay listless in my lap, and I listened to the many convincing words spoken to me as if in another world, and coming from far, far away.

"'Something there was about his inability to change the customs of the world, the impossibility of going against the laws of society, and the necessity for my present suffering for George's sake, and much more I scarcely heard, and didn't understand, and then George's uncle rose and took my hand.

"'You will save George from all this humiliation, from this shame, if you love him you will rather suffer than cause suffering to him. I'm, believe me, a marriage with you would soon become a curse to him. May I trust you?'

"'You may trust me,' I said, and almost started at the sound of my own voice, it was so changed and hollow.

"He raised my hand to his lips and kissed it.

"'I could wish that it might be otherwise, he said, 'you are a good and lovely girl, and you have my respect.'

"The door closed after him.

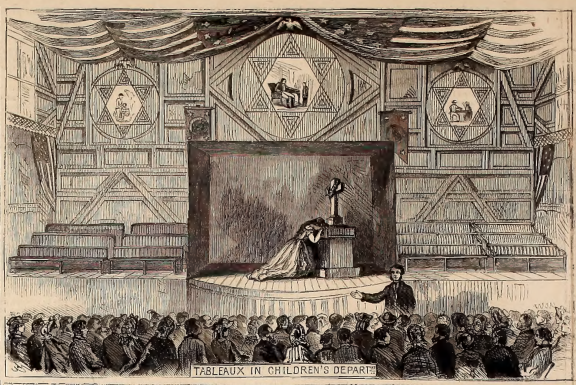
"His respect! At what a price; oh, my poor broken heart! Elise came in soon after and had to carry me to bed.

"I was ill, George, when you came, and ill or well you were the last person I could see then—I must never, never see you any more.

"At first I thought I might have the poor consolation of dying, but I would not have your dear love for the rest of my weary life. But I knew my own weakness too well. If I ever saw you again, and I knew you would find the means to see me, I felt assured I would forfeit my word to your uncle, and bring upon you all the pain and disgrace that I, alas! had not foreseen when I promised to marry you.

"Signor Bratelli had long professed love towards me, and had asked me to marry him. I had refused him, but I waited for him, and took means to let him know that I had changed my mind. It was a terrible trial, but I felt I must choose to be married this very night, for I knew, George, that you would seek me on the morrow. Oh, George, George, my lover, my own, have I done well or ill? I have thrown away my life and my soul my own for the sake of a cruel world that cares nothing about either of us? Did you indeed love me truly and for ever, and can you ever forgive me that act and fate along with me? for my sake would you have bought a lifelong misery for me, Miss Alcroft? I know not what I have done! But men are not like women—your uncle said it, George—he said that when your first passion for me had worn off you would curse me in your heart for the scorn and cold looks I had brought upon you.

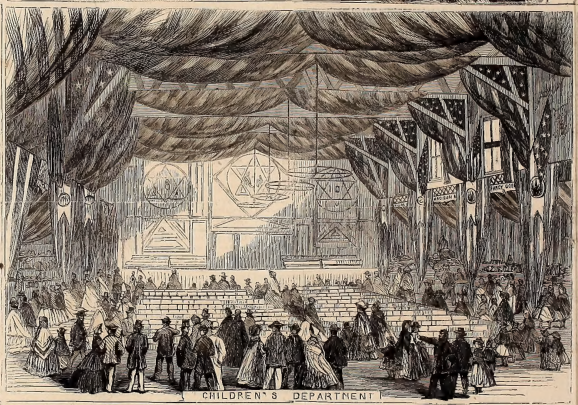
"I cannot answer the questions that rise up to me out of my heart to have compassion for me, but a poor little girl, ignorant of the world, who loved you dearly, truly, and knew no other way to do it, in the end, might be best for you. If I have erred forgive me, and if you should live to stand on the earth after I am under it, call me to mind, think of me, sometimes, dearest, and try to think kindly of your poor Maritana.



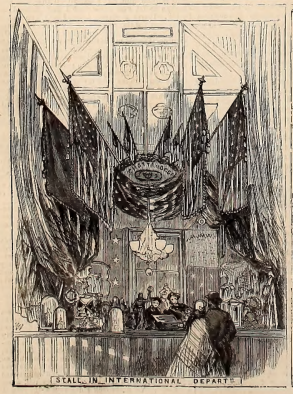
It is twenty years since I closed the little rosecovered diary, and laid it and night on my desk. I first opened it, and laid it upon my heart. I cursed Society then, and my uncle, its mouthpiece, and all the world that had come between us, and made my life desolate; and at first I was bitter towards Maritana, that she did not wait, and let me answer my uncle, and take all the consequences upon my own head; but with my own wife I have found my remain angry with that poor broken-hearted girl, and though she never set eyes on her more I have heard forgiven her long ere the violets bloomed, blue and sweet, over her low grave.

I rarely go to the theatre now; to the opera, never; and the sight of that great, fat, complacent Italian tenor is to me a sometimes much needed tonic that gives me a feeling I dare not stop to analyse. My little boy, who is just as fond as he appreciative tumbling and other extraordinary feats of that kind, often begs me to take him to the circus, and he generally gets his own way. I sit through the performance with the air of a martyr, and sometimes smile at the child's delight. Sometimes, too, when a little jockey on horseback rides round the ring I look at her for a moment through a mist of tears, and then as I put my handkerchief back in my pocket I say—

"Come, Charlie, we had better go home, now—haven't you had enough of the circus, my boy?"



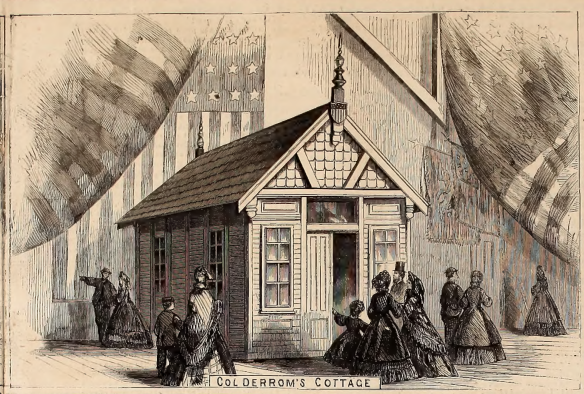
THE FOUNTAIN



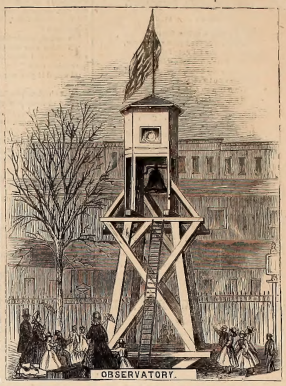
TABLEAUX IN CHILDREN'S DEPART

CLOSING THE ARMS & TROPHIES DEP'T

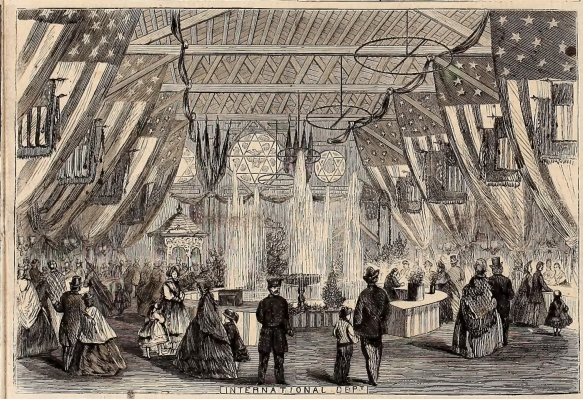
CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT



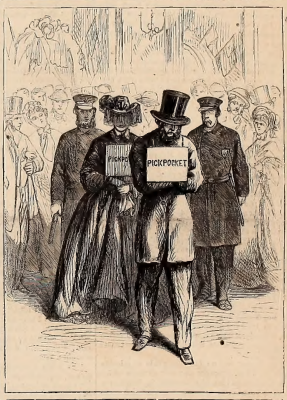
STALL IN INTERNATIONAL DEPART'T



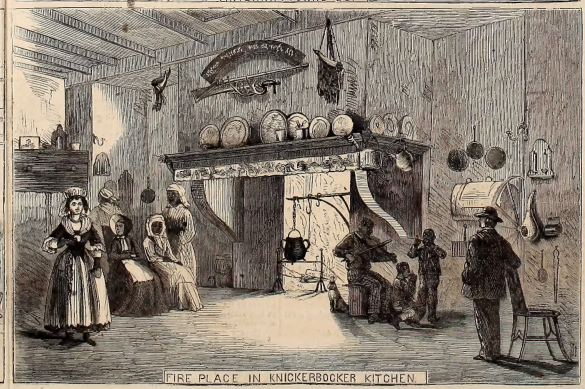
THE KNICKERBOCKER KITCHEN.



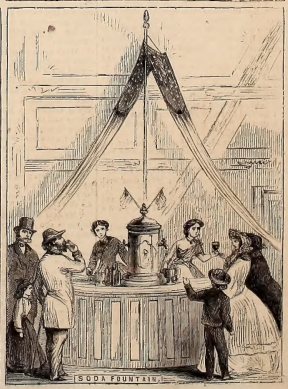
THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR—UNION SQUARE BUILDINGS—SCENES AN



COLDERROM'S COTTAGE



OBSERVATORY.



INTERNATIONAL CORPS

FIRE PLACE IN KNICKERBOCKER KITCHEN.

SODA FOUNTAIN.

ES AND INCIDENTS IN THE VARIOUS DEPARTMENTS.—SEE PAGE 65.

THE MAIDEN'S PROPHECY.

BY HENRY C. WATSON.

THERE was a village festival,
And bright-eyed girls were there,
And one, the fairest of them all,
Did Fate's behest declare.
"Here is my hand, young Sibyl fair,"
Spoke out a stranger youth,
"From life or luck I fain would learn
My doom for joy or ruth."

She looked into his loving eyes,
But quick her glances fell;
Her fair hand trembled at his touch,
But why she could not tell.
"I read," she said, "of noble deeds,
Of danger overcome;
But soon a captive thou wilt fall,
Sir Knight, thy time hath come!"

There was a village festival,
And bright-eyed girls were there,
And she, the fairest of them all,
A bridal wreath did wear.
And by her side the stranger youth
Stood forth in manly pride,
A fond and willing captive he,
The Sibyl was his bride!

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

CHAPTER XXV.

IT was a small room, in one of those mysterious hotels in the narrow streets near the Battery, which appear to be usually appropriated to foreigners, and about which dark-whiskered, sallow-faced individuals may be seen lingering at all hours of the day, their very faded, seedy appearance calling up images of dunes, scant dinners and a whole train of petty evils.

The chamber was small, but not uncomfortably furnished, though the carpet had originally been of that tawdry sort which such places affect, and had probably not been new by several stages when first established there.

The remains of a fire smouldered in the little grate, but the ashes were strewn over the hearth, and the whole apartment was in hopeless confusion, which added to its discomfort.

In the centre of the room was a small table covered with empty champagne bottles and glasses, torn packs of cards, ends of cigars—all huddled together in repulsive untidiness, and giving evidence of a long night of dissipation.

The late tenant had left some rotten, miserable attempt at a canopy swept back and heaped carelessly on the dirty counterpane by a man in a restless standing just as he had broken himself away, ready dressed, long after daylight peered in through the broken shutters.

His appearance was in keeping with the room; a soiled, torn dressing-gown, that had once been very elegant, was swept carelessly about him; his black hair streamed over the pillow, and gave an almost ghastly effect to his face, as he lay in that troubled dream, already pale and worn from many sleepless nights.

It was a handsome face, but one from which a physiognomist would have shrunk, had he seen it then in its full truthfulness, without a gleam of the fascination which it was capable of expressing in guarded moments and under more fortunate circumstances.

The sleeper was on the sunny side of mid-age still, but his countenance was one of those which never carried an idea of youth with it, which even in early boyhood is so marked by craft and recklessness that nothing of the abandon of fresh feeling is visible there.

It was nearly noon, but he had not stirred or opened his eyes; once or twice the dilapidated chambermaid, who performed a slatternly duty in that part of the building, opened the door and peeped in, but her entrance had not served to arouse him, and she knew better than to venture upon any further attempt.

Suddenly he woke from a troubled dream and looked about him with a start.

"I dreamed they were nailing me up in a coffin," he muttered; "bah, how plainly I heard them driving in the nails!"

He turned from his pillow with a shudder, but in an instant there came a knock at the door, this time quick and impatient—it was the first summons which had aroused him that unquiet vision.

"Come in," he called out; "the door isn't locked."

He raised himself indolently on the bed and looked towards the door—it opened slowly and a woman entered the room.

Her face was covered under a heavy veil, but the man seemed to recognise her at once, for he started up and gave a muttered execration as he caught sight of his untidy appearance in the little mirror.

Then he hurried towards his visitor, who had closed the door and stood leaning against it.

"You have come," he exclaimed; "so kind of you—excuse the disorder here—I did not know it was so late."

He held out his hand with a smile, but she turned away with a gesture of abhorrence which had no effect upon him, save that it deepened the smile to an ugly sneer.

She threw back the long veil and displayed her face—the visitor was Elizabeth Mellen.

"Pray be seated," he went on, placing a chair near the hearth; "this room looks dreadful, but I was very wakeful all night and overslept myself—had I dreamed you would favor me with so early a visit, I should have been prepared."

She glanced at the table, which bore evidence of the manner in which the night had been passed, and said abruptly, pointing towards the cards:

"Did those things keep you wakeful? Were you in luck?"

He smiled complacently.

"Nothing ever escapes your eye, dear lady," he said. "Well, I won't deny the fact—we were playing cards a little."

"I asked if you were fortunate?" she said, impatiently.

"Not absolutely unfortunate," he returned, with another disagreeable smile; "but you know the old proverb—'Lucky in love, unlucky at cards,' so I never expect much from the mischievous pasteboards."

Her face flushed painfully to the very waves of her hair, then grew whiter than before; she sank into the chair from positive inability to stand.

"Why did you do me the favor to be interested in my fortunes?" he asked.

"Because I have brought you no money," she said, abruptly, looking in his face with sudden defiance.

His brows contracted in an ugly form, though his lip still retained its smile—he looked dangerous then.

"That is bad, very," he said; "I wonder you should have come all the way here to bring these unpleasant tidings?"

Elizabeth did not answer; she had drawn towards the hearth and was pushing the ashes with the point of her shoe, gazing drearily into the dying embers.

"You received my letter?" he asked.

"Yes—don't send in that wily again, or let yourself be seen. I've had enough of that I fell from my horse."

"How sad! I should never have forgiven myself had any harm resulted from it," he said, so gravely, that one could not tell whether he was in earnest or mocking her. "You were not hurt—nothing unpleasant occurred! I despaired of seeing you in the grounds after that, and so went away."

She started up in sudden passion, goaded by his attempt at sympathy beyond the power of prudence or self-control.

"I wish I had been hurt," she exclaimed. "I could have borne being maimed for life had I seen the brute's hoofs trampling you down as I fell."

He had seated himself opposite her and was looking earnestly in her face. These bitter words did not seem to excite his anger—he was smiling still, and there was a look of admiration there which seemed to excite her still more desperately.

"You are so beautiful in one of these moods," he said; "don't restrain yourself. What a Medea you would make!"

She looked at him with a glance which had the menace of a hunted animal brought suddenly to bay and ready for a spring. Then she sank back—in moments like that many a desperate woman had stained her soul with dark crime—but her combination terrified even a second country."

"You will not go when you get the money," she said; "you will drink, gamble—leave yourself without a cent."

"So harsh always in your judgments," he returned, deprecatingly.

"I have hope of being rid of you," she went on; "but I have no consolation—you are ruining me, and that will be your ruin! My husband suspects nothing as yet—he day he discovers a shadow of the truth there is an end to these extortions."

"Don't speak so angrily—pray don't! I hardly think you would have the heart to send me to a coffin"—your proud mien will do a great deal to procure silence where a lady is concerned."

"You know that is impossible! With his home once broken up, his peace destroyed, he would be careless of the world's knowledge—his wrongs and his revenge would lead him to desperate measures."

"Is it possible? What an unpleasant character! Well, well, we must take pains that he is not enlightened—that is the way—you see how very simple it is."

"I warn you now, this is the last money I shall be able to give you for years," she said; "it is only from having those stocks in my hands that I am able to do it now."

"My dear friend, you forget that your husband may give you more stocks," he returned, with a laugh which made her shudder anew.

"Mr. Jarvis promised me the money by the last of this week—that will be in time for the steamer."

"How coldly you betray your anxiety to have me gone!" he said; "it is really cruel."

"I have no idea that you will go," she returned; "you will spend the money—you will demand more—my husband will discover it. But at least I shall have the satisfaction of knowing that there is no place secret enough, no land distant enough to guard your life safely after that."

He only received her passionate words with a shrug of the shoulders and a deprecatory wave of the hand.

"But it is so sad to go into exile alone," he said; "if I could take with me—"

"Oh! you are such a base, miserable coward!" she broke in. "Such a pitiful, dastardly wretch! Don't frown at me—I have never been afraid to speak my mind—I am not now! I tell you to my horror of retribution will come—beware!"

His face never changed, he made her a grave bow and said pleasantly:

"You are inclined to do the prophetess this morning—but don't be such a fearful Cassandra, I beg."

She rose from her chair and folded her shawl about her.

"I need stay here no longer," she said, "I have told you what I came to say."

"Don't be so cruel as to run away so soon," he pleaded; "give my poor room the glory of your presence a little longer."

"I shall be here on Monday," she continued; "I shall have the money ready for you, but I will not bring it—this time those letters must be first placed in my hands."

"Ah! you are going to drive a hard bargain, I see."

"You have evaded so often, cheated me so often; I have given you thousands of dollars—this is the third time you have come to me unexpectedly for years if you are careful; but the letters come into my possession first, and that paper too."

"You really mean to have your freedom, do you not?" he asked, jestingly; "to sweep me out of your life for ever."

"Don't think to cheat me any more; neither your forged letters nor your pretences will answer here. I tell you I am desperate now—you can't force me down a step farther."

"You are a magnificent woman!" he exclaimed; "a wonderful woman! I don't believe the country could boast another such."

She turned away.

"Now you are angry. But let it pass."

"Remember what I have said," retorted Elizabeth. "I tell you I am desperate now! At least I shall have placed it out of your power to injure any one but me. I have reached that point when I have forged treason, your persecutions or drag the ruin down on my own head while crushing you."

She was in terrible earnest—he was a sufficient judge of character to see that. It was in her nature to grow so utterly desperate that, whatever her fate might prove, she would find the means—to shriek in her husband's ears, and madly prefer meeting the crisis of her fate in all its black woes and horror, to enduring any longer the slavery and suspense in which she had lived.

"There will be no need of all this," he said. "Place in my hands the sum you have promised and I will at once put it out of my own power to harm you or yours. After all," he continued, with another sneering laugh, "I am selling my claim much too cheaply—twenty-five thousand dollars is a pitiful little sum."

"You can get no more—you cannot frighten me! If you hesitate another day you would ruin your hopes of a single penny. I tell you my husband would not buy your silence. I know him—he might pay for the life of a dog, but would never pay gold to bind your tongue."

"Dear friend, I prefer transacting this little business with you, myself, laughing again. "We shall not quarrel; for your sake I will contest myself with the twenty-five thousand dollars, but I warn you, I shall put it out of my own power."

"I tell you it will be ready on that day."

"The letters and that troublesome little document shall be placed in your hands—I promise solemnly."

"There is nothing you could swear by that would make the oath worth hearing," she interrupted contemptuously.

He bowed as if she had paid him a compliment. He was so utterly hardened that even her burning words were of little avail.

"Don't write to me, don't send to me," she said; "it will only be dangerous—more so for you than for me—remember that."

"I can trust you; I have the utmost faith in your word."

She gathered her shawl about her again and moved towards the door.

"Are you going already?"

"Quite long enough," she said, with a sudden thought. "You parted with it of course—could you get it back?"

He shrugged his shoulders.

"I received your note concerning it; we will see—very doubtful I fear. But when I am once gone—even if your husband does discover it—there will be no trouble."

She turned her back on him. He started forward to open the door for her, but hand touched here on the latch before he was aware, as if a scorpion had sting her, but he only cast a smile in her face and allowed her to pass out.

"A wonderful woman!" he said to himself, after she had disappeared. "What a pity she hates me so; the only woman in the world worth having at your feet."

He went to the table, searched among the bottles till he found one that still contained liquor, poured the contents into a glass and drank with feverish eagerness.

"That'll put a little life in me," he muttered. "Well, there is nothing for it but to wait. I must keep myself very quiet. I think I'll have some breakfast—at any rate I can afford to leave this den."

He pulled out a pocket-book with a laugh, glanced at the contents and put it away.

"It will do," he muttered, "it will do."

He threw off his dressing-gown, bathed his face in cold water, tidied his dress a little and went down stairs in search of his morning meal.

Elizabeth Mellen hurried through the narrow street in which the hotel stood, as if trying to walk herself into calmness. Once she murmured:

"Five days more—five! If I can live through them and keep the tempest back I may be safe. If I can! Such a dread at my heart—worse as the time shortens—if discovery should come now with the haven is so near!"

Then she walked more rapidly on, but with all her desperate exertions she could not escape the terrible thoughts which pursued her like avenging fiends hungry for their prey.

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE weeks had glided along. It was now late autumn; the gorgeous leaves lay strewn along the ground, and the wind sighed up from the ocean chill and bleak, scattering thoughts of decay with each gust. With that gathering desolation, the coldness and the shadows had crept deeper and deeper into Grantley Mellen's life.

He had accompanied Elizabeth to the city, one of those chilly autumn days, and put her into a carriage at the ferry, that she might attend to the purchases and calls which made her ostensible errand to town, while he went about the business on hand, with the understanding that they were to meet in time for the afternoon boat.

Elsie had chosen to pass the day at home; indeed, she and Elizabeth were never together now when the girl could possibly avoid it—she seemed determined to keep aloof from the mystery of the unhappy woman's life, lest its gloominess should cast some shadow over the brightness of her own path!

While Elizabeth was absent on her mysterious visit Mellen occupied himself with a matter which, had she been aware of it, would have added another trouble to the anxiety of that bitter day. From the first he had determined that the disappearance of the bracelet should be in some way explained, if it lay in human power to discover the mystery. What his precise motive was he could hardly have told. The trinket might have been picked up by some shipboard boy who pandered into the grounds; if so there was little hope of ever gaining any tidings concerning it, but Mellen could not satisfy himself that such was the case.

There was some mystery in Elizabeth's life—of that his keen suspicion he could not divest himself. Twenty times each day he went over in his mind every event that had occurred since his return, from the moment when he came upon her wandering so wildly about in the stormy night.

Twenty times each day he convinced himself that there was nothing in the whole catalogue to awaken the slightest doubt in any mind except one so given to self-torture and jealousy as his; yet, against as he would, bring conviction as closely home to his soul as he might, the doubts rose up again and haunted like ghosts that could no power to appease. It pleased always towards trouble and blackness which lay beyond.

If the bracelet had been given to any needy person for any reason, it would undoubtedly find its way to the hands of some pawnbroker—that was his thought. He approached himself for indulging it—he called himself unworthy the love of any woman when he could harbor such suspicions, but they would not pass out of his mind—each theory which had wrecked his youth had sown the seeds of suspicion too deeply in his soul to be easily eradicated.

Then he compounded with his conscience, and decided that it was right he should take every step possible to solve those doubts, if only to prove the innocence of his wife. He kept repeating to himself that this was the reason which urged him on. "I want to be convinced," he said to himself again and again, "of my own injustice—for a right I should endure the self-abasement as a punishment for this constant doubt."

Soluing his self-reproaches a little by such arguments and reflections, he had gone to work to see if any discoveries could be made which should clear up the matter.

Among other efforts, he had confided to a leading pawnbroker the details of the affair, and it was in him that he had most principally put his trust. The jeweler was not brought to this man's shop he had means of discovering if it was carried elsewhere.

That day Mr. Grantley Mellen went from him, a bracelet similar to the one he had described was in the possession of an old Jew in Chatham street, and they went together to the place.

The old Israelite was dreadfully afraid of getting himself into difficulty in some way, but Mr. Mellen's well satisfied air here in regard to the bracelet assured him that the gentleman would reward him liberally for any disclosures that he might make.

Then it came out that the bracelet had been disposed for a considerable sum—it was a sale rather than a deposit. The man who brought it there had several times had dealings at the shop—sometimes he would display plenty of money the old Jew averred, and again he was very poor, and in such cases always pledged valuable ornaments or sold them recklessly for whatever would satisfy the needs of the moment.

Mr. Mellen grew more interested when he described the man's appearance; the keen eyes of the money-lender and the sharp sight of the old Jew, accustomed to reading countenances under many forms, while a singular expression of uncertainty rested upon it.

He walked several times up and down the little back den where the aged Israelite kept his watch, like a bloated spider ready to pounce upon any unwary fly that came within his reach, and at last returned to the place where the two men were standing.

"Have you any of that man's writing?" he asked. "Just a scrap—I don't ask to see his name—any few words in his writing."

The old Jew looked doubtful.

"Sometimes he has write me, my good sare, but not often, he ish very careful—very careful."

"And have you none by you?"

The old Jew turned to a great desk that filled up one end of the dark room, unlocked a variety of doors and drawers, turned over piles of dirty notes, and at last selected a scrap of paper from among them.

"Dis is his writin'," he said, in his guttural whisper. "I'm taking great trouble, great trouble," he whined; "the good gentleman ought to remember that."

"You shall be well rewarded," said Mr. Mellet impatiently, snatching the paper from his hand.

He glanced at the writing—the paleness of his face grew deathlike—he stood like a statue, with his eyes riveted upon the page, while the two men regarded him in silence.

The writing was so peculiar that a person at all familiar with it could never have been mistaken—an individuality so marked and so increased by practice, that one who had seen a page of the delicate characters could have sworn to the writing among whole volumes.

After a time Mr. Mellen looked up—the astonishment in their faces brought him to himself.

"That is what I wanted," he said.

"I hopes it ish all right," urged the Jew. "De good gentleman is satisfied with me!"

"Perfectly, perfectly! Now I want the bracelet! How much did you receive on it?"

The old Jew's face changed at once.

"And I won't get my reward?" he faltered. "You will sheat a poor man's out of his earnings."

"Who talks of cheating you," said Mr. Hollywell.

"I am ready to pay you," pursued Mr. Mellen; "I would rather pay double the price of the bracelet than not get it."

Mr. Hollywell made a sign of caution; such words would increase the old rascal's cupidity to a height money could hardly satisfy, but they were interrupted by a groan from the Jew.

"And is gone!" cried he; "and so leetle paid—so leetle paid. The good gentleman would have given more."

"Gone!" echoed Mr. Mellen.

"Why didn't you say so?" asked Mr. Hollywell angrily. "It was only yesterday you told me you had it."

"Yes, yes, I knows, and so I had."

"Where is it, then?"

"The man come for it—he has brought his ticket, paid his money and took the bracelet; I was out—my boy did let him have it! Oh, my reward—my reward!"

"Shut your foolish old mouth!" exclaimed Mr. Hollywell.

The old Jew sank into a chair, still groaning and lamenting, while the money-lender turned to Mr. Mellen.

"What will you do now, sir?" he asked.

"Nothing—nothing."

He looked so despondent now, though the fierce anger that had blazed in his face at the first sight of the writing lighted it up still.

"I am perfectly satisfied," he continued. "I am much obliged to you for your trouble."

"I am sorry," Mr. Hollywell began, but he checked him.

"It is just as well—don't be troubled."

He took up his pocket-book, laid down a bank note whose value made the old Jew's eyes sparkle with avidity, and hurried out of the dark little shop.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

ALL the next day the house at Piney Cove was in confusion with guests, and the husband and wife were not once left alone.

Mrs. Harrington had come up to spend the day, and go out with them in the evening, and Tom Fuller was to post as usual, though he appeared with a very blank face indeed.

"You look more like Don Quixote than ever," was Elsie's salutation, as he entered the room, where she sat with Elizabeth and their guest.

"How do you do, Mr. Fuller?" cried the widow. "I wonder you have any patience at all with that little witch; she teases you constantly; I am sure you must be amiability itself."

"She won't have the chance for some time to come, more's the pity," returned Tom, disconsolately.

"And why not, pray?" demanded Elsie.

"Because I've got to go Pittsburg, and flounder about in coal mines, and the Lord knows what all."

"Have you business there?" asked Elizabeth.

"Yes, to be sure! Bless me, I was better off when I had no property. I could do as I pleased then, and didn't have to go about breaking my neck in pits, and bothering over all sorts of business that I understand no more than the man in the moon."

"Poor, unfortunate victim!" mocked Elsie.

"The penalty of riches," sighed Mrs. Harrington. "It is the fault of the good they bring to yourself and all about you, Mr. Fuller."

"Yes, I know," returned he. "I'm an ungrateful brute; I ought to say instead I need to bow my head punched twenty times a day, there's no doubt of that."

They laughed at his energy; even Elizabeth tried to come out of her miserably anxious thoughts, and combine her wandering faculties to the conversation.

"When are you going, Tom?" she asked.

"Oh, to-morrow?"

"He speaks as if it was the Day of Judgment," said Elsie.

"And I may be gone a whole week or more," pursued he.

"A small eternity," cried Elsie. "Dear me, dear me, how we all pity you."

"I don't believe you care a straw," said Tom, dismally; "you won't miss me a bit."

"He wants to be flattered," cried Elsie.

"I am sure you will be missed, dear Mr. Fuller," said the widow; "you wrong your friends by a suspicion to the contrary."

"I hope so, I'm sure," returned Tom, glancing at Elsie; but she was in one of her mischievous moods, and would not give him a gleam of consolation.

"Don't spoil him, Mary Harrington," said she; "the creature's vanity is becoming inordinate already; isn't it, Bessie?"

"You can ill-treat him sufficiently without my assistance," said she, smiling; "I shall not help you."

"That is right, Bess," cried Tom; "stand by a fellow a little, do; she hasn't a spark of pity."

"Take care, sir!" said Elsie, lifting her embroidery scissors. "Don't try to win my natural allies over to your side by an underhand persuasion."

"I am sure you don't need allies or assistance of any sort to be more than a match for a dozen men," said Tom.

"Another of my womanly prerogatives," replied Elsie.

"Well," said Tom, "there seems to be no end to them."

Everybody laughed at his tone, and he sat down next Elsie, pushing such a face for, and making signs to her to go out of the room, so that he might secure a few moments alone with her, but the little witch pretended not to understand his signals in the least.

"You ruin my work!" cried she. "What on earth are you making such faces for, and winking and blinking like an owl in the sun?"

Tom began to get red and confused, and laughed in a distressed way.

"Dazzled by your presence, Elsie," cried the widow, seeing that Tom had not presence of mind enough for the occasion.

Elizabeth began to get restless again; it was perfectly impossible for her to keep quiet any length of time that day, and she made some excuse for leaving them.

"Let me go with you," said Mrs. Harrington; "I like to get a peep at your kitchen; it is a perfect Flemish picture."

"Particularly the crowd of dusky faces," said Elsie; "you're a humbug, Mary Harrington."

"I am sure she is quite right," said Tom, anxious to insure her departure; "I was in the kitchen one day and it looked quite picturesque."

Elsie perfectly understood the motive which led him to speak, and she hastened to rejoin:

"If you think it so pretty you had better accompany them, and get sketching, eh?"

"No," said Tom; "I might disturb the colored persons; I'll stay where I am."

"Brave man," cried Elsie; "what consideration! You will be bursting into unpremeditated poetry about the dark future before we know it."

"Oh, Elsie," said Mrs. Harrington, "what a provoking creature you are!"

She followed Elizabeth out of the room, and Tom took a seat next to Mrs. Bell.

"Are you sorry I am going?" he asked.

"Do I look so?" she asked.

"No, you don't."

"Well, looks can't tell fibs," said she, provokingly.

"Elsie, be good to me now; just think; I shall be gone a whole week!" he cried.

"It's a calamity I dare not contemplate," replied she. "No, whatever you do, don't break your neck in those horrid coal mines, or come back smelling of brimstone like a theatrical fiend."

"I believe you would jest during an earthquake."

"If it would attract attention I might," she answered. "There, there, don't be cross, old Tom."

She threw down her work, and with one of her quick changes of manner petted him back to serenity.

"If you would only let me do one thing before I go," he said, getting courage enough from her caresses to propose an idea that had been in his mind ever since he arrived.

"What is it, Monsieur Enigeaud?"

"Just let me tell Grant of our—our—"

"Our what, stammerer?"

"Of the happiness you have promised me," said Tom, changing the original word from fear of vexing her.

"You were going to say engagement; don't deny it."

"And aren't we engaged?" he pleaded.

"Not a bit of it, Mr. Tom Fuller; I am just as free as air; please to remember that."

"Oh, Elsie!"

"And Elsie oh!" cried she. "But it's true! You said all sorts of foolish things about love, and I let you talk, but what right have to say we are engaged?"

She made Tom so nervous that he could not sit still.

"Oh, Elsie, Elsie, how can you?" he pleaded.

"Now, aren't you deliciously miserable," said Elsie; "that is the way I like to see you; it's you all over, sir."

"I wouldn't think you could be so cruel at such a time."

"You wouldn't you? And pray what right have you to think at all; no man has a right; that's another female privilege."

"There are worse than the Women's Rights people," said he.

"Now you are calling me names," cried Elsie, indignantly. "I won't stay with you another moment."

She half rose, but Tom caught her dress.

"Oh, don't go, don't!"

"Go on your knees then, and beg my pardon," said Elsie.

"No," said Tom, "I'll do no such thing."

"Ah, do now, just to please silly little me."

Down went Tom in dumb obedience. After enjoying his distress and penitence for a few moments, Elsie suddenly threw both her arms about his neck, and whispered:

"I am very sorry you are going. I do love you, Tom!"

He strained her to his heart with a burst of grateful delight.

"And may I tell Grant?" he pleaded.

"Not yet," she said; "wait till you come back; not a word till then."

"But as soon as I come?"

"Yes; if you are good. But not a look till I say the word."

She tried to escape from him, but he would not let her go until he had extorted one other pledge.

"You must write to me," he said.

"Now, Tom, I hate to write letters! I never write even to Grant, when I can possibly help it."

"But just a few words—"

"If you will get up and behave yourself properly, perhaps yes."

"Every day?"

"Oh, worse and worse! Tom, get up. Hear Mary Harrington's voice; she's the most inveterate gossip."

"Promise then!"

"Yes—yes—anything; oh, get away!"

She struggled from him, and Tom had just time to resume his seat and look as decorously grave as perfect happiness could permit when the door opened, and Mrs. Harrington entered, with her usual flutter, crying:

"Elsie, Elsie! Mr. Rhodes and the fascinating Jemima are driving up the avenue; the old maid is rushing to destruction again without the slightest warning."

"It's delightful!" said Elsie. "I shall tell her how rich Tom Fuller is, and that he wants a wife."

"Don't set the old dragon at me," said Tom.

"Yes, I will! Mary, you must flirt desperately with the old maid; between her desire to watch you and be agreeable to Tom, the spinster will be driven to the verge of distraction."

"I'll go and help Elizabeth," said the widow, "and appear after the old maid gets nicely settled."

She darted away through the hall, and just made her escape as Dolph opened the halldoor to admit the guests.

Mrs. Fuller and daughter were ushered into the room where Elsie and Tom sat, looking demure as two kittens.

"Here we are again, you see," said the stout man; "no one can resist your fascinations, Miss Elsie."

"Pa would stop," said Miss Jemima, "though I told him it was a shame to come so often."

The truth was the spinster's appetite had waxed fierce at the sight of his wife's table, especially as while Mr. Rhodes talked to him he gave Elsie whisper to Miss Jemima, and felt perfectly certain that she had given the thestered information about his being a rich bachelor in search of a wife.

"And when did you see your charming friend, Mrs. Harrington, last?" asked Mr. Rhodes.

"The oddest thing!" said Elsie. "Why, she is not here; hadn't you a suspicion of it, Mr. Rhodes?"

Miss Jemima's face changed so suddenly that it made a great effort to keep from laughing outright.

"Oh, Mr. Rhodes," continued Elsie; "I am afraid the attractions of this house are only borrowed ones."

The good man was in a state of blushing and confusion at once, but the spinster brought him out of it without mercy.

"If there's company we won't stay, pa," said she.

But Elsie would not permit her to go; she whispered again about Tom, and between her desire to stop long enough to fascinate him and her fear of exciting her father to the wiles of the artful widow, Jemima was in a terrible perplexity.

In the midst of it Elizabeth entered, and welcomed her elderly visitors; Mellen followed; and after a few moments in swept the widow, who swooped down on the unfortunate Mr. Rhodes in spite of his dragon, as a well-practised hawk pounces on a plump chicken.

"Ah, Mr. Rhodes, this is such a surprise," she cried, fluttering about him with a simper on her face which of late years had done the duty of a blush.

"I dare say a great surprise," snapped in Jemima, sliding up to her father.

This was great sport to Elsie and Mrs. Harrington. Tom would have enjoyed it more if the spinster had not beset him as much as her dire of attention would permit, and Elizabeth and Mellen bore the infliction patiently, as people must endure all things that come to an issue in their own time.

While they were all luncheon-table Elizabeth's dog ran into the room with a paper in its mouth. It was the most intelligent little creature in the world, a cross between a black and tan terrier and an Italian greyhound, and had been educated to carry in a surprising manner.

This pretty creature, which seemed almost human in her intelligence, ran towards her mistress, but another dog followed, a new pet of Elsie's, a frolicsome, wicked animal that had quite worried poor Fanny's life out ever since her intrusion in the house.

Piccolomini sprang at the paper in Fan's mouth, and a contention ensued between them which attracted general attention.

"Fanny's got a paper," cried Elsie, pointing towards her pets.

"It may be a letter," said Mellen; "Dolph often sends them in by her; call off, Pick, Elsie; she'll tear it!"

But Pick would not be called off, and Fanny refused to relinquish her hold; between them the paper was rapidly destroyed, Fanny howling dismally all the time at not being able to fulfil her errand in her usual trusty manner.

Mellen was towards them; as he did so Fanny sprang towards Elizabeth; she stooped, caught sight of the paper, and grew pale. She fairly thrust Mellen aside, and snatched the paper from the animal's mouth.

"It's only an old bill I dropped," she said, shrinking in hurriedly in her pocket.

The rest were too much occupied to pay much attention, but Mellen saw how pale his wife had turned; he noticed her alarm; he remembered, too, seeing Fanny running about the shrubbery just before he came in.

Here was another phase of the mystery, he was certain of that; the little creature was carrying a note to his wife. He seated himself at the table again, and appeared to forget the circumstance, but Elizabeth hardly looked like herself during the entire meal.

It was late before the visitors departed, then other callers made their appearance, and after that Tom Fuller was compelled to take his leave, a heartrending performance as far as he was concerned; and a day drew to a close, leaving the husband and wife each more preoccupied and anxious than the dreary morning had found them.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE Germans had abandoned the siege of Fredericia. The town was evacuated by the Danes in front of the town. A portion of the city was set on fire during the bombardment. The allied commander then demanded a surrender, but the Danes refused. Duppel was cannonaded at intervals.

Austria and Prussia, it is said, have consented to a conference on the Danish question. The German Diet was in favor of a European Congress. It was reported that the Conference would soon assemble.

The Polish insurgents were very active. Russian troops were engaged in barricading the railroad between Wilna and the Prussian frontier.

It is said that the Russian Cabinet accuses Napoleon of encouraging trouble in Germany, Turkey, and that the feeling towards the court of France was very cool in consequence.

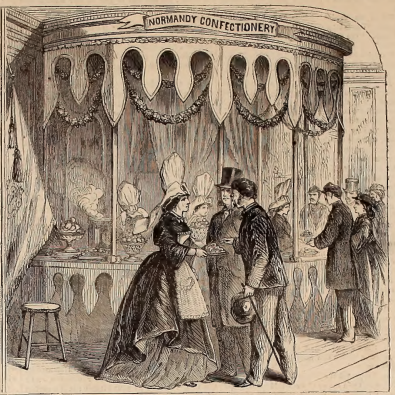
Maximilian was to assume the title of Emperor of Mexico on Easter Sunday, and set out for the capital of the empire early in April. He will open diplomatic relations with the United States, and observe a strict neutrality between the North and South.

Woll was appointed chief aide-de-camp to the new Emperor. The French steam frigate Dryade left Cherbourg for Vera Cruz, having on board about 200 Mexicans, recently prisoners of war in France, who have been liberated after having given their submission to the new government. The amount and terms of a loan for Maximilian was negotiated in financial circles in London and Paris.

The health of the Pope had improved. Garibaldi had sailed from Caprera for England. He was to receive a brilliant reception in London.

Spain was showing sympathy towards a revolution.

The National Government of Poland had prepared an appeal to the nations of Europe.

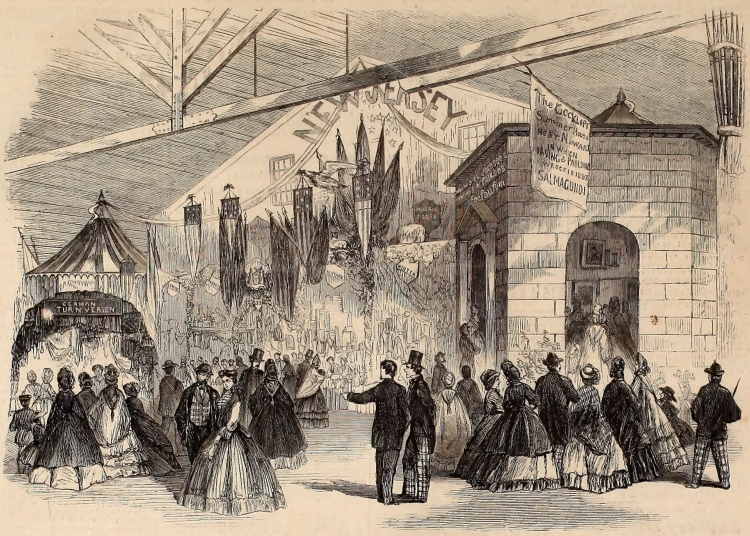


The Emperor Napoleon said that the Archduke Maximilian, "in going to a country that is 'one lump of silver,'" and their eyes mutually glistened and they parted.

CHARLES THE BOLD.

CHARLES'S marriage with Isabella of Bourbon took place in 1454. Though a reluctant bridegroom, he became strongly attached to his wife; and the amount of her dowry did not quite be found about seven years, was such as gave no cause for complaint. In a few years' age, and at a court where the sovereign himself set an example of gorgeous extravagance, the Count of Charolais (Charles's youthful title) penetrated what was certainly a rare, if not the only instance of marital fidelity. His faults, indeed, were not such as to give an inordinate love of pleasure. He ate sparingly, and of the simplest, and seldom tasted wine unless diluted with a much larger proportion of water. He was fond of sport. In luxury and in indulgence," says the chronicler, "but in labor and endurance!" In hardened himself by constant exposure and exercise. At excellent sportsman, in archery and in throwing the bar. He was seldom absent when the chase was proclaimed in the forest of Soignies, and delighted especially in the dangerous pastime of hunting the wild boar. But on the coast of Holland, which he often visited, he found still stronger excitement in the pursuit in which a large a number of the inhabitants were engaged, frequenting the shore with their horses and watching and making himself practically acquainted with the art of seamanship in its minutest details. In these early intercourses of society his manners were courteous and affable, and he won their hearts by those personal qualities of a princely life, but he had little relish for the ceremonies and excesses of his father's court. He shared, however, in its more graceful recreations. He was a good dancer, and wanted to be the most skilful chess player of his time. For music he had a strong partiality, cultivating the science so far as to could be said to exist, and composing motets, chansons, and other pieces of music.

Though somewhat below the common height, Charles had a powerful frame. His shoulders are broad and full, his limbs muscular and firmly knit. He was remarkable for agility, and was never so at his best than when in it. "I never heard him complain of weariness," says Philippe de Comines, "nor ever saw in him a sign of fear." In countenance he bore a close resemblance to his father. Full, red cheeks being the only distinctive feature which they had in common. His face was somewhat round; his complexion a transparent olive, tinted with a ruddy glow. A wavy mass of thick, black hair overhung his forehead, and flowed around his neck. In walking, his looks were habitually directed towards the ground; but his eyes were "sagacious clear," their glance equally penetrating, and in moments of excitement terrible. The tones of his voice were agreeable and distinct. He was gifted with a natural eloquence, sometimes impeded at the outset by the ardor of his temperament, but becoming, as he proceeded, not less logical than vehement.



THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR—SCENES IN THE REFECTORY—THE ARMY AND NAVY SWORDS CONTEST—JACOB'S WELL—THE HAIRY EAGLE.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR—VIEW SHOWING THE NEW JERSEY DEPARTMENT—THE IRVING SUMMERHOUSE AND THE TURNVEREIN TABLE.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR—THE DEPARTMENT OF ARMS AND TROPHIES.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A VERY talkative little girl used often to annoy her mother by making remarks about the visitors that came to the house. On one occasion a gentleman was expected whose nose had been accidentally tattooed nearly to his face. The mother cautioned her child particularly to say nothing about this feature. Imagine her consternation when the little one exclaimed, "Ma, you told me not to say anything about Mr. Smith's nose; why, he hasn't got any!"

"I HOPE you will be able to support me," said a young lady, while walking out one day with her intended, during a slippery state of the pavement.

"Why—ay—yes," said the somewhat bewildered swain, "with some little assistance from your father!"

There was some confusion and a profound silence when the conversation had ended.

THE OLD MAID'S LAMENT.

Oh! tit, tit, pussi where's she gone?
My grief is deep and bitter;
I cannot smile! I am too lone,
Without my tit, to titter.

Oh, could I but my cat behold!
My heart is wildly beatin'—
Oh, could I but my kitty hold!
To think she may be (k)eaten!

Oh, yes, I see her killed and baked,
In my imagination;
The thought of what will be her lot
Gives me cold puss-pic-ration.

Ah, ne'er again, 'tis very plain,
Shall I with rapture eye her;
Ah, no, she's thrust into a crust,
Upon her funeral pie-re.

WOMAN'S substitute for fat—Crino-lean.

THE beautiful tresses of young ladies are bean-dings.

"Finigan's Wake."—"Why I Loved Her." "My Sweetheart's Sanctified." "Kind Friends own Near Her." Piano. Excelsior Music-Book, for Violin, Flute or Cornet, only 35 cts. MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of every description; price list mailed on receipt of stamp. FREDRICK BLUME, 208 Bowery, New York.

A TREATISE ON MILITARY SURVEYING
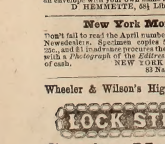
THEORETICAL AND PRACTICAL,
INCLUDING
A Description of Surveying Instruments,
BY G. H. MENDELL, Capt. of Engineers.
1 vol. 12mo., cloth. Price $2.
This day published by
D. VAN NOSTRAND, 192 Broadway.

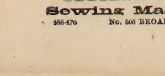
Artillery Badges.



Annexed is a fac simile design of our Newest Style ARTILLERY BADGE Sent free to any address on receipt of price, with Name, Co., and Regiment handsomely Engraved thereon.
Solid Silver (without bullets) $1 50.
Solid Silver, letters in Gold Relief (without bullets) $2.
Solid Gold (without bullets) $5.
Batties, 20 cents each extra.
Also New and Elegant CAVALRY BADGE, and every style Co. Pins and Corps Badges worn by the Army.
Our Illustrated Catalogue sent free. Address
C. L. BALCH & CO.,
308 BROADWAY, N. Y.

8 Card Photographs Only $1.—All different. Sent free by mail. Address J. H. POUNTAIN, "Photo.," Hawley, Pa. 455-7

Carriages.
The subscriber has now on hand a SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF CARRIAGES of all descriptions, warranted first both as to style, material and first-class workmanship, which he offers on reasonable terms. C. WITTY, 180 Broadway and 66 Crosby Street, N. Y. 444-8



LACE CURTAINS

New Styles,
Swiss Lace,
Nottingham Lace,
Lenox Lace,
Muslin,
Brocatel,
Plain,
Terry Cloth,
Jacquard Cloth,
Damask,
Cornices,
And all other Furnishings.
G. L. & J. B. KELTY, No. 359 Broadway, New York.

WINDOW SHADES

Gold, Opaque, White, Buff, Green and Blue Holland, Boy's Paper Fixtures, and all other approved styles.
G. L. & J. B. KELTY, No 359 Broadway.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Samples and Catalogues sent for 25 cents. Excuse on envelope with your own name and address.
D' HEMMETTE, 684 Liberty street, N. Y.

New York Monthly.
Don't fail to read the April number. For sale by the Newsdealers. Specimen copies 3 cents. Somewhat 20c. and $1 inadvance procures the paper for one year, with a Photograph of the Editress. Sent on receipt of cash. NEW YORK MONTHLY
83 Nassau street, N. Y.

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

LOCK STITCH
Sewing Machines
No. 505 BROADWAY, N. Y.

FURNITURE,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),
No. 87 Bowery, New York.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.
They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash.
Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE,
in Sets, from $22 to $100.

TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each.
Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

25 Cent Legal Tender Circular.

$15 A DAY AND A WATCH FREE!

Reader, delay not; send at once for our New Free Circular, and whether you want to work or not we will return to you the postage on your letter or its equivalent as we want every person to have a Circular. It astonishes everybody; defies competition, and enterprise competitors.
1,000 Agents wanted. Samples 50 cts. Address
WEIR & Co., 505 Cheapst St., Phila.

$75 A MONTH—I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Knitting Machine.
829-31 S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

The Great Money-Making Article.
Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
900 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!
100,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.
WORTH $500,000,
To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 26 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and prices, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.
Six Certificates delivered for $1; fourteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $12.
Address C. F. SHULTZ,
385 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

Fountain Pen.—No inkstand required. One filling will write 12 hours. Also, all other styles of Gold Pens. Send stamp for Circular.
G. F. HAWKES, Sole Manufacturer,
945-57 64 Nassau street, N. Y.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps and Lanterns, gives a brilliant light, free from smoke or smell, and needs no chimney. We are now prepared to supply the increasing demand for this superior Burner, which everywhere gives the greatest satisfaction. Sample sent, postpaid, for 25 cents.
Agents wanted. Send for Circular, and terms.
SAVAGE & CO.'S NO CHIMNEY BURNER for Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene Oil with a brilliant light, without chimney, smoke or smell. Saves 25 per cent. Office, 202 FULTON STREET, N. Y. Agents wanted. Send for Circular. Sample sent by mail, for 25 cents. Manufacturers Institute awarded First Premium and Medal, 1863.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS
THE SEASON OF EXHAUSTION.—Worn down by the heat of the summer months, the system now requires recruiting. The stomach is always weaker at this season than at any other, and it is upon that organ that the whole body mainly depends for its strength to resist disease. Unfortunately, at the very period of the year when the frame possesses least resisting power, the causes of sickness are most active. The exhalations from the soil are more deleterious toward the close of summer and in the fall than at any other season. Now, therefore, is the time to put the constitution under the protection of some fortifying order! Strengthen them with a courses of HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS, and unhealthy influences will lay siege to them in vain. This incomparable Tonic and Alterative does not create a mere spirit of appetite, but a steady, healthful, regular relish for food, and what is of equal importance, it communicates a degree of permanent vigor to the stomach which enables it to digest, without pain or inconvenience, the increased amount of sustenance which the restored appetite demands. For Dyspepsia there has never been such a medicine. It is not more certain that night will follow morning and evening noon, than that HOSTETTER'S BITTERS will cure any case of Dyspepsia.
Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.
Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,
PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, Pittsburg, Pa.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 676 BROADWAY.

DISTILLED DEW
For Beautifying and Improving the Skin and Complexion. Sold by Druggists generally.

PUBLISHED THIS DAY.
Brady's "Mercury" Stories.
SEA DRIFT;
OR,
The Wreckers of the Channel.
BY MALCOLM J. ERRYN.
ILLUMINATED COVERS—ILLUSTRATED.
Price 25 Cents.
Mailed free of postage on receipt of price.
Dealers are requested to send their orders direct to the Publisher of "The Mercury" Stories, to insure prompt[illegible] in the filling of their orders.
FREDERIC A. BRADY, Publisher,
No. 2 Ann Street, N. Y.

5,000 AGENTS WANTED
TO INTRODUCE OUR
NEW GOLD PEN.
This Gold Pen is something entirely new and is now offered to the public for the first time, and it is made by an entirely new process, enabling us to offer them very cheap. Every Pen is WARRANTED one year, and to be genuine Diamond pointed, and to possess all the elasticity and writing qualities of the highest price gold pen made. Single Pens sent by mail, on receipt of the following prices:
WITHOUT HOLDERS.
No. 2. Medium Pen.....each 90
No. 3. Large " 80
No. 4. Engrossing " 60
With Silver Mounted Ebony Holders and Morocco Case.
No. 2 Medium Pen and Holder..... 90
No. 3 Large Pen and Holder..... 1 00
No. 4 Engrossing Pen and Holder..... 1 25
Great inducements to Agents and the Trade. Send for our Circular.
GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
Sole Manufacturers,
181 Broadway, N. Y.

Whiskers! Whiskers!
MY CONGUENT will force them to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Price 25 cents, or six packages for $1, by mail. Address
M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!
Gold Watches, Chains, Jewelry, &c.
Valued at $300,000!
Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	EACH
156 Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
300 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	$35
500 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	$25
2500 Vest and Neck Chains	$5 00 to $10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 8 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Jet and Pearl Brooches	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Gents' Breast Pins	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 3 00
3000 Fob and Watch Slides	2 00 to 3 00
3500 Sets of Bosom Studs	2 50 to 5 00
3500 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 5 00
5000 Plain Rings	2 50 to 5 00
5000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 5 00
5000 Lockets	2 50 to 5 00
10000 Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mxed Holders	4 00 to 5 00
5000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	6 00 to 8 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the newest and most fashionable styles. Certificates of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail for 25 cents each; and on receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to send One Dollar, and have the article named in it, or not. Five Certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred $15; Certificate money to be enclosed with order (correspondence promptly answered).
AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them 25 per cent. Certificates, postage paid, on their remittance amounts to $1, and more liberal inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address
W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental art, virement all can possess, securing certain success in Love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cts., together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book—only of gratification. Third edition; over 10,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All who marry should know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by F WM. RAU, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed free of postage on receipt of 25 cents. Address 68 White Street, N. New York.

Ten years in the Business.
Patrons counted by thousands in every State of the Union.
A Premium for all!
Evans' New Enterprise, 1864, $500,000 worth of New Goods,
consisting of
Gold and Silver Watches, Jewelry, Vest and Guard Chains, Gold Pens, Pencils, Lockets, Medallions, Sets of Jewelry, &c., &c., together with a large line of goods especially adapted to the wants of our Soldiers, Army and Navy, to be sold in lots at One Dollar Each, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive. Premium Orders for above goods, sent to any address, on receipt of 10 cents.
Send your order to
G. G. EVANS, Publisher,
630 Chestnut Street,
Philadelphia, Pa.
N. B. A classified Catalogue, of Books with Price Lists of Photograph Card Pictures and Albums, sent on receipt of 5 cents.
Address,
G. G. EVANS,
Philadelphia, Pa.

A New Book.
Physiology of Love. Cloth; gilt edges. Sent by mail on receipt of price—$1.
000 VICTOR DELAPO, 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office
FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.
Merchants, Bankers, Tradesmen
Amateurs, etc., etc.,
And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular
J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office), offer for sale the following Magnificent List of
WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.
Valued at $300,000!
Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	EACH
156 Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
300 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	$35
500 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	$25
2500 Vest and Neck Chains	$5 00 to $10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 8 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Jet and Pearl Brooches	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Gents' Breast Pins	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 3 00
3000 Fob and Watch Slides	2 00 to 3 00
3500 Sets of Bosom Studs	2 50 to 5 00
3500 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 5 00
5000 Plain Rings	2 50 to 5 00
5000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 5 00
5000 Lockets	2 50 to 5 00
10000 Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mxed Holders	4 00 to 5 00
5000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	6 00 to 8 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the newest and most fashionable styles. Certificates of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail for 25 cents each; and on receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to send One Dollar, and have the article named in it, or not. Five Certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred $15; Certificate money to be enclosed with order (correspondence promptly answered).
AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them 25 per cent. Certificates, postage paid, on their remittance amounts to $1, and more liberal inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address
W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

VETERAN

Soldiers!

We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Flag for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field at $1 50 each; also, all the various Army Badges worn by the different armies, at the single one, 100 or 1,000. Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE, Manufacturing Jewellers,
208 Broadway, N. Y.
Solid 18 k. Gold, $6 50. Solid Silver, $1 50.

Stereoscopic Views, Cartes de Visites—Now Ready. Send for Catalogue. C. B. HARRISON, P. O. Box 2,111, Boston, Mass. 445-13

The Old Established and only reliable Fluctuating Agency doing business since 1849. Parties desiring agencies they are advertised or any information, can obtain it by enclosing a 3c. stamp for Circular to HENRY BEPHENS, 93 Nassau St., N. Y. 445-8

K. W. BENICZKY,
At his well-known
PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY,
No. 3 New Chambers Street,
Has now increased facilities to take Cartes de Visite as well as other Photographs, in the best style. Notwithstanding the increase in price of different materials, the charge for the same and its quality the best.

Card Pictures $1 50 per doz.—8 for $1.
Card Vignettes $3 per doz.
Large Size Photographs, 2 for $1.
All other Photographs up to life size colored in oil or water at the most reasonable prices.

☞ Particular attention given to Copying Cards or Ambrotypes into Large Photographs. The smallest or most delicate picture can be thus enlarged, by skilful experienced artists, copied into a handsome photograph. Every attention paid to visitors wishing to examine the specimens.

Swords, Sashes, Belts.
Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords, $31 50. B. KITTREDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Something New in Playing Cards.
LOVE SCENES.
LOVE SCENES.
LOVE SCENES.
LOVE SCENES.
DESIGNS FROM FRENCH ARTISTS.
The above new Card has 52 beautiful pictures, of elegant design, and they can also be used the same as ordinary playing cards, thus combining pleasure with amusement. Fifteen cents and two red stamps and I send for sample pack. $5 per dozen. Liberal discount to dealers. T. H. CASWELL,
446-7 52 Nassau St., room No. 1, upstairs.

"Diphtheria."
A certain preventive, and sure, safe and simple remedy for this sudden and dangerous disease, may be had by addressing (enclosing stamp for reply)
DR. OTIS C. LADLOW, 25 Astor Place, N. Y.
445-9

$10 AGENTS $10
And Dealers. Something New! Burglar-Proof Traveller's Lock, Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, Magic Tobacco Box, and 50 more Novel and Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.
S. W. RICE & CO., 61 Nassau St., N. Y.

$60 A MONTH. I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pencil, Oriental Burners, and 18 other articles. 5 Circulars free. JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Me.

J. G. SCHULL,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
32 Ann Street, New York,
Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings, which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash.

If you want to Know
A little of everything relating to the human system, diet, air, marriage, etc., etc., read revised and enlarged edition of Medical Common Sense.
Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Liver and Philosophy of Digestion, Constipation, Rupture, Salt Rheum, Fevers, Paralysis, Diseases of the Heart, Neuralgia, How to Recover the Sight and throw aside Spectacles, Female Diseases, Marriage Customs of the World, Philosophy of Elopements, Philosophy of Childbearing, &c., &c. Over 100 pages, 12mo, and a thousand things of value to the married and single never written before, many startling and curious books for curious people, and a good book for every one. 600 pages; 50 Illustrations. Sent to any address post free by mail to all applicants, or the book forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of 25 cts. Address DR. S. FOOTE, 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

FORTY
PRIZE
MEDALS
OVER ALL COMPETITORS.
CHICKERING & SONS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Grand, Square and Upright Pianofortes
THALBERG'S CERTIFICATE
"Since my arrival in America I have constantly used the Pianos of Messrs. Chickering & Sons, and I can only repeat that which I have so often said before: The instruments are the best I have seen in the United States, and will compare favorably with any I have ever known.
S. THALBERG."
Warerooms, 652 Broadway, N. Y., 246 Washington Street, Boston

Remington's

Army and Navy
REVOLVER!
Approved by the Government.
Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.
E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.
438-50

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest impressions. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
PIERRE BIBON 43 Ann St., N. Y.
000

Do You Want to get Married?
"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy," Finally showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry whoever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail post paid on receipt of 25 cents. Address
E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1635, Portland, Me.
442-48

Hoyt's Hawathn Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing mineral poison, to cure dandruff, and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp, rendering it healthy and vigorous.
HOYT'S MEDICATED HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled in keeping the hair in curl.
HOYT'S ORIENTAL COLORING CREAM
oils and colors the hair at the same time; changes light and gray hair to beautiful dark color.
HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER
imparts beauty to the complexion, softness to the skin, and preserves youthfulness of appearance. Sold everywhere.
N.B.—Ladies' French Hairdresser in attendance to apply the Hawathn.
JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.
Published for the benefit and as a warning and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc.; supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope, Single Copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings county, N. Y. 000

WEDDING CARDS.
French Note Paper, Silver Plate, etc., at J. Eveleth's, 303 Broadway, cor. Duane St. For Specimens by mail, send 30 cents.
000

Attention, Company!
CLARK'S ONGUENT—A Powerful Stimulant—Each package warranted to produce a full set of whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Onguent and finding it not as represented can return the unused box and have their money returned to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent safely by mail postpaid to any address on receipt of the money.
Address A. D. CLARK & CO.,
446-57 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

MADAME BENNDICT'S
Millinery & Dressmaking Establishment,
Is now replete with
Every Imported Novelty of the Season.
♦ 12 WAVERLY PLACE, NEW YORK 000

Baker's Rheumatic Balm,
BAKER'S FEVER COOLER.
BAKER'S COUGH CURE.
BAKER'S CROUP ALLEVIATOR, are four remedies which should be on every table over without. Price $1 per bottle each. Also—
BAKER'S HITHER AND YONDER PANTAGOGUE,
which are invaluable. Price $8.
Principal Depot—No. 751 TENTH STREET, near Fourth avenue. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price. 439-51

Beauty.—HURTEL'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL, prepared by Madame Rachel Lorraine, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enameler. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. Sent to any address to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address HURTEL & CO., Perfumers, No. 48 Canal Street, Second and Third Doors above Broadway, New York.

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY'S
NEW UNION PLAYING CARDS,
National Emblems.

Ace of Eagles.
The suits are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS and FLAGS, Colonel in place of King; Goddess of Liberty for Queen; Major for Jack.
The Union Playing Cards are the first and only genuine American Cards ever produced, and as they are entered according to Act of Congress, they can be manufactured only by the American Card Company.
These Cards are rapidly taking the place of Cards bearing Foreign emblems. The demand for them is unprecedented in the Card Trade, and they will soon become the Leading Card in the American market.
In playing with these Cards, they are to be called by the names the emblems represent, and as the emblems are as familiar as household words everywhere among the people of the American Republic, they can be used as readily the first occasion as Cards bearing Foreign emblems.
The Union Cards are the most pleasing and attractive Card ever made. They are produced in the highest style of the art, and each pack is put up in an elegant Card Case, suitable to keep them in when not in use, and then in handsome dozen boxes for the trade.
Two Sample Packs, in Card Cases, sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1.
AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
165 William Street, or 34 Chambers Street, N. Y.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars
Have now been before the public for nearly a year. They are universally pronounced the neatest and best fitting collars ought.
The upper edge presents a perfect curve, free from the sharp angles found in all other collars.
The cravat causes no puckers on the inside of the collar, rolling over the edge. AS SMOOTH INSIDE AS OUTSIDE—and therefore perfectly free and easy to the neck.
The Garotte collar has a smooth and evenly finished edge on every part.
These Collars are not simply flat pieces of paper cut in the form of a collar, but are MOULDED AND SHAPED TO FIT THE NECK.
They are made in "Novelty" (or turn-down style), in every half size from 12 to 17 inches, and in "Eureka" (or Garotte), from 13 to 17 inches; and packed in "solid size" in neat blue cartons, containing 100 each, also in assorted sizes of 10 each—the latter a very handy package for Travellers, Army and Navy Officers.
☞ EVERY COLLAR is stamped
"Gray's Patent Molded Collar."
Sold by all dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The Trade supplied by
HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
31 Devonshire St., Boston.
J. S. Lowrey & Co., 79 Warren St., New York; Van Deusen, Bochmer & Co., 627 Chesnut St., Phila.; Hodges Bros., 33 Hanover St., Baltimore, Md.; Wall, Stephens & Co., 252 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; Avery, Learned & Avery, cor. Fifth and Main, Cincinnati; J. Van Boxtan & Co., 434 Main Street, Louisville, Ky.; Pennsylvania Collar Co., 9 North Main Street, St. Louis, Mo.; Bradford Bros., Milwaukee, Wis.; Wing, Withers & Co., 7 to 12 Pittsburgh Street, New Orleans.
434-52

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?
MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any part of the country on receipt of
C. B. GRAHAM, 106 Nassau St., N. Y.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite, of the latest style, for sale. Send for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELARO, 50 Nassau St., N. Y.

WATCHES.

$14 A handsome Heavy Hunting Case Silver Composite Watch. Fine Movements, handsome white Dial and steel-polished hand; elegant finish in every respect, and in perfect running order. These Watches are composed of two metals, the outer one being the finest quality of silver, and will bear comparison of every description, and has the appearance of Sterling Silver in every respect. Sold only by the case, at $72. Sample Watches sent free of expense on receipt of $14. $14

$15 The great English Army Watch in Heavy Gold Cases, Hunting Cases, a fac simile of the British Army Watch. These Cases are beautifully finished, and the movements first-class and practically jewelled, and warranted good timekeepers. These cases will wear a great length, being genuine Gold. Sold only by the case, at $78. Sample Watches sent free of expense on receipt of $15. $15

$18 The Great New Army Watch, especially for soldiers, in heavy and beautifully finished Solid Silver Hunting Cases, Genuine Lever movements, Ruby Jewelled, Engraved, Engine-turned or plain cases; warranted as represented, and a perfect timekeeper, only $18. $18

$16 A Lady's very elegant English Court Watch, in very small, Gold Hunting Cases, Magic Spring, and sunk seconds, and a perfect timekeeper, only $16. $16

$35 Officer's Watch—Extra Heavy American Lever Watch, in Double Bottom Cases, Silver Hunting Cases, full jewelled. — Trademark Wm. Ellery. $35

$35 A very handsome Double Time Duplex Stop Watch, New York and London Lever movements, Jewelled in every action, Gold Balances, and in Heavy Sterling Silver Hunting Cases. $35

The Movements are Beautifully Engraved and have the patent adjusted stop, only $35

WARRANTED.

All our Watches are sent out in perfect running order, and are warranted as represented or the money refunded. A written warrantee given if Required.

We offer great inducements to Agents. Send for our Circular. Constantly on hand Watches of every description.

Postage on Watches, by the case, $2 36; Sample Watch, 25 cents. Sample Watches sent free.

GEO. A. ELY & CO.,
IMPORTERS,
181 (late 208) Broadway, N. Y.

Latest Invention
IN GOLD PENS
JUST OUT.

After years of patient research it has been demonstrated now, for the first time, that a genuine Gold Pen, with Iridium or Diamond point, and possessing all the elasticity and durability of the finest Imported Pen made, can be produced at prices far below anything of the kind heretofore offered. Years have been spent in trying to produce an Elastic and Diamond-pointed Pen at a low figure, and until now all attempts have been futile. We have nothing to say against parties advertising Imported Pens and calling them Gold. We know that ours is the only Solid Gold and Genuine Diamond-pointed Elastic Pen in the market that can be afforded at anywhere near our prices.

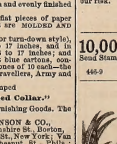
Trade Prices, per Dozen.

No. 2. Medium Pen	$3 50
No. 3. Fine "	3 75
No. 4. Engrossing Pen	4 50
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders, in Morocco Case (extra) per doz.	50 cts.

Sample Pens.

No. 2. Medium Pen	60 cts.
No. 3. Fine "	65 cts.
No. 4. Engrossing Pen	65 cts.
Silver Mounted Ebony Holders, in Morocco Case (extra)	50 cts.

WARRANTED.



We warrant Every Pen for one year, and to be Solid Gold, Genuine Iridium or Diamond-pointed, and to be one of the most elastic of the numerous Gold Pens made.

We will send sample Pens to any address in the United States, postage paid, on receipt of price.

Money promptly Registered and Sealed letters at our risk.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
Sole Manufacturers,
181 (late 208) Broadway, N. Y.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED for the New Colored Album Gem Package, Send Stamp for Circular and 30 cts. for Sample to
J. L. G. PIERPONT,
446-9 353 Broadway, N. Y.

Royal Havana Lottery.
50 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVERS.

Trade Mark, P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jewelled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also, every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection and soldiers

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

THE BEST LITERATURE

By the Best American Writers.

Is found each month in the

Atlantic Monthly

LONGFELLOW, LOWELL, HAWTHORNE, EMERSON, HOLMES, AGASSIZ, and others of the leading writers of the country contribute regularly.

Terms, $3 a year; 25 cents a number. A Liberal reduction to Clubs. Send 25 cents for a specimen number 80

TICKNOR & FIELDS, Publishers,
643-650 135 Washington street, Boston.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in six drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs etc.

E. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.
0000

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts.

MAMMOTH 300 volumes, mailed on receipt of price. Five of different powers. $1. Address F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass. o

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Gold Silver Case, $1.50; warranted for one year. GENUINE accompanying each Pen. Send for a Circular Pens repaired in all parts of the country.
635-676 E. S. JOHNSON, 16 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

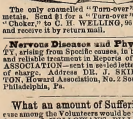
Great Chance to Make Money!

$650,000 of Watches, Jewelry, &c.,

Given away with our STATIONERY PRIZE PACKETS.

Every AGENT purchasing 100 PACKETS will receive FREE, as a PREMIUM, a GENUINE SILVER WATCH. Or, if preferred, a Solid Silver Hunting Case, Lever Watch, accompanying all orders, for $31; with 12 assortment views, &c. A liberal discount to the trade.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining reflection with Achromatic, is mailed, prepaid, for $2.25, or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $6, by



HENRY CRAIG,
o 325 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Reliance, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Tension Frame, accommodating all sizes, for $3; with 12 assortment views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

American, Swiss and English Watches

in sterling cases of quality of each. Circular for the Trade or Army (large or small) promptly and faithfully attended to. Send for 20 page.
0000 T. B. BYNNER, 178 Broadway, N. Y.

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, CURED and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
635-670 CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made to metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker." H. WELLING, 96 Fine St., N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from specific causes, in both Sexes—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION, to be sent, post-paid, in sealed letter-envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South-Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

What an amount of Suffering and Disease among the Volunteers would be prevented by the free use of HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT. For Wounds, Sores and Scurvy, the Ointment is invaluable, and for Bowel Complaints, Fevers, Smallpox, &c., the Pills are the best medicine in the world. At 25, 63 cts., and $1 00 per box or pot.

Great Chance to Make Money!

Agents can make $10 to $20 a day selling our celebrated PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS. We have every variety to suit the tastes of all; retail for 25 cents each. A Splendid GOLD OR SILVER WATCH presented to each Agent. $10 capital only required to obtain 100 Packages and a fine Silver Watch. Also, 50,000 PRIZE ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Send for Circulars. Mailed free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
Price Package and Engraving Warehouse,
o and 36 Beekman street, N. Y.

The Beard, &c.

IN those cases of scanty, retarded growth, where the person is over 18, by its remarkably nourishing and stimulating power, the Balsam of the Tennessee Swamp Shrub has been found to excite the Beard, Moustache, &c., to an exceedingly fine and vigorous growth. The history of this Balsam, with a small sample box, will be sent sealed, on receipt of return postage.

JOHN HAWLINS, 815 Broadway, N. Y.

AN UNEXPECTED VISIT—A SCENE AT THE METROPOLITAN FAIR.

COLUMBIA—"My dear Miss Jersey! I am delighted to see you—I trust you have come to stay."

GOLD WATCH FREE!

AND

$15 Per Day Sure by $15

Made by acting as our Agent for the sale of the GREAT ORIGINAL and only Genuine HOWARD COMBINATION PRIZE PACKAGES. Each of these Wonderful, Large and Useful Packages contains Large quantities of Fine Writing Paper, Envelopes, Steel Pens, Pen Holders, Lead Pencils, Rubbers, Fine Engravings, Ladies Needle Work Designs for Needle Work, Beautiful Emblems, Colognes, Recipes, Household Conveniences, Perfumery, Toilet, Kitchen and Garden Guides, Evening Amusements, Letter Writers Instructors, Sure Gift Secrets, Many Ways to Get Rich, Miniature Calendars for 1864, Books of Poetry, &c., &c., Military Heroes, Camp Conversations, with Fun, Sensible Matters, Allowable Pennies for Games, Fine Presents of Fine Jewellery, &c., the whole worth a Fortune to Agents. Every Package is worth above all competition, and have long been acknowledged as the best and only real value Gift and Premium articles of the kind ever manufactured. We warrant each person who acts as Agent for us with a Beautiful GOLD or SILVER HUNTING CASE LEVER WATCH, Genuine English Movement, Full Jewelled. Warranted one year. All Goods Guaranteed as Represented or money refunded. A single one of our Large Packages contains more real valuable articles than any half dozen other Packages ever sold. This is the greatest money-making business for Agents of the age. Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium inducements FREE.

O. C. RICHARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y.
Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World. o

Soldier's Money Belt!

(HOWARD'S PAT.)

This Belt is designed especially for Soldiers. It will not sweat or wet through under any circumstances. Has the most convenient pocket for carrying Greenbacks, and one for Card Photographs or Keepsakes of that loved one at home. They are Light, Durable and Elegant, and will last a lifetime. They are sent to all parts of the country by return mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, $2, by the

HOWARD BELT CO.,
o 426 Broadway, N. Y.

Shults' Dungeant.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

GREAT TRIUMPH.

STEINWAY & SONS, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker Street, N. Y., were awarded a FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.

The special correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."
0000

To Learn Piano Playing Easily,

Correctly and thoroughly, use "RICHARDSON'S NEW METHOD," over Thousand copies of which were sold every year. Its easily understood Lessons, its attractive Exercises, and its general plan of leading the pupil gradually from a knowledge of the simplest rudiments to an ability to perform difficult music, have made it a universal favorite with teachers and scholars in every place where it has been introduced. Price $2.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers,
o 277 Washington St. Boston.

Now is the time for Agents to make money. The best Medal ever offered. Good reliable Agents wanted everywhere. Extra liberal inducements offered. Send for descriptive catalogue and terms to Agents. Address o J. G. WELLS, 105 William St., N. Y.

Knox has Done It.—If you question the truth of this assertion, look at his SPRING HAT, after looking, try it on, after the trial, purchase and pay for it, and you will then coincide with us in the opinion that he has produced the handsomest, most comfortable, and thoroughly satisfactory hat of the season. Of course this simple announcement will induce you to make a speedy visit to KNOX, 212 Broadway. o

A WATCH FOR ALL!

S. M. WARD & CO.,
MANUFACTURING
JEWELLERS!
208 Broadway, New York.

100,000

Watches, Lockets, Chains, Gold Pens and Cases, Rings, Pins, etc., etc.

To be sold for $1 each, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get, and not to be kept unless you are perfectly satisfied.

Orders specifying the various articles are put in Envelopes and Sealed, and sent without regard to choice.

One order will be sent for 25 cents; five for $1; 11 for $2; 30 for $5; 100 for $10.

Also, we have just issued several new designs, among which is the new Battle Pin with the Likeness taken from life; of either Generals Grant, Meade, Banks, McClellan, Rosecrans, Burnside, Butler, Sherman, Foree, Logan, Kilpatrick, Gilmore, Foster, Custer, Com. Porter, and other officers in the Army or Navy whose likeness can be obtained. Also, a new Military and Battery Pin. Also, a new Engineer, Naval and Pontoonier's Pin. The above are all made of Fine Gold Plate, and will be sent for $1 25 each. Also, a new Cavalry Pin in Solid Silver (pure coin) for $1 50. Also, either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, Solid Silver, with your Name, Regiment and Company handsomely engraved thereon, for $1. Either of the above will be sent in Solid Gold for $3. Agents wanted in every Regiment, Vessel and Hospital. Send for wholesale illustrated descriptive circular. o

STAMMERING

And Stuttering permanently cured by Bates's Patent Prize Scientific Appliance. For Circular Letter and Pamphlets and Drawings describing the same, address
o H. C. L. MEARS, 277 West 25d St., N. Y.

Dyspepsia Tablets.

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per box; sent free on the receipt of 60 cents. Depot, 96 Centre Street, second floor. 0000

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN

6 Maiden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fire Arms" in Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brush es, Steelchasers, Pens, etc., etc.

Military and Navy Equipments in every variety. A large assortment of

RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS.
34-70 Constantly on hand.

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or other fruit, in 24 hours. The Receipt sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
o F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Enameled Gold Pattern Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Exact as Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movement," and Correct Timekeeper, per case of six $30. A single one sent free, by mail, in case, for $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, case of six, $18; single one, by mail, $7. Specially adapted to the Army.

$15 European Timekeeper $15

OR DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" engraved or engine-turned HUNTING Case Watch—Magic Spring—Genuine English Jewelled or Model Movements—W. J. TOMLIN, "Importer and Manufacturer—Sold Below—and has a NEAT MINIATURE COMPANION in the cap and attached to the movement—making it a correct Guide for the Soldier or Traveller—a perfect Timekeeper—"Warranted one year," will send sold, and is an

Exact Imitation of a $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

ENGLISH STERLING SILVER LEVER WATCHES, engraved, Hunting Case, full jewelled movements warranted, $18.

$30 American Levers. $30

In 4 oz. Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Full Ruby Jewelled, Gold Joints, Magic Spring, with Full Guarantee, only $30.

Real English Duplex Stop Watch,

In Massive Silver Hunting Cases, Full Jewelled, SWEEP SECONDS, for Artificers and Engineers, Full Guarantee, $50.

Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the below envelope of European Watches. Catalogues of these prices sent free.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "Army Watch Package:" "It is a novelty here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Illustrated News says, "Correct timekeepers, and for beauty and fine finish they are equal to any $100 watches."

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,
o 82 and 84 Nassau Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready-Made or to Measure, at $35, $39, $45 per doz.

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR ORDERS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free to any address.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $6, $8 75 and $11 50 each. Also, Gentlemen's Fine Linen Shirt sent by mail on receipt of the exact and 63 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last few years in preference to any other collar. They are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Officers and Travellers they are invaluable. Price 75 cents each; sent by mail to any part of the Union on receipt of 80 cents.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every County in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Hilton Head, Beaufort, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates. 0000

Ivory Jewelry!

Fine Ivory Brooches	$1 50
Ball Fastenings	1 50
Ivory Initial Sleeve Buttons, per pair	75
Pearl Initial Buttons	$1 00

Sent free, on receipt of price. A large variety on hand, at WELLING'S, 627 Centre St., N. Y. o Sign of the Golden Elephant.

Have you seen the American Card

Company's NEW UNION PLAYING CARDS, NATIONAL EMBLEMS. They are not only the prettiest Cards made, but they suit the popular idea. The suits are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS & FLAGS. COLONEL in place of King, GODDESS OF LIBERTY for Queen, MAJOR for Jack. All the games can be played as readily as with cards bearing Foreign Emblems. Two packs, in elegant card cases, sent postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY, No. 165 William Street, or No. 14 Chambers Street, N. Y.
o

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,

25 cents each, $1 50 per doz. Privately mail Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1016, New York city. Send for circular.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED

NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 448—Vol. XVIII.] NEW YORK, APRIL 30, 1864. [Terms: $3 50 Yearly, 14 Weeks $1 00.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR.

The Tattoo.

THE Fair closes each night with bugle blast and tattoo. Our Artist has sketched the latter with grace and spirit. Our ladies will become soldiers with all this drill and pomp and circumstance of war.

The Boat Builders' Department.

Among the curious and attractive departments of the Metropolitan Fair is the Boat-builders' Department, with its models of world-renowned crafts. In the centre is a model of the Isaac Newton; models of lifeboats and of yachts are to be found on every side, attracting considerable attention when any yachter steps to explain to his fair friends and the group that soon gathers the beautiful lines, the graceful curve, the advantage for speed.

The Curiosity Shop.

Mrs. Gibbs's Curiosity Shop is one of the greatest attractions of the Fair. Here are gathered relics of bygone days, tapestry from Spain, chairs from palaces in France, Bohemian glass from Italy, water from the Dead Sea, Court dresses, Japanese robes, bonnets of other days, curiosities of every form and shape. Here stands a bronze vase that belonged to Pitt the great Earl of Chatham, whose memory our city has gratefully preserved in the names of two streets, although his marble effigy is no longer erect. Here looks down in sternest bronze the death-set face of the great Napoleon. Here is a mammoth nugget from our El Dorado, estimated to be worth the nice plum of $40,000. As the crowd sways along we pass in turn by all these, thrown together in strange juxtaposition.

Anthony's Pearl Album.

Among the fine objects of the Fair was a Pearl Photograph Album, got up by Messrs. E. and H. T. Anthony & Co., of New York, and presented to the Sanitary Fair by their employés. Our illustration will enable our readers to form some idea of its beauty. It was sold on the very first day for $150.

The reputation of the house of Anthony guarantees in itself its superior excellence and beauty. Being the first to introduce the Photographic Albums into this country, they have ever stood at the head, and the taste and enterprise of the firm are equalled only by the splendid workmanship of those whom they have trained to the various departments of manufacture.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR.—THE TATTOO ON CLOSING AT NIGHT.

They have long been the leading house for the supply of all materials required in the art of photographing, and as in these nice operations all depends in the purity of the chemical agents, the Messrs. Anthony, by the high character which they have established, command the business.

Our readers, who have seen how constantly we express our inside thanks to them for portraits of celebrities, may form some idea of the vast number of carte de visite of distinguished persons on their catalogue. It exceeds 5,000.

Their supply of stereoscopic views is also very fine and extensive. They were the first to introduce the instantaneous stereoscopic views. Visitors to the Art Gallery cannot fail to examine and appreciate the specimens given there.

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS—Three men and a woman, each over eight feet high; two albino dwarfs, each less than two feet high—the Dwarfs, each less than two feet high—the two feet of other realities. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P.M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 52 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turk ah, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druse authorities; and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's lectures

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table; and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs on ly $5. Sent free, by mail on receipt of the price, by C. OSCANYAN,

No. 37 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, APRIL 30, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 78 Duane street, below Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR for 1861, by GEORGE P. BENDA & Co., Proprietors of the London and Paris Agency, 100 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 50
Two copies " to one address	6 00
Four " "	12 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00
Paper, 16 weeks	1 00

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

One Dollar a line on the outside or last page

Sixty Cents a line on the 14th and 16th pages.

THE PUBLISHER of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER invites his present contributors and others to send in, before May 1st, stories and poems suited to its columns, as well as ideas for comic sketches on subjects of the day.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

DECLINED.—Mary—Afloat—Gentian—The Siege of Santee—The Owls' Concert.

ACCEPTED.—A Ring to Wear—The Highwayman of the Black Forest—Touching the Body.

A few very superior tales suited to our columns will be cheerfully received by the Editor. Contributors are requested to write legibly, on one side only, and give their address distinctly.

Manuscripts can be examined promptly, and if not accepted returned without delay.

Summary of the Week.

ARKANSAS.

Gen. Steele is said to have reached Arkadelphia on the 28th March, constantly skirmishing with the enemy.

A body of Texan cavalry, numbering 400, attacked a Union camp at Reseville, on the Arkansas river, on the 11th, but were repulsed, with a loss of 14 men killed.

KENTUCKY.

Forrest still besieges Columbus, now reinforced by 2,000 veterans, and parties of his men are ravaging to within 10 miles of Cairo, burning houses and stealing horses.

The rebel Gen. Buford demanded the surrender of Fort Halleck, Columbus, on the 15th, and then attacked Paducah. On the 16th the rebels again demanded the surrender of Paducah, and Col. Mitchell with the 5th Illinois and other regiments were marching out to attack the enemy.

TENNESSEE.

Fort Pillow was finally surrendered to the rebels on the 12th, Major Booth, the commander, with several of his officers being killed. Forrest then carried out his threats, and the negro soldiers, to the number of 200, with their white officers, were then put to the sword. Some of the wounded negroes were actually buried alive!

The enemy have abandoned Fort Pillow, leaving it in ruins.

The guerilla Reynolds and his command were surprised at Doraville on the 15th; 10 of his men killed, and he, with 15 more, captured.

MISSISSIPPI.

On March 30 a band of guerillas dashed into Natchez, but were repulsed, and an officer and three men captured.

TEXAS.

Our cavalry have occupied Eagle pass, 400 miles above Brownsville, driving out the rebels, and thus cutting off the cotton trade, which, after the occupation of Brownsville, was carried on here.

Corpus Christi has been reoccupied by our troops, from California, who captured 600 men.

LOUISIANA.

The rebel Gen. Dick Taylor recently surprised and captured 200 Union soldiers near Alexandria.

The rebels are said to have blown up their rams Shreveport and Missouri on the 26th March.

Alexandria is put in a state of defence against rebel attacks. Gen. Banks had reached Grand Ecore, but the steamer that took him up was attacked on the return trip.

MISSOURI.

On the 23d, Capt. Smith, with 32 men of the 14th New York, had a sharp action, near Barranca, with the 7th Alabama cavalry, in which the enemy lost heavily.

VIRGINIA.

The storm not only swept away the railroad bridges but swelled the Shenandoah, so that the pontoon bridge was in danger and had to be taken up.

Capt. McKee, 2d U. S. Infantry, was killed by guerillas, near Nokesville, on the 14th.

Longstreet has fallen back to Virginia with all his force except 20,000 men, who are to join Johnston.

Mosby, with 600 cavalry, made an attack on the patrol, near Bristoe station, on the 19th, and captured 30 or 35 men. A train, with Gen. Grant on board, had passed but a few minutes before Mosby's attack.

He made another attack on the 16th, near Fairfax station, capturing a train, burning 20 wagons and carrying off 200 horses.

An expedition sent up the Nansemond in search of the propeller used against the Minnesota, returned without any result. The weather was very considerable destruction. Lieut. E. P. Wilder, of the Minnesota, was killed.

COLORADO.

The 1st Colorado cavalry had an engagement with the Cheyennes, at Fremont's orchard, 85 miles from Denver, on the 12th.

NAVAL.

A desperate attempt was made by the rebels, on the 9th, to blow up Admiral Lee's flagship, the Minnesota, off Newport News, with a torpedo. The expedition was unsuccessful, but did not materially injure the frigate.

They were more successful in Florida, having blown up with a torpedo the transport Maple Leaf, returning from Pilatka to Jacksonville. The entire bow was blown out, and the steamer went down almost immediately.

The rebels are said, indeed, to have a regularly organised torpedo corps, which expects, even by the help of sympathisers in the North, to be able to destroy vessels by concealing small torpedoes among the coal furnished to steamers. As though the effect of such a device, the U.S. steamer Commodore exploded in New York harbor on the 15th, killing and wounding a number of officers and men.

The report of the loss of the rebel ram Tennessee is contradicted.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 11th April, after some unimportant business, it proceeded to the consideration of the Senate bill to prohibit the issue, after the first day of July next, of fractional currency. The resolution on the table. Carried by yeas 31, nays 10. The House resumed the consideration of the following resolution offered by Mr. Colfax: That after the 1st day of July next, no person shall be employed under Long. a Representative from the IIId District of Ohio, having, on the 4th day of March, declared himself in favor of recognising the independence and nationality of the so-called Confederacy, now in arms against the Union, and thereby giving aid, countenance and encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility to the United States, should be expelled." A long and excited debate ensued, the main features of which were the speech of Fernando Wood in favor of recognising the rebels, and the patriotic reply of Gen. Schenck to the New York Copperhead. Without coming to a vote the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 12th, there was little business of public importance. When the Naval Appropriation bill came as amended from the House, Fessenden moved to concur in the amendments, which was agreed to. Mr. Collamer moved to amend the bill so as to provide that the Secretary of the Navy should not be authorised to build more than the number of vessels now under contract, unless specially authorised by law. Mr. Howard, Wilson, Johnson, Grimes and Harlan, made remarks in favor of the measures of retaliation, man for man, or two for one.

In the House, the consideration of the Bank bill was resumed, and, on motion of Mr. Fenton, of N. Y., an amendment was agreed upon, to the effect that the capital stock of banks under the act should be liable for taxation by the States at the same rates as that imposed upon other moneyed capital, provided that no State tax should be imposed on any part of the capital stock of any association which might be invested in United States bonds deposited as security for the issue of its notes. In support of the Committee of Elections, declaring that Mr. B. M. Kitchen, of West Virginia, was not entitled to a seat as representative of the Seventh District, was called up and debated resulting in a resolution declaring the gentleman duly elected and entitled to a seat.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The news this week from Europe is not important. Austria and Prussia assert that the difficulties between the Emperor of Austria and Maximilian have been arranged, and that he will soon embark for the Mexican throne. The loan has been taken by French and English houses, and about $35,000,000 will be paid to Prussia for war expenses. It would seem as though France had received to take up the role which England had abandoned, and had to cause for the rebels, in the vain desire of being for the Chinese trade. The privateer Georgia is likewise to be sold in London.

In England great preparations are being made to receive Garibaldi, who arrives on Danish and German affairs is to be held in London.

The war continued in Denmark with varying success. The Danes had repulsed the Prussians at Duppel. Rumors of disaffection among the Hungarian regiments in the Austrian service were related to this fact the retreat from Frederick was attributed.

The British Channel fleet had received orders to be ready to sail for the Baltic at a moment's notice.

The Queen opened Parliament in person on the 6th of April, when she would hold a levee at Buckingham Palace.

The Emperor of Russia had given great offence to Napoleon, by celebrating at St. Petersburg the entry of the allied armies into Paris in 1814.

NOTES AND TOPICS.

The Hebrews.

We find in the statements of a late writer upon the Hebrews, that the United States have over 200,000 members of the race, while England has but thirty-five thousand. At first glance this may not seem a great number, but by those who have made themselves familiar with the history of the race it is only an argument to show how the tide of commerce, and immutability of character this country. As a positive evidence of our well-being, nothing can be more conclusive, like a sleuth-hound, it follows upon communities disposed to industry and commerce, and immediately deserts those which are sinking, especially in money and precious goods. They have always been the precursors of commercial greatness, and no country has driven them away who has prospered in business. We do not assert that they make this prosperity, but their almost instinct in this quality has enabled them to see it in advance. They are essentially a business people, a Jewish laborer, sailor or farmer being a rarity, though we believe that a great many of the race have become soldiers. In this the Christian element has been especially developed upon the Hebrew, they have found it difficult to do without him, and wherever luxury reigns there is he most at home. Considered as a sign of public prosperity, we cannot regret that there is almost a quarter of a million of Jews in the land.

Strikes in a Nutshell.

It seems strange that the intelligence that really does exist among American mechanics and working men should not be brought more into play when their own interests are concerned. At this moment labor is upon what is termed "a strike," all over the country. They are passing through that transition state which has to occur at stated intervals to keep capital and labor balanced. All things must be regulated by the price of labor, and the moment that articles of necessity reach that price that they are beyond the means of certain branches of laborers it proves that the value of the labor that produced them has risen, and as a consequence other labor must rise with it. This is the case just now with all articles of food, in consequence of the high value of agricultural labor, caused by enlistment, and as a result all branches of industry must rise proportionately. The great mistake of strikers is to make themselves enemies to capital. There is really no antagonism between labor and capital. They are both equally workers, capital being as much a dead instrument if it is idle—as the laborer would be in the same condition. If a rich man is so idle-man he soon ceases to be rich, his capital, all man can do is guide, but cannot help making losses. He may appear to be idle, but he must think always, and as he thinks so does he make work, and by working keep labor going. The capitalist acts as the director for the laborer, saying that in he would otherwise be using his products, providing him with machinery to lessen toil, building better workshops, and doing a thousand things that a single workman could not do. In fact, capital represents a number of workmen combined, and by that combination achieves what the single man never could. Capital is governed by the same laws as labor, and must have its own strikes. At that time, when there is a surplus of capital in any particular locality or business it must strike or fall to the level that is placed upon it or strike for something higher. This strike is generally accomplished by removing to some other locality, or embarking in another business. This also, is the only way in which labor can regulate itself. All the strikes in the world will have no effect if there is a surplus of labor in any branch. If that is so, the laborer must remove to another locality or another employment. This is the only way that a strike can become effectual.

Uncle Sam.

During the existence of the war of 1812 a New York contractor, who will still be remembered by some of our old citizens, named Albert Anderson, visited Troy for the purpose of buying provisions for the army. The inspectors of beef and pork at Troy were two brothers, Messrs. Ebenezer and Samuel Wilson, and last, always known under the soubriquet of Uncle Sam, was the superintendent of the workmen employed to handle and ship the provisions. The initials, E. A.—U. S. This marking was the cause of Uncle Sam's numerous employés, who was either stupid or witty, and on being asked by the other workmen the meaning of these letters answered with a sly shout, "Why, stupid, Anderson and Uncle Sam. The thing took among the workmen, and from the barrels was discovered the quizzers still hung among them. In due time a greatmany of these very workmen found their way into the army, to help fight the battles of the country, and among them, of course, them went their old jokes, and this one pre-eminent, until it became a standard designation, applicable to the war was done was recognised over all the land as the appellation of the nation. I have never seen this in print, nor do I know that it ever has been in any, without doubt, many now living who know its truth.

BOOK NOTICES.

A YOUTH'S HISTORY OF THE REBELLION, from the Bombardment of Fort Sumter to the Capture of Roanoke Island. By WILLIAM M. THAYER, Author of "The Log House Boy," etc. Illustrated. Boston: J. E. C. Co. 1864, 347 pp.

The popularity of the books for the young which Mr. Thayer has given makes it unnecessary to say that this work will be eminently popular. The author knows exactly the wants of the large class for whom he writes, and supplies them abundantly. His interests, warms and allures his young readers, who will all be delighted with his youth's history.

TOWN GOSSIP.

SHAKING the fate of all other sublunary things, the Sanitary Fair is beginning to flag in interest, and the ladies are already beginning gradually ceases to be a nine days' wonder.

By this we do not mean to assert that the crowds are dropping off, or that the exhibition is any less attractive, but simply that the local population have been and gone there, and that the immediate of fair ladies and clever men who threw their time and talents into the business at its start have begun to get tired of the daily routine of amateur shopkeeping and dickering, and feel somewhat like resigning their temporary occupations. We hardly think the visitors will be disappointed in the amount of attractions and subordinates.

But still the stream pours in, and so far no time has been mentioned for closing. In some respects the expectations of its originators and well-wishers have not been realised, for those cries have been made that militate fearfully against a success. The most important of these are directed especially in dividing the fair into compartments, and making it necessary that nearly $3 should be spent by the visitor before he leaves. We think that half the usual admission price on the first few days had been $3, until the rush was over, and then kept at that figure for a week, and something "all the sights, advertising each day what exhibitions would be given, the amount of money taken and what had been given away.

Another error is in asking exorbitant prices for goods. Thousands have been induced to go there solely to buy, provided prices ruled the same as in stores, but have come away with their money unspent on the ground that the prices were generally unattainable to the contributors, who, for the purpose of enhancing the supposed value of their gifts, placed on them the supposed value of their gifts, placed on them the usual retail prices, leaving them thereby unsold, and making it imperative that at the close of the Fair they should be sold at a ruinous loss.

So far, the greatest bargain we have heard of occurred at a jewellery stall, in the shape of a watch which, after a present a few minutes, left a young miss in charge. During this time a lady made her purchases, including a few small articles, scattered a set of ear-rings and pin. The price was asked, the label referred to, and $3 the amount, and the lady left. She liked them, paid the money and departed. On the return of the principal of the stall, the younger lady, pained at the mistake, immediately made a return of sales, and in an instant was horrified by the discovery that the watch was in reality the label, and had sold and an elegant diamond set, valued at $300, which the lady had purchased for the insignificant consideration, she started wildly through the thousands to find and recover the gems, the purchaser being as innocent of their value as was the seller.

The sword contest, which proves the most exciting affair of the Fair, closed on Saturday night of the second week with these numbers:

Whole number of votes cast	10,800
McClellan	4,800
Grant	3,200
All other Generals	2,800

Leaving McClellan 320 ahead on the entire ticket. When the excitement is over, it will be well worth the while of those interested to inquire, not who received the greatest number of votes, but who received the votes of the largest number of people

While the subject is on our minds, we would mention that, after one or two visits to the Children's Department we have become a firm believer in Carlyle's theory, that all boys should, upon birth, be put in a barrel and fed through the bunghole until they are 16 years of age, or at least that they should never be allowed in crowds. The manner in which youths, ranging from four to 14, ranged through the room, upsetting and pushing through the midst of quiet groups, tearing ladies' dresses and wiping their feet on gentlemen's pants, unrepressed by the police, has made us a convert to this belief.

One of the most singular, as well as the most impudent items of the week, is the fact of the presentation by Charles Jeffords, who is now in States Prison for life, of the pistol with which he committed the murders of Mathews and Walton to the Fair, requesting that it should be sold, and the proceeds booked in votes for Grant on the sword question!

What has Grant done to deserve this?

As a showing of the hungry crowds that seek the restaurant department, this is a record of one week's eating: 320 000 oysters, 15 883 lbs. meats, 6,591 lbs. poultry, 3,240 lbs. fish, 5 953 quarts ice cream, and other edibles in proportion, showing clearly that the angels, fairies, sprites and so forth that haunt the stalls and passages of the great Fair are strongly given to solids.

One of the impossibilities of a series of visits to the great exhibition is to give any connected account of the wonders. Its historian must have powers of analysis, condensation and arrangement beyond all human comprehension, and must lack everything of human passion that would prevent him from passing cool judgment. How can any narrator be expected to speak of the inanimate show, when from every stall and passageway eyes of every shade, from the heavenly blue to the raven black, gleam entreaty upon him, and lips that seem made only to utter perpetually musical poems plead the very last greenback from his pocket, to be replaced by loves of pincushions and unimpeachable knick-knacks? In a burst of admiration and enthusiasm, we even forgive the delicious damsel who took our hardearned greenback for a glass of sodawater, rendered absolutely necessary by our labors and the dust, and sweetly informed us that she gave no change!

Another matter worth mentioning is the sad lack of information on especial subjects, the catalogue not supplying every deficiency. One point on which we desired enlightenment is that of the mermaid exhibited in the Curiosity room. The question simply is whether it is the mermaid known to historic fame, as captured by Barnum, or whether it is merely a mermaid of unknown family, and having no interest to the general public, but the fact of being a genuine mermaid, which nobody will deny. If it is the first, then the public should know it, that they may view a creature whose fame is so identified with that of our country.

Another point on which we covet information is the private opinion of those Indians upon the whole matter. There is something so inconceivably wretched in the aspect of these Shoshones, something so evidently blasé, that we can compare them to nothing but the Happy Family at the Museum, which is, without doubt, the most unhappy gathering of living creatures on the face of the earth.

On Thursday an incident was made in the sale of Mr. Bonner's gift, the celebrated mare, Lady Woodruff. The mare is 12 years old, and is said to be the fastest trotter of her weight—1,100 pounds—in the country. She has done as well as 2.27 in harness, and is now represented to be capable of doing better than ever before. Under these circumstances it seems somewhat strange that she only brought $1,800, though she was resold immediately afterwards for $2,000. Before the sale there were rumors flying about that she was valued at $7,000, and that her giver would hand the Fair-managers $6,000 for her himself, rumors that did not prove realities.

Among the contributions of the week the most touching is that of a Spanish lady, who, having renounced the world, and became a nun, in the Convent of the Sacred Heart, sends all her earthly treasures, consisting of jewellery and gems, and valued at $2,500, to the Fair. They are exhibited on the Harlem stand.

Another is that of a book of autographs donated by Miss Fanny Kemble, containing that of Queen Victoria, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Palmerston, and a full assortment of other Dukes, Lords, Princes and Earls of celebrity. Side by side with this, and offered for $500, is a book containing a great number of autographs of American celebrities, among which are all the Presidents, from George Washington to Abraham Lincoln.

In the Trophy room we have many sights of pleasure and interest; among the first is the always goodnatured and earnest face of Mrs. McClellan, than the possession of which we can understand no greater privilege for the General, unless it be the warm-hearted and truthful admiration of his countrymen. Among the last is the presence of John Burns, the old Gettysburg patriot, who took his musket on the day of the battle, and went out to do a little fighting on his own hook. Burns is 71 years of age and a soldier of the war of 1812. At the outbreak of the rebellion he volunteered in a company bound for the field, but was discharged in a few days, because, as they said he was too old, a fact that Burns did not see. Determined to take a hand any how, he was delighted when the fighting reached his own door, and took one chance at Gettysburg, which proved no prize, for the old man was badly wounded, a trifle that is being thoroughly made up to him by lionization.

Another living history, in the same room, is a soldier named William Mudge, whose sightless eyes are made the subject of especial appeal by a beautiful lady, who recites his services and condition to those who have hearts and pockets. A ball has stricken away the soldier's sight, affected his palate, and taken from him a large share of enjoyment for life. Such sights bring home to us the realities of our great struggle, and makes us see the earnestness of purpose and necessity that underlies all the dazzle, beauty, fashion, flirtation and poetry of the great Sanitary Fair.

One of the most brilliant affairs of the week, as connected with the great work, was the performance on Saturday afternoon of the children at Niblo's Theatre in "Cinderella."

The house was crowded to greatly uncomfortably fulness long before the hour of performance, and we hazard nothing in saying, with the most fashionable large audience that has been gathered in New York in many years.

The matter was concocted very quietly, the outside public knowing nothing about it, until within a day or two of the time, and then only by a modest advertisement in one or two papers, which even neglected to mention such particulars as the price of admission. The performers—their first appearance on any stage—were all from Fifth Avenue, Madison Square, and their belongings, and not even a supe was allowed but could date from a brown stone front.

The play itself was a rendering of the story of "Cinderella" much cut up and much cut down, and could have been much improved by the substitution of Planché's version of the same exquisite tale. Of the performers we are obliged to admit that they rather excited our astonishment; every one, from the leading lady to the lowest subordinate, showing a coolness and presence of mind that would have made the fortune of any debutante, and almost argued that they had been inhaling the perfume of the footlights for the period of their natural lives.

The leading lady, Miss Minnie Cropsey, who did Cinderella, was as charming in her acting as she was in person, and brought down the house and bouquets frequently. Whenever her brown stone front and dividends fail her, the stage will be a vocation on which she can fall back with perfect safety.

Miss Katie Sinclair, who did honor to the reputation of the fairy Serena, is a charming little blonde—we never knew a Kate who was not a blonde—of twelve, who did her fairy business in an airy way, and interpolated it with a minuet—a dance that all fairies perform—assisted by a nameless youth, in very grandmotherly style.

One son of General Fremont—Charley by name—did up the Prince in a princely way, and seemed rather to enjoy his acquaintance with Cinderella; while another son of the General, the youthful Frank, acted as Herald, and blew a windless blast from an unimpeachably bright trumpet, that stamped him at once as an actor of uncommon power.

During the ball-room scene—which was really beautiful—being done by about a hundred well selected and elegantly dressed children; a lad of about nine years old played a solo on the violin, which, on his encore, was followed by a melange of national airs, and deservedly elicited earnest applause.

The whole affair was one of the most noticeable and pleasant items of the season, and netted to the treasury within a trifle of $3 000.

The receipts of the Fair up to the close of the second week are $800,000, and the average daily increase $40,000. We trust that the managers will not be hurried into closing prematurely, because the fair shopkeepers weary of their self-imposed burdens, but will appeal for fresh help as well as fresh contributions.

And now for the theatres.

The sensation of the day seems to be Avonia Jones, and we are more than surprised that one so much talked of, both by the press and the public, putting out of the question all criticism on ability, does not draw fuller houses. By this we do not mean that the houses are poor, but that they lack that fulness which always greeted other artists of a high order or much talked of. Through the week Miss Jones has given us more Judith, interspersed with Medea, Bianca and Juliana, and we think has gained upon her audience at each representation

On Monday night, according to promise, Mrs. Wood produced "Loyalina," a reconstruction of Planché's "Fortunio," by Oakey Hall, our District Attorney. Whether Mr. Hall has improved the structure is a difficult problem to solve, but certainly some of the local hits, puns and allusions are excellently well done, and, coupled with the manner in which it is put upon the stage, makes a most attractive hour's laugh. Especially would we commend the dragon's head after decapitation, and its performance in the chorus, only wondering that the property-man was not called before the curtain to receive the reward of pre-eminent genius, and the performer on the string connecting with the dragon's jaws to share it with him, the same as the author and the leading actor are called out to receive the plaudits of a pleased public.

Preceding "Loyalina" a neat little comic drama, by Morton, who never does anything bad, has run the week, and has given an opportunity for the debut of Mrs Winter, whose name is already familiar to the public as one of the most delightful story writers of the day. Mrs. Winter, during the first few nights, could not help but show the natural trepidation of a debutante, but that wearing off, she carries with her all the essentials of a charming actress. There are nature and beauty and with the education that time will bring upon the boards her success is certain.

A suggestion comes to our mind as connected with an incident in this house a few nights since, though equally applicable to every other theatre. It is in reference to the rise of the audience before the conclusion of the piece. We especially speak of it here because we believe that Mr. Duff is a reformer of theatrical abuses, and has the nerve to do it. If he will reform such an abuse as we mention, he will deserve not only the thanks and gratitude of the respectable part of the public but of every actor on the stage. We hardly see how it is to be done but by an iron hand, and its power should be exercised by closing the doors of the house five minutes before the fall of the curtain, and refusing to allow any one to leave the premises until it is fully down. This fact should be announced to the public, and then it would be understood, and the admission accepted with the condition. If any one violated it by rising and bustling in his seat during the last five minutes, let him be handed over to the police for disturbing the audience, and cool his heels in the station-house for that night. We hardly think he would repeat the experiment.

The promises for the week are Booth at Niblo's as Raphael, in the "Marble Heart," and Hackett on Saturday in "Henry IV.," for the benefit of the fund to erect a monument to Shakespeare in the Central Park. At Wallack's we have "The Clandestine Marriage," "The Wonder," "The Stranger," and more "Rosedale;" while on Saturday, 23d, the tercentenary of Shakespeare's birth, a Shakespearian comedy will be given for the Dramatic Fund. Barnum will run "Cudjo's Cave," with a plentiful sprinkling of patriotism, as connected with American citizens of African descent—which, of course, doesn't mean darkeys—miscegenatic effects, loud tableaux and tall acting. Robert Heller opens his new theatre on Monday, opposite the Metropolitan, to give us "Music and Magic," having inaugurated himself before the children at the Sanitary Fair on Wednesday last.

Among the gossip of Wall street is an explanation of how the gold excitement was caused during the past week, it having touched 190 at one time. It seems that the panic was caused by certain Philadelphia brokers and speculators, who after securing several millions of the article, telegraphed to their correspondents in this city to buy for them to the extent of $100,000 at any price at which it could be had within 15 minutes after the reception of the dispatch. The receipt of such an extraordinary commission, as soon as it leaked out, naturally excited Wall street to the highest pitch, and instantly on the demand the price advanced. For a while it was perfect madness, no one being able to tell the reason why. As soon as the excitement had reached its highest figure the originators quietly commenced selling out, and the result was that each one connected with the scheme cleared about $100,000, and gold next day was down to 172, just 18 per cent. less.

One of the exciting topics of the week, that appeals to every man, woman and child in the community, is the rise in omnibus fare. A step so sudden as almost a doubling of the fare is not warranted by any circumstances The proprietors of these lines are already growing rich, even with the high price of food and labor, but if it had been necessary for them to rise, two cents would have been the highest justifiable point. The result of their attempt at extortion is that the stages are almost totally deserted, and the cars more wretchedly overcrowded than ever. The hardworking man and woman, who depended upon the ride to lighten somewhat their daily toil, are obliged to walk or take the cars, which possibly do not go near their domiciles.

These things are trifles, but yet, as interfering with our daily peace and comfort, they should be forced down. We are obliged now to bear with almost every species of outrage from the drivers and proprietors of these public nuisances, and this one more seems only like heaping the last feather that is destined to break the camel's back.

Every person ought to refuse to ride in them, and every good citizen ought to report at the Mayor's office every dereliction he witnesses of the drivers, even though it be only the running over and killing of a helpless old woman or young child.

THE five hundred Universal Wringing Machines presented by the proprietors to the Sanitary Commission are nearly disposed of, and will net $3,500. These valuable household assistants—which were almost unknown three years ago—are now selling at the rate of one hundred thousand annually. The manufacturers claim a combination, under eight different patents, of all the advantages that can be desired in a Wringing Machine. They are durable and in every way satisfactory.—Journal of Commerce.

"NIGGER, who am de fuss man dat introduced salt perwishuns into the navy?"

"Der, now, you's too hard for dis colored indiwidual."

"It was Noah, nigger, when he took Ham 'board his ark."

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The maple sugar crop of 1864 will greatly exceed that made in previous years. In all probability it will reach 25,000 000 pounds, worth, at the low estimate of 15 cents a pound, nearly $4,000,000.

—— Mrs. Gen. McClellan is to have charge of one of the most interesting departments of the Buffalo Sanitary Fair, which is a collection of the torn and stained battle flags brought home from the war by the returning regiments. She has written to Quartermaster-Gen Aiken for the flags of Connecticut, and they are to be sent to her. The collection will be arranged upon stands in groups, and will form one of the most absorbing attractions of the Fair.

—— The amount appropriated in the law for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June, 1865, for inland service, is nearly $8,000,000; for foreign mail transportation, $250,000; and for ship, steamboat and navy letters, $8 000.

—— On Thursday, the 14th April, gold reached the highest point yet—189¾. This, with exchange on London at 200, caused considerable excitement in the money market.

—— The famous trotting mare, Lady Woodruff, presented by Robert Bonner, the publisher, to the Sanitary Fair, was sold to Mr. Howard for $1,800, who again sold her to Mr. Irving, her original proprietor, for $2 000. Mr. Bonner bought it of Mr Irving, some years ago, for $3,300.

—— The season commenced on the trotting course on the 14th April. The unfavorable state of the weather prevented a very large attendance, but the races were conducted with great spirit, although there was little betting.

Western.—A terrific tornado swept over Bureau county, Central Illinois, on Monday, the 11th. Fences were flattened, buildings tumbled into ruins, and trees torn up by the roots. The towns of Knoxville and Galesbury were seriously damaged.

Southern.—Even in North Carolina, where comparative plenty abounds, the prices of food are enormous. Bacon is $5 a pound, butter $6, eggs $3 a dozen, corn $28 a bushel, flour $250 a barrel, molasses $30 a gallon, potatoes $15 a bushel, sugar $12 a pound.

—— The Raleigh Confederate says: "Gen. Morgan is about to make his greatest raid—if successful it will be the greatest blow yet aimed at the North."

Naval.—The French papers publish an article taken from the Opinion Nationale of Paris, which includes official documents, and proves that the French Government is quietly conniving at the efforts of rebel agents to have ironclad war vessels built in France for the rebel service. From the revelations of the Opinion, it appears that firms at Nantes and Bordeaux have been for months at work building war vessels, ostensibly for China, but really for the rebels Mr. Dayton, last fall, laid before the French Government proofs of the real destination of the vessels, and after much delay, the work was stopped by Government orders. But during the last two months, as the Opinion declares, the work has been resumed, and two of the vessels are now ready to be passed over to the rebel agents Lieut. Maury and Capt. Bullock have been prominent in these negotiations. These vessels are ironclad, and the rebel authorities have ordered an entire fleet, which the Government of Napoleon III. seems willing to have built at French ports, in spite of its reiterated desire to maintain a strict neutrality.

Personal.—Judah P. Benjamin, who is now playing a most conspicuous part in the grand drama of the rebellion, delivered a lecture in San Francisco before the war, in which he said, on the subject of disunion, that those who prate of and strive to dissolve this glorious Confederacy of States are like those silly savages who let fly their arrows at the sun, in the vain hope of piercing it, and still the sun rolls on, unheeding, in the eternal pathway, shedding light and heat and animation upon all the world.

—— Mrs. Lizzy Campbell Winter, already favorably known to our readers as a very popular novelist, made her debut at the Olympic on the 11th, as Rosina, in "Our Wife." Her performance was characterised by great vivacity and expression. She has every requisite to make a very charming actress. Her figure and face fit her admirably for parts requiring personal attractions, while her mental qualifications enable her to depict with force and precision the author's meaning.

—— Gen. Robt. E. Lee, the present Commander-in-Chief of the Virginia Confederate forces, was the Colonel who captured Ossawatamie Brown, at Harper's ferry, and handed him over to the Virginia State authorities.

—— Mr Chase, of the Treasury, arrived in New York on the 14th, and returned on the 10th to Washington.

Obituary.—G. T. Ticknor, the well-known Boston publisher, died suddenly at the Continental Hotel, Philadelphia, on the 10th of April.

—— Mr. A. A. Lovett, the Superintendent of the People's Line of Telegraph, died on the 13th of April, of apoplexy, at his office, No. 21 Wall street. Mr. Lovett had long been identified with the telegraphic interests of the country, and during his useful career had endeared himself to a large circle of friends.

—— John C. Rives, of Washington, proprietor of The Congressional Globe, died on April 10, aged 68, of congestion of the lungs. Mr Rives began to reside in Washington in 1824, having come from Edwardsville, Ill., where he was a bank cashier. He received a clerkship in the Fourth Auditor's office, and afterwards was engaged in Duff Green's newspaper office. During the early part of Gen. Jackson's Administration he, with Frank Blair, sr., founded the Globe, of which he had been sole proprietor for three years at the time of his death.

—— The Hon. John Banks, of Pennsylvania, died on the 3d inst. He was born in 1793 In 1813 he commenced law. In 1833 he was sent to Congress. In 1836 he was appointed by Gov. Ritner President Judge of the Third Judicial District of the State, in the fulfilment of which office he gained the esteem and good will of those with whom he was brought in contact. In 1841 he was the Whig candidate for Governor, but was unsuccessful, and in 1847 he became State Treasurer, retiring from the Bench and returning to the Bar, where he at once attained a very large and lucrative practice, which he held to the time of his death.

—— M. M. Marmaduke, formerly Lieutenant-Governor and ex-officio Governor of Missouri, died at his residence in Saline county, on the 26th of March, aged 73 years. Of his three sons, John S. joined the rebel army, H. M. is now in the rebel "navy" and Vincent was banished for disloyalty. The old man, however never faltered in his devotion to the Union, but remained a loyal and true man to the day of his death.

Accidents and Offences.—Daniel Brooks, who was tried for the homicide of Smith, McKinley's bartender, and convicted of manslaughter in the third degree, is sentenced to the State Prison for 4 years.

—— In the case of James Nixon, the lame soldier, tried for the murder of Wm. N. Brown, keeper of the Pewter Mug, the jury find a verdict of manslaughter in the third degree.

Foreign.—In the southern provinces of Russia large discoveries have been made of petroleum.

—— Near Gournay, in France, three large and deep pits have been discovered filled with early Gaulish war hatchets. They were covered over with immense quantities of flints.

—— Mr. Smith O'Brien declined presiding as chairman at a recent meeting of Nationalists in Ireland, alleging that their behavior was more like that of a "mob of ruffians" than that of reasonable men and patriots. In his letter he advises the misguided young men who have joined the Fenian Association to abandon it.

—— The Swiss are at last entering into the ice trade and are exporting large quantities to Paris. The ice is carried over the Central railway, some of the blocks weighing 1,500 pounds.

—— A priest, when returning home in the evening, was stopped by a band of thieves, who began to rifle his pockets. While so occupied, the rascals, perceiving a French patrol approaching, compelled the priest to intone a portion of the Litany, which he did, they kneeling round him meanwhile, and devoutly responding Ora pro nobis! The soldiers taking them for a group of devotees, many of whom thus pray in public, passed on, and the moment they were out of sight the thieves completed their operation, and left the priest without a single bajocco.

—— The Re d'Italia arrived at Gibraltar from New York, after a splendid run of 14 days and 20 hours. Her behavior was admirable.

—— The serfs of Poland have refused the Czar's offer of freedom.

—— The Japanese Ambassadors, with a suite of 50 persons, are telegraphed from Suez Besides Paris, where they are to apologise to the Emperor for the misdeeds of the Tycoon, they are to visit London, Vienna, and also Switzerland, whither they are going to see an existing republic.

—— An Episcopal clergyman near Durham, England, has been handed by the police out of a Methodist New Connection chapel, having forcibly entered and loudly denounced the worship, not being under his charge, as sinful.

—— Prof. Tigri, of Sienna, Italy, has addressed a paper to the Academy of Science of Paris, wherein he declares that he has again found on the bodies of persons who had died of typhoid fever infusoria of the genus Bacterium.

—— A crazy man has been proposing marriage to the English Princess Helena. He is a gunner in the Royal Artillery.

—— Rebel two cent postage stamps are selling in London at two shillings each.

—— A man appeared recently in the streets of Paris clothed in a complete suit of medieval armor. He had been a collector of such things, and his calling had turned his brain.

—— The Sultan lately paid a state visit to the opera at Constantinople. The managers doubled the prices on the occasion, so the indignant Ottomans staid away.

—— Four millions and a half pounds sterling worth of cattle die in England by disease—pleuro-pneumonia the malady generally.

—— It is stated that Field-Marshal Von Wrangel has sent to the Crown Princess of Prussia a Danish cannon-ball which fell near to the Crown Prince while he was making a reconnoissance, and that her Royal Highness has caused the ball to be placed in her drawing-room at the Potsdam Palace.

Art, Science and Literature.—At the recent periodical meeting of the British Electric and International Telegraph Company, it was stated, among other things, that the best marine cables were perishable, and there was a necessity for providing means for replacing them.

—— "Our Mutual Friend" is to be the title of Mr. Charles Dickens's new serial novel. The first number will appear 1st May.

—— Mr. Sothern, the Dundreary of the play, is about to appear as David Garrick, in a play of that name, written for him by Tom Taylor.

—— A deputation, headed by Mr Charles Dickens, is to wait on the Dean of Westminster, relative to a statue or bust of Thackeray in Westminster Abbey.

—— Louis Napoleon's private secretary, Mocquard, has composed a tragedy, entitled "Julius Cæsar." It is to be performed about the same time that the Emperor's life is published.

—— Dr. Mosenthal, the author of "Leah," has written a new play for Miss Bateman.

—— Chlorine decolorizes precious stones, but the diamond, ruby and sapphire resist its influence.

—— Mr. Boucicault has just finished a new drama, called "The Rapparee." It is of the sensation order.

—— François Hugo's French translation of Shakespeare has realised for him 50,000 francs.

—— Prof. Hofman, of London, has patented a process for making a new coloring matter by means of iodine, extracted from seaweed, and which produces a beautiful violet, blue violet, or red violet. The patented process consists of mixing, in certain proportions, the substance called rosaniline with the iodides of ethyl, methyl or amyl. This dye may be used in the same manner as the aniline colors, and is already in the hands of practical people in all the manufacturing districts, and bids fair to be the "color of the season."

—— A Belgium paper says that petroleum oil lamps are affected by music—a certain note on a brass instrument puts them out M. Duhem extinguished eight lamps in succession by the sound of a trumpet. He was one of the late M. Jullien's band, and is professor at the Conservatoire of Music.

Chit-Chat.—The Evening Bulletin of San Francisco, California, issued at 5 o'clock, P. M., each afternoon, has news from New York and the Eastern States up to 8 P. M., or three hours later.

—— A startling "sensation scene" at the Surrey Theatre, Lon., in a drama called "Ashore and Afloat," has been received with a most lively expression of enthusiasm by the transpontine audience. Ruth, the heroine of the piece, is induced by a ruffian to descend into a deserted mine, there expecting to meet with her lover, Hal Oakford. Scarcely has she discovered the deception played upon her, when the water—real water—rushes in upon the scene, and there seems no chance of escape from destruction. At this moment, however, Hal descends in a basket, takes her into it, and calls out to his friends above to pull away. But a beam falls across the shaft, and further ascent seems impossible. There is no time to lose. Another effort. A slash with the sailor's knife cuts away the basket, and the lover and his love, clinging to the rope, are drawn up as the curtain falls amidst uproarious plaudits.

—— The Springfield Union tells the following story: The other evening, while waiting for the train, Henry Ward Beecher lectured some newsboys at the depot for making such a loud noise, in crying their papers. "There's no use making such a noise," said he. "Announce your newspapers in a plain but not boisterous manner, and you will sell them much more readily" His remarks were listened to with respect, and he seemed to have made quite an impression, when he asked, "What is the news tonight?" "Oh!" said one of the urchins, "give me three cents and I'll show you!"

—— There is now in Paris, France, a very lovely and charming young lady, who, from some strange fatality, is destined to go singly through the world, despite all of her attractiveness and exertions. —She is a dark beauty, with magnificent eyes, a glowing cheek, a lively expression, a graceful figure—in fact, altogether endowed with every attraction, even to that of having in her own right $500 000, and being an only daughter, with the prospect of inheriting millions. This fair lady is now about 26 years old, and has been engaged to be married 12 times. Each time the seemingly fortunate lover has died within a few weeks of the time appointed for the nuptial ceremony. Yet no suspicions of the dagger or bowl can be cast upon the fair one; a dark, mysterious fatality has carried them away. Several died of typhoid fever; one was killed in a duel; one was thrown from a horse; two were drowned; two were killed by railway accidents, and one hung himself! The lady has survived all these shocks.

—— To enjoy to-day, stop worrying about to-morrow Next week will be just as capable of taking care of itself as this one is.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR—THE BOAT BUILDERS' DEPARTMENT.

THE STRASBURG CLOCK.

THE priests and military have retired, and I am now sitting in a chair facing the gigantic clock, from the bottom to the top not less than 100 feet, and about 30 feet wide and 15 feet deep. Around me are many strangers waiting to see the working of this clock as it strikes the hour of noon. Every eye is upon the clock. It now wants five minutes to twelve. The clock has struck and the people are gone, except a few whom the orator or head man, with a wand and sword, is conducting round the building.

The clock has struck in this way: The dial is some 20 feet from the floor, on each side of which is a cherub or little boy, with a mallet, and over the dial is a small bell; the cherub on the left strikes the first quarter, that on the right the second quarter. Some 50 feet above the dial, in a large niche, is a huge figure of Time, a bell is in his left, a scythe in his right hand. In front stands a figure of a young man with a mallet, who strikes the third quarter on the bell in the hand of Time, and then turns, and then glides, with a slow step, round behind Time; then comes out an old man with a mallet and places himself in rest.

As the hour of twelve comes the old man raises his mallet and deliberately strikes twelve times on the bell, that echoes through the building, and is heard all round the region of the church. The old man glides slowly behind Father Time, and the young man comes on ready to perform his part as the time comes round again. Soon as the old man has struck twelve and disappeared, another set of machinery is put in motion, some 20 feet higher still.

It is thus: There is a high cross with the image of Christ on it. The instant twelve is struck one of the apostles walks out from behind, comes in front, turns, facing the cross, bows and walks on around to his place. As he does so another comes out in front, turns, bows and passes in. So twelve apostles, figures as large as life, walk round, bow and pass on. As the last appears an enormous cock, perched on the pinnacle of the clock, slowly flaps his wings, stretches forth its neck and crows three times, so loud as to be heard outside the church to some distance, and so naturally as to be mistaken for a real cock. Then all is as silent as death.

No wonder this clock is the admiration of Europe. It was made in 1551, and has performed these mechanical wonders ever since, except about 50 years, when it stood out for repair.

A LETTER from Paris to the Manchester Examiner tells of a visit paid to Madame Grisi, who, with her husband, Mario, is now residing in the magnificent mansion they have recently built and and furnished in the Champs Elysees, at a cost of something like 2,000,000 francs. The great artist, we are told, was to be seen "wandering about the splendid mansion, attired in brown velvet, a la 'Lucrezia Borgia' looking the very personification of royalty—the furniture of the saloons, all after the old fashion, with oak carvings, sombre tapestries and massive gildings, assisting to complete the illusion." In the midst of so much luxury, which a long and arduous career has secured, Grisi still sighs for the excitement of public life. Her voice is wonderfully fresh, and in person[illegible] appearance she is equally remarkable. "Me regilo contenta" is the leading theme of her discourse; and she declares that as soon as the time expires under the arrangement made with Gye, by which she bound herself not to sing in London, the voice of "Norma" shall again be heard in the great city. This will be at the end of 1865.

DR. WEBWELL, walking in Hamilton's garden at Cobham, expressed his surprise at the prodigious growth of the trees.

"My dear sir," replied Hamilton, "remember they have nothing else to do."

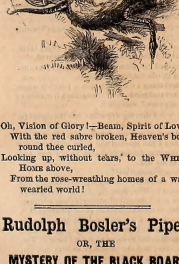
THE CROW A PINE TREE PLANTER.—J. Thomson, of Leeds, says, in the Gardener's Chronicle, that "In one of the pleasant straths of the Highlands of Scotland I have frequently seen great numbers of crows pass over my head, carrying in their bills to a neighboring hill something like a potato. I first thought that they did actually carry potatoes there for the convenience of eating them; but on a closer observation I saw them dig a hole in the ground with their beaks and then deposit what appeared to be a potato, but which, on examination, proved to be cones from fir trees. For what purpose they planted them there I am unable to say, but the result was that in a few years young firs began to spring up in all directions. A beginning thus made, the hill was planted and inclosed, and is now covered with a beautiful and thriving plantation of fir."

AT a recent ball in Paris the Marquis de Boissy, who married the Countess Guiccioli, appeared in his grandfather's coat. The Emperor said, "Marquis, that coat makes you very conspicuous!" "Yes, sire," returned the crazy old aristocrat, "and if your Majesty were to appear in your grandfather's coat you would be as conspicuous as I am." This allusion to Louis Napoleon's humble origin caused only a smile.

THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR—THE CURIOSITY SHOP.—SEE PAGE 81.

THE NEW SONG.

BY WILLIAM ROSS WALLACE.



We must have a new song: but of what shall it be?
Of the plighted at twilight beside the lone tree?
Pressing hands, breathing vows, sheening all things with gold,
Doing just as the world did in ages of old?

We must have a new song: shall it ring with the fight—
Bounding on, burning on for the wrong and the right,
While the Earth shudders wild at their terrible tread,
And the proud sun, uncaring, looks down on the dead?

We must have a new song: shall it bubble with mirth,
Like a fountain's coil leaping to sunlight from Earth?
Or with sorrow shall all its long measures be breathed,
Like a lone, rayless river through caves
darkly wreathed?

We must have a new song: yet, oh, try as we will,
The themes will but bear the same old burdens still—
Truth, battle, ambition, star-breathed or cloud-hurled,
Since the Devil and Michael fought for the world.

We must have a new song: then, a theme give in this—
But one moment of love o'er the whole of Earth's sod:
Oh, then may you hear a New Song of such bliss
That its stream might have burst from the mountain of God!

Oh, Vision of Glory!—Beam, Spirit of Love,
With the red sabre broken, Heaven's bow round thee curled,
Looking up, without tears, to the WHITE HOUSE above,
From the rose-wreathing homes of a war-
wearied world!

Rudolph Bosler's Pipe;

OR, THE

MYSTERY OF THE BLACK BOAR.

By John L. Zieber.

THERE were assembled one evening at the Black Boar Tavern, at Heidelberg, some half dozen cattle drovers, who had just profitably disposed of their stock, and had come to the tavern—their usual resort—to count their proceeds.

They were all acquaintances, although they did business separately. The room they sat in was a sort of private apartment; not strictly so, but to which no stranger had access, especially during the meetings of the drovers.

On the evening mentioned only one other person beside themselves was present; a sleepy-looking fellow, named Rudolph Bosler. He was about forty years of age, and known to the inhabitants of Heidelberg. Rudolph was a constant visitor at the Black Boar, and, consequently, was well known to all who resorted there. He was an especial favorite with the cattle drovers, to whom he usually related tales and legends of the Black Forest and Hartz Mountains.

Bosler was never seen without his pipe, a long-stemmed and broad-bowled one. He usually sat at one end of the table smoking, while the drovers occupied the other end. He watched them intently as they heaped their coins of gold in piles of equal amounts on the table before them, and occasionally he would take the pipe from his mouth, and touch one of the piles of gold with the bowl, and say

"There are but eleven on that pile."

Sometimes the drover insisted there were a dozen, and to prove his words he would count them, and the result was always in Rudolph's favor. He then gave a quiet chuckle at the perplexity of the man, and replacing his pipe—the stem in his mouth, and the broad, heavy bowl in his right hand for support, he would resume his smoking and watching, ever and anon correcting the counters, always indicating the deficient pile by touching it with the bowl of his pipe. He was enabled to do this by reason of the extreme length of the stem. He could not have reached the money with his hand from where he sat. He had always maintained a respectable distance from the piles of coin while the drovers were engaged in counting it. After that was over they always had a merry time over some Rhine wine with Herr Rudolph, who always paid his way with the rest, and repaid them with his inexhaustible stock of stories.

Rudolph Bosler was the life of the Black Boar, and an ever welcome companion to all who knew him. He was a bachelor, and might have remained one to his dying day had not the black eyes of the daughter of mine host of the Black Boar played the deuce with his heart and taken it captive.

Mina Casper was a pretty brunette of twenty summers, and secretly loved a young man of her neighborhood, who waited till he could call a hundred guilders his own, when he would demand Mina's hand from her father.

Heinrich Casper, her father, knew nothing of her attachment to the handsome Fritz Wolff, and when Rudolph Bosler asked to pay his court to the pretty Mina he received the full consent of her father, to the overwhelming grief of the daughter.

"Father," she would say, "I cannot think of marrying a man old enough to be my father. He is good enough, I don't doubt, but I can't love him."

"If you think now," her father would reply, "but once his wife you will soon learn to know your duty."

But Mina was as firmly resolved not to marry Herr Bosler as her father was that she should. She at once wrote a letter to her lover, who served in a town some two days' travel from Heidelberg. She stated how matters stood, and urged him to come to her aid, if he could do so without incurring the loss of his place.

Fritz needed no second bidding, but at once resigned his situation, and returned to his native place.

He and Mina met, and held a serious consultation, which ended in Fritz obtaining a situation in the house of Heinrich Casper, who did not know that he had voluntarily admitted an enemy into the camp. The young folks had kept their loves a profound secret from all, and now being inmates of the same house, they took care not to arouse the suspicions of the landlord, which might mar all their plans for the future and hasten the catastrophe they so earnestly strove to avert.

"Resist all his advances," Fritz would say to his sweetheart, "and if it comes to the worst, and the old fellow is determined to marry you, I'll manage to serve him a trick which will at least delay his wedding-day."

Fritz had been a servant at the Black Boar about two months when our story opens.

The drovers had nearly completed their counting on the evening in question when one of them remarked:

"Rudolph Bosler has a quick eye, and can detect miscounts well. I should like to have him tell us now how he does it, by the size of the pile or by seeing us count wrong?" Then addressing the man directly, he said, "Tell us, Rudolph, how is it?"

"I have nothing to do but watch you and discover the mistake," was the quiet reply.

"Could you detect one among a dozen or more placed in a row, if all had an equal number save that one?" was the next question.

"Yes," replied Bosler.

"From where you sit?"

"Yes."

The drover arranged some fifteen piles of gold in rows, and asked Rudolph to point out the one that had eleven. The smoker touched six of them before he hit on the pile containing the odd number. His guesses were at an interval of a minute or so. After placing his pipe on one, and a shake of the head from the drover would indicate that it was the wrong one; Rudolph would place the stem in his mouth and the bowl in his right hand—as was his custom—and giving a few whiffs, he would repeat the operation until the right pile had been touched.

Several days after the last-named drover came to the landlord of the Black Boar, and made the following mysterious inquiries:

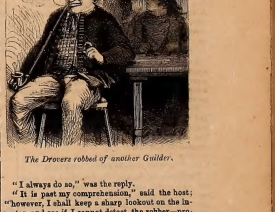
"Have you any suspicious persons attached to your tavern?"

"Explain yourself," was the response.

"I have lost nearly one hundred guilders since I stopped at your house last, and I can't for my life see how it could have happened. I must have been robbed in your house."

"Such a grave charge is hard to bear," remarked the landlord; "were it known that a robber visited my tavern I should lose all my custom. Let me hear your reasons for thinking the robbery took place under my roof."

"I had twenty packages of gold, each one containing twelve pieces, save one. When I came to pay them away for cattle yesterday five of the rolls contained but eleven pieces!"



"And are you certain you counted them right?" asked Casper.

"Quite certain, for Rudolph Bosler was present, and nothing escapes his quick eye," was the reply.

"You slept in your old room?" queried Casper.

"Yes."

"And bolted your door inside?"

The Drovers robbed of another Guilder.

"I always do so," was the reply.

"It is past my comprehension," said the host; "however, I shall keep a sharp lookout on the inmates, and see if I cannot detect the robber—providing he is in the house. In the meantime say nothing of this; if the money is not recovered in a fortnight I will pay you all you have lost."

"You, Heinrich Casper!" exclaimed the drover, in surprise, as he regarded the landlord suspiciously.

"I've said so, and I'll keep my word," said Casper.

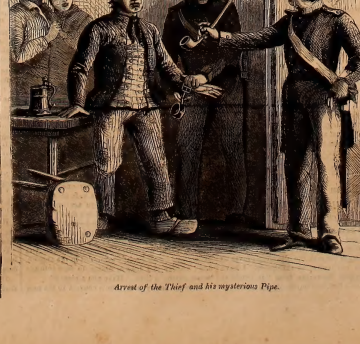
"But why should you do so?" asked the drover.

"To save the reputation of my house," replied the landlord.

"Very well," was the rejoinder. "I hope you may discover the robber, for your sake as well as my own."

The drover left the house, half suspecting the landlord of the Black Boar for the robber himself, a suspicion he subsequently imparted to his companions in trade, who, with one accord, agreed to patronize some other tavern should they meet with a similar loss during their sojourn at the Black Boar.

A month later eight of them met on the same evening at the tavern of Heinrich Casper, and he, not having discovered the thief, and consequently not recovered the money stolen from the drover, paid that person one hundred guilders out of his savings.



The drover took the money, and was more firmly convinced that Casper was in some manner connected with the robbery. They agreed to lay a trap for him that night after retiring.

After supper they went to the room to count their gold, Rudolph being present, and, as usual, with his unwieldy pipe in his mouth and hand. The robbery was made known to him, admonishing him to keep the affair a secret. Rudolph was astonished at the disclosure, but he stoutly took the part of Heinrich Casper. "No man more honest than he could be found in Heidelberg."

The gold lay in piles on the table before the men and the process of counting began. Rudolph

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUM PRESENTED BY THE EMPLOYES OF MESSRS E. & H. T. ANTHONY TO THE METROPOLITAN SANITARY FAIR.—SEE PAGE 81.

Arrest of the Thief and his mysterious Pipe.

smoked and watched as usual, occasionally inflicting a short pile, and never making a mistake.

One of the men was an expert fellow, and he prided himself on his accuracy in counting. One pile touched by Rudolph as short of the required number the man insisted on containing twelve.

"Count them," said Rudolph, quietly replacing the stem of his pipe in his mouth.

The pile was counted, and there were but eleven! The man looked perplexed; he was positive he had counted twelve; however, there were only eleven, and no one had touched them to remove any; in fact, it could not have been done without being seen by all around the table.

The drover grew suspicious of some trick about the table, and proceeded to examine it thoroughly, but the ordinary piece of furniture was only an ordinary table, and contained no secret recesses or spring-traps. Rudolph laughed when the drover had concluded his search, and said:

"No, no, Herr Klein, it is no fault of that poor table, it lies in your wrong counting."

"I cannot count right," replied Klein.

"That no one gainsays," said Rudolph, "but the best of us err sometimes."

Klein finished the counting of his money, packed it up and left the room, bestowing a curious glance on the smoker and his pipe. Calling the landlord on one side he held a whispered conversation with him for some ten minutes, the landlord shaking his head as if incredulous at what Klein had said to him. The drover went out into the yard, and encountering Fritz, drew him into conversation. The eyes of the young man sparkled as the drover appeared to explain something to him, and finally they parted, shaking hands on some bargain they had evidently made.

That evening Fritz was unusually animated, and meeting Max he announced to her that he had a fair prospect soon to claim her hand.

"It seems to me then," said she, with tears in her eyes, "to my father said this morning that Rudolph was getting impatient of delay, and demanded that he within two weeks."

"Put ii' of that long," said her lover, "and one of two things I'll promise you; either Rudolph will give his consentanion to your hand or I shall run away with you, and marry you in spite of him and your father."

Miss Max smiled at Fritz's earnestness, but she saw nothing short of a miracle that would save her from the impending misery her father had planned for her.

"Trust in Providence," was the parting salutation of her lover, as he left her in tears.

* * * * *

It was the night before the wedding between Rudolph and Mina was to take place. The drovers, ten in number, arrived at the Black Boar. Rudolph was in a merry mood this evening; he had evidently been drinking freely during the day.

The drovers had all learned of the contemplated wedding, and they congratulated him, wishing him many happy years and a numerous family. Klein insisted on drinking a bottle of wine with him, and Rudolph, nothing loth, consented.

After the bottle was finished the ringing of gold was heard, as the drovers laid their respective piles on the table.

Rudolph, as usual, pointed out short piles, and amid many laughs at their own stupidity the merry drovers packed up their gold, and stowed it away in bags, which they then secured about their persons.

Klein was the last one to remove his money; he had ten piles, and putting them in a circle, he asked Rudolph could he point out the short one. The smoker touched eight of the ten before he guessed at the one.

"Now I shall count them over again," said Klein, "in order to make sure of being right."

The drover did so, and found seven of the piles with only eleven pieces! and the short one had but ten instead of eleven pieces; the two piles that had not been touched by Rudolph's pipe had twelve pieces. Here was a mystery!

Klein looked at his companions, who in turn looked at the smiling Rudolph Boeler sat smoking his pipe, regarding all with a quiet demeanour.

Klein cast an anxious glance at the door leading into the bar-room, as if he expected the entrance of some one; presently the door opened, and Fritz entered, followed by two policemen. Before the party could recover from their surprise the officers had seized Rudolph Boeler, and taking his pipe from him placed a pair of handcuffs on his wrists.

"Gentlemen," cried he, pale as a sheet, "what can you mean to offer me this violence?"

"You'll find out presently," was the reply.

They took him before a magistrate, where his person was searched and some two dozen pieces of gold found on him. The pipe was handed to the magistrate, who, after examining it, gave his head a solemn shake, and darted a furious glance at the prisoner.

Rudolph Boeler was at once committed to prison.

Now to explain the mystery of Boeler's arrest. The drover Klein felt a sort of dislike to Rudolph, and had it not been for the rest of the drovers would have objected to his presence during the counting and packing of their money. Finally, he entered his head that it was a strange occurrence that he and his companions should make so many miscounts, which should always first be detected by Rudolph Boeler.

The more he thought of it the stranger it appeared. Resolving not to say anything to his comrades, he closely watched the sleepy smoker one evening, and although he could detect the mode adopted by the thief, he could not positively swear that Rudolph took the money.

However, he saw enough to convince him that Rudolph Boeler had made it a practice to pilfer from them at every meeting, and he vowed to lay a trap for him and bring the thief to condign punishment.

To do this effectually he made a confidante of the landlord, and had great difficulty in convincing that person of Rudolph's guilt.

"I can scarcely believe it," remarked Casper; "but if you are sure of what you tell me I shall afford you every aid in my power to detect the rogue."

Have you time to watch him to-night for me?" asked Klein.

"No," replied Casper. "I am all alone in the bar, but any other time I am at your service."

"Have you any one about the house that I could rely on to take the part of a spy on him?"

"Why, yes, I was the night," Fritz Wolf, my man-servant, a likely lad; he will answer your purpose, I'm sure."

Fritz was called into the lower of Mina, and during the interview learned how matters stood between Mina and him. Klein obtained Fritz's promise to aid him in watching Boeler in the act, then gave him a promise to effect a compromise with Casper, by which he, Fritz, should become the husband of Mina Casper, with the full consent of her father.

This is what caused the young man to be in such good spirits when he met his sweetheart shortly after.

On the evening of Boeler's arrest Fritz took a position behind a covered chair, from where he could observe every movement made by Rudolph, and this is what he saw:

Rudolph's pipe—as we have stated—was broad in the bowl, and on the bottom of the bowl he had placed a substance of a remarkably adhesive nature. When he placed his pipe on a pile of gold one of the pieces adhered to the bottom of it, and then replacing the pipe in his mouth, and dropping the heavy bowl in his right hand, he was enabled to remove the coin and stealthily drop it into his breeches' pocket, after which the pipe was in order again for another journey to the money heaps. When the harvest of gold was ripe for the time. Two policemen counted a false bottom on the bowl of the pipe, effectually concealing the trap.

Fritz Wolf saw all this plainly. Klein had only suspected something of the kind.

When Klein had made the discovery of the theft he gave a preconcerted signal, which, being understood by Fritz, the latter immediately crawled from his place of concealment and left the room by a door near him, leading into another apartment.

Two policemen awaited Fritz's entry to do their part in the play, and Fritz soon joined them and announced everything ready. They entered the room, and the leader said to Rudolph:

The eight pieces of gold Boeler stole from Klein had all been marked underneath by the drover. The marks he exhibited to the two officers, in the presence of Fritz Wolf and the landlord.

These pieces were subsequently found on the person of the thief.

Rudolph Boeler was imprisoned for life. He had, previous to his incarceration, made a full confession of his guilt. He had arrived at such perfection in practice for fifteen years without detection, and in the meantime had accumulated five thousand pounds, all of which he returned to such as he had at different times robbed.

Through the intercession of Herr Klein, Casper gave the pretty Mina to her lover as a dowry with her, and Fritz became a partner in the business in a year afterwards.

The Black Boar became famous after that; many came there out of sheer curiosity, after the mystery of the Black Boar had been unravelled.

The pipe of Rudolph Boeler was placed behind the bar, and many a customer examined the ingenious article with admiration.

"AT THE LAST."

"Men goeth forth unto its work;
And to his labor, until the evening."

THE stream is calmest when it nears the tide,
The flowers are sweetest at the close,
The birds are most musical at close of day,
And saints divinest when they pass away.

Morning is lovely, but a holier charm
Lies folded close in Evening's robe of balm;
Night wears no terror on her starry breast
For morning calls to toil, but night to rest.

She comes from heaven, and on her wings doth bear
A holy fragrance, like the breath of prayer;
Footsteps of angels follow in her trace,
To shut the weary eyes of God's own peace.

All things are hushed before her, as she throws
O'er earth and sky her mantle of repose;
There is a calm, a beauty and a power,
That morning knows not in the evening hour.

"Until the evening" we must weep and toil,
Plough life's stern furrow, dig the weedy soil,
Tread with sad feet our rough and thorny way,
And bear the heat and burden of the day.

On, when our sun is setting, may we glide,
Like summer evening, down the golden tide;
And leave behind us, as we pass away,
Sweet, starry twilight round our sleeping clay.

A LITTLE FLIRTATION.

How it Began and How it Ended.

By William Wirt Sikes.

CHAPTER I.

TO-NIGHT I have been again to the opera. The music has pulsed as beautifully as of old through the wide auditorium of the great theatre. Beauty has shone to-night beneath the gleaming groves of chandeliers, as brilliantly, as thrillingly. I have seen the bouquets showering from fair hands at the prima donna's feet, and bursts of applause have been stirring the perfumed waves of the lighted air.

There was a time when this gay scene was full of attraction for me. Why was it different to-night?

I looked for her face. She was not there! Oh, my beautiful, my bird!

Ten years ago my heart leaped into the life of love beneath the starry gaze of Berthese Broughton. It was at Saratoga. I was then the reigning belle of the season; the queen of ball and promenade.

One day I was walking arm in arm with my friend Joe Beecher, smoking a fragrant cigar, when we were passed by a carriage, in which were seated two ladies and two gentlemen. The pair that occupied the back seat I did not see, for their faces were hidden as they swept by. But the lady on the front seat turned upon me, I thought, a look of ardent admiration from her deep brown eyes—a glance that seemed to take in my whole being with its fiery sweep, and to read my heart to the core. Her companion I recognized as a member of the last Legislature at Albany; a man with whom I had some dealings during the late session, and for whom I had little regard. I saw her turn to him, and from the look he instantly bent upon me I knew she had asked him who I was. I did not hear her.

"Who's that, Joe?" I asked my companion.

"What? Who?" said Joe, who was looking another way.

"In that carriage with the Honorable Snodgrass. Who is she?"

"Don't know. Oh, you don't know the Broughton—our belle this season?" with an emphasis on the "our."

"Our belle?" said I, inquiringly, for I was but a day or two arrived.

"Why, certainly, our belle. There's two parties you must know, as soon as possible—a blonde and a brunette—blue-eyed and dark-eyed. I go the brunette every time. I've a passion for brown eyes."

"Have you?" said I; "well, now, my favorite color is blue. Violet eyes and all that, you know. Mighty pretty girls. You ever hear of a dark-eyed angel, my boy? It's incongruous. Azure skies, blue eyes, and angels, always go together, you know."

"Oh, I suppose it's all right. Tastes differ. I don't go poetry very strong, you're aware; and as for angels, why, as long as I'm in the land I prefer a woman to an angel any day. But if you want to enlist in the ranks of the blue-eyed belle, I'll take Penelope Broughton for you."

"Is she?" I asked, following the brown-eyed belle with my eyes.

"To-night, at the Congress hop. You'll find her a lovely creature, I confess. I do justice to the enemy. I expect you to fall in love with her.

"I am crazy to know her," said I, enthusiastically, my heart already in the receding carriage of the brunette.

"They say she's quite a taste for your style of fellow—something of talking art and poetry, and all that. Swillis is very sweet on her, they say." (Swillis was a poet.)

"Ah, is he indeed? Would that I were by her side!" and I heaved a little sigh, for the carriage and the brown eyes were out of sight.

"Introduce me," was my good as their word. I danced with the blue-eyed. Her name was Belle Smith. She evidently thought me a rather slow fellow, yawned, and I did the same, and talked out-and-dried nonsense at her without the least idea what I said. The fact is, I was looking for the brown-eyed belle.

I found her at last, surrounded by a circle of admirers, among whom was the Honorable Snodgrass.

Joe led her on for the quadrille, presently. When he had seated her again, I rushed to him.

"Introduce me," I whispered, eagerly.

"Why, I thought I had!" said he, opening wide his black eyes.

"Yes, I know—to the Smith. But I want to be introduced to the enemy."

"Oh! certainly," and we walked that way.

"Walt still there, confounded Snodgrass in out of the way," I whispered.

"Oh, don't mind him. Come on! Miss Broughton, let me—"

She raised her queenly eyes and gave me a thrilling look.

"I warn you!" said Joe to the lady; "White's a spy in our camp. He's a believer in blue eyes, angels and poetry."

"Oh, the scamp! I pinched his arm fiercely; and then tried to rally, my wits for a counter-stroke to this ugly hit. But before I had opened my mouth she fell on my ear, sweet as a bell, soothing and low.

"So am I, Mr. White. We shall agree capitally."

Thought I, that's done better than I could have done for myself; and I held my peace accordingly.

She turned away from me almost at the instant, to listen to Snodgrass. Hang the fellow!

I found before the week had ended that Miss Broughton had selected me for a flirtee. I was not vain enough to ascribe this honor to any other cause than the peculiar manner of my introduction; for I knew what trifles will often give direction to the female fancy.

I led a happy life.

"By George, Ned," said Beecher one morning, "you're a deserter. I leave you safe in the blue camp, and the next I know you are one of the most faithful of the brunets. How's this? Angels are succumbing to flesh and blood—eh?"

"Pshaw, Joe," I replied to this sally; "don't you place too much faith in my loyalty to your queen. I am a student of human nature, you know; and being prettily grounded in the angelic, don't wonder if I take a notion to look into the earth-earthy a little. Have you a cigar?"

"Beware lest you become a convert to the new faith, then," said Joe, as he took the weed. Give' a light, will you?"

One evening, at twilight, we sat—the brown-eyed and I—by one of the windows of her private parlor, holding delicious chat. This was early in our acquaintance. Presently a dark shadow loomed at our side, and the coarse voice of Snodgrass broke the sacred quiet.

"Chawming evening, Miss Broughton! How are you, White?"

I nodded to him.

"How you startled us, Mr. Snodgrass!" said the belle. "Yes, she said "us." "Won't you be seated?"

"Naw, thank you," said he; "been taking a nap; dawn't feel very tired; stretch my legs."

Then he began a dawdling conversation on one thing and another of no interest or consequence; and Miss Broughton talked to him without addressing a syllable to me.

There was something in the fellow's air which jarred harshly on my nerves—a sort of an indefinable assumption of authority there, as if he had a right to monopolize the lady's conversation; while she, on her part, seemed to accept the privilege recognizing his right, and doing her best to please him.

Finding that I was being quietly ignored, I was about to withdraw, when I felt a gentle tap on my hand, which rested on the window-ledge. The lady was slipping her closed fan to and fro between her fingers, and every time it fell it touched my hand.

The twilight deepened. Snodgrass suggested lights.

"Oh, no! Pray, don't," said Miss Broughton. "I do love the twilight, so."

"But it's awfully dark."

"Oh, it's no matter. Let us enjoy it a little longer—do."

And as she said it I felt her little hand creep along the window-ledge, till its soft side rested against my own, while she tapped away idly with her fan.

Mischievous little hand, how its soft touch thrilled me! Remember, I was already adoring her. Already her warm eyes had built a fire in my heart; and now, to have the velvety bit of her touching my fingers! Flesh and blood! Oh, Joe, Joe!

Of course she was utterly unaware that her hand was against mine. Or did she do it purposely, to hold me by her side—at her feet, as it were—while she chatted unceasingly to Snodgrass? "You wretched little coquette," I murmured to myself, "is that it?"

I resolved to test the matter. Emboldened by the darkness I raised my hand an inch or so, and rested the side of my hand upon the back of hers. She took no notice, and I nearly doubled the bit of warm flesh under my eager palm, at the same time spreading her fan so as to hide the performance. She gave a little downward pressure of my palm—upon my life I could not help it!—and then rose abruptly.

"Going out, White?" said Snodgrass, taking my vacant chair.

I stammered something about an appointment, and left the room.

"Good evening, Mr. White," in her sweet voice, came through the open door as I disappeared.

"Confound the woman first!" I muttered to myself, and strode out into the street.

The first thing I did was to get a position where I could see that window. "Snodgrass's hand comes next, I suppose," thought I.

But I found that my departure was the signal for lights. They had withdrawn from the window.

Our flirtation got on amazingly. It was not long before I had reached the point which allowed me to take that fairest of hands in my own and caress it, to my lips.

Oh! happy memories!

Did you ever flirt at the Springs with the reigning belle, reader? Well, then, you know. As for those who have not, I despair of conveying any adequate conception of the fascinations of the amusement.

All things have an end, and the time came at last for departure from the Springs. How well I remember that last evening with her I loved! Yes, I did love her, and she professed to love me, too, though not with the deep enthusiasm of my own stormy nature, I fancied. We were in her drawing-room alone; and it was another hand-in-hand. We sat on a tête-à-tête in the shadow, but not to-night before the window.

"Birdie," she said, "we must part now, and I cannot see you alone again. Others will be here this evening, and to-morrow morning you know I take the early train for Albany."

"Yes, I know. I wish this hour could last for ever, my Berdie! My heart will rest in shadow after you are gone."

"You have my address. You will not forget me?"

"Forget you! Oh, Berdie! why will you not promise to be my wife?"

"I cannot promise. Wait till you see me in my home."

"You bid me hope?"

"I"—she hesitated. Then she said, "yes, I bid you hope. I can say no less."

She rose as she spoke, and I understood the meaning of the movement.

"Good-bye, Berdie. I love you—you know how I love you—and I may hope."

"Good-bye, dear Eddie, till we meet again."

Her head rested for a moment on my shoulder—her heart beat for a moment against mine—and then I left her.

It was my first parting with any woman that I had truly loved, and it shook me strangely. But I determined it should not be a long separation.

She lived in one of the beautiful villages on the Hudson side. My own home was in New York.

CHAPTER II.

Two weeks had elapsed when I visited Londale, booked myself at the hotel, and strolled up the street leading to the Broughton residence.

In a few minutes I sat in an elegant parlor by my Berdie's side, with her kiss warm upon my lips.

Half an hour later, as I held her hand in mine and looked into those deep brown eyes, I said to her:

"Berdie, I have seen you in your home. That condition is fulfilled. Now will you tell me—will you be my wife?"

She bowed her beautiful head upon my shoulder, but was silent.

"Tell me, my own," I whispered, with an expectant thrill, "does this mean yes?"

She raised her head quickly, and drew away from me with a strange, frightened look in her eyes.

"Oh, why do you make me tell you?" she said, distress in her tone.

"Tell me? What?" I whispered.

"I am to be married next month," she exclaimed, with an effort.

I started to my feet.

"To whom?" I asked.

"To Mr. Snodgrass," she answered, her eyes upon the floor.

I stood gazing on her, astounded.

She glanced up timidly at me, and smiled, as if she would disarm my face of its frown.

I turned to go.

She sprang forward and threw her arms about my neck.

"Eddie," she cried, "I cannot help it—indeed I cannot. Do not be angry with me. You will break my heart if you leave me so, for I can never see you again."

"And why should you care whether you see me again or not?" I asked, in a chilling tone.

"Oh, I do care! My heart is not dead! You must not go away and be angry with me. For pity's sake! Have you no forgiveness?"

"What need I forgive?"

"My deceit! I have deceived you, Eddie. I commenced a flirtation with you because at the Springs everybody flirts; and when I found out that I loved you I could not let you go till I was compelled to. I deceived you, for I was engaged to Mr. Snodgrass all the time. Oh, how wicked, how wicked I have been!"

She sank upon the sofa and burst into an agony of tears.

I stood silent, shaken by a tumult of contending passions. I could not at that moment bestow sympathy upon the woman who had so bitterly wronged me.

"No! Don't go away angry," she pleaded, raising her head and showing her brown eyes full of sparkling tears. "I cannot bear it. Be my friend still, Eddie. I know I am selfish to ask it of you, you whose rich love I have insulted; but you are good, you are generous, promise that you will not not be my enemy, not hate me. Oh, forgive me, for I am sincerely repentant; and believe me, in spite of all that seems, that you are dear to me, and always will be dear to me."

I could not but pity her—that queenly woman, bowed before me in tears, supplicating for the poor boon of my friendship. I gave it.

"Yes, I will be your friend," I said, "and I will think of you kindly. My loss I will bury deep down in my heart and try to bear the sorrow from which my life has been hitherto free. My friend, I forgive you all."

"Cold, cold word!" she murmured, dreamily, with clasped hands, and then she lifted her head and said: "I thank you—oh, how I thank you! You are good and true."

"And now good-bye," I whispered; I could not speak aloud.

She drew a brilliant diamond from her finger, and said, in a low tone:

"Eddie, will you take this ring and give me that upon your finger?"

It was a plain gold circlet that I wore, and I looked at her hesitatingly.

"Please do," she added; "and let this be a sign of our friendship. I may never see you on earth again, or if I do it may be in a position where we cannot exchange words. If such a meeting should occur look at my hand, and if you see your ring slipped half-way off my finger answer that mute sign of my continued regard for you by slipping the diamond partly off, as I do your ring. By that sign, whatever our circumstances, I shall know that you are my friend."

I acquiesced, and we parted so.

Years fled:

"And no man can be always sad
Unless he wills to have it so."

Time did the work of healing upon my wounded heart, and though I did not love again and did not marry I was at last able to remember her calmly.

CHAPTER III.

It was eight years before I saw Berthene Broughton again.

I returned in midwinter from a long, long ramble to the distant corners of the world. I had almost forgotten that early fancy at the Springs. Mrs. Snodgrass was now no more to me than any other woman of my past acquaintance.

One night I went to the opera—alone. The theatre was gay with fashion and beauty. Every color of the rainbow shone in the brilliant cloaks and hats, and fluttering fans waved the air, laden with a thousand perfumes. I looked listlessly around upon the sea of faces, but they were all strangers to me; eight years produce great changes in the aspect of the fashionable world.

In the box opposite me I noticed a particularly brilliant party, upon whom many a lorgnette was turned admiringly. Yielding to the prevailing sentiment, I raised my glass to scrutinise the party more closely. There was one woman who seemed to be the centre of attraction in the little group, and who wore a queenly beauty. There was something familiar about her manner which caused me to look at her still more closely; but I did not recognise the face. My gaze wandered over her faultless costume and graceful figure, and rested upon a hand from which she was withdrawing a spotless glove. The kid removed, a finger was raised and a ring slipped slowly half-way off!

Instantly the link was supplied. I looked at her face again. Yes, it was her.

She raised her hand to her hair, with the still loose ring upon the finger, and seemed to await a reply. I answered the signal with the diamond I wore. Then she faintly beckoned to me, and with her eyes she said even more distinctly:

"Come to me!"

As soon as the act drop fell I left my seat, and, crossing the theatre, I entered the box. They were all strangers to me in the box except herself. She said a quiet word of introduction to her friends, and offered me a seat that was vacant at her side.

There was no exhibition on either her part or mine of any other feeling than a commonplace friendship. We spoke on all the most ordinary topics of the season; I do not remember now exactly what they were; they were of no consequence. We called each other simply "Mrs. Snodgrass" and "Mr. White," just as any one would do.

"Is Mr. Snodgrass well?" I asked.

"Quite well, thank you. He will be here before the opera is through to attend me home. He could not stay; he has such a press of business."

"Then it is his seat I occupy?"

"Yes, sir."

In a few minutes I bade her good evening, to return to my seat.

"Good evening, sir," she replied. "I should be happy to have you call and see us. I will give you my address. Why, I have no cards with me! What a blunder! I will write an address on the corner of the playbill; that will answer for all practical needs."

She scribbled with her pencil a moment and thrust the playbill into my hand. When I had returned to my former seat I read it. She had written at a furious pace in that hasty moment, and I could barely decipher the words:

"If there still exists any bitterness in your heart towards me, forgive me now, for your injured love is avenged. Outwardly I am gay, but my laugh mocks the pain of my bursting heart. Oh, I would give worlds could I lay my head on your true breast and cry myself asleep like a little child. I cannot see you—dare not have you call. But if you feel any kindness for me, do me this favor: come often to the opera, and let me look upon your still dear form. This is all the happiness that remains for me on earth. Can you deny me, Eddie?"

I raised my eyes and glanced towards her. She was laughing gaily at Formes in that droll spinning-wheel scene—the opera was Flotow's "Martha." But she glanced towards me, and raised my ring to her lips, then let the fair hand flutter down upon her bosom, above her throbbing heart.

I made no answering signal, but the remainder of the opera fell unheeded on my ear.

Was this coquetry? I queried of myself. Or did she really love me so and live a daily lie and wear an hourly mask?

I was an idler, and every night found me at the opera. Each day I thought I should not go again; but each night I went. She was always there, and always pressed my ring to her lips as if to express her gratitude.

Was she only a coquette? How I revolved this question in my mind, and could not solve it.

At last the season ended, and I saw her no more, and was forgetting her again.

One day I received the following note:

"EDDIE—I am free! Come and see me to-night, and I will return your ring, for which I soon shall have no further need. It is the last request of
"BERTHENE."

Her card was enclosed.

So Snodgrass was dead, was he? And now this woman, about to enter society in the rôle of a fascinating young widow, wished to divest herself of my friendship and give me back my ring and take her own. Did she think she could call me straight to her, as a master whistles to his dog? I resolved to wait a week or two before paying my respects.

But when night came and I strolled out upon the steps of my hotel, and pressing on my kids, debated where best to kill the time, a Fifth avenue 'bus drew up to the curb, and while a passenger entered the driver lifted his finger to me. Such trifling circumstances guide the movements of an idler, and I entered the stage, and left it again at her door.

The servant informed me Mrs. Snodgrass was at home to no one, but when he looked at my card his manner changed, and he said:

"Oh! would you be kind enough to wait a moment?" and ushered me into a drawing-room.

He returned in a minute, and asked me to follow him. Having shown me into a luxurious boudoir, he retired.

So my lady received me in her chamber? I began to feel something very like disgust for the boldness of the woman.

The light was dim, and I did not at first discern objects clearly, for the chamber was a spacious one.

Presently I became conscious of the gaze of a pair of eloquent eyes from a queenly head which rested on a pillow of the bed. She beckoned to me, and I approached.

She raised her snowy arms and folded me to her beating heart, whispering, "Eddie, Eddie! my own Eddie! I knew you would come! No, you shall not break away. I can tell you my love now. Hush! I can speak now, for I am dying. Your head is on my breast, your heart beats with mine. I am so happy—so happy!"

"Dying!"

It was all I could find voice to say.

"Dying! In my Eddie's arms. Happy—so happy!"

Her strength was gone, and her arms dropped lifelessly upon the white sheet.

I was drawing away, but she grasped my hand, and clinging to it, whispered—oh! how earnestly—"Do not leave me!"

Ah! blissful hour of thrilling pain! I can tell no more.

Before midnight her soul passed to the God who gave it. Not once had she relaxed her hold upon my hand.

And that night I knew how much of Berthene Broughton was coquette—how much pure woman.

I shall never forget you, lost Berdie!

EXEMPT.

BY JOHN W. WATSON.

"GRAN'FATHER! gran'father, hear the good news;
Papa is exempt from the draft!
They gave him a paper to show it is so,
And a man in a uniform laughed.
Now, gran'father, why did the officer laugh,
And why did papa look so sad?
He has proven that he is a month too old,
And it ought to have made him feel glad."

"Why gran'father! why do you knit up your brow,
And frown when you hear the good news?
Had his name gone into the drawing wheel
You wouldn't have father to lose!
There's mother, and you, and Nell, and me,
We ought to be glad that the law
Has said that papa is too old to fight,
And will let him stay home from the war."

"My boy, when the shout of the millions arose,
To answer the tap of the drum,
And the boom of the parricide cannon was heard
To echo the entreaty—'Come!'
Where now would we be had the strength of the land
Unblushingly gathered aloof?
Our hearths would be drabbled in innocent blood,
And the torch would have fed on the roof.

"Where now would the twenty score thousand have been
Who camp on victorious fields,
And where would have trodden the merciless foot
Of the traitorous foeman who yields?
The first would have bent to the stroke of the lash,
Not freemen, but slaves to the slave!
And the last would have stood with his foot on our necks,
Or spurned us, unwept, to the grave.

"My boy, when our homes are in peril and fear,
And our hearthstones are threatened with blight,
When Freedom, endangered, is calling her sons,
No man is too old for the fight!
These hands that are withered, and trembling, and weak,
Had God not required their life,
Would have grasped the old sword in the glorious cause,
And been first in the front of the strife.

"I battled at Erie, and Chippewa field,
At Bridgewater, bloody and hot,
By the side of a handful of death-dealing braves,
Who followed the footsteps of Scott.
We stopped not to think of exemption and home,
We knew the invader was nigh,
And every man who went out to the fight
Was determined to conquer or die.

"There were many among us, my boy, on that day,
That were years upon years too old,
And many exempts by the hand of death,
Who were left there stark and cold.
It was half a century since, my boy,
And I had just turned twenty-one;
But the three-score years and ten of my race,
And my battle of life is done.

"Exempt! if this crutch were a musket or sword,
And this arm as it was years agone,
By the Lord, but I think that some traitorous skulks
Would wish they had never been born!
Exempt! why the thought has put strength in my heart,
My years seem a summer day song,
Too old! who says that a man is too old,
As long as he's willing—and strong?"

FORT DE RUSSY, LA.

WE give a sketch of Fort de Russy, on the Red river, captured by our forces on the 14th of March. The gunboats had ascended the river and opened a fire upon the fort, which was heard for miles. The 1st brigade (58th and 119th Illinois, 89th Indiana and 27th Iowa), 2d brigade (14th and 32d Iowa and 24th Missouri), then came up, and at once formed for action. The 1st brigade made the attack on the left, and the second on the front and right. In 15 minutes the action became severe, the fighting being mainly on the left and front. The regiments, although fatigued with a 30 miles' march, and but two hours' rest, pressed forward hurriedly for the contest. The rebel force, 300 strong, after an hour's fight, surrendered.

Had the fort been fully manned it would have been a difficult point to capture. The fort was intended for a large force. It consists of a very strong water battery, mounting four guns, and a bombproof battery of three guns, only two of which were really mounted. Both these batteries fully commanded the approaches, and were connected with a strong fort, about a quarter of a mile to the rear, by a causeway, protected by high breastworks, thus enabling them to pass from the battery to the fort in action with comparative safety. The bombproof was covered with two feet of solid timber and two layers of railroad iron of the T style, fitted into each other.

We took over 200 prisoners, six large and six smaller guns, and a large supply of commissary stores. Our loss was slight.

LAIRD'S SHIP YARD, LIVERPOOL.

ENGLISH Members of Parliament in our day will stand forward prominently as types of British good faith. One has just been proved to have made his house a rendezvous for conspirators against the life of the Emperor of the French, another is no less famous for building rams and other steamers for the use of the rebels, who are endeavoring to overthrow the Government of the United States. Our paper to-day contains a sketch of Mr. John Laird's shipyard, at Liverpool.

The house of Laird was established by the grandfather of the present member in 1824, and the first iron vessel was launched from his yard in 1829. Iron shipbuilding may be said to have originated here, as the first were built for the United States. Since then the Lairds have built for all nations, and their vessels are found in every sea.

The Russian war added greatly to their wealth, the large orders from the English Government requiring them to enlarge their yards by establishing a new one at Birkenhead.

The yard is very extensive, and fitted with machines of a costly character, adapted for raising vessels and for turning out the various parts of the ship and the machinery connected with it.

The two rebel rams with Arabic names, about which so much has been said, are seen in the river.

THE WAR IN LOUISIANA.

Battle at Crump's Hill.

ON the 2d of April our cavalry, advancing on Shreveport, came upon the rebels, in force, at Crump's hill, 22 miles above Nachitoches, where the roads to Manny and Pleasant hill branch off. Major Bassford, being in the advance of Lucas's brigade, skirmished with the rebels, who made a stand eight times, but could not hold their ground. The first line of our skirmishers was dismounted and the second mounted.

After their repulse here the rebels retired up the Manny road, pursued by Major Bassford. They made a stand and opened with artillery, but Rawles's battery silenced their guns and routed De Bray's Texas cavalry in confusion.

THE OCCUPATION OF ALEXANDRIA, LA

THE capture of the rebel stronghold on the Mississippi, throwing the river into the hands of the National Government, divided the rebel territory into two distinct sections. The trans-Mississippi district had its centre of supplies and resources at Shreveport, La., and this is now assailed. Our Artist, accompanying the Red river expedition, sends a sketch of Alexandria, with Admiral Porter's fleet lying before it on the 26th of March.

Alexandria is a place of about 1,500 inhabitants, and is the county seat of Rapides parish. It lies on the Red river, about 160 miles above its confluence with the Mississippi. The advance of Gen. A. J. Smith's forces in transports, and Admiral Porter's fleet of ironclad gunboats, anchored before the red clay bluffs of Alexandria on the evening of the 16th March.

THE FIRST CHARITY FAIR.

ALTHOUGH it is not exactly necessary, in the explanation of the N. Y. Sanitary Fair, to follow the example of the venerable Diedrich Knickerbocker, and go back to the creation and investigate the theories of the chaotic period, still it may be interesting in this connection to know who conceived the idea of the first fair mentioned in history for benevolent purposes. The story reads almost like a romantic fiction, but it is nevertheless true. It is as follows:

In 1797 the Marquis de Aveze, manager of the Academy of Music in Paris—then known as the Theatre of Arts—was appointed the Government Commissioner of the three manufacturing establishments carried on by the old Government, known as the Gobelin tapestry, the Sevres china and the Savonienne carpets. Upon going to look after his additional charge he found the workshops vacant, and that the workmen had been for two years almost in a state of starvation, whilst the warerooms were full of rich carpets, exquisite painted china and the finest specimens of Gobelin tapestry.

Greatly moved at the scene of misery he beheld, contrasted as it was with the beautiful productions, the result of the ingenious and patient labor of the now starving operatives, a "luminous idea," as he afterwards said, "burst upon his mind," that he would get the consent of the Minister of the Interior to make a display of that rich and brilliant collection of carpets, tapestry and china, in one of the large palaces, which all the inhabitants of Paris should be invited to come and inspect, as specimens of the native industry of France, in the expectation that sufficient of these costly articles could be sold to relieve the pressing wants of those whose skilful hands had wrought them.

The consent of the minister was obtained, and the humane and enthusiastic marquis set to work and got up a most attractive exhibition at St. Cloud; but on the very day it was opened the decree of the Directory went forth banishing all the nobility from France, in which, of course, the marquis was included. The fame of the forthcoming exhibition, however, had spread over Paris. The national pride had been awakened by the announcement of the display of these exquisite specimens of French industry. The courtyard of St. Cloud was filled with elegant equipages, its rooms thronged with admiring and wealthy visitors, when, in the midst of his triumph, the marquis received notice that he must instantly leave the country, and be in 24 hours 30 leagues beyond Paris, on pain of death.

With his departure the exhibition and the humane object that gave rise to it terminated. "I had in imagination," he afterwards said, "conceived the idea of an exhibition of every product of national industry and manufacture;" and when a man has once got in his mind an idea of something that the world never thought of before, it is not likely to leave it. This was the case with the marquis. During the three years of poverty and exile that bright thought never quitted him, and when, in 1797, he, with Talleyrand and others of the exiled nobility, were allowed to return, the first thing that he did was to devote himself to the carrying out of the project so long cherished, and now fully matured in his mind.

He succeeded in obtaining the use of the Maison D'Orsay—a large and beautiful building in Paris—and having done that he went among the leading artisans, manufacturers, and all engaged in the industrial arts, and, obtaining their co-operation, collected together a most attractive and aristocratic display of French manufacturers which he opened as a free exhibition to the public. It embraced the richest furniture, different kinds of inlaid work, the finest watches of the world-renowned L'Epine, the silks of Lyons, the superb porcelain of Sevres and Angouleme, rich specimens of bookbinding, the historical pictures of David, the landscapes of Valenciennes, and the flowerpieces of Pankouk, with many other things chiefly of a luxurious character. The experiment proved such a complete success that the Government determined to follow it up immediately by a more extensive exhibition under its own auspices.

THE WAR IN LOUISIANA—COMMODORE PORTER'S FLEET BEFORE ALEXANDRIA, M

COTTON IN TEXAS.

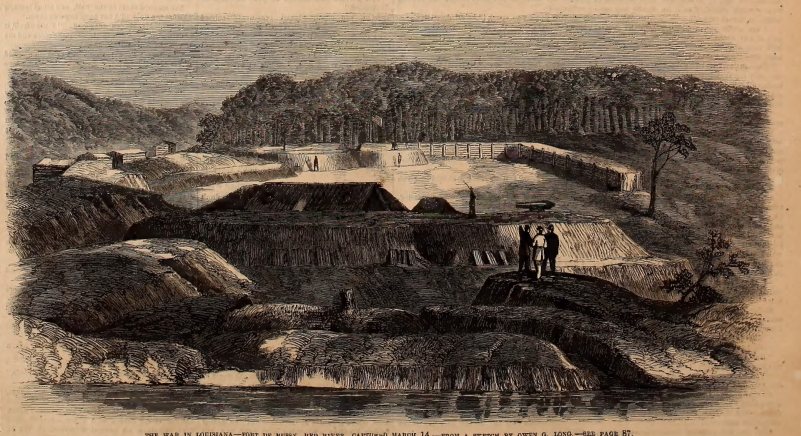
THE occupation of Brownsville by our forces has only slightly checked, not stopped, the rebel trade through Mexico. An arrangement has been made by the rebels with the Mexican authorities, that cotton goes out and goods go into Texas as heretofore. When the compromise was made by the Commissioners with Vidaurri, not less than 6,000 bales of potton had accumulated at Eagle Pass, 5,000 of which belonged to the rebel government or officials, and the rest to private individuals. Some 2,000 bales more were on the road from San Antonio, Texas, and still more would be on the way were it not for the fact that sufficient grass cannot be found on the prairies for oxen, so the hauling for the time being has to be done with mule teams.

The contrabands at Matamoras estimate that not less than 30,000 bales of cotton will be got out of Texas, through Mexico (that is, by way of Piedras Negras, Guerrero, Mier, intermediate points on the R before the trade is broken can only be done effectual vance of our forces from San Antonia.

In the meantime, large trai with merchandise for the reb pecting to return laden with continually leaving Matam points designated on the Grande, and especially for gras. The trade thus far h diverted, not stopped, by th operations"—if they can wi be so termed—of the Depart Gulf. The only causes oper strain it are the disturbed Mexico, and the apprehens there may be a general war which will cause a falling price of cotton. It is to be not a few merchants who w for loyal citizens of the Un have been, are, and expect to be engaged in this trad rebels until it is finally br close. After that, and not calculate on taking the ben President's amnesty, if that deemed necessary.

The planters in Texas hav the half of their wagons seized by order of Magru were paid for in Confederat such a rate as would not the iron used in their m They have been much disc this and other matters, a sequence have planted no only corn enough to produc themselves, their families Confederate paper, when it in Texas, and it has long c carcass in the valley of the goes at three cents per dolla

The rebels are said to be depot for Confederate cott Antonio, with the design o with permits to export it t sons as will take the risk o through Mexico. They hav agent stationed at Piedras N have established a custom Laredo, Mr. Latham, late since C. S. Collector at B being their collector at that



THE WAR IN LOUISIANA—BATTLE OF CRUMP'S HILL, APRIL 7, BETWEEN GEN. LEE'S CAVALRY AND THE REBELS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BONWILL.—SEE PAGE 87.

EXANDRIA, MARCH 26.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BOXHILL.—SEE PAGE 87.

Guerrero, Mier, and other ite points on the Rio Grande], e trade is broken up, and that be done effectually by an ad.
our forces from Indianola to nia.
nsequently, large trains freighted chandise for the rebels, and exo return laden with cotton, are ily leaving Matamoras for the esignated on the Upper Rio and especially for Piedras Nee trade thus far has only been not stopped, by the "military ne"—if they can with propriety ned—of the Department of the the only causes operating to re-are the disturbed condition of and the apprehension felt that y be a general war in Germany.
ill cause a falling off in the cotton. It is to be noted that merchants who want to pass citizens of the United States n, are, and expect to continue gaged in this trade with the ull it is finally brought to a
After that, and not before, they on taking the benefit of the 's amnesty, if that should be ecessary.
asters in Texas have lately had of their wagons and teams by order of Magruder. They ed for in Confederate paper at ate as would not supply even n used in their construction.
ve been much discouraged by other matters, and in con-have planted no cotton, and n enough to produce bread for ves, their families and slaves rate paper, when it passes at all
, and it has long ceased to be in the valley of the Rio Grande,
hree cents per dollar!
ples are said to be making a e Confederate cotton at San
, with the design of selling it, suits to export it to such per-will take the risk of getting it Mexico. They have a cotton allored at Piedras Negras, and stablished a custom-house at
Mr. Latham, late U. S. and
S. Collector at Brownsville, eir collector at that point.

AN OLD TITLE UPHELD BY A WESTERN COURT.—We are not accustomed to associate the idea of antiquity with anything Western, except when occasionally we are reminded of the travels and exploits of the French explorers of the 17th century. We see, however, in the Detroit Advertiser, a report of a law-suit in the United States District Court for the eastern District of Michigan, wherein the Court sustained the claim of petitioners in a land case whose rights dated back to a grant of a Seigniory made in 1706 by Louis XV., then King of France, to two French officers. The grant included a large tract of land adjacent to the Sault St. Mary's river, six leagues in front and six leagues in depth, a very handsome domain. That a Court in the young State of Michigan should recognise rights to land founded in a grant of such comparative antiquity and made by a sovereign of France, is certainly a memorable fact and worthy of notice, not only as recalling the time when a large portion of the West was under French dominion, but as showing the disposition of an American Court to hold valid titles which originated under a system of jurisprudence in entire conflict with our own.

THE WAR IN LOUISIANA—FORT DE RUSSY, RED RIVER, CAPTURED MARCH 14.—FROM A SKETCH BY OWEN G. LONG.—SEE PAGE 87.

THE HARP AND THE POET.

BY ERNEST TREVOR.

THE wind, before it woos the harp,
In but the wild and tuneless air,
But as it passes through the strings,
Thrills into music there.

E'en so the poet's soul conceives
The common things that round us lie
Into a glorious world of song—
Divinest harmony!

Sweet harp and poet! frawed alike
By God as His interpreters,
To breathe aloud the silent thought
Of everything that stirs.

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THEY were all going out to dine that day, and when Elizabeth came down into the library, dressed, she found her husband sitting moodily over the fire. He looked up as she entered, and it seemed to him that he had never seen her look so beautiful. Her dress was pink, relieved with folls of delicate lace that made her neck and arms look still whiter; her hair was decorated with jewels, and her brilliant dress and loveliness seemed to light the dull room as she entered. The constant excitement which she was undergoing during those days lent a rich crimson to her cheeks and a strange lustre to her eyes; she looked restless. This splendid beauty was very unlike the calm loveliness of former days, and his gloomy thoughts deepened as he watched her approach.

It seemed to him that her first impulse was to flee when she saw him sitting there, but if so the desire was quickly controlled, and she came up to the hearth, standing so near him that the folds of her dress brushed his arm.

"You are ready too," she said. "Goodness knows how long we shall have to wait for Elsie and Mrs. Harrington!"

He made no answer; she began clapping and unclasping her bracelets, toying with her fan, but watching him all the while from under her downcast lashes.

"Are you unwell, Grantley?" she asked at length.

"Oh! no; quite well."

"You are very surly, and you sit there in such a dreary way, I feared something was the matter."

He made an effort to rouse himself and shake off the oppression on his spirits, the heavy, heavy weight which had lain there all day.

"I am only stupid," he replied, with an attempt at playfulness. "I have been forced to talk so much essentially to those people that I have no ideas left."

"I am sure conversation with people in general doesn't consume one's energy," she said, with a lightness which seemed almost as forced as his.

"How long does Mrs. Harrington stay?" he asked.

"Only till to-morrow. You don't like her, I fancy?"

"There is too much of her in every way," he said, peevishly; "she dresses too much, talks too much—she tires one."

"That is very cruel and ungrateful; the lady confided to me only a little while ago that she had a profound admiration for you, and was dying to get up a flirtation with you if I did not mind."

"Don't repeat such nonsense." he said, almost rudely, "you know how I hate it. I think either the married man or woman who flirts deserves to be as severely punished as if he or she had committed an actual crime."

"I am afraid you would condemn the greater part of our acquaintance," she said. "After all, with most women it arises only from thoughtlessness, nine times out of ten."

"Thoughtlessness!" he repeated satirically. "I can only say that the woman who endangers her husband's peace from want of thought is more culpable in my mind than a person who does wrong knowingly, pushed on by recklessness or passion."

"I have never thought about it," she said; "it may be so."

She was playing with her bracelets again; the action reminded him of the lost trinket. He did not speak, but a restrained passion broke over his face which might have changed a plan she was revolving in her mind had she seen or understood it.

It was too late!

At that moment Elsie came dancing into the room, her thin white dress floating around her like a cloud, her fair hair wreathed with flowers, and everything about her so pure and ethereal that it seemed almost as if she must breathe some more joyous air than the pain-freighted atmosphere which weighed so heavily on others. She was holding her hands behind her, and ran towards them in her childish way, exclaiming:

"I have found something! Who'll give a reward? Won't you both be glad—only guess what it is!"

Mellen's face had brightened a little at her entrance, but as she spoke a sudden thought shook his soul like a tempest.

"What is it?" Elizabeth asked.

"Oh, guess, guess!"

"But I never can guess," she replied, seeming to enter into the sport of the thing.

"You try, Grant. Come, do credit to your Yankee descent!"

He rose suddenly and stood looking full in his wife's face, fixing her glance with a quick thrill of terror, which the least thing unusual in his manner caused her now.

Elsie was not noticing them; she was dancing up and down before the hearth, exclaiming:

"Oh! you provoking things—you stupid owls! Now do guess—oh! Grant, just try to tell what I have found."

Mellen's eyes had not moved from his wife's face.

"Have you found Elizabeth's bracelet?" he asked in a tone which made the unhappy woman shiver from head to foot, and startled Elsie out of her playfulness.

"Why, how did you think of that?" demanded Elsie; "did she tell you? Have you——"

She stopped short, and stepped from one her lips by the look which Grantley Mellen still fixed upon his wife. Without changing that steady gaze he extended his hand towards Elsie.

"Give me the bracelet!" he said, in the cold, hard tone which with him was the sure forerunner of a tempest of passion.

Elsie hesitated; she had grown nearly as pale as Elizabeth herself, but she looked only like a frightened child. Elizabeth did not speak or move, but though her face was absolutely deathlike her eyes met her husband's with unflinching firmness.

"Give me the bracelet!" repeated Mellen.

"Here it is!" exclaimed Elsie, nervously, putting the trinket in his hand. "What is the matter with you, Grant? I am sure there is nothing to make a fuss about. I found the bracelet among a lot of rubbish in one of Bessie's drawers—I suppose she forgot it was there."

Grantley Mellen turned ruthlessly towards her.

"Are you learning to cheat and lie also?" he cried.

Elsie burst into a passionate flood of tears.

"You are just as cruel and bad as you can be!" she moaned. "You ought to be ashamed to talk to me! I haven't deserved it, I thought you would be so pleased at my having found the bracelet, and here you behave in this way. You needn't blame me, Elizabeth don't mind, I am sure I don't. I am sure your dear mamma never thought you would speak to me like that! I wish I was dead and you were sorry, then you'd be sorry——"

"I am not angry with you, child," interrupted Mellen, softened at once by that childish appeal. "Go away and still Mrs. Harrington. This is falsehood and the treachery are not yours—thank God! at least my own blood has not turned traitor!"

Elizabeth had risen, and as Elsie stole one frightened look towards her, then the woman in her confusion and dizziness saw her float out of the room, and, she supposed, to her sorrow. She still held the bracelet up before her eyes, his hand shaking so that the jewels flashed balefully in the light.

"Your plan was carried out too late; you should have had it found before!" he said, and his last effort at self-control was swept away.

He must endeavor to stay to stem the tide, and keep back a little longer the exposure and ruin which for days back some mysterious warning had told her was impending over them.

"I don't know what you mean," she said. "You heard Elsie say that she found the bracelet——"

"Where you put it!" interrupted Mellen.

"Why should I have hidden it? What reason——"

"Stop!" he broke in. "Not another word—not a single falsehood more! You brought this bracelet back with you from the city—don't speak—I went to the pawnbroker's—it had just been taken away."

In the whirl of that unhappy woman's senses the room seemed to reel round her, and the lights were dancing before her eyes; the flashing gems blinded her with their rays, but she still controlled herself.

"Where you put it!" repeated—she must discover how much of the truth he knew—there might this time be some loophole for escape—some effort by which she could avert a little longer the coming earthquake.

"Why don't you speak!" he cried. "Say anything—anything but a lie. Have you still worse rather than this black truth! That man; you know him! Speak, I say!"

"I am sure I have no idea——"

"That traitor—that wretch! He had the bracelet; he got it from you! Explain, I say—explain!"

"I never gave the bracelet away," she said, desperately. "I have no explanation to make. I have told you—you may lay while you stand over me in that threatening way."

"Will you defy me to the last?" he exclaimed. "Will you can only kill me," she moaned; "do it and let me have peace!"

He flung the bracelet down upon the table, crying out:

"I have loved you so—that I should find you false!"

"What do you suspect?" she demanded. "What do you know?"

The momentary weakness passed; he stood up again cold and stern.

"I know," he said, "that this bracelet was in the hands of a bad, wicked man; that only yesterday he took it from the pawnbroker's, and now it is in your hands—you go!"

There was a hope; only by another deception; another lie; but she must save herself; while she was a breast of great she could not allow herself to be swept down the gathering storm.

"And is there no possibility that I may be innocent in all this?" she exclaimed. "If I receive an anonymous letter, telling me I can find my bracelet by paying a certain reward, is it not natural that I should go? after exclaiming your strange disposition, is it not equally natural that I should keep the whole thing a secret, and try to make every one believe that the bracelet had been mislaid."

"Is this true?" he cried. "Can you prove to me that you speak the truth?"

She was not looking at him; the apathy of despair which came over her looked only like sullen obstinacy.

"I can prove nothing," she said; "if it were possible I would not try. Do what you like; believe what you please; I will talk with you no longer."

Mellen turned away, and walked up and down the room in silence. There was a fearful struggle in his mind; the love he still felt for his wife wascontending against the horrible doubts in his soul, and almost threatening his reason with their force.

He could not tell what to think or how to act! For the moment at least he was glad to grasp at any pretext which might prove a sort of settlement to the question, whatever his thoughts and belief might be on after reflection.

He looked again at Elizabeth; her stony calmness irritated him almost to a frenzy. He was too much excited to perceive that her very quiet was the agony of despair; it seemed to him that she was only trying her power over him to its full extent; if her story was true she would die rather than humble herself by confessation or proof; if it was false! There was deceit somewhere, he felt that; but even in his madness he could not believe that Elizabeth had been guilty of anything that affected his honor; that was a black thought which had not reached him yet.

"Are you trying to drive me mad?" he exclaimed.

She lifted both hands with a strange gesture of misery and humiliation which he did not notice, and looked up at him in silence.

"What have I done?" she cried. "What have I said?"

"Nothing! There you sit like a stone, and will not speak."

"It is useless to say anything," she returned; "quite useless."

"And you expect me to leave this matter here; to endure this mystery patiently?"

"I expect nothing," she said.

The same dreary, desperate wail pervaded her voice, but it was not strange that he mistook her coldness for apathy or indifference; that very intensity of the agony she was enduring made her appear thus.

"You won't explain—you won't—"

She dropped her head heavily.

"I have no explanation to make; there is the bracelet."

He caught up the bracelet, snatched her arm so rudely, and fastened the bracelet on it with such pressure, that she uttered a faint cry of pain.

"You hurt me," she exclaimed; "this is cruel, unmanly."

"I must," he cried; "wear it, and when you look at it remember that you have dug a gulf between my heart and yours! Wear it, and remember that you have injured yourself; here your whole conduct since my return has been a lie, and if you have any shame or power of repentance left, may the hot curse burn into your very soul when you look at them."

Elizabeth fell back in her chair cold and white. He rushed out of the room. She was in a state bordering on fury thought; her brain was too dizzy; she sat there clasping her forehead between her hands, and seeming to see the whole world reel into darkness before her gaze.

"Has he gone; where is he?

It was Elsie's voice; she had stolen into the room to learn how the matter had ended.

"Can't you speak, Bessie; what did he say?"

Elizabeth dropped the hands from her face, and rose from her seat.

"No matter what he said; the end is coming. I told you it would; the end is coming!"

"Don't look so!" cried Elsie, "you frighten me."

"Frighten!" she repeated in a bitter tone. "You haven't soul enough in your bosom to be frightened."

"Oh, you cruel, wicked creature!" sobbed Elsie. "Oh, oh! I'll kill myself if you talk so to me; I'll go to Grant; I'll——"

"Hush!" interrupted Elizabeth. "There—I will say no more. I don't blame you—remember that! Whatever comes, I won't blame you for this new danger."

"Oh, you good darling!" cried Elsie, drying her tears at once.

She made a step forward as if to throw her arms about her sister-in-law, Elizabeth retreated.

"Don't touch me," she said, faintly; "don't touch me!"

"Should I poison you?" cried Elsie, angrily. "One would think I was some dreadful reptile."

"No, no; don't be angry! I need all my strength! Let me alone, Elsie; don't speak to me."

"The carriage is at the door," said Elsie, "and Mrs. Harrison is waiting for mercy's sake don't let her think anything is wrong. I am going to find Grant; wait here."

She ran down the room, and Elizabeth stood thinking of her words.

Very soon perhaps the whole world would know that she was a fallen, wicked woman, without a home, a friend, or even a name.

Could she bear up; could she find strength to go on to the end?

The hardness and desperation died out of her face; she sank on her knees, and a prayer for help rose to her lips; low and faint, but bearing the intensity of her inmost soul.

She heard steps in the hall; they were coming for her. She sprang to her feet, moved towards the door and opened it. Her husband, Elsie and their guest were there. She answered Mrs. Harrison's gay words; passed on with them through the hall, and took her misery out into the world as we all do so often, hidden carefully from every eye.

At dinner that day Elizabeth met two or three superior people from the city, men and women of note, whose presence at the board was like meteor flashes kindling everything with brilliancy, but among the most cheerful and most witty she shone forth prominent. Every word she spoke carried electric fire with it. Her cheeks were scarlet; her eyes were radiant. The lips that had been so pale in her husband's presence a few hours before glowed like ripe cherries with the sunshine upon them. In her desperation she was inspired.

CHAPTER XXIX.

IMMEDIATELY after breakfast the next morning their visitor returned to the city, perhaps glad to escape from the unnatural mental atmosphere of the house, certainly much to the relief of all the inmates of the dwelling.

Grantley Mellen drove their guest down to the railway train, and as soon as they had departed Elizabeth and Elsie, as if by a common impulse, started in a different direction, apparently anxious not to be left alone with each other.

About an hour after Elsie was passing through the hall when her brother drove up to the door. She stopped him after he had got out of carriage for a few moments' trifling conversation, then allowed him to pass on towards the library.

She danced towards the open verandah, saw old Jarvis Benson approaching the house, and hurried out, crying:

"Oh, Jarvis, I wanted to see you."

Jarvis took the pipe out of his mouth, regarded her complacently and answered:

"Then there's a pair on you, Miss Mellen."

"I want to have a pair of very light oars made to the little boat, so that I can learn to row it," pursued Elsie.

"That's easy done," said Jarvis. "I guess I've got a pair that'll answer. Only don't drown yourself."

"I'll take care of that," she replied, laughing. "But who else wants you, Jarvis?"

"Your brother told me to come up, and—oh, there he is."

Mr. Mellen had heard their voices, and came through the hall to the verandah door.

"Good-morning, Jarvis!" he said, in his quiet way.

"Good-morning, sir! You don't look very well, I think," observed the keen-sighted old man.

Elsie glanced at her brother; he was very pale, and his heavy eyes told a long, sleepless night.

Mr. Mellen frowned slightly; it appeared him to have his personal appearance commented upon, it wounded his pride to know that he had not sufficient strength to keep back every outward sign of the anxiety and trouble he was enduring.

"Be you well?" continued the pertinacious old man, who had a habit of expressing his opinions with the utmost freedom to people of every degree.

"Perfectly well," replied Mr. Mellen. "You have come up with that tree, have you?"

"Wal, yes," said Jarvis. "I hadn't much to do this morning, so I thought I'd come up. You hain't found no gardner yet?"

"No; I have sent to town for one. You have sufficient knowledge, so I want you to keep the greenhouse in order until one is found."

"Just as you say, sir; I'll do my best."

The gardener had seen fit to leave the place a few days before without the slightest warning, with the true, reckless independence of the Hibernian race. When a dilemma of this kind arose the people of the neighborhood were in the habit of sending for old Benson, who seemed, in some mysterious way, to have acquired a smattering of knowledge about everything that could make him generally useful about a house.

Elsie did not feel particularly interested in the subject of conversation, and was floating away in search of other amusement, when she heard old Jarvis say:

"It's the big cypress yonder, in the thicket, ain't it?"

She stopped short in the hall, and stood leaning against the door with her hands behind them.

"Yes," Mr. Mellen answered. "I am afraid it is very dead. I may have to dig about the roots and see if you can find out the cause."

"Loosening the earth a bit 'll maybe do a world of good," said Jarvis; "I've seen it'liven a tree right up."

"We will try, at all events," observed Mr. Mellen. "First you may take those plants under the library window into the greenhouse; it is too late for them to be left out."

He walked to the side of the house to point out the flowers he wished to have moved. Elsie darted through the hall and up the stairs in breathless haste.

She paused at the door of her sister's room and tried the knob, but the key was turned in the lock.

"Elizabeth! Elizabeth!" she called, in a frightened whisper, utterly incapable of speaking aloud.

"Open the door—for heaven's sake, open the door!"

There was a terror in her voice which communicated itself to the woman sitting so apathetically in her chamber. She rose and opened the door, whispering, in a voice as full of alarm as Elsie's own:

"What is it? What is it?"

Elsie pushed her back into the room, shut and locked the door, and staggered to a couch.

"The cypress tree!" she gasped. "They are going there."

"Well?" cried Elizabeth. "What do you mean?"

"I can't speak—oh, I am choking!" gasped Elsie.

Elizabeth seized her arm, and fairly shook her in her frenzied impatience.

"Speak!" she exclaimed. "Speak, I say!"

"Grant has sent old Jarvis to dig about the roots," returned Elsie, in a shrill whisper.

Elizabeth Mellen sank slowly upon her knees, her limbs giving way suddenly, as if she had been struck with paralysis. She caught at Elsie's dress, the girl raised herself with a low cry, and there they remained for several moments, staring in each other's faces, with a white, sickening terror, which could find no relief in words.

After a time Elizabeth shook herself free from Elsie's grasp and rose; the power to think and act was coming back to her.

"You heard them say this?" she asked.

"Yes, yes!" cried Elsie. "Grant sent for old Jarvis to come up and dig round the tree; he thinks it is dying."

Elizabeth threw up her arms with a low moan, more expressive of agony than a shriek.

"It has come at last!" broke from her white lips. "It has come at last!"

Elsie cowered down upon the sofa and buried her head in the cushions, shaking with hysterical tremors from head to foot, and uttering repressed sobs.

"Exposure—ruin—disgrace!" moaned Elizabeth, as if repeating words that some secret voice whispered in her ear. "It has come at last! It has come at last!"

"I shall die!" shrieked Elsie. "I shall go mad!"

She beat the couch wildly with her clenched hands and gave way to a violent nervous spasm, but this time Elizabeth made no effort to soothe her; she stood there, cold and white, repeating at intervals, in that dismal whisper:

"It has come at last! It has come at last!"

"Do something," moaned Elsie, between her sobs. "Don't stand there as if you were turning to stone. Think of some way to stop them."

"What can I do?" returned Elizabeth. "I tell you it has come! I knew it would!"

Elsie gave another shriek and sprang off the sofa, threw herself at her sister's feet, clutching her dress with her hands, and crying, brokenly:

"Do something—anything! I shall go crazy—my brain is burning! I won't live—I tell you I won't live if yon don't stop this."

Elizabeth shook off her grasp, not angrily, not impatiently even, but with a sudden change of expression, as if Elsie's despair had brought back some half-forgotten resolution and given her a sort of strength once more.

"You will not suffer," she said, drearily. "You are safe."

"But you—what will become of you?" groaned the girl.

"Let go my dress—get up, Elsie! See, I am calm. I tell you, no harm will come to you—get up."

Elsie staggered to her feet, and sat down on the sofa with a burst of tears.

"I'd rather kill myself than see you tormented so!" she cried. "I have the poison yet in my room—I've always kept it. If they don't stop, Elizabeth, they shall find us dead and cold——"

"Stop!" said Elizabeth. "I won't hear such wicked words! The danger is mine, the ruin and disgrace is mine—all mine; but I don't talk of killing myself."

"You are so brave," moaned Elsie, "and I am such a poor, weak thing. Oh, oh! This will kill me either way, I know it will!"

"I know what will happen to me," said Elizabeth, in a voice of unnatural calmness. "Do you know what this day will bring? Before two hours are gone I shall be driven out of this house, a lost, ruined woman."

"No, no! Grant will forgive you—he loves you so!"

"Does a man ever forgive?"

"But you will say you don't know—I will."

"Are you a baby? Don't you know there will be an exposure—we shall all be questioned—forced to give evidence."

"We will say anything—anything!" cried Elsie.

"We cannot satisfy Grantley Mellen. I tell you, Elsie, this is the last interview we shall ever hold in his house."

Elsie flung herself down in renewed spasms, shrieking and sobbing so violently that nothing could be done or thought of till she had been restored to composure by the strong remedies Elizabeth administered.

"Promise not to tell that I ever knew of it," she gasped. "Swear! I'll kill myself if you don't!"

"I have promised," returned Elizabeth, in a hollow voice. "I will bear whatever comes—ruin, death—and bear it alone."

Those words so solemnly spoken appeared to give the girl new life and energy.

"Go downstairs," she said; "stop them. You can stop them yet."

"How—what can I say?"

"Tell Grant the gardener said the tree must be left till spring—bribe old Jarvis to say so—oh, anything, anything; only try, Elizabeth. Save yourself if possible."

The woman walked to the window and peered out between the curtains.

"They are there," she said; they are going."

"Go down!" shrieked Elsie. "Go down, I say!"

Elizabeth took a few steps towards the door—caught sight of her face in the mirror, and stopped appalled at the haggard image reflected there.

"Look at me," she said; "my face tells the whole story."

"There is some rouge in that drawer," said Elsie. "Mrs. Harrington left it. I'll put it on your cheeks."

She could think now that Elizabeth showed herself ready to bear her danger alone. She got out the rouge, rubbed it on her sister's cheeks, and smoothed her hair, crying:

"Now you look like yourself—nobody would notice. Go quick—stop them—stop them!"

Elizabeth dared not pause an instant for reflection; she opened the door, walked downstairs, through the library, and joined her husband on the lawn.

He turned at her approach. She felt a mad sort of courage nerve her—she could speak now.

"What are you going to have done to the great cypress?" she asked, and even in that moment of supreme agony and fear she was conscious of a vague wonder at the composure of her voice.

"It seems to be dying," replied Mellen; "I am going to have the earth dug away from about the roots."

"I am afraid you will only kill it," returned Elizabeth; "it is so late in the season."

"I did not know that you were a gardener," he said, coldly.

He looked at her standing there with that unnatural brightness on her cheeks, that wild glitter in her eyes, and it seemed to him that she had only come out in her beauty and unconcern to mock him after the long night of wild trouble which he had spent.

"I know that is what Jones said," she went on. "He thought in the spring something could be done, but not now."

He was turning away—that action deprived her of all self-control—she caught his arm, crying:

"Don't touch that tree—don't go near it."

He stopped and looked at her in blank amazement; she saw the danger in which her impetuosity had placed her—dropped his arm and tried to appear composed again.

"What is the matter with you?" he asked. "The tree is not a human being that I am going to assassinate."

She forced herself to laugh; even then the woman's self-mastery was something astounding.

"I was a little theatrical," she said; "but I can't bear to have the old tree touched."

"Why, marm, it'll die if it aint," put in Jarvis, who considered that he had been silent quite long enough.

"You don't know anything about the matter!" cried Elizabeth, sharply.

The old man drew himself up, and looked so indignant that she felt sure he would oppose her now with might and main.

"I mean," she added, "you don't know how I feel about it, I want the poor thing left alone."

The old man relinquished his erect attitude and looked somewhat mollified.

"If it's yer whim, mar'm, that's another thing, but I thought I'd lived too long in this neighborhood for anybody to accuse me of not knowing a thing when I pretended to, especially about trees."

"Oh, no, no," interrupted she; "I always say that you are a universal genius, a better gardener than half the professed ones."

"Wal, I do' know about that," said Jarvis, his face beaming all over with satisfaction, for remarkable as he was, the old man was peculiarly susceptible to flattery.

"Then you won't touch the tree?" cried Elizabeth, turning again towards her husband.

Mr. Mellen had been watching her while she talked; he was growing more and more angry now he thought that she only wished to interfere unwarrantably with his least plan or wish.

"You will leave the tree till spring?" she continued.

"I shall have the earth loosened," he answered, "I don't choose to sacrifice the tree to a mere caprice."

"It is not a caprice," she exclaimed, forgetting herself once more in her excitement. "I ask you not to touch it—I beg you not to."

"Might I ask the reason of your extraordinary conduct?" he began; then remembering old Benson's presence, checked himself quickly.

"I think it the best thing for the tree," he added.

"But Jones said not; he ought to know."

"I fancy he said that to avoid the work."

"No, no! In the spring you can do it—not now—not now."

"By spring it will be too late; the earth must be dug away now."

She clasped her hands under her shawl—she resolved to make one effort more—a respite must be found—for a day, at least.

She looked out towards the tree—the lower part of it was hidden, where they stood, by a thicket of shrubs and bushes, but the stately top towered up dark and solemn, waving in the morning breeze and seeming to whisper an omen of dread to her half maddened senses.

"Not to-day," she exclaimed; "at least do not touch it to-day."

His suspicious mind, so wildly on the alert since the strange events of the past days, was now fully aroused by the singular earnestness and trouble of her manner.

There was another secret! It was no desire to contradict him which actuated her—there was something at the bottom which he could not understand—a new phase of the mystery with which he had felt surrounded from the first moment of his arrival, and which during the past week had gathered and darkened so rapidly.

"Leave the tree at least to-day," repeated Elizabeth.

"I can't send for Jarvis to do work and put him off without a reason," he said; "he has plenty of work on his hands."

"It can't make no difference, Miss Mellen," the old man joined in; "'tain't no use to put it off—anyhow I couldn't come agin till the last of the week."

"Let it go till then," she said, eagerly; and a new life stole over her face at the bare hope of obtaining that delay.

"This is sheer folly," said her husband. "Go in—go in. You will catch cold—the grass is damp. Come, Jarvis, get your spade."

"It won't hurt the tree a spec, Miss Mellen," said he; "don't feel oneasy about it—I'll be as tender of it as if it was a baby."

He moved away as he spoke, and left the husband and wife together. Elizabeth was pale even through her artificial bloom—no matter what he thought she must obtain some delay.

"Grantley," she cried, "don't touch the tree—I ask it as a favor—you will not refuse—let it go."

He gave one look at her face and turned his head away to hide the expression of anger and doubt which he felt was in his own.

"Can you give any reason?" he asked.

"No, no! It is one of my fancies—only gratify it—let the tree alone for a day or two."

A fierce passion shook Mellen like a sudden tempest. His first impulse was to drag her into the house and force from her lips the secret and the mystery which surrounded her, but he controlled the impulse and said:

"As you please. I will leave it for the present."

He walked away from her, and Elizabeth went back into the house. She had to rest a few moments in the library; her limbs were shaking so that she could not stand. She was roused by the sound of her husband's voice in conversation with old Benson—he might come in and find her there.

She started up like a wounded animal that concentrates its dying strength in one wild effort for escape—hurried from the room and up the stairs.

Elsie was still lying on the sofa in the chamber; she sprang up as Elizabeth entered.

"Will he leave it?" she cried. "Will he leave it?"

"Yes, he has promised."

Elizabeth sank in a chair, regardless of the questions she poured out, so pitiable an object in her agony that it might even have softened the heart of one she had most deeply injured.

"Saved again!" cried Elsie. "Don't despair, Bessie—it will all end right."

"Saved!" repeated Elizabeth, in a tone of mental terror. "Have you thought what must be done this very night?"

Elsie gave a cry and hid her face.

"Be still!" said Elizabeth. "I will do it—be still!"

"Don't let me know—don't tell me—I should die of fright!"

"Think of me, then," she returned. "In the night—alone with that —— where can I carry it——"

Elsie interrupted her with another cry and her old appealing wail.

"You are killing me! You are killing me!"

"Be still," repeated Elizabeth, in the same awful voice. "I will do it—be still!"

CHAPTER XXX.

Mellen set old Benson about some other duties and went into the library. While he stood at one of the windows, looking gloomily out on the autumn landscape, he heard the voices of 'Dolf and his spinster inamorata in the area below.

"What's marster gwine to have done to de tree?" Clo asked.

"He's afeared it's deceasin'," replied 'Dolf, pompously, "and he wishes to perwent."

"Don't come none o' yer furrin lingo over me," said Clorinda, angrily. "Can't yer say what he's gwine to do in good, decent English, widout any of dem dern outlandish Spanish 'pressions."

"'Twarn't Spanish, lubly one," said 'Dolf, greatly delighted at the effect his grandiloquent language had produced. "Sometimes I do 'dulge in far away tongues jist from habit; it's trabeling so much, you know."

"Don't know nothin' about it, and don't want to," interrupted Clorinda. "Ef yer can't answer a civil question as it outer to be, yer needn't stay round dis part of de house."

"Don't be ravagerous," returned 'Dolf. "Any question ob yours it is my delight to answer, only propose it."

"I does, plainly enough. What's marster gwine to have done to dat ar ole tree?"

"Have de airth dug up," said 'Dolf, deeming it wiser to use a more simple phraseology; "he's 'feared it's dying."

Mellen was just going to order them away from that part of the house—the veriest trifle irritated him now—when Clorinda's next words made him pause.

"I wish he'd hev it dug up by de roots," she said; "I do 'lieve dat ar tree is haunted."

"Haunted!" screamed 'Dolf, who possessed a large share of the superstition of his race. "Now what does yer mean, Miss Clorindy?"

"Jes' what I say," replied she sharply; "I ain't one ob de kind dat tittervates up my words till they haint got no sense left."

"But I never heerd of a haunted tree," said 'Dolf, gaining new courage as he remembered that it was broad daylight. "Haunted houses I've heerd on in plenty; but a tree——"

"Oh, mebby yer don't know eberyting yet!" said Clo', viciously.

Clo' had been rather short with her lover of late, on account of several private flirtations with Victoria, which she had interrupted.

"Do tell me what yer mean, Clorindy," pleaded 'Dolf, his eyes fairly starting out of his head with curiosity.

"Oh, mebby you'd better go to Vic," she retorted, "she's a heap cuter dan what I be. I ain't coffee-colored, I'se only a nigger."

"Now, Miss Clorindy!" cried 'Dolph, seeing that this was an occasion when flattery and soft words were absolutely necessary. "Yer knows yer's de most charming ob yer sex!"

"Don' know nothin' ob de sort," said Clo'. "I aint flirty and flighty about like some folks; but, anyhow, I ain't fool enough to put all my wages on my back. I guess marster cud tell what I've got in de bank."

That allusion to her golden charms made 'Dolf quite forget the youthful graces of Victoria; he grew more tender and submissive than ever.

"Yer's de pearl ob de creation!" he cried enthusiastically.

Mellen stamped his foot passionately, furious with their nonsense, upbraiding himself that he could listen to the conversation of his own servants, yet unable to move away before he had heard the revelation which Clorinda evidently had to make.

After a little more persuasive eloquence to restore her goodhumor completely, 'Dolph said:

"But do tell me what yer means 'bout de tree?"

"No," said Clorinda, mysteriously; "it's one ob dem tings as is best not talked about. I don't run and tell all I sees and hears."

"Jis' confide in my buzzom," said 'Dolf, tenderly.

"Men is so duberous," simpered Clorinda.

"Yer knows I'se de most faithful and constance ob my sect," cried 'Dolf. "Yer may speak freely to me."

"I 'spose yer'd say de same to Vic."

"Neber, Miss Clorindy! What, dat silly, giggling girl—don't tink it!"

His persuasions met with their reward at last, and when he pleaded again:

"Jis' tell me what yer means 'bout de tree bein' haunted?"

She yielded to his flattery and her feminine desire to tell all that she had seen or imagined, embellished by the powers of fancy so largely developed in her kind.

"Mebby 'twas two months 'fore you came back," she said, in the tone of a person trying to be exact in her recollection of events.

"What was?" cried 'Dolf, impatiently, "de hauntin'?"

"Ef I'm gwine to tell you my story I'll do it in my own way," said Clorinda, majestically.

"In course, in course," returned 'Dolf, eagerly. "I begs pardon for de 'ruption. Jis' go on, sweetest Miss Clo'."

"I tells yer dar's been somethin' agoing on in dis house," pursued Clorinda. "Dat ar bracelet losing was all of a piece wid what went afore. Missus was awful mad at me for saying so, but I don't care. She's very queer—stuck up like. There's Miss Elsie, sweet allers as a young kitten!"

"Yes, yes," 'Dolf said, ready to agree with anything in order to get at the heart of her mystery.

"Afore even dat ring was lost I seed a man in de house in de dead ob de night—a man and a woman!"

"God be gracious!" cried 'Dolf.

"I'd had de toothache, and ben down to de kitchen fire a smokin' pennyryal, and awful sick it made me. I was gwine up the backstairs, when I heerd steps in de hall. I looked in and I seed a man and woman plain. I had de candle in my hand. I screeched right out, and shut my eyes, and let de candle fall. When I opened 'em again missus had come out of her room, wid a shawl over her and a lamp in her hand.

"'What be yer doin' dar?' says she, mad as a March hare.

"I up and telled her 'bout the man and woman, and she larfed in my face.

"'Whar be dey?' says she. 'Dar's nobody here but us.'

"'Twan't no use to say nothin', she flew off into one o' her tantrums, and scolded me like all possessed. I don't like her, and dat's all 'bout it!"

"But is dat all?" questioned 'Dolf, in a disappointed tone.

"No, it ain't all; jis' wait and don't go off de handle afore you knows which end you've got hold on."

"But de tree, Clorindy," said 'Dolf; "tell me 'bout de tree."

"I'se comin' to dat," replied Clo', growing eager again. "I'd ben down to see Diana Jameson, at de cross roads; it was real late; we'd had a prayer meetin' and I kinder forgot myself in de refreshin' season——"

"Yes," said 'Dolf, fearful she would go off in a long digression and lose sight of the all-important topic, "dey is refreshin'; as preserves is to de taste so is meetin's to de spirit—soothin', yer know."

"Jis' so," said Clorinda.

"Wal, yer was comin' home," suggested 'Dolf.

"Yes; two or tree on 'em came with me to de gate and dar dey left me. I heeled up de avenue jis' as hard as I could, but when I got near de house I thort, suppose missus should see me, she's a pokin' up at all hours, she'd scold me like smoke. I jis' cut out ob de road to take de path trough de hicket, I came in sight ob de ole cypress tree."

Clorinda broke off abruptly to recover her breath and to allow her narrative to have its full effect upon her listener.

"Go on; oh, do go on!" cried 'Dolf.

Could the pair have seen the face leaning over the balcony, straining to catch every word, they might almost have thought that one of the ghosts they so dreaded had started up before them.

"I came in sight ob de cypress tree," recommenced Clo', with great art working up her story to a climax.

"Yes, yes," said 'Dolf again. "In sight ob de tree——"

"I seed somethin' all in white a cruchin' down dar, a throwin' up its arms and moaning like. I jis' give one yell and danced away. When I got to de house, what do you tink? dar was missus. Whar she come from I don' know, and she give me go ose again for screaming; but la! she was white as a dead woman all de while."

"What could it all a ben?" said 'Dolf.

"I don' know more'n you. The next morning she sent for me, and she telled me she'd hev to send me away ef I didn't quit dat habit of bein' up so late and skeerin' de gals wid stories 'bout ghosts; so I jis' held my tongue."

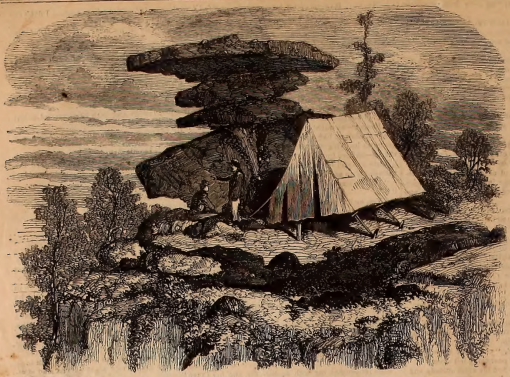
"And hab you eber seed anytink more?"

"Laws, I wouldn't go near dat tree after dark for all de money on Long Island! I tells you dar's sometin' queer somewhar."

"So dar is," assented 'Dolf, in a perplexed manner, "dar is, sure."

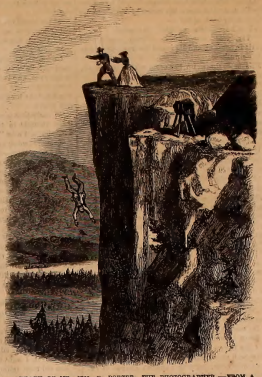
"Don't you say nothin', 'cause I'd get my walkin, papers ef you did. But ef you're so mighty wise, jis' tell me what yer makes ob all dis mysteriousness?"

"Clorindy," said 'Dolf, in a solemn voice, "ghostesses is a subject 'taint proper to talk on, and the queernesses ob our marsters and misseses is not tropics for us."



"A body must wonder, I s'pose, black or white," said Clo', angrily.

"But dat's all you've seen?"



"Dat's all, and its 'nuff and more too."

Grantley Mellen stepped back into the library and closed the window. He had need to be alone. Every day, every hour, the mystery which had intruded into his home deepened and took more appalling shapes.

He walked up and down in the shadowy room, muttering to himself, forming a thousand futile plans, and utterly unmanned by the terrible fancies his morbid imagination conjured up.

THE PHOTOGRAPHER OF LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, F. B. SCHELL.

DEATH OF MR. WM. F. PORTER, THE PHOTOGRAPHER.—FROM A SKETCH BY A. LIGOWSKY, TOPOGRAPHICAL ENGINEER.

THE PHOTOGRAPHER OF LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN.

Not long after the battle of Lookout Mountain one of our artists, not present at the battle, visited the spot, on his way from the Mississippi, and ascending to the spot where the rebels so long had their flag waving and their cannon thundering at Chattanooga, was no less surprised than amused to find on the then silent summit, which Hooker's men had so gallantly scaled amid fire and flame, the tent of a travelling photographer, who had pitched his tent here, with the true enterprise of a wide-awake, go-ahead son of New England, to take portraits and include a view of the famous scenery.

The view had been for some time ready for use, but we have now to add another sketch, sent to us by an officer of the 11th corps, showing the sad close of the career of the photographer, Mr. Wm. F. Porter, who, while placing a lady and gentleman, lost his foothold and fell down the precipice, a distance of some 200 feet.

EXPLOSION OF MERRICK AND SONS' IRON FOUNDRY, PHILADELPHIA.

Never perhaps have fires and explosions come more rapidly than within the last few months. The destruction of Colt's factory, the fire at Gloucester, and others in other parts, have crowded fast upon us. We give two sketches this week of a fearful explosion. Merrick and Sons' Iron Foundry and Boiler Manufactory was an extensive establishment in Philadelphia, situated on and entirely covering the ground bounded by Washington street on the north, Federal street on the south, and Fourth and Fifth streets on the east and west. On the morning of April 6th an immense boiler, of 70 horse-power, at the western end of the open space, formed by the square of the buildings, appropriated to the use of the different departments, exploded, and in an instant spread ruin around.

It was carried up into the air, and after making a circuit of some 40 feet dropped on the roof of the clipping-shop, demolishing it entirely, and crushing in the rafts, George Ward, one of the workmen.

The force of the explosion sent fragments of iron and bricks in all direction. A large piece of boiler was driven through the wall of No. 1,107 Fifth street, and a piece of girder traversed another house, fortunately without injuring any one. The streets around were strewn with bricks so thick that a person could walk on them.

Seven persons were killed in the foundry and a number injured, but no one in the street or neighborhood. Our Artist gives a view of the explosion itself and of the scene of ruin after the calamity.

HEADWATERS OF THE TECHE, LOUISIANA.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. H. BOSWELL.

HEAD WATERS OF THE TECHE.

The Teche, one of the most beautiful of the Louisiana bayous, commences in St. Landry parish, a few miles from Opelousas and flows through a rich and romantic country, now unhappily desolated by the war. It empties into Achafalaya Bayou, near Lake Chatimaches. Our Artist, while proceeding from one memorable point to another, has sketched the head waters of the Teche in all their charming beauty.

Geranium Leaves.—It is not generally known that the leaves of geraniums are an excellent application for cuts, where the skin is rubbed off, and other wounds of that kind. One or two leaves must be bruised and applied on linen to the part, and the wound will become cicatrized in a very short time.]

The Explosion.

The Ruins.

DESTRUCTION OF MERRICK AND SONS' IRON FOUNDRY, PHILADELPHIA.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, FRED. B. SCHELL.

VIEW OF THE SHIPYARD AT LIVERPOOL OF THE MESSRS. LAIRD, WITH THE REBEL RAMS IN THE RIVER.—SEE PAGE 87.

I'M LOVE'S TINY CHILD TO-DAY.

BY KATE J. BOYD.

HARK! the bells of joy are ringing,
Hope once more illumes my way,
Sweetly sad my heart is singing,
Sunbeams slow more bright to-day;
Nature moves to graceful music,
Zephyrs sport with feathery spray,
Oh, my heart is softly breathing,
I'm love's tiny child to-day;
Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha,
I'm love's tiny child to-day.

Freedom flings its rosy banner
O'er my heart so light and gay,
Bound no longer, free and happy,
Thro' the world I will stray;
List! the birdlings as they warble,
Thro' the branches lightly play,
Oh, my heart is softly breathing,
I'm love's tiny child to-day;
Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha,
I'm love's tiny child to-day.

Rippling streams, and flowers blooming
Fling their fragrance far and near,
And they win us to their wooing,
With a welcome rich and clear;
Heed the joys they scatter o'er us,
As they greet the rosy day,
Oh, my heart is softly breathing,
I'm love's tiny child to-day;
Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha,
I'm love's tiny child to-day.

A BATCH OF WHATS.

What word may be pronounced quicker by adding a syllable to it? Quick.

What quadrupeds are admired to balls, operas and dinner parties? Waltz 'ers; sometimes the good become them.

What is that word of one syllable which, if the first two letters are taken from it, becomes a word of two syllables? Brat—Apart.

What kind of a face should an auctioneer have? A face that is forthcoming.

What wood makes the best planoforte? Broadwood.

What bird is the greatest friend to agriculturists? The whatever.

What sort of carpentry becomes a gem as soon as finished? A-pair.

What is the oldest tree in America? The elder tree.

What day in the month of the year is a command to go a board? The 1st May.

What prevents the running river from running away? Its bed.

What is the tourist's best motive for travelling? A locomotive.

What kind of a man would you prefer on a dark night? A lantern-jawed man.

What word would give sorrow to the mechanic and joy to the jury? Discharge.

What fish is most valued by a happy wife? Herring.

What tunnel in Massachusetts signifies "proceed with moderate caution."

What do we seek redress for? Injuries. Where do we find it? Injuries.

What instrument does a man who deals in fiddles most resemble? A violoncello (vile fellow).

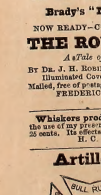
What age is the most deceiving? The sausage.

What is that which by adding a letter to it will become smaller, but if you add nothing will grow larger? A hole in a stocking.

"What is it that sticks closer than a brother?" said a teacher to one of his class. "A postage stamp—by gum!" said the young incorrigible.

What was Eve made for? For Adam's Express Company.

What is that which belongs to yourself, yet is used by everybody? Your name.



What tune we did Adam use when he introduced himself to Eve, and which read the same backwards and forwards? Madam, I'm Adam.

Excelsior Music Book, No. 4, for Violin. Flute or Cornet, 25 cents, mailed. Contains latest popular music, such as "Faust March," "Folgan's Waltz," "Faust Waltz," "Last Days of Pompeii," "Lone Gallop," "No Irish Need Apply," "Sonny, I think of Thee," "Limerick Races," etc. MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of every description. Price list sent on receipt of stamp.
FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery, N. Y.

The Most Popular Tales Published!
Brady's "Mercury" Stories.
NOW READY—COMPLETE,
THE ROUND PACK:
A Tale of the Forked Deer.
BY DR. J. H. ROBINSON. Illustrated by DARLEY. Illuminated Cover. Price 25 Cents.
Mailed, free of postage, on receipt of price.
FREDERICO A. BRADY, PUBLISHER,
24 ANN STREET, NEW YORK.

Whiskers produced in Three Weeks by the use of my prescription, which I send by mail for 25 cents. Its effects are truly wonderful. Address H. C. F. KENNEDY, Chicago, Ill.

Artillery Badges.

Annexed is a fac simile design of our Newest Style All TILLERY BADGES Sent free to any address on receipt of price, with Name, Co. and Regiment handsomely Engraved thereon.
Solid Silver (without Battles) $1 50.
Solid Silver, letters in Gold Relief (without battles) $2.
Solid Gold (without battles) $5. Battles, 20 cents each extra.
Also New Style CAVALRY BADGE, and every style Co. Fine and Corps Badges worn by the Army. Our Illustrated Catalogue sent free. Address
C. L. BALCH & CO.,
338 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Carriages.

The subscriber has now on hand a SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF CARRIAGES of all descriptions, warranted perfect both as to style, material and workmanship, which he offers on reasonable terms. C. WITTY, 459 Broadway and 66 Crosby Street, N. Y. 444-8

FURNITURE, FURNITURE,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),
No. 87 Bowery, New York.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States. They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. The stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;
Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;
Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, RUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE,
in Sets, from $22 to $100.

TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each.
Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

5,000 AGENTS WANTED
TO INTRODUCE OUR
NEW GOLD PEN.
This Gold Pen is something entirely new and is now offered to the public for the first time, and it is made by as entirely new process, enabling us to offer it at less than half price. Every Pen is WARRANTED one year, and to be genuine Diamond pointed, and to possess all the elasticity and flexibility qualities of the highest price gold pen made. Single Pens sent by mail on receipt of the following prices:
With Silver Mounted Ebony Holders and Morocco Cases.
No. 2 Medium Pen and Holder..... 90
No. 3 Large Pen and Holder..... 1 00
No. 4 Engrossing Pen and Holder..... 1 25
Great inducements to Agents and the Trade. Send for our Circular.
GEORGE A. BLY & CO., Sole Manufacturers,
181 Broadway, N. Y.

Fountain Pen.—No Inkstand Required. One filling will write 12 hours. Also, all other styles of Gold Pens. Send stamp for Circular.
G. F. HAWKES, Sole Manufacturer,
24 Nassau street, N. Y.

$75 A MONTH.—I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month and expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machine. Address
439-51 S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

The Great Money-Making Article.
Every boy and girl wants it. Every one sells it. $10 a Day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents.
E. H. MARVIN Hinsdale, N. H.
500

New Army Watches.
ARENDALE & CO., Importers, 218 Broadway, N. Y., want Agents in every County and every Regiment, for the sale of their new styles of Watches. Unusually liberal terms are offered to Agents. Send for Circular.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?
MY UNGUENT will force them to grow beautiful in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free to any address on receipt of an order.
WM. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite.
1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
VICTOR DELAFO 97 Nassau St., N. Y.

AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,
Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1863. The best and only reliable Billiard Table manufactured. Balls, Cues, and every article relating to Billiards, for sale by
PHELAN & COLLENDER,
434-7 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN
6 Maiden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fly Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brush Manufacturers' Specialties, &c.
Military and Navy Equipments in every variety. A large assortment of
RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS.
Constantly on hand.
344-70

EMPLOYMENT
At your own Homes.
THOUSANDS CAN REALISE A HUNDRED DOLLARS WEEKLY.—No utensils required except those found in every household; profits 100 per cent.; demand steady as flour. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage. Address C. MUNRO BROWN, No. 74 Bleecker Street, N. Y.

Legal Tender, Stationery, Music and Jewelry Casket—New Series.
We now offer new Inducements to all who sell STATIONERY PACKAGES. Send for our free Circular.
WEIR & CO., 23 Chestnut St., Phila.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

THE DEAD THAT MIGHT BE LIVING—It is sad to think that thousands die annually with the sense of life and health almost within arm's length. Many a wealthy gore down to the grave every day when the timely use of HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS would have saved. It is a consolation, however, to know that this glorious Tonic—a vitalising Elixir without a single drawback—is preserving the lives of multitudes. In cases of general debility and prostration, it is producing cures that are perhaps more astonishing than anything heretofore observed or recorded in the history of medicinal treatment. Feeble, emaciated and despairing patients, whose powers of digestion seem to be entirely extinguished, recover their appetite, their flesh and spirits, under a course of the Bitters, with a rapidity that is positively amazing. All that the proprietors or giorally expected from the preparation was long ago thrown into the shade by its actual results. New virtues, which they had never thought of attributing to it, are continually being developed in the application to new cases. As a preventive of diseases in every clime and in every variety of weather, it stands alone and unapproachable.
Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.
Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,
PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 476 BROADWAY.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!
100,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.
WORTH $500,000,
To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 26 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you will receive for $1; and all the same may be had by return mail. Single Certificates, and particulars, also Terms to Agents, which will be very liberal. Regiment and Town in the Country. Certificates can be procured for $1; thirteen for $5; thirty-five for $10; and one hundred for $25.
Address A. F. SHULTE,
230 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps and Lanterns, gives a brilliant light, free from smoke or smell, and needs NO chimney. We are now prepared to supply the increasing demand for this superior Burner, which every where gives satisfaction. Sample sent, postpaid, for 25 cents.
Agents wanted. Send for Circular.
F. ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers,
2 Platt Street, N. Y.

DISTILLED DEW
For Beautifying and Improving the Skin and Complexion. Sold by Druggists generally.

French False Moustaches.
The best in market. Cannot be detected when worn. Price one dollar each. Sent free by mail. Address
D. C. SPARROW, New York P. O.

Conjuring!—Containing full directions for performing 150 of the most Wonderful and Astounding Feats of House-Power, Magic, Sleight-of-Hand, Ventriloquism and Legerdemain. 72 Pages; profusely illustrated. Price 30 cents. Sent free by mail.
Address M. M. SANBORN, Hamburg, N. J.

$75 A MONTH.—Agents wanted to sell Sewing Machines.—We will give a commission on all Machines sold, or employ Agents who will work for a stated wages and all expenses paid. Address
D. B. HEBERTON & CO., Detroit, Mich.
446-58

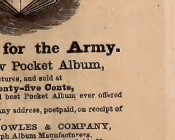
W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office),
offer for sale the following Magnificent List of
WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.
Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.	EACH
150 Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	15
500 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	15
2500 Vest and Neck Chains	5 to 10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00
1000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 8 00
1000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 8 00
500 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
5000 Gents' Breast Pins	2 00 to 6 00
2000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 6 00
2500 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00
2500 Sets of Bosom Studs	2 00 to 6 00
2500 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 5 00
5000 Plain Rings	2 00 to 6 00
5000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Lockets	2 50 to 6 00
10000 Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	6 00 to 10 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mtnd Holders	4 00 to 8 00
5000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the neatest and most fashionable styles. A certificate of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sold by mail for 25 cents each; and on receipt of the Certificate, it will be returned by mail or Express, and then the article named in it, or not. Five Certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty-five, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred, $15; Certificate money to be enclosed with order (low expenses strictly observed).
AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them the cents on every Certificate received their remittance amounts to $1, and more liberal inducements in proportion. Send for Circular. Address
W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all may possess, without the aid of charms, spells, etc., free by mail, for 25 cts., enclosed in a letter. Address the unmarried both sexes together with a guess at their fortunes, and a splendid gift-book, of great interest; Third edition; over 100,000 sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. RAIL, M. D., 300 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 50 cents. Address 12 White Street, New York.



Drunkards, Stop!—Send for a Circular, showing how to remove the appetite for strong drink. Hundreds are cured every week. It can be given secretly and without injury to health. Address, with stamp, Drs. MILLER & TRAVER, Lowell, Mass.

Albums for the Army.
Our New Pocket Album,
holding sixteen pictures, and sold at Seventy-five Cents, is the cheapest and best Pocket Album ever offered to the public.
Sent by mail to any address, postpaid, on receipt of Seventy-five Cents.
SAMUEL ROWLES & COMPANY,
Photograph Album Manufacturers,
Springfield, Mass.

Know Thyself! Know thy Friends!
Enclose $1 and specimen of handwriting (of any individual), stating sex, age and color of hair; and you will receive a correct description of their character. Satisfaction and secrecy guaranteed.
Address PROF. DENNIS,
445-9 P. O. Box 865, Milford, Mass.

A New Book.
Physiology of Love. Cloth; gilt edges. Sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents—$1.
000 VICTOR DELAFO, 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office
FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.
Merchants Bankers, Teachers Lawyers, &c.,
And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular
J. G. COOLEY,
Spencer Street N. Y.

Royal Havana Lottery.
$9 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information Circulars. Highest prize paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
Nassau St., N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at a Low Price.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
338 Broadway, New York.

VETERAN

Soldiers!

We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Fins for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field at $1 50 each; also, all the various Army Badges worn by the different armies, by the single one, 100 or 1,000. Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE, Manufacturing Jewellers,
326 Broadway, N. Y.
Solid 18 k Gold, $6 50. Solid Silver, $1 50.

Stereoscopic Views, Cartes de Visites—New Books. Send for Catalogue. C. B. HARRISON, P. O. Box 3,712. Mus. Mas.

The Old Established and only reliable Purchasing Agency doing business since 1849. Parties desiring anything they see advertised or any other information, can obtain it by enclosing a 3c. stamp for Circular to HENRY STEPHENS, 85 Nassau St., N. Y.
446-8

E. W. BENICZKY,
At his well-known
PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY,
No. 3 New Chambers Street,

Has now increased facilities to take Cartes de Visite as well as other Photographs, in the best style. Notwithstanding the increase in price of different materials, the charges are the same and the quality the best.

Card Pictures $1 50 per doz.—8 for $1.
Cards Vignettes $1 per doz.
Large Size Photographs, 2 for $1.

All other Photographs up to life size colored in oil or water colors in the most reasonable prices.

☞Particular attention given to Copying Cards or Ambrotypes into Large Photographs. The smallest or most defaced picture can be by the aid of his experienced artists, copied into a handsome photograph. Every attention paid to visitors wishing to examine the specimens.

Swords, Sashes, Belts,
Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords.
431-56 B. KITTRIDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Lieut.-Gen. U. S. Grant Package,
Copyright secured. Agents send orders and for Circulars early to
J. L. G. CIERPONT, 535 Broadway, N. Y.

Broker's Stock of unredeemed goods for sale at 10 per cent. discount, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable goods worth from 75 cents to $300 each, to any person sending 25 cents as sample. Any person sending 25 cents as sample. Any person sending 25 cents we will inform them in advance of the kind they will receive, giving a description of the sum, with the price we sold at retail, and we will forward, if it does not prove as described, we will refund the money. For further particulars address with 3c. stamp,
ANDREWS & CO., 108 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.
448-9

"Diphtheria."

A certain preventive, and sure, safe and simple remedy for this sudden and dangerous disease, may be had by addr'sing (enclosing stamp for reply)
DR. OTIS C. LAIDLOW, 12 Astor Place, N. Y.
545-8

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New! Burgler-Proof Traveller's Lock, Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, Magic Tobacco Stop, 36 more Novel and Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.
S. W. RICE & CO., 51 Nassau St., N. Y.

If you want to Know
A little of everything relating to the human system, diet, air, marriage, etc., etc., read revised and enlarged edition of Medical Common Sense.

Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Liver and Kidney Complaints, Digestion, Constipation, Rupture, Salt Rheum, Cancer, Paralysis, Diseases of the Heart, Secret Habits, How to Recover the Sight and throw aside Spectacles, The Curious Marriage Customs of All the World, Philosophy of Marriage, Philosophy of Childmaking, a Chapter for the Married, and a thousand things of value to the married and single never written before, making, altogether, a curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. 400 pages; 100 illustrations. Contents tables sent free by mail to all applicants, or the book forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 50.
Address R. L. WOLFE, 129 Bleecker St., N. Y.

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most desirable Cards ever published—including the French Dancing Girl; Venus Sporting with Love; Bedtime; Remarking Charleston; Sinking the 290; etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 13 different varieties.
G. W. EVANSTON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Whiskers! Whiskers!

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Sent, 30 cents a Package, or six for $1. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Address M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

CHICKERING & SONS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Grand, Square and Upright Pianofortes.

THALBERG'S CERTIFICATE

"Since my arrival in America I have constantly used the Pianos of Messrs. Chickering & Sons, and I can only repeat that which I have so often said before: The instruments are the best I have seen in the United States, and will compare favorably with any I have ever known.
S. THALBERG."

Warerooms, 652 Broadway, N. Y., 246 Washington Street, Boston

Remington's
Army and Navy
REVOLVER!
Approved by the Government.
Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. A Key Pocket and Belt Revolver, of 32 calibre. Send for Circular.
E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.
438-56

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PIERRE BIBON 93 Ann St., N. Y.

Do You Want to get Married?
Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, illustrated. Treating on Physiognomy, Plainly showing how all may attract the opposite sex, with the dying love, and naming whoever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps. Address
DR. B. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1826, Portland, Me.
445-48

Hoyt's Rissvatha Hair Restorative—
Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, nitrate of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp, a invaluable dressing for whiskers.
HOYT'S MINNEHAHA HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled in producing the hair in curl.
HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM
all shades from flaxen hair at the same time changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.
HOYT'S EXCELSIOR VIOLET POWDER, imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves youthfulness. Sold everywhere.
N. B.—Ladies' French Hairdresser in attendance to apply the Rissvatha.
JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc., supplying, at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a stamped addressed envelope, Single Copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings county, N. Y. 000

WEDDING CARDS.
French Note Papers, Seals and Monograms Presses, Silver Plates, etc., at J. ESSWEIN'S Stationery Warehouse, 26 Ann St.
For Specimens by mail, send 25 cents.
000

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT—A Powerful Stimulant—Each pot is warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Onguent and finding it not as represented by investing one of the 50 cent pots, the money returned to them at any time within three months from date of purchase. Price $1. Sent free and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money.
Address C. CLARK,
448-57 P. O. Drawer 18, Albany, N. Y.

MADAME BENEDICT'S
Millinery & Dressmaking Establishment,
Is now replete with
Every Imported Novelty of the Season.
12 WAVERLEY PLACE, NEW YORK 000

Baker's Rheumatic Balm,
BAKER'S FEVER COOLER,
BAKER'S LIVER AND KIDNEY REMEDIES,
which are invaluable. Price $5.
Principal Depot—No. 14 TENTH STREET, near Fourth avenue. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price. 439-51

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL, prepared by Madame Rachel Lowrenz, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enamelist. It whitens the skin permanently, gives it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, $5 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 133 Sixth avenue, Broadway, and at Small-Wood Stores, Philadelphia.

Gray's Patent
Molded Collars
Have now been before the public for nearly a year. They are universally pronounced the neatest and best fitting collars made.
The upper edge presents a perfect curve, free from the angles noticed in all other collars.
The cravat causes no puckers on the inside of the turn-down collar—they are AS SMOOTH INSIDE AS OUTSIDE—and therefore perfectly free and easy to the throat.
The Garotte collar has a smooth and evenly finished edge all around.
These Collars are not simply flat pieces of paper cut in the form of a collar, but are MOLDED AND SHAPED TO FIT THE NECK.
They are made in "Novelty" (or turn-down style), in every half size from 12 to 17 inches, and in "Garotte" (or Gurotte), from 13 to 17 inches; and packed in "solid sizes" in neat blue cartons, containing 1 dozen each of one style and size—so the latter is very handy package for Travellers, Army and Navy Officers.
☞ EVERY COLLAR is stamped
"Gray's Patent Molded Collar."
Sold by all dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The Trade supplied by
HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
81 Devonshire St., Boston.
J. S. Lowrey & Co., 37 Warren St., New York; Van Deusen, Buchner & Co., 627 Chesnut St., Philadelphia; Brook, 33 Hanover St., Baltimore; Md.; Wall, Stephens & Co., 322 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; Leavitt & Davis, cor. Fifth and Vine Sts., Cincinnati; J. Von Borries & Co., 431 Main Street, Louisville, Ky.; A. Frankenthal & Bro., 6 North Main Street, St. Louis, Mo.; Bradford Bros., Milwaukee, Wis.; H. Wolf, Withers & Co., 7 to 13 Tchoupitoulas Street, New Orleans. 444-52

Remington's
WATCHES.
A handsome Heavy Hunting Cased Silver Composite Watch, Fine Movements, handsome white Dial and steel-polished hand; elegant finish in every respect, and in perfect running order. These Watches are composed of two metals, the outer one being the exact quality of silver, and will bear engraving of every description, and has the appearance of Sterling Silver in every respect. Sold by us by the case, at $72.
Sample Watches sent free of expense on receipt of $14.

$14 $14

The great English Army Watch, in Heavy Gold Composite Hunting Cases, a fac-simile of the British Army Watch. These Cases will wear a great length, being genuine Orido. Sold only by the case, at $76.
Sample Watches sent free of expense on receipt of $15.

$15 $15

The Great New Army Watch, especially for soldiers, in heavy Gold Hunting Cases, Solid Silver Lever, Genuine Movements, Engraved, Engine-turned or plain cases; warranted to be represented, and a perfect timekeeper, only $18.

$18 $18

A Lady's very elegant English Gold Hunting Watch, very small. Gold Composite Cases, Magic Spring and outside Case, and a perfect timekeeper, only $16.

$16 $16

Office's Watch—Extra Heavy Amerioan Silver Hunting Cases, Full Jewelled Movements—Trademark Wm. Ellery. $33

$35 $35

A very handsome Double Case Duplex Stop Watch, New York Movements, every second Jewelled in every action, Gold Balance, and a very fine Sterling Silver Hunting Cases.

$35 $35

The Movements are Beautifully Engraved and have the patent adjusted stop. $36

$36

WARRANTED.

All our Watches are sent out in perfect running order, and are warranted as represented or the money refunded. Any watch we have rented given if required.

We offer great inducements to Agents. Send for our Circular. Constantly on hand Watches of every description.

Postage on Watches, by the case, $2 28; Registering 50 cents. Sample Watches sent free.

GEO. A. ELY & CO.,
IMPORTERS,
181 (late 208) Broadway, N.Y.

U. S. 10-40 BONDS.

These Bonds are issued under the Act of Congress of March 3th, 1864, which provides that in lieu of so much of the loan authorized by the Act of March 3d, 1863, to which this is supplementary, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow from time to time, on the credit of the United States, not exceeding

Two Hundred Million Dollars

during the current fiscal year, and to prepare and issue therefor Coupons and Registered Bonds of the United States; and all Bonds issued under this Act shall be

Exempt from Taxation

by or under any State or municipal authority. Subscriptions to these Bonds are received in United States notes or notes of National Banks. They are

To be Redeemed in Coin,

at the pleasure of the Government, at any period not less than ten nor more than forty years from their date, and until their redemption

Five per Cent. Interest will be paid in Coin, on Bonds of not over one hundred dollars annually, and on all other Bonds semi-annually.

The interest is payable on the first days of March and September in each year. The semi-annual Coupons are payable at those dates, and the annual Coupons on the 50 and 100 dollar Bonds are payable on the first of March.

Subscribers will receive either Registered or Coupon Bonds, as they may prefer. Registered Bonds are recorded on the books of the U. S. Treasurer, and can be transferred only on the owner's order. Coupon Bonds are payable to bearer, and are more convenient for commercial uses.

Registered Bonds will be issued of the denominations of Fifty Dollars ($50), One Hundred Dollars ($100), Five Hundred Dollars ($500), One Thousand Dollars ($1,000), Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000), and Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000); and Coupon Bonds of the denominations of Fifty Dollars ($50), One Hundred Dollars ($100), Five Hundred Dollars ($500), and One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.)

Subscribers to this loan will have the option of having their Bonds draw interest from March 1st, by paying the accrued interest in coin—(or in United States notes, or in notes of National Banks, adding fifty per cent. for premium)—and to receive their first interest from the date of subscription and deposit.

As these Bonds are exempt from municipal or State taxation, they are worth an increased value to one per cent. per annum, according to the rate of tax levies in various parts of the country.

At the present rate of premium on gold they pay over eight per cent. interest in currency, and are of equal convenience as a permanent or temporary investment.

It is believed that no securities offer so great inducements to lenders as the various descriptions of U. S. Bonds. In all other forms of indebtedness, the faith or ability of private parties or stock companies or separate communities only is pledged for payment, while for the debts of the United States the whole property of the country is hodden to secure the payment of both principal and interest in coin.

These Bonds may be subscribed for in sums of $50 up to any amount desirable, on the same terms, and thus made equally available to the smallest lender and the largest capitalist. They can be converted into money at any moment, and the holder will have the benefit of the interest.

The fact that all duties on imports are payable in specie furnishes a fund for like payment of interest on all Government Bonds largely in excess of the wants of the Treasury for this purpose.

Upon the receipt of subscriptions a certificate of deposit will be issued, in duplicate, without cost, the original of which will be forwarded by the subscriber to the Secretary of the Treasury, at Washington, with a letter stating the kind (registered or coupon) and the denomination of bonds required.

Upon the receipt of the original certificates at the Treasury Department, the Bonds awarded for will be transmitted to the subscribers respectively.

Subscriptions will be received by the Treasurer of the United States at Washington, and the Assistant Treasurers at New York, Boston and Philadelphia, and by the

FIRST NATIONAL BANK of New York, No. 4 Wall St.
SECOND " " " " 58 St. & 3d Ry.
FOURTH " " " " Pine Street.
SIXTH " " " " 6th Av. & 3dSt.
TENTH " " " " Broadway,
NEW YORK EXCHANGE BANK 128 Greenwich St.
First National Bank of Portland, Me.,
Second National Bank of Boston, Mass.
First National Bank of Providence, R. I.
First National Bank of Hartford, Conn.
First National Bank of Albany, N. Y.
First National Bank of Buffalo, N. Y.
First National Bank of Philadelphia, Pa.
First National Bank of Baltimore, Md.
First National Bank of Washington, D. C.
First National Bank of Cincinnati, O.
First National Bank of Chicago, Ill.
First National Bank of Milwaukie, Wis.
First National Bank of St. Louis, Mo.
First National Bank of New Orleans, La.

And by all National Banks which are depositaries of public money. All respectable banks and bankers throughout the country will furnish further information on application, and afford every facility to subscribers.

THE BEST LITERATURE

By the Best American Writers

Is found each month in the

Atlantic Monthly

LONGFELLOW, LOWELL HAWTHORNE, EMERSON, HOLMES, AGASSIZ and others of the leading writers of the country contribute regularly.

Terms, $3 a year, postage paid—25 cents a number. Liberal reduction to Clubs. Send 25 cents for a specimen number to

TICKNOR & FIELDS, Publishers,
443-550 135 Washington street, Boston.

LIFE OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN

Is published and for sale this day by

T. B. PETERSON & BROTHERS,

306 CHESTNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The Life, Speeches, Proclamations, Letters, Messages and Public Services of

ABRAHAM LINCOLN,

Sixteenth President of the United States.

With a full history of his Life; his career as a Lawyer and Politician; his services in Congress; with his Speeches, Proclamations, Letters, Messages, Acts and services as President of the United States and Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, up to the present time.

Complete in one large volume of 200 pages, with a portrait of President Lincoln. Price 50 cents in paper, or 75 cents in cloth.

Gen. McClellan's Life and Reports.

The Life, Campaigns, Battles, Reports and public services of Major-Gen. George B. McClellan, the Hero of Western Virginia, South Mountain and Antietam, with a full history of all his Campaigns and Battles, as well as his Reports and Correspondence with the War Department and the President, in relation to them, from the time he first took the field in this war until he was finally relieved from command, after the battle of Antietam; with his various SPEECHES TO SOLDIERS, etc., up to the present time.

New and Enlarged Edition. Complete in one large volume of 200 pages, with a Portrait of Gen. McClellan. Price 50 cents in paper, or 75 cents in cloth. Copies sent everywhere, free of postage, on receipt of price.

Agents wanted everywhere to sell the above books, who will be supplied with them assorted, to suit themselves, as follows—the 50 cent editions at $3 50 a dozen, or $25 a hundred; or with the cloth editions at $6 a dozen, or $45 a hundred. Send on your orders, with cash enclosed, at once, for whatever quantity you may wish, at these rates, addressed to

T. B. PETERSON & BROTHERS,
306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia,

And they will be sent to you within one hour after the receipt of the order. o

$50 AMERICAN $50 LEVERS.

Trade Mark, P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jewelled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $50.

Also, every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in six drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs etc., etc.
R REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.
000o

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, prepaid, for $2 25; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by

HENRY CRAIG,
335 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Bellevue, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all eyes, for $3; with 12 assorted views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

American, Swiss and English Watches n superior styles and quality of cases. Orders from the Trade or Army (large or small) promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 20 years.
000o T. B. BYNNER, 175 Broadway, N. Y.

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to C. H. WELLING, 96 Pine St., N. Y., and receive it by return mail. o

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both Sexes—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes. free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South-Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. o

Great Chance to Make Money!

Agents can make $10 to $20 a day selling our celebrated PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS. We have every variety, to suit the tastes of all; retail for 25 cents each. A Splendid GOLD OR SILVER WATCH presented free to each Agent. $15 capital only required to obtain 100 Packages and a fine Silver Watch. Also, SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Send for Circulars. Mailed free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
Prize Package and Engraving Warehouse,
o 36 and 38 Beekman street, N. Y.

JUST THE PLACE.

LAURA (who has accidentally met her intended)—"Oh, Charles, I am so glad I've met you; mama has been scolding me so. If we could only find a quiet spot I would tell you what she says!"
CHARLES—"Let's get into this Broadway stage—we are sure not to be interrupted."
[Hails the astonished driver.]

GOLD WATCH FREE!

AND

$15 Per Day Easy $15

Made by acting as our Agent for the sale of the GREAT ORIGINAL and only Genuine RICKARDS'S COMBINATION PRIZE PACKAGES. Each of those Wonderful, Large and Useful Packages contains Large quantities of Fine Writing Paper, Envelopes, Steel Pens, Pen Holders, Lead Pencils, Blotters, Fine Engravings, Ladies New Fashion Plates, Designs for Needle Work, Beautiful Emblems, Cottage Keepsakes. Household Companions, Parlor, Toilet, Kitchen and Garden Guide, Evening Amusements, Letter Writers Instructors, Rare Old Recipes, Many Ways to Get Rich, Miniature Calendars for 1864, Yankee Notions, Likenesses of Military Heroes, Camp Companions, with Pay, Bounties, Rations, Allowances, Pensions, &c., Games, Rich Presents of Fine Jewellery, &c., the whole worth, if Bought Separate, Many Dollars. Price, Each Package, only 25 cts. Wholesale Rates to Agents very Low, from 100 to 200 per cent. profit made. One hundred packages, with presents of Jewelry and gift of a superb Watch, show bills and sole right for a town or county sent anywhere on receipt of $15. SMART AGENTS sell 100 Packages in a FEW HOURS. Our Packages stand same as ever, alone and above all competition, and have long been acknowledged as the leading and only real valuable and standard articles of the kind ever manufactured. We present each person who acts as Agent for us with a Beautiful GOLD OR SILVER HUNTING CASE LEVER WATCH, Genuine English Movements, Full Jewelled, Warranted one year. All Goods Guaranteed as Represented or money refunded. A single one of our Large Packages contains more real valuable articles than any half dozen other Packages ever sold. This is the greatest money-making business for Agents of the age. Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium Inducements FREE.

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y., Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World. o

Soldier's Money Belt!

(HOWARD'S PAT.)

This Belt is designed especially for Soldiers. It will not sweat or wet through under any circumstances. Has three compartments—one for Letters, one for Greenbacks, and one for Card Photographs or Keepsakes of the loved ones at home. They are Light, Durable and Elegant, and will last a lifetime. They are sent to all parts of the army by return mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. $2, by the

HOWARD BELT CO.,
o 436 Broadway, N. Y.

Shults' Onguent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

GREAT TRIUMPH.

STEINWAY & SONS, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker Street, N. Y., were awarded a FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.

The special correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker." 000o

The Bowen Microscope,

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 35 cents. Four of different powers for $1.

Address F. B. BOWEN, Box 220,
000o Boston, Mass.

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or other fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
o F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE ARMY!

Hereafter we will send, postpaid, any of our PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS ordered by soldiers for themselves or friends, giving an Album of the full value of the money sent.

Our Albums have the reputation of being superior to all others in beauty and durability, and range in price from 50 cents to $50. Our Catalogue of

Card Photographs

Now embraces about 5,000 Officers Army and Navy, Statesmen, Actors, copies of Works of Art, &c. Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.

Our assortment of them is very extensive, including a great variety of views of the present war. Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway, New York,
448-510 Manufacturers of Photographic Materials.

A WATCH FOR ALL!

S. M. WARD & CO.,

MANUFACTURING

JEWELLERS!

208 Broadway, New York.

100,000

Watches, Lockets, Chains, Gold Pens and Cases, Rings, Pins, etc., etc.

To be sold for $1 each, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get, and not to be kept unless you are perfectly satisfied.

Orders specifying the various articles are put in Envelopes and Sealed, and sent without regard to choice.

One order will be sent for 25 cents; five for $1; 11 for $2; 30 for $5; 100 for $15.

Also, we have just issued several new designs, among which is the new Battle Pin with the Likeness (taken from life) of either Generals Grant, Meade, Banks, McClellan, Rosecrans, Burnside, Butler. Sherman, Force, Logan, Kilpatrick, Gilmore, Foster, Custer, Com. Porter, and either officers in the Army or Navy whose likeness can be obtained. Also, a new Artillery and Battery Pin. Also, a new Engineer, Naval and Pontoonier's Pin. The above are all made in Fine Gold Plate, and will be sent for $1 50 each. Also, a new Cavalry Pin in Solid Silver (pure coin) for $1 50. Also, either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, Solid Silver, with your Name, Regiment and Company handsomely engraved thereon, for $1. Either of the above will be sent in Solid Gold for $5. Agents wanted in every Regiment, Vessel and Hospital. Send for wholesale illustrated descriptive circular. o

Dyspepsia Tablets.

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. 50 cents per box; sent free on the receipt of 65 cents. Depot, 207 Centre Street, second floor. 000o

INFANTRY PIN FOR THE SOLDIER

IN COIN SILVER, for $1 50, including the Engraving of the Name, Co. and Regiment; also

THE NATIONAL BATTLE PIN, CAVALRY AND ARTILLERY PIN, MONITOR, ENGINEER AND SIGNAL CORPS PINS.

o LOUIS PHILIP & CO., 2 Murray St., N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, sent free, by mail, in neat case, only $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, single one, by mail, $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper $15

OR COMPASS WATCH.

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" engraved or engine-turned Hunting Case Watch—Magic Spring—Genuine English Jewelled or Nickel Movements—"M. J. TOBIAS."—Independent action—Self-Balance—and has a NEAT MINIATURE COMPASS sunk in the cap and attached to the movements—making it a correct Guide for the Soldier or Traveller—a perfect Timekeeper—"Warranted one year," will stand acid, and is an Exact Imitation of a $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

ENGLISH STERLING SILVER LEVER WATCHES, engraved Hunting Case, full jewelled movements warranted, $18.

$30 American Levers. $30

In 4 oz. Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Full Ruby Jewelled. Gold Joints, Magic Spring, with Full Guarantee, only $30.

Real English Duplex Stop Watch,

In Massive Silver Hunting Cases, Full Jewelled, SWEEP SECONDS, for Artillerists or Timing Horses, Full Guarantee, $30.

Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above styles of European Watches. Catalogue of trade prices mailed free.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper," "It is a novelty here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Illustrated News says, "Correct timepieces, and for beauty and fine finish they are equal in appearance to $100 watches."

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,
o 38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready-Made or to Measure, at $33, $39, $45 per doz.

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50 each—all cut one yard long. A single Shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 63 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable. Price 75 cents each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 90 cents.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

Health for the Soldier!

For one who dies from the effects of the bullet, ten perish from damp and exposure to night air. Small doses of HOLLOWAY'S PILLS, taken every other night, will correct all disorders of the Liver and Stomach, purify the blood and insure sound health to every man. 35 cents, 88 cents, and $1 40 per box or pot. o

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 000o

Ivory Jewelry!

Fine Ivory Brooches	$1 50
Ball Earrings	$1 50
Ivory Initial Sleeve Buttons, (new style)	75
Pearl Initial Buttons	$1 00

Sent free, on receipt of price. A great variety on hand, at WELLING'S, 207 Centre St., N. Y., Sign of the Golden Elephant.
o

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,

20 cents each. $1 80 per doz. Free by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1614, New York city. Send for circular.

Munro's 10 Cent Publications.

NOVEL No. 12.

THE OCEAN ROVERS;

Or, the Freebooters of the Isles.

A thrilling romance of land and sea. For sale by Newsagents generally, and sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 10 cents.

GEORGE MUNRO & CO.,
o 137 William St., N. Y.

Beautiful False Moustaches, 50 Cents and $1 a pair; sent free by mail. Send stamp for Circular. Address
C. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED

NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1863, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 449—VOL. XVIII.] NEW YORK, MAY 7, 1864. [TERMS: $5 00 YEARLY, 14 WEEKS $1 00.

THE WAR IN LOUISIANA.—VIEW OF NATCHITOCHES.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. DONVILL.—SEE PAGE 102.

THE WAR IN TENNESSEE.—REBEL MASSACRE OF THE UNION TROOPS AFTER THE SURRENDER AT FORT PILLOW, APRIL 12.—SEE PAGE 103.

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS—Three men and one woman, each over eight feet high; two Dwarfs, each less than two feet high—Monsters of other Novelties. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'CLOCK P.M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album.

The gift of a copy of this Album to newspapers advertising it for withdrawal for the present, in consequence of the great demand for this unique and popular collection of Photographs. Costs only $5. Sent free by mail, on receipt of price.

N. B.—To prevent counterfeiting, each package is accompanied by the proprietor's own signature. Four different languages, viz: Turkish, Armenian, Greek and English.

C. OSCANYAN, New York.

War Items.

We have encouraging reports from the army of the Pain Killer. One writes:

"My little bottle of Pain Killer was worth more to me than its weight in gold. The fatigue of our first week's march and exposure, with pat as many of our noble fellows on the sick list, thanks to that little bottle, only left me stronger and badder than when I left home. It cured a comrade of the camp diarrhœa in a few hours."

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, MAY 7, 1864.

☞ Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 72 Duane street, below Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE F. BENDA & Co., Proprietors of the London American, 100 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 00
Two copies " to one address	5 00
Four "	9 00
Magazine and paper one year	4 00
Papers, 14 weeks	1 00

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

One Dollar a line on the outside or last page.

Sixty Cents a line on the 14th and 18th pages.

The Publisher of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER invites his present contributors and others to send in before May 1st stories and poems suited to its columns, as well as ideas for comic sketches on subjects of the day.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

THE guerillas, the vermin that swarm in advance of the movements of the rebel armies, are now very active in Virginia. A body appeared on the 17th at Sulphur Springs.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The feeling of opposition to the Davis tyranny is spreading through the State. Rebel conscription officers in the western part of the State have been hung by the people. Holden's election as Governor seems almost certain.

To sustain its falling power, the rebel Government has made a tremendous effort to check the Union feeling, but to drive them to desperation.

On the 17th, with a force numbering from 5,000 to 10,000, they made a sudden attack on Plymouth. The 12th New York cavalry met and drove back the rebel horse. Gen. Wessels is prepared to defend Plymouth to the last.

Fort Gray, two miles from Plymouth, on the Roanoke, was first attacked, but it was resolutely defended by Capt. Brown, 85th N. Y., and the Miami, Capt. Flusser, with the Rutter, Whitehead, Lockwood and Bombshell steamed up and poured shot and shell into the rebel ranks. The enemy, after being three times repulsed with terrible loss, drew off.

After the attack on Fort Gray was repulsed the gunboat Bombshell ran up Roanoke river, to look out for the rebel ram, but was attacked by a rebel battery. On the 18th, about 3 P. M., the ram came down, passed the Union batteries, ran into and sank the gunboat Bombshell. The gunboat Miami fired at her, but the shell rebounded, killing Captain Flusser. The ram holds the river. Plymouth is cut off from relief, and, as the rebels state, was captured by storm on the 20th. Brigadier-General A. F. Hoke, the rebel commander, is said to have taken 1,600 prisoners and 25 pieces of artillery, besides immense stores.

KENTUCKY.

Gen. Shackleford and several citizens were captured by Bennett's guerillas at Madisonville, but subsequently released.

From Eastern Kentucky we learn that the rebels have been defeated in two fights on the Licking river. The rebels attacked the Union forces at Paintville on the 12th and were repulsed, after which the Unionists pursued the enemy, and on the 14th surprised their camp at Half mountain. The result of the movement was the killing and wounding of 85 rebels and the capture of 70 others, besides 200 horses, 400 saddles, 300 stand of arms, camp equipage, etc. Col. Clay is among the prisoners.

A party of rebels attempted to enter Kentucky at Pound gap on Tuesday, but were driven back by the 45th Kentucky mounted infantry.

LOUISIANA.

After the affair at Crump's hill, Gen. Banks advanced on the enemy's position at Pleasant hill. On the 8th he came up with them at Sabine crossroads, where the enemy, under Kirby Smith, Magruder, Holmes and Taylor were defeated with a loss of 1,000.

Being short of rations Banks recalled the fleet, which was nearing Shreveport. On its way down it was attacked, and in this battle the rebels lost Gen. Green, and 600 men. Green's head was carried off by a shell.

Meanwhile Banks advanced to Pleasant hill, where, after a primary check, his troops under Gen. A. J. Smith finally routed the enemy, who lost very heavily. Gens. Mouton and Parsons being among the killed.

A fight took place at Gov. Johnson's plantation recently, in which the rebels were repulsed, losing 20 prisoners, four officers and $10,000 worth of smuggled goods.

ARKANSAS.

Capt. Phelps, of the gunboat No. 26, on the 4th of April, captured a rebel mail carrier near Crockett's Bluff, Arkansas, with 500 letters and 60,000 percussion caps for Gen. Price.

NAVAL.

The blockade-runner Alliance was recently captured on the Savannah river.

CONGRESS.

THE Senate, on the 18th, was engaged nearly all day on the Miscellaneous Appropriation bill. The appropriations for the Agricultural Department, which had been reduced $50,000 by the Finance Committee, were restored to the House figures. There was quite a lively debate between Mr. Fessenden, the chairman of the Finance Committee, and Mr. Sherman, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, in reference to these appropriations. Mr. Fessenden lectured Mr. Sherman and the Senate at large for thwarting the efforts of the Finance Committee to reduce the appropriations, and Mr. Sherman, Mr. Wade, Mr. Grimmer, Mr. Spinner, was incensed to $6,000, and other salaries in his bureau to the extent heretofore recommended.

In the House, the National Bank bill was passed, by a vote of 78 against 61. The Internal Tax bill was next made the special order for to-day. Resolutions in favor of increasing the duties on articles of luxury imported from rebel States, and of prohibiting all trade in, and also in favor of repressing the circulation of State Bank or tax notes, were agreed to. The latter by a vote of 63 against 56. Mr. Stevens made three attempts to obtain a suspension of the rules in order that a joint resolution increasing temporarily the duty on imports 50 per centum for 60 days might be considered; but the opposition enabled them to defeat the motion, and the necessary two-thirds vote consequently could not be obtained. This proposition was designed to meet the difficulty now threatening the country of gold by large purchases abroad in anticipation of a revision of the tariff and increase of duties.

In the Senate, on the 19th, several unimportant measures were discussed. The bill repealing all laws relating to the remitting of fines, etc., due to their owners was then taken up and passed to a third reading. When, however, the vote on the final passage of the bill was about to be taken, Mr. Sherman moved to except the law of 1795, and after considerable debate upon the motion was beaten by a vote of 24 against 17. Mr. Conness moved to lay the bill on the table. This was negatived—9 yeas to 31 nays.

In the House, there was no business of any interest transacted.

In the Senate, on the 20th, a joint resolution was introduced by Mr. Harris, providing for the taking of the decennial census in 1865 by the States. The question of appointing a Committee of Conference on the Missouri difficulties was discussed, but no conclusion reached. The bill repealing the Fugitive Slave law was taken up, and debated by Messrs. Foster, Sumner and Brown, until the hour of adjournment.

In the House, the day session was occupied in considering the Tax bill. No question of importance to the country was considered and passed upon. During the evening session, the new silver coin and the new two cent pieces were passed. The bill for reconstructing the Louisiana State Government, introduced by Mr. Ashley, and Messrs. Norton, of Illinois, and Bicconnell, of Pennsylvania, spoke in favor of it.

In the Senate, on the 21st, the House bill for the relief of pensioners, passed by rebel troops or guerillas was passed. The bill to establish a Navy Yard on Carson's bay, near Dalles city, Oregon, was taken up, and an amendment offered by Mr. Harlan struck out all after the enacting clause, and the subject was laid aside. The consideration was then resumed on the bill for the relief of Indian wars, resumed, and Mr. Van Winkle made a speech in favor of the bill. Mr. Trumbull, Mr. Wade, Mr. Sherman and one of the States of the Union were also heard upon the subject. The bill providing that no person found in any Territory or in the District of Columbia who is capable of bearing arms, and who refuses to serve or to have substituted in his stead, shall be entitled to vote, was then passed over the veto of the President. Bank bill, which had not been finally disposed of when the House bill was recently passed the House, with amendments, the only important one being the striking out the provision requiring the transfer of the capital, circulation and securities to the banks by 1st of September, and the business of the banks by 1st of next year; each half year, and duty of one-half of the capital stock to be assessed and after January, 1865, upon the average amount of circulation, and only upon one-quarter of one per cent. each half year upon the average amount of capital stock beyond the amount secured in United States bonds.

In the House, the Printing Committee made a report designed to cause a thorough revision of the publication of the Congressional Globe. The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Tax bill, and completed it as far as the 70th section. Several Amendments of a verbal character and inquiries on hand were offered, and rejected; both propositions to increase the duty on whisky after the 1st of May, instead of the 1st of July, was agreed to.

In the Senate, on the 22d, the bill providing for the relief of Indian wars was passed. The bill providing a revenue of $150,000,000 by a system of internal tariff neither affords revenue to the Government nor encouragement to the industry of the people. Providing a bureau of military justice, consisting of Judge Advocate-General Holt and Assistant Judge Advocates, was passed. The Army Appropriation bill has been taken up and a number of amendments including one giving colored troops, after the 1st of January next, the same pay and allowances, except bounty, as white soldiers, was adopted, and the bill was passed by a vote of 36 to —. Mr. Powell, of Kentucky.

The entire session of the House was occupied with the Tax bill in Committee of the Whole. Amendments increasing the tax on wholesale and retail liquor dealers, commercial brokers, passenger vessels, bowling alleys and billiard tables, builders and contractors, illuminating oils, petroleum, soda water and other beverages, iron and numerous other articles were adopted.

The Senate, on the 23rd, was not in session.

In the House, a bill was passed creating an additional Supervising Inspector of Steamboats for New Orleans and Board of Local Inspectors at Portland, Oregon, and at Memphis, Tenn. A resolution was adopted amending the fourth section of the Act of March 3, 1793, empowering United States Commissioners to take depositions in cases arising growing them with seals. The Committee who investigated the charges against Representative Blair, of Missouri, of speculating in cotton, while in military command in Missouri, reported that the charges that Mr. Blair had not violated any law. Some remarks followed of a personal character by Mr. Blair and his accuser, Mr. McClurg. The coup de grâce of the investigation was administered by Thaddeus Stevens, who resolved itself into a committee for that purpose.

FOREIGN NEWS.

In the English House of Lords the Marquis of Clanricarde called for the correspondence with the Confederate States in reference to the removal of the British Consul at Charleston, and the action of the government of English subjects in the rebel army. Earl Russell agreed to the motion, the words "except the letter of an officer in the United States navy," as to men having come on board the vessel without his knowledge, being left out. The Earl of Derby then called the attention of the American Minister to the reports of the fall of Richmond.

Mr. Brunseld, M. P., had resigned his seat in the House of Commons, and was about to be made a Peer. A requisition of his complicity with Maurice and Ernest Duncan, in the Confederate Government, Lord Palmerston, speaking on the subject, said that the "pursuit" was not a criminal one, and that it was essential to the best interests of Europe.

The Duke of Beaufort resigned his seat in the British Cabinet in consequence of continued ill health.

Parliament was received with great enthusiasm in England. He made a short speech at Southampton, which he was entertained, and proclaimed the fidelity of England to the cause of Italy.

The Danes have retired from Duppel and the Prussians had bombarded Sonderburg without having given any notice. Sonderburg was severely shelled, and many killed and wounded; that 1,500 shells had been thrown into the town, which was deserted, and that 50 houses had been burned. The siege lines against Duppel had been strengthened, and the bombardment for some days. Lord Palmerston stated that all the Powers had agreed to the assembling of a conference in London. He said, however that the Germanic Diet dissented.

Heenan, Sayers, Mace and other celebrities of the prize-ring pleased guilty to the English indictment against them for prize-fighting, and received from the King, Judgment was suspended, and they stand discharged to appear for sentence when called on.

TOWN GOSSIP.

Talk about the Fair.

AFTER three weeks of a brilliant life the great event of the season settled into a thing of the past on last Saturday night. It went out, not quietly but honored by crowds, and lulled by the sound of soft music, even to the moment when the doors were closed the vast buildings, but who were as little of sleep as a greedy of sight-seeing as ever. We cannot say that the receipts of the concluding week of the fair was sustained to the last, and perhaps may be making an underestimate when we say that from 25 cent paying crowd was admitted, the interest and attendance of the artistic department was large. The bad impression of shopkeeping, seemed to flag, and the democratic portion of the community was in many cases to a stare at the empty stalls or neglected ones. We think this should not have been, when it is considered that the whole of good time of the fair had amounts to a quarter of a million, and that our city has thousands of beautiful women who have given the best hours of the cares of those resigning, and kept up the interest and profit to the very latest moment. We will, however, drop the subject of commentation, and be disposed to regard the entire matter as a success, and that the Sanitary Commission numbered that its business management was not of the best, and that, with all the enthusiasm and chances of the beginning, the gross amount settled should have been increased by at least 50 per cent.

One of the Curiosities

Is the Police Department and its management, which is under the charge of Inspector Leonard. To the headquarters of this department, across the street of the building, all arrivals are brought lost by the visitors, and found by the police or any one else. Here, lately, have been brought articles of artistic from an old glove up to a camel's hair shawl valued at $700, and we believe unclaimed up to the closing of the fair. Here, too, are contained considerable amounts of money, from a five cent currency stamp, to a $20 gold piece. Here a score of the room is the receptacle for each odds and ends as overcoats, canes, handkerchiefs, gloves and matters appertaining to manly wear.

Among the Incidents

Of the week was the visit of Gen. Grant, the wife of the General, who quietly took a look through the buildings, registered a vote for McClellan on the ballot-box, and departed, as she came in the crowd without being run down by them.

The visit of Gen. Grant was also loudly announced his name as McClellan, on Wednesday evening, voted for Lincoln and Johnson, and was cheered to the echo into various spasmodic jerks varying in size through the day, and which, we understand, still had reached, by which time possibly it toiled out.

The Sanitary Commission had at one of its stands in the refreshment-room on Tuesday evening. A gentleman, apparently a Jerseyman, was there looking with admiring eyes upon a young lady attending the counter, when he called for a certain cakes, and received for a beer, ten cents each. He paid for the beer, and proceeded to the lady, handed to eat some of them, were it not for the trouble of taking off his gloves. The fair lady suggested that he should eat them with his gloves on, but to that he objected, as it would soil them. The next proposition emanating from the fair shopkeeper, who did not like to lose a customer, was that she should feed him, an offer that was accepted with an expression of countenance that plainly said, "You won't dare to do it." But the damsel was not to be taken stock, and with delicate diamond fingers she broke up the cakes and put them piece by piece into the mouth of the eater until the last piece was gone. It was a fair day's labor during, and as the job was done with perfect gravity, the purchaser could not help to be satisfied, and, after wiping his mouth, proffered a $3 greenback in payment, and received back $2 change. To the question as to how the treat was performed, he received answer that 10 cents each for the cakes made 30 cents, and 50 cents each for the labor performed in feeding, summed up $1! If he did not leave a wiser man he is a prouder one, by $2.

All about the Sword.

The voting upon the sword went steadily on through the week, until at the closing of the poll on Saturday evening, the 14th votes were registered; 8,007 for McClellan; 7,804 for Grant; and 123 scattering. Considering the excitement and interest there was, and among the voters were Mayor Gunther, who put down his name, James Gordon Bennett, who duly registered her name for 500, both for McClellan, while Mrs. John Jacob Astor cast 100 votes for Grant, Farragut on the naval sword.

On Friday the excitement seemed to gather force, and it was only with the greatest exertion that space could be kept clear for the voting book for the enthusiastic admirers of either General who thronged up with greenbacks for the rescue. Opinion was freely expressed, but all in good humor, and whoever tried to create a disturbance by offensive remarks soon had soon joked down. Every ten minutes the crowd was eager for fresh bulletins of the voting.

"Give us a bulletin!" shouted a tall individual connected with the police, and a loud shout from the crowd that voting.

"Give him a bullet in himself!" is the response of a little fellow, who has been suffering by the trampling on the gaffs for the last quarter of an hour.

"Here, I go for $10," says an enthusiastic admirer of Little Mac, and swung his arm that amount, "and I know they won't let my man get it."

"Little Mac, Little Mac!" shouts various voices.

"Little Mac, and I don't care who knows it," is the response.

"Too may bet he won't," is the answer, "that sword is going to stay where it is for Grant, and I'll bet you by the shape of the handle that it'll just fit his hand!"

Through the day a great deal of money was in by mail, many from the army, almost all of which went for McClellan.

It had been arranged by the committee having charge of the voting, that at 7 o'clock the book should close, and from that time until 8 o'clock the votes should be counted by the two rival committees upon and put in a box, at the end of which they would be sealed up, and the box, with its contents, safely of foul play, and created great dissatisfaction, from the number of ill-natured remarks, and threats of a foot to fet-head their favorite of the award.

On the closing of the poll the vote stood for McClellan 11,003, Grant 9,047, and scattering 184, McClellan's majority 1,956.

From that time until about dark the interest lingered, but was revived about the time of dusk for closing the box. Mysterious looking personages were seen approaching the table with rolls of paper, which proved to be votes, and which were duly registered, and one more the voting and talking went on. One gentleman, who had voted for McClellan, was received the largest vote, counting each name only as a vote, but counting as five votes the names in the course of the evening his office was repeated, but none were counted.

Still these mysterious individuals would steal up to the box, and, apparently with the utmost secrecy, deposit quietly away. The crowd seemed to have an instinct that some mischief was intended, and kept a sharp eye, and became proportionately excited.

As the hour of eight approached the crowd swelled and the buzz of voices increased. About all was the number of the Grant and McClellan committee, who stood, watch in hand, announcing the time and encouraging the voters.

"Twenty minutes to eight, gentlemen! Come on, gentlemen! Only 20 minutes, Lodge, don't be backward in coming forward," "Only 15 minutes now! Let everyone have his say! A minute's life that you haven't a chance." "Now, then, only five minutes remain!"

Every one was in a state of excitement, and the half-dripped dozen were cast around as though something might occur to the ground to make it. Some were driven from either of the favorites.

The clock struck eight to the hour, when a cary passed through the crowd, seized a seal and pencil, wrote a few words, enveloped it in a blank envelope, and with a smile dropped the last vote in the box, and the voting was over for the last time.

Then the committee retired and the counting began, and the result was announced in almost twice a dozen for one result. It was pointed to large letters on a board of paper and displayed to the crowd from the orchestra. It read: Total vote, 16,403; for Grant, 9,091; McClellan, 7,895; scattering, 16. Majority for Grant, 1,196.

The announcement brought forth a mingled flood of cheers, hisses, boolings and groans, and for some time the noise was deafening. Three cheers for Grant from the excited thousands, who seemed to give way to the excitement in every way, and then three for McClellan in noise and confusion the drum corps of the 22d regiment were called to the building for their lively inspiration, and soon succeeded in drowning all other noise. Long and loudly it rolled out on the crowd as would a heavy shower, scattering them in all directions.

Thus ended the mysterious affair. Men who had so quietly stolen to the ballot box were soon explained. Then it was all over, and the result was that 16,403 votes were only signed, "Loyal Men of New York," or "Loyal Men of Independence," one voting for $10,000 with the former signature.

The receipts for the week showed further comment. The savvy sword registered 902 votes, and was awarded to Major-General Rosecrans, by vote of a jority or 130.

Last evening o'clock the excitement rose once more, and as discussion grew warm and difficulty was feared, the police were on hand in force, but all was quiet, their way into the streets, and the great Fair became a thing of the past.

The receipts to three o'clock on the day of closing were $1,100, and the total for the whole week are sold, will, without doubt, foot up to $1,350,000.

And now for the Theatres.

The season of the latter has not been a good great. Avonia Jones has been doing "Camille" and "Mother Confessor" to crowded houses, and has made a decided sensation on the public. Tom week she brings out an entirely new play, entitled "The Governor's Wife." The Bowery Garden having passed into new hands, those of Messrs. Wood & Conrad, both practical managers, great things will soon be made, and the theatre put on a flowing with the best of the season.

Edwin Booth has been doing Raphael in that very fine play of "The Marble Heart," and has now decided in crowding the houses, for which we are sorry, as we think that this play unsuccessful. We fully capable of being replaced by something better.

Mrs. Barney Williams is announced for a benefit on fast for which we are sorry, and deprecate the public

Mrs. Wood sticks to "Lucy Lisa" and "Our Wife," at the Broadway, and is doing well.

Barnum has brought out "Custer's Cave," and a very good thing it is. We thought that the scenery contains all who wish to gather in it for six months to come. Mrs. Jane Coombs, who is a favorite, has another "Little Tom" mania is about to seize the public, and we think she will see Lucille and that will handy be worth hearing.

Burton has brought out her old admirers will hear of Mrs. Hoey's retirement from the Winter Garden, and that Burton's new theatre will be opened in June.

Saturday, the tercentenary of Shakespeare's birth, great things were done in all the theatres for the benefit of the Dramatic Fund, and to raise money for a statue to the bard in Central Park. The most prominent features of the great things was "Romeo and Juliet" at Winter Garden, with Agnes Booth as Juliet, and Edwin James, late Queen's Consul, and now of our own bar, as Friar Lawrence. It is unnecessary to say that the house was full and the thing well done. Mr. James has demonstrated that he would have made as good an actor as lawyer had fate so cast his lines.

Mr. Wheatley, at Niblo's, played Prince Hal to Hackett's Falstaff, while Mr. Wallack gave his cheque for $1,000, for the same good object. At noon upon the same day Mr. Hackett, assisted by representatives of the professions of art, literature and the stage, laid the corner-stone for the statue in Central Park.

Mr. Robert Heller inaugurated his new theatre of music and magic on Monday, and has drawn crowded houses. It is so long since New York has known a professor of the black art that one is now hailed as a novelty. Mr. Heller does his work cleverly, and has withal a pleasant, witty way upon the stage that is more than half the battle in entertaining an audience. He is a pianist of rare merit, and his opening night drew together many musicians of world-wide renown, curious to hear their brother artist, and pleased when they had heard him.

The Last Idea.

A joint stock company is about being formed in this city to construct a huge floating hotel. It is proposed to construct the monster on a flat boat 500 feet in length by 250 broad, and able to accommodate 1,000 people. This huge machine may be moored at one of our wharves, or be anchored in the stream. It may be towed up the river or down the bay, anchored beside the Palisades with planks ashore, or at the Fishing Banks with lines and bait on board. Having no rent to pay, they propose to take weekly or summer boarders low, and to publish in advance the programme of the week. A small steamboat and an abundance of row boats will be in constant attendance, and every convenience will be rendered those who have to attend business in the city. There have been worse ideas than this.

A New Sensation

is promised us in a few weeks in the shape of a wedding at the Academy of Music, under these circumstances: Before the breaking out of the war a young lady in this city was engaged to a Southern gentleman, who afterwards entered the rebel army, and at length, after various vicissitudes, has found his way to Fort Lafayette, where he is now. The young lady is intensely Union, but also intensely in love, and has through influence got permission from the powers that be to take her rebellious admirer out of his cage for a week or two, just long enough to marry him. It has been resolved to celebrate the affair at the Academy, at $3 each admission, and give the money to the Sanitary Commission.

With which very probable piece of gossip we close.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—J. Lathrop Motley, United States Minister to Vienna, has presented $300 to the Boston branch of the United States Sanitary Commission.

—— On the occasion of his recent benefit in Boston Count Joannes was, unexpectedly to himself, held responsible to the amount of $75 for the services of policemen, whose presence had been requested to preserve order in the immense assemblage which it was expected would be present.

—— In the United States Court at Wheeling, on the 14th April, judgments were rendered against Albert G. Jenkins, the celebrated guerilla General—one for $5,525, and the other for $100,000. Capt. W. C. Thorpe testified that he was robbed by Jenkins in Jackson county, on the 3d of September last, of $5,525. The Captain exhibited the following receipt for the money which he received at the time:

Headquarters Cavalry Brigade, Ripley, Jackson county, Va., Sept. 3, 1863.

At the request of Capt. W. C. Thorne, of the Thirteenth United States Infantry, I certify that I have taken from him the sum of $5,525 in United States Treasury notes, the property of the United States Government.

A. G. JENKINS, Brig.-Gen., Commanding.

The other claim was for the destruction of Government property in Buckhannon, Upshur county, in September, 1862, during the Jenkins's raid of that fall. Several witnesses testified that Jenkins's men destroyed at least $250,000 worth of property, consisting of arms and Quartermaster and Commissary stores, and that the rebels left the streets of the town strewed with hundreds of bags of coffee and beans. As above stated, judgments were rendered for the Government in both cases.

—— According to the City Inspector's report, there were 441 deaths in the city during the week ending April 16—a decrease of 31 as compared with the mortality of the week previous, and nine less than occurred during the corresponding week last year.

—— The annual election of officers of the Tammany Society took place on the 18th ult at Tammany Hall. The following were the successful candidates: Sachems—Isaac Bell, Daniel E. Delavan, Charles G. Cornell, Matthew T. Brennan, Douglas Taylor, Peter B Sweeny, John E Develin, William M. Tweed. James B. Nicholson, Edward Cooper, John T. Hoffman, Albert Cardozo, John Clancy. Treasurer, Henry Vandewater. Secretary, Casper C. Childs. Sagamore, George S Messerve. Wiskinskie, Stephen C. Duryea.

—— The number of inmates in the public institutions of the city now is 6,337, a decrease of 14 for the past week. The number admitted was 1,427, and the number who died, were discharged or transferred was 1,441. The Commissioners of Charities and Correction have agreed to erect a county inebriate asylum, in pursuance of a law passed by the Legislature. The site of the institution will probably be on Ward's Island.

—— Jeff Davis would make a first-class publisher. The printers in Atlanta, Georgia, having struck for more wages, he immediately ordered them all to be conscripted into the rebel army at $15 a month, Confederate currency. The result is, that the four newspapers in which that city once rejoiced have been suspended.

—— Gov. Seymour has signed the Soldiers' Voting bill.

—— The gold market has remained in a very quiescent state all the week, ranging from 162 to 176. Exchange on London 191—thus nearly doubling the price of every imported article, without reference to the new tariff.

—— The London Times, which has been discouraging the emigration to America of the Irish, now says: "It is better to encourage emigration than to maintain these people at the expense of the Government." Just so, as an able bodied laborer can earn more in a day in this country than he can in a week in Ireland, the inducement to go abroad is not to be resisted. The bill before Congress to encourage immigration will add largely to the numbers already on the way here.

—— A new religious sect, called "Come-outers," has broken out in Pleasant Valley, Connecticut. Their belief is "perfect life, the only passport to immortality." The members generally consider themselves "elected."

—— The number of dead in the National Cemetery at Gettysburg is said to be 3,512. The highest amount of money found on any one person was $36. The various memoranda, diaries, etc., taken from the persons are under the charge of Mr. Daniel Weaver, the superintendent of removal. But two silver and one gold watch were found.

—— It is thought that Congress will remain in session until the 1st June.

—— Gen. Lee asked, by flag of truce, if the orders of Col. Dahlgren, as published in the Richmond papers, are genuine. Kilpatrick answered with a flat denial.

—— President Lincoln has approved the act extending for two years, from its date, the time within which the States and Territories may accept the grants of land donated for the establishment of colleges for the benefit of agricultural and the mechanical arts. West Virginia is included within the provisions of the law.

Southern.—The people of western North Carolina recently hung several Confederate officers and soldiers for attempting to enforce the conscription act.

—— The approaching gubernatorial election in North Carolina is causing considerable uneasiness among the friends of Mr. Jefferson Davis. The Raleigh Confederate says that its result depends altogether upon the success of the rebel armies in the approaching campaign.

—— As an evidence of the change in public opinion which this war has wrought, we need only refer to the parade, lately, of three colored regiments in Baltimore; and more, these same troops are a portion of Maryland's quota.

Military.—As a proof of how much accident has to do with the war, the Washington Star, of April 9, says: "Yesterday, Capt. E. T. Sullivan, of the 2d Texas cavalry, presented himself at the Provost-Marshal's office in this city, and asked permission to take the oath prescribed in the President's Amnesty Proclamation, which request was granted, and he was furnished with transportation to Philadelphia. Sullivan has a wife and one child residing in Texas, where he owns 46 slaves and a plantation of 600 acres. From his statement, it appears in March, 1861, he was commissioned a 1st Lieut. in the 2d Texas cavalry, and that in May, 1862, he was promoted to a Captaincy. He was in nine battles, and at Murfreesbro' was wounded and taken prisoner. On the 7th of July, 1863, he was exchanged, went home and joined his regiment; but hearing that three of his brothers were in the Union army, determined to fight no more against the United States Government. After repeated efforts, he succeeded in making his way into the Union lines at Frederick, Mo., on Friday last, and from there proceeded to this city."

—— The President has commuted the sentence of death, recently passed upon several deserters, into imprisonment on the Dry Tortugas during the war.

—— Gen. Grant has been very busy inspecting the various corps of the Potomac army during the past week. He was highly pleased with their appearance and discipline.

Personal.—A Northern man, who has just escaped from Wilmington, gives to the editor of the New Regime, at Norfolk, the following statement respecting Mr. and Mrs. Mallory: "I lived within a few doors of Mr. Mallory, the Confederate States Secretary of the Navy. His wife, a Spanish lady, is most anxious to reach the State of Massachusetts, where her sister now is living. The Secretary and his lady are actually very poor, so poor that when guests were at their house they usually had to borrow from us table equipage, and that of the simplest. During a temporary absence I made the Secretary welcome to the milk of my solitary cow, and he esteemed it, for his wife's sake, an exceedingly great kindness."

—— Henry Ward Beecher has purchased of Mr. J. S. Abbott, of South Royalston, Vt., a fine pair of bay Morgan horses for $600.

—— Mrs. Gen. Grant visited the Sanitary Fair on the 22d April, and voted for Gen. McClellan in the sword contest.

—— Mrs. Douglas, the Senator's widow, has sent a written denial that she is engaged as clerk in the Treasury Department.

—— John Hoey paid $1,000 for a pair of vases at the Sanitary Fair.

—— Mrs. Jessie Fremont sent the following telegram to a gentleman in San Francisco, on hearing of the death of the Rev. Starr King: "Put violets for me on the coffin of our dear friend who sleeps."

—— Frank Vizetelly, the correspondent of the Illustrated London News, has returned to England from the rebel States, where he has been for nearly two years. His opinion is that the South will never be conquered. The women keep alive the warlike spirit.

Obituary.—Mrs. Harriet D. Field, wife of David Dudley Field, died at her residence, in Gramercy Park, on the 22d April, of bilious fever, produced by exhaustion from her severe labors in behalf of the Sanitary Fair. It is only a few days ago that we were called upon to announce the death of Mrs. Kirkland from a similar cause.

—— Dr. Holmes, of Calais, Maine, a brother-in-law of Vice-President Hamlin, died suddenly, while visiting a patient. He had been troubled for some time with heart disease, which probably caused his death.

—— Julius Izard Pringle, Esq., who died recently at Rome, Italy, was a man of fortune, from Charleston, S. C., and one of the most accomplished luxuriasts of the last half century.

—— Alexander Calame, of Geneva, Switzerland, one of the grandest landscape artists on the Continent, is dead. Calame, though chiefly known in the United States by the lithographs and etchings of his remarkable "Studies in the Alps," was one of the most successful paysagists, as the French say, where mountains are concerned, in modern times. His chef d'œuvres are mostly to be found in the collections of the Emperors of Russia and of the French, of the Queen of England and the King of Prussia.

Accidents and Offences.—Hon. A. T. Galt, of Canada, was recently done out of $2,000 by H. T. Machin, an agent of his, to whom he gave a blank cheque, to be filled out to meet a draft for a small amount about due.

—— The Cincinnati papers report great excitement there in consequence of the disappearance, between two days, of Messrs. Bodwell & Co., commission merchants, who seem to have acquired unlimited credit in some mysterious way, and to have improved their opportunities by forgetting to pay their bills. They are supposed to have gone to Canada.

—— Rev. J. L. Jonson, a colored clergyman, who was arrested at Clifton, Canada, last January, upon a charge of trying to induce negroes to enlist, has just been released, for the very simple reason that no one appeared to prefer charges against him.

—— There was a large fire in Lowell, Mass., on the 20th, in the Wamiset Steam Mill, used for various kinds of wood work.

—— On Wednesday night, the 20th April, a passenger train on the Lebanon Valley railroad (Penn.) had an accident, at the junction of the North Lebanon road, in consequence of the malicious shifting of a switch. The locomotive was broken up and the baggage car and one passenger car thrown off the track. The engineer, Thomas Gabriel, was badly scalded. No one else was injured.

—— The Adamantine Candle Works of C. H. Grant & Co., on 23d and Hamilton streets, Philadelphia, were entirely destroyed by fire on the 20th. Loss, $100,000; mostly insured. The firm did an extensive business, shipping 18,000 boxes of candles per month to California.

—— A raft was recently discovered to be on fire while passing down the Susquehanna river. Persons from the shore finally reached her, when they found three men on board, one burned to a crisp and the other two insensible. Nothing could be learned of them; but it is supposed that the raft took fire while they were asleep, or under the influence of liquor.

Foreign.—The last foreign mail settles the question of the safety of Dr. Livingstone, the African explorer, who was reported to have been killed by the natives on the Zambesi. The British war sloop Rapid has brought a letter from Bishop Tozer, dated Murchison (at the Luabo, mouth of the Zambesi river), on the 21st December, which states that Dr. Livingston had come back from his expedition up the country, and arrived at the foot of Murchison falls in November, and they intended to come down the river as soon as the water rose sufficiently to get the Pioneer down. Dr. Livingstone and the Bishop and the party were well in health. The mission party also intended to leave the country, as it appeared an unsuitable field, and would return to England by the Cape. The Bishop and his clergymen, however, were to visit the Governor of Mozambique.

—— A livery-stablekeeper, of London, was recently swindled out of five shillings and two glasses of gin and water by a man who represented himself to be Lord John Russell, in a great hurry, and on his way to Windsor, to see the Queen.

—— Mazzini has addressed a letter to the London Times, in which he exonerates Mr. Stansfeld, Member of Parliament, from any connection with the recent attempts upon Napoleon's life.

Chit-Chat.—Lieut. James Hutchinson, of the Veteran Reserve Corps, tells a story of Gen. Grant. Lieut. Hutchinson is stationed in Washington, and a few days since was on duty as Officer of the Day at the War Department. An order was in force which forbade smoking in the building, and the sentries were instructed to enforce it. It so happened that among those who called to see Gen. Halleck was Lieut.-Gen Grant, who approached the door confidently, cigar in mouth, expecting, doubtless, to pass without question: but the veteran soldier on guard knew his duty better. Bringing his piece down to a charge, he barred the General out, and informed him, respectfully, that he couldn't go in and keep his cigar! The Lieutenant-General is too good a disciplinarian to dispute such a point; so he yielded, threw the obnoxious weed away and went in. After his departure an order came down from Gen. Halleck rescinding the order about smoking, so far as it affected army officers!

—— George Francis Train caused quite a flutter in the breast of the clerk who has charge of the sword voting. Going up to that sanguine individual he introduced himself, and saying he wished to vote for Gen McClellan, asked the clerk if he had a blank check. The clerk said he had not, but would get one, whereupon Geo. Francis said, "Never mind; I won't trouble you," and then magnificently taking out a dollar, voted for McClellan.

—— Two of mots Thackeray, not before in print, appeared in the last number of Fraser: "Being told that an acquaintance of his, who was notorious for his love of beer, had sailed for India, he said: 'He was a good fellow. Take him for half-and-half, we shall not look upon his like again!'" On his introduction to one of the Harpers in New York, Thackeray had joked with him on the American contempt for copyright, and when he went into the drawing-room he took a little girl whom he found playing there on to his knee, and, gazing at her with feigned wonder, said in solemn tones, "And this is a pirate's daughter!"

—— A daguerrean artist in Manchester, New Hampshire, one day last week, having overheard part of a conversation between two ladies, impudently intruded himself upon their privacy, and made himself so obnoxious that the ladies have sent a statement to the Manchester Daily Union, as a warning to those who might wish their pictures taken.

—— A Bavarian professor announces that in 1865 a comet shall come so close as to endanger this our earth; and should it not attach itself to the earth as one globule of quicksilver to another, nor annihilate us, the sight will be most beautiful to behold. During three nights we shall have no darkness, but be bathed in the brilliant light of the blazing train.

—— In one Rhode island regiment are 14 brothers named Postly. Four of them are twins.

—— In a private letter to the editor of the Washington Republican, from the army, the writer tells a story of one of the farmers in the vicinity of Culpeper, whose possessions lay in a district where both armies have foraged. The old chap one day, while surveying ruefully the streaks in the soil where his fences once stood, remarked with much feeling: "I hain't took no sides in this yer rebellion, but I'll be dog gorned if both sides hain't took me."

—— The well-known romance in Nina, by Paesiello, better known to English readers as "Hope told a flattering Tale," is an arrangement of one of the ancient Italian melodies supposed to be of Greek origin, and sung by the half-savage peasantry of Southern Italy—a kind of music which Paesiello was wont to collect.

—— The annual report of the Department for Registration for Births, Deaths and Marriages mentions two cases where parties were married between 70 and 80 years of age, and one in which the happy customer was between 80 and 90. Surely this is encouraging to those who were heretofore looked upon as hopeless cases.

THE MASSACRE AT FORT PILLOW.

A massacre, savage in conception, savage in execution, and savage in its bold endorsement by the rebels at the South and their minions at the North, has horrified the land.

Gen. Sherman telegraphs that after the capture last week of Fort Pillow, near Columbus, by Forrest's raiding rebel force, 300 of our colored soldiers, whom their commander had surrendered as prisoners of war, including those who had been wounded in the defence, were butchered in cold blood by their captors.

The Cairo Correspondent of the Associated Press adds that five of them were buried alive. Four of these were among the wounded; while the fifth was compelled to help dig the pits, and then tumbled in and covered up. The correspondent adds that Gen. Chalmers gave notice that no quarter was henceforth to be given to "home-made" Yankees—that is, to Southern Unionists, white or black.

The correspondent of the St. Louis Union telegraphs that of 350 colored soldiers who were engaged in the defence but 56 are left alive, and that every one of their (white) officers was killed. Also, that the rebels went over the field the morning after the fight, and killed every wounded negro who was not already dead. Many of our wounded, he adds, were shot in the hospital, which was finally burned. Gen. Chalmers told the Union correspondent that he had endeavored to stop this butchery of prisoners, but that it was contrary to the policy of his Government to spare negro soldiers or their (white) officers, and that he considered that policy right! Another rebel officer observed that our white troops would have been protected from butchery if they had not been found fighting side by side with negroes!

This correspondent was on board the Union steamboat Platte Valley, which was passing up the Mississippi on the day after the capture, and was hailed under a flag of truce by the rebels, and invited to take away such of our wounded as had been left alive. That white as well as black soldiers were massacred by the rebels after all resistance had ceased—that black women, and children not more than eight years old, were slaughtered like sheep—is attested by the passengers on the Platte Valley. Some of our officers on board that steamboat are reported to have fraternised with Chalmers and his murdering subordinates, treating them with abundant courtesy and whiskey. Fifty-seven in all, out of a garrison of 600, were brought away wounded by the Platte Valley—only seven or eight of them colored; but 200 in all are said to have been saved. Of the 57, eight died before the steamboat reached Cairo.

A correspondent thus describes the battle and its hellish afterpiece: "We have gleaned the facts of the fight from authentic sources, and they may be relied upon as truthful. The rebels, under Forrest, appeared and drove in the pickets about sunrise on Tuesday morning. The garrison of the fort consisted of about 200 of the 13th Tennessee volunteers and 400 negro artillery, all under command of Major Booth. The gunboat No. 7 was also in the river. The rebels first attacked the two outer forts, and in several attempts to charge were repulsed. They were constantly reinforced, and extended their lines to the river on both sides of the fort. The garrison in the two outer forts were at length overpowered by superior numbers, and about noon evacuated them and retired to the fort on the river. Here the fight was maintained with great obstinacy and continued till about four P.M. The approach to the fort from the rear is over a gentle declivity, cleared and fully exposed to a raking fire from two sides of the fort.

"About 30 yards from the fort is a deep ravine, running all along the front, and so steep at the bottom as to be hidden from the fort and not commanded by its guns. The rebels charged with great boldness down the declivity, and faced without blanching a murderous fire from the guns and small arms of the fort, and crowded into the ravine, where they were sheltered from fire by the steep bank which had been thus left by some unaccountable neglect or ignorance. Here the rebels organized for a final charge upon the fort, after sending a flag of truce with a demand for a surrender, which was refused. The approach from the ravine was up through a deep, narrow gully and the steep embankments of the fort. The last charge was made about four P.M., by the whole rebel force, and was successful, after a most desperate and gallant defence. The rebel army was estimated at from 2,000 to 4,000, and succeeded by mere force of numbers.

"The gunboat had not been idle, but guided by signals from the fort, poured upon the rebels a constant stream of shot and shell. She fired 260 shells, and, as testified to by those who could see, with marvellous precision and with fatal effect. Major Booth, who was killed near the close of the fight, conducted the defence with great coolness, skill and gallantry. His last signal to the boat was: 'We are hard pressed and shall be overpowered.' He refused to surrender, however, and fought to the last. By the uniform and voluntary testimony of the rebel officers, as well as the survivors of the fight, it is certain that the negro artillery regiments fought with the bravery and coolness of veterans, and served the guns with skill and precision. They did not falter nor flinch until at the last charge, when it was evident they would be overpowered, they broke and fled towards the river, and here commenced the most barbarous and cruel outrages that ever the fiendishness of rebels have perpetrated during the war.

"After the rebels were in undisputed possession of the fort, and the survivors had surrendered, they commenced the indiscriminate butchery of all the Union soldiery. The colored soldiers threw down their guns and raised their arms in token of surrender, but not the least attention was paid to it. They continued to shoot down as they found. A number of them, finding no quarter was given, ran over the bluff to the river, and tried to conceal themselves under the bank and in the bushes, were pursued by the rebel savages, and implored them to spare their lives. Their appeals were made in vain, and they were all shot down in cold blood and in full sight of the gunboat, chased and shot them down as they would dogs. I passed up the bank of the river and counted 50 dead strewed along. One had crawled into a hollow log and was killed in it; another had got over the bank in the river, and got on to a board that ran out into the water. He lay on it, on his face, with his feet in the water. He laid there when exposed stark and stiff. Several had tried to hide in crevices made by the falling bank, and could not be seen without difficulty, but they were singled out and killed.

"From the best information I could get, the white soldiers were, to a very considerable extent, treated in the same way. One of the 13th Tennessee on board—D. W. Harrison—informs me that after the surrender he was below the bluff, and one of the rebels presented a pistol to shoot him. He told him he had surrendered, and requested him not to fire. He spared him, and directed him to go up the bluff to the fort. Harrison asked him to go before him, or he would be shot by others, but he told him to go along. He started, and had not proceeded far before he met a rebel who presented his pistol. Harrison begged him not to fire, but paying no attention to his request, he fired and shot him through the shoulder, and another shot him in the leg. He fell, and while he lay, unable to move, another came along and was about to fire again, when Harrison told him he was badly wounded twice, and implored him not to fire. He asked Harrison if he had any money. He said he had a little money and a watch. The rebel took from him his watch and $90 in money, and left him. Harrison is probably fatally wounded.

"Several such cases have been related to me, and, I think, to a great extent, the whites and negroes were indiscriminately murdered. The rebel Tennesseeans have about the same bitterness against the Tennesseeans in the Union army as against the negroes. I was told by a rebel officer that Gen Forrest shot one of his men and cut another with his sabre who were shooting prisoners. It may be so, but he is responsible for the conduct of his men, and Gen. Chalmers stated publicly, while on the Platte Valley, that, though he did not encourage or countenance his men in shooting down negro captives, yet that it was right and justifiable."

The President, who overlooked previous massacres, has publicly declared that when official accounts of the affair arrive there shall be retaliation. We trust this shall be so; otherwise the troops, mocked by a Government that uses them and then allows them to be slaughtered, will rush on the places where the rebel prisoners are confined and wipe out in indiscriminate slaughter the account of Fort Pillow.

The Museum of Monarchs.—The Emperor Napoleon III. has established at the Louvre, already so rich in curiosities and treasures of art, a museum of monarchs. Here will be collected all the personal memorials which can be secured of the sovereigns who have ruled over France. Among those now to be seen in this interesting collection are the following: Arms and fragments of royal ornaments belonging to Childeric; a curule chair of Dagobert; the prayerbook, sceptre and sword of Charlemagne; the brevary and baptismal vase of St. Louis; the armor worn by Francis I. on the famous field of Pavia; the prayerbook of Mary Stuart, Queen of Francis II; the helmet and shield, splendidly inlaid, of the monster Charles IX.; the armor of Henri Quatre; the locksmith's tools of the hapless Louis XVI.; the crown worn by Napoleon I. at his coronation.

Sir Walter Scott, on lending a book to a friend, begged that he would not fail to return it, adding, good-humoredly: "Although most of my friends are bad arithmeticians, they are all good book-keepers!"

This jest of Sir Walter's reminds us of some poet's witty verses, entitled "The Art of Book-keeping," from which we give a few stanzas:

"I, of my Spenser quite bereft,
Last winter sore was shaken;
Of Lamb I've but a quarter left,
Nor could I save my Bacon.

"They picked my Locke, to me far more
Than Bramah's patent worth;
And now my losses I deplore,
Without a Home on earth.

"They still have made me slight returns,
And thus my grief divide;
For, oh! they cured me of my Burns,
And eased my Akenside.

"But all I think I shall not say,
Nor let my anger burn;
For as they have not found me Gay,
They have not left me Sterne."

Correcting his Orthography.—In a competitive examination held for the purpose of appointing fit persons to some of the Government offices, one of the candidates inadvertently spelt the word Venice with two n's; thus "Vennice." The examiner, an Englishman, but not always a correct speaker, sternly inquired:

"Do you not know, sir, that there is but one hen in Venice?"

"Then, eggs must be very scarce there," was the ready reply. The candidate passed.

THE WAR IN LOUISIANA—GEN. LEE'S CAVALRY FORDING CANE RIVER, MARCH 31.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BOSWELL.—SEE PAGE 102.

THE PLAZA DE HIDALGO, MATAMORAS, MEXICO.

MATAMORAS has always been an object of interest to Americans since the time of the Mexican war. It became a town on our frontier, giving us the daily spectacle of civil war and commotion. During the present war it has thriven wonderfully, being the depot of a great cotton trade. While the rebels held Texas this traffic was carried on directly from Brownsville. The occupation of that town, however, compelled the rebels to cross with their cotton at Piedras Negras and Eagle pass, up the river. The cotton was then carted down to Matamoras. The recent occupation of Eagle pass will tend still more to break this up.

We give a sketch of the cathedral of Matamoras and of the square in front of it, called the Plaza de Hidalgo, in honor of the heroic priest who initiated the struggle for liberty. The signs of the stores show the mixture of Spanish and English. The sign of Ambler & Anderson and one with an inviting air, "Billiards," are relieved by one in the background, "Ropas Hechas."

MR. Rock, the player, once advised a scene shifter to get a subscription on receiving an accident. A few days after he desired the man to show him the list of names, which he read, and returned to the poor fellow, who, with some surprise, said:

"Why, Mr. Rock, won't you give us something?"

"Is it me you mean?" says Rock; "why, zounds! man, didn't I give you the hint?"

SKETCHES OF ARMY LIFE—WEIGHING OUT RATIONS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, EDWIN FORBES.—SEE PAGE 103.

THE PLAZA DE HIDALGO, MATAMORAS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BOSWELL.

THE SOUTH WIND.

BY AMANDA T. JONES.

OH, the light south wind!
It brought us the odor of orange bowers,
Of citron trees and of all rare flowers,
As we sat by our doors in summery hours,
Did the light south wind.

Oh, the sweet south wind!
It brought us the oriole's love-breathing note,
The paroquet's praise of his pretty green coat,
The carols that rush from the mockingbird's throat,
Did the sweet south wind.

Oh, the loud south wind!
It brought the rude song and the African's jest,
It brought us—oh, shame!—his deep sighs of unrest,
When the foot of his master bore hard on his breast,
Did the loud south wind.

Oh, the wild south wind!
It brought us the murmurs of bitterness first,
Then threats of the traitor (for ever accurst),
And the hum of a tempest just ready to burst,
Did the wild south wind.

Oh, the mad south wind!
It brought us the surge of a battle maelström,
The cracking of rifles, the cannon's deep boom,
The crashing of mortars, the thunders of doom,
Did the mad south wind.

Oh, the sad south wind!
It told us anew the dark story of Cain,
Rehearsing, to grieve us, again and again,
The groans of the dying, the dirge for the slain,
Did the sad south wind.

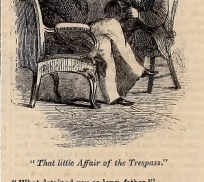
Oh, the glad south wind!
It brings the sweet bugle-note, piercing and strong,
Proclaiming the triumph of Right over Wrong,
And we lift up our voices to join in the song,
Of the glad south wind.

Married Four Days without Knowing it!

MARRIED four days without knowing it! Was such a thing ever heard of? I fancy not; it wouldn't agree with the eternal fitness of things. Nevertheless, I was married in broad daylight, in full possession of my senses, and was not aware of the happy fact until four days afterwards! How did it happen? Ah, dear reader, it is just my purpose to relate that:

My father's patronymic was Dimple, and I was the only little Dimple that he and my mother could boast of. My father died four years before I attained my majority, and I fell heir to The Willows, a goodly fortune and large share of inherent bashfulness; inherent, I say, because my worthy mother often told me that my father was the most bashful young man that she ever met with. From the time of my father's death my mother lived very retired; indeed, so secluded was I from the outside world, that when manhood's years were upon me, and circumstances threw me into society, I found myself incapable of assuming the position due to me. I was possessed of talents, had an excellent education and much information, for I had been a great reader—my books had been my chief companions—yet with all my studying and reading I had neglected the great book of society, that book of so many types.

To be sure, I had some acquaintances—even a hermit knows somebody—yet these were made by no exertions on my part. I had no young lady friends; I belonged to no "set;" I knew no "jolly fellows;" and if I mention our minister and a few worthy church members, my teachers, persons with whom I had business transactions, and some ancient friends of my mother's, I will have enumerated all who were honored by having me notice them. In my usual intercourse with men I could proceed without embarrassment, but when "out," when in company—as I found it had to be after I had taken upon myself the ownership and management of our home—I was ill at ease; my conversational powers were of the poorest description; I was not affable, even at commonplace; and, knowing my failings, I strove to be as reticent and unassuming as possible. My blushing, stammering and confusion in the presence of ladies made me a butt for their sly ridicule, and my impressions of them were not flattering; I conceived them to be a flirting, affected set, who thought it womanly to measure their abilities by their conquests and apply the term "soft" to goodnatured gentlemen of modest dispositions. Alas, the string attached to my mother's apron had very strong ties for her boy!



As a matter of course such game as myself was not to be neglected; my wings were well feathered, and the people knew it. In my walks, bows from obsequious individuals were plenty; professional men were "happy to meet" me; elderly gentlemen shook my hand in a fatherly manner, asking me to call and see them at their houses: "And you know, my dear Dimple, if I should not be home, why, the ladies will be only too glad to receive you." Enterprising mammas, prospecting for gold, thought me as rich a spot as they could strike on, and although their daughters were happy in ridiculing my failings, they would have been much happier had I paid court to them. Did I ever think of marrying? Oh, yes; but I had never seen a reality that would approach my ideal of a wife, and sometimes I blamed myself for looking for too much perfection. Invitations to call and invitations to parties were alike neglected, although my mother strove to persuade me to accept some of them, that I might rub off some of the rust of disuse; and I became more of a bookworm than ever, wishing for no other world than The Willows, no other society than that of the speakers of the silent language—my books.

At last, however, a circumstance transpired which materially altered the monotony of my life. A serious trespass on my property gave me occasion to consult Judge Walker, of Salem, who had been one of the executors of my father's will, and who had always been his legal adviser. On calling at his office one afternoon, I found that he was at court, presiding at a murder trial. My business was urgent, it would be imprudent to delay the matter too long, and as it was impossible to confer with the judge then, I concluded to wait and see him at his house during the evening. The Willows was a mile out of town, and the judge's residence was just half-way between. Eight o'clock found me at the wicket-gate that opened into the judge's garden, and there I stopped and shuddered—the judge had a daughter! I had forgotten that. What would I do? "Oh, never mind, my boy," said I, to myself; "ask for the judge, transact your business, and depart with a clear conscience." Certainly, just the idea.

According to Law—but no Clergyman.

Through the wicket-gate, up the gravel-walk, under the grapevine, and I was on the stoop. This was built in piazza style, and between its shadow, the darkness of the night and the want of a light in the hall, I had trouble in finding the knocker. A hard rap at this was soon answered by a pattering of feet, and a voice singing, "Charley is my darling." The door was hurriedly opened, and before I could speak a pair of arms were thrown about my neck, and a girlish voice said:

"That little Affair of the Trespass."

"What detained you so long, father?"

And a plump, warm cheek was pressed against mine, as if the owner was waiting to receive the paternal kiss.

This was a predicament for a bashful man. I had never kissed a young lady in my life, and now to have a handsome girl's arms about my neck and a pair of lips so close to mine was rather—well, it was more than I had bargained for. I was embarrassed, yet I admit that I actually thought of giving her a loving hug and a kiss, and then beg her pardon and tell her that I mistook her for my mother. As I said, I was embarrassed, and it was not until the arms were taken from my neck, my fair embracer saying, "Why, father, what is the matter?" that I found words to explain myself.

"My dear young lady—a—that is, Miss Walker, your father is not me; you must—a—or at least I must—"

At this juncture the appearance of a servant with a light put an end to my elaborate apology, and discovered me with hat in hand trying to articulate something, and Miss Walker standing a beautiful picture of confusion. She had retreated a few steps, but had neither screamed nor fainted; her curls were slightly disordered; her cheeks were covered with womanly blushes; and a startled expression was on her face, which relaxed into a smile as she recognised me, and broke the awkward silence:

"Why, Mr. Dimple! Dear me, what a mistake I have made! I was sure you were father; you must excuse me, sir."

Excuse her! certainly I would. Such mistakes I thought very excusable, especially with such a fair offender. My embarrassment over, I stated my business, and knowing, of course, the judge was not at home, I was taking my leave, begging a world of pardons, when a very pressing invitation to stay and await the judge's coming brought me to a halt.

My distrust of woman generally half persuaded me to decline, but Miss Walker's conduct after her little, and, to me, pleasing mistake; her unaffectedness and charming nonchalance had awakened my dormant admiration—I liked the girl. I sacrificed my distrust, entered the parlor, considering myself a doomed man, and was seated in an armchair before one of those grate fires that I loved so much.

She busied herself a few moments putting away some sewing, and as she flitted here and there I had a chance to observe her. She was of medium height, and her figure was perfection, well set off by a close fitting dress reaching the neck, and relieved by tasty linen collar and brooch, while linen cuffs terminated the sleeves. Her face had that quiet, modest expression of true beauty; her lips full and pouting, and her chin well rounded, both showing strong love and affection; her eyes large and blue, and her well-shaped head adorned with a profusion of chestnut curls. She kept chatting all the time, endeavoring to keep me at ease; but the little contretemps on my arrival, and her pleasing manner, had stolen away half my diffidence.

At length the sewing-up was finished, and she seated herself in a rocking-chair beside me.

"You know, Mr. Dimple," said she, as she shook back her curls, displaying a beautifully formed neck, "father is away usually most of the day, and I am always happy to meet him on his return, and receive his kiss. Since dear mother died I have been with him more than I ever did, and I always feel sorry to part with him and always glad to welcome him home—that will account for my affectionate reception of you this evening," and she smiled pleasantly.

I stammered out something about her having no occasion to excuse herself at all; then I coughed, and was near losing ground, but Tom Moore saved me. A volume of his poems was lying near, and I took it up and opened it.

The page before me bore the title of the second section of "Lalla Rookh," "Paradise and the Peri," and on the margin was written: "This poem contains the best sentiment of Lalla Rookh"—my own opinion exactly, and I mustered courage enough to express that opinion to Miss Walker.

From this remark sprung a conversation that lasted during a good part of my stay. I found that she was well read in both prose and poetry, and they had been my life study—English literature had been my particular hobby. I told her as much, and gave an outline of my favorite theme. I reviewed the poets from old Chaucer to Tennyson, not forgetting our own children of the Lyre; I smiled over Pope and pitied Milton squinting them; I repeated Shakespeare's "Seven Ages," and even stuttered in doing so; I gave Ben Jonson the cold shoulder; I praised Goldsmith for his truth and simplicity, and lamented poor Chatterton; I defended Byron, and challenged any poet to equal Moore for melody and sentiment. Then I glanced at the prose writers, winding up with Irving, and giving as a sample of his beautiful style his description of the Alhambra by moonlight. Here I dropped authors, but fearing that I would lose vantage if I quitted books altogether, I ran the risk of being considered a bibliomaniac, and took up biography and history; and found that Miss Walker was almost as well informed on the lives of eminent personages, and as well acquainted with historical facts, as myself. Mind you, I did not do all the talking myself; oh, no; my fair companion gave her opinions and expressed her views freely; and when we came down to commonplace (and I let myself down slowly, for I decided what was to me shaky ground), I found myself conversing as if I had known her for years. I was astonished at myself; I found that I had conversational powers that I had never dreamt of. And what had brought them to light? That is easy answered—I had found what I had long sought for, a person of some taste sympathized with my own, a woman of education and liberal sentiments, who could converse on other subjects than the usual small talk of the parlor. I need not say that she won my admiration, but it was not her intellectual acquirements alone that pleased me—her whole manner was pleasing; as she looked in my face while talking, her eyes had the open, honest look of the true woman; there was no affectedness in voice or action; and her smiles were much different from the quizzing contortions I had been used to. I was charmed; I forgot the hours and my bashfulness; and the spell was not broken until a footstep sounded on the piazza—Miss Walker started—then a heavy foot on the stoop. "Oh, it's father, I'm sure," and she hurried to the hall, and I could hear the door open before the knocker sounded; then a kiss and tender inquiries from daughter to father as to what detained him; then a whisper about "the gentleman in the parlor"—which caused "the gentleman in the parlor" a flurry of the heart—then the door opened and the hale old judge himself entered followed by the daughter. I arose and instantly commenced a hurried, stammering apology for intruding; but the judge stopped me as he grasped my hand warmly.

"Why, my dear boy, this needs no apology; happy to see you, sir—consider yourself at home. Where have you been keeping yourself? I believe I have not seen you since the settling-up of your father's will; sung property that of The Willows, sir. Sit down, sit down. Sorry that I was not here sooner, but we had a long trial and a most obstinate jury. Threatened to lock them up until tomorrow, and—Lizzie, thank you, I have had some supper—and as I was saying, Mr. Dimple, that made them act like sensible men."

Here I managed to state the cause of my visit, but thought that he must be weary of law for one day at least, and that the affair of the trespass might rest until some other time.

"Ah! yes, Mr. Dimple, it is rather a troublesome affair; but we can easily settle it some other time. I have to sentence the culprit to-morrow afternoon—sorry to have to do it, sir; clever, manly young fellow—did it all in a moment of passion—but the law must be satisfied, and I will be at leisure in the evening; suppose you call in the evening?"

Did I like the idea of having to call on the next evening? I think I did—I am very sure I did. On my way home that night I reflected on the change that had come over me within a few hours. Charles Dimple, Esq., of The Willows, had become an altered Dimple. Certainly Lizzie Walker was now perfection's self, but I resolved that seeking for entire perfection would no longer be one of my imperfections. Fancy was busy. Said she to me:

"Now that you have broken the ice, your bashfulness will amount to nothing; you do not know your own wish; say, your money is all-powerful; and all you will have to do is to propose, and she will accept you without a demur." But my better judgment said: "If she's the girl you take her to be, she'll do nothing of the kind." "Spoken like yourself, my boy," said I, and buttoning my coat to the chin, I faced a penetrating nor'easter, and was at home in a few moments. My mother was sitting up for me.

"Why, Charles," said she, in a troubled tone, "where have you been? Did you see the judge?"

"Oh, yes, mother. I saw her as soon as I called, and it is all right. She says—"

"She says! Who?"

"Why, the judge, to be sure; he thinks it's a clear case, and that you she's splendid. Hold her well up, and she'll take hedge and ditch; give her fair play, and I'll back her against the field!"

"Why, Charles, are you crazy? What are you talking about?"

"Why, Miss Walker, to be sure. She is as fine a young lady as ever—I'll tell—"

Here I came to my senses, and related my evening's experience. I found in my mother a sympathetic listener. She knew that I was getting well on in years, that a new mistress would be a good acquisition to The Willows. She would have preached to me, perhaps, a little not for any backwardness, and now since I had met with such an estimable young lady as Miss Walker, she advised me to keep up the acquaintance. Believing that my mother spoke like a sensible woman, I then and there resolved that, if my spirits would keep up until the following evening, I would speak. Sleep was long in paying her visit that night; my brain was too busy, and when at last I was under her influence my dreams were of Lizzie. I rose at seven in the morning I could have sung "Her bright smiles haunt me still." I was impatient until evening arrived, and then I was at the corner of eight were fairly drawn. I donned my sprucest attire, and with cane in hand took my way to the home of my legal adviser. Arrived there, my heart, long used to settle that little affair of the trespass, you know. Through the wicket-gate, up the gravelwalk, under the grapevine, and I was at the door. Lizzie, I mean—my heart was fluttering, but wasn't I on business? Certainly I was. I was ushered into the parlor, and Lizzie came to me and with extended hand, and shook mine warmly. Lizzie received my proffered hand with a pleasant smile, and placed a chair for me, and took a seat herself. That evening I shall ever remember as among the pleasantest of my life. I did not allow myself to become embarrassed, and as my spirits rose, so did I. Perhaps I was just a little bit absent-minded, for several times I caught myself looking at Lizzie when talking earnestly to her father; and sometimes I even forgot "that little matter of the trespass" entirely. Ah! yes; there had been a trespass committed on my property, but Lizzie had committed a greater trespass on my heart.

After this I often paid an evening visit to the judge's, and to say truth, my own matters were drifting. He would sit chatting awhile always after my arrival, and then, like a good old soul, he would head off to his library or bed, and leave Lizzie and I to ourselves.

That was a pleasant time, that courtship of mine. It was a courtship of two months, long enough, Lizzie's society was a world to me, and an evening not passed in her company seemed like a blank in my existence. I was in love with her with a devotion of my ardent nature, and well I knew that she returned it "measure for measure." Ours was not like the love of two strangers who meet by accident, become mutually affected, and from which springs a spontaneous love at first sight. No, it was deeper, holier; it was the love of two friends who met in early manhood. I proposed marriage I was not accepted on account of wealth; it was out of pure love, and Lizzie told me so in words as unaffected, sincere, and sweet. I pressed her to my heart, and—well, I hardly remember how many times I kissed her.

Of course I was aware that the judge would offer no objection to my suit, and nevertheless it was necessary that I should ask his consent, and this bothered me not a little. Many an off-handed speech we would have addressed to each other in a trice, and took it all as a matter of business; but I—ah, well, I had some of my backwardness left, and when I proposed to Lizzie I stuttered, and stammered, and when I tried to unbosom myself to the judge, Lizzie was in the parlor on my arrival, but she knew the interview was to take place before away. My legal adviser was in one of his best humors, and I immediately went to business.

"Sit down, sit down, Mr. Judge, to—to tell you that I have, or at least I would like to—to know if there could by any possibility be a flaw in the lease you had drawn up for my tenant, yesterday?"

"Oh, certainly not, sir; certainly not. One of my best clerks drew it up, and I examined it myself."

"Well, there is another matter I wish to speak about—how to say you the affair—you know, sir? But—as I was saying—you know, sir, in the course of human events it often becomes necessary for a man to—to—of course you understand me?"

"Perfectly, my dear boy, perfectly."

But that "perfectly" seemed to me as a matter of course, for in place of saying "God bless you, my boy," and asking which was the happy day, he kept silence, and I was just a little confused.

"Well, sir, you know that affair which must fall to our lot. You understand—"

"Oh, yes, perfectly. You object to a fair being held in your lot, and you desire me to—"

"No, no, sir; I was going to ask you for a—"

"You were about to remark that—a—"

"I was going to say—a—"

"Yes, Mr. Dimple—be cool, my boy—you were going to say—"

"Yes, I was going to remark that—"

"That you were about to—to—eh?"

"Eh? yes, that's—that's—I mean—a—"

"Ah, my dear friend, that is it exactly. I have proposed to Lizzie, and we await your consent."

I got the sentence out at last, and the judge laid back in his chair and laughed loudly; and when he recovered himself and tried to speak he relapsed into another fit, and laughed louder and longer, while I looking very sheepish. But the dear old fellow came to my rescue.

"Not over your backwardness yet, Charley? I thought you had acquired a good deal of assurance by this time, still I suppose you only acted as a great many do in like instances. Quite natural, perhaps, and very human nature. You wish my consent; you have it, my boy, and always had it. Nay, it gives me pleasure to know that I am consigning Lizzie to your care, and I feel a load lifted off my heart; for my years are beginning to weigh me down, Charley, and I might be called away at any moment. Yes, I will find it hard to part with her who has been the light of my home so long, but an old man must not be selfish. No, no, sir old man must not be selfish—take her, and know that you are getting one who has never been spoiled by the affectations of society, and who knows how to make home happy."

The day we appointed for the wedding soon drew near, and as we were sitting chatting in the judge's parlor one evening about two weeks before the day, the judge proposed that, as I might get confused during the performance of the ceremony, he would put down in writing the marriage form, so as to give me a slight idea as to how I should act. To this we agreed; a servant was called as witness, and the document was drawn up, executed, certificate signed, &c., and the judge pronounced me perfect. The day following I went to New York on business, and returned in the evening bringing with me a handsome piece of white satin for Lizzie's wedding dress. I was unfolding it to her admiring gaze when the judge entered.

"This is for the dress, sir," said I.

"What dress do you refer to, Charley?"

"Why, for the wedding—when we get married, you know."

"No man shall ever marry you to my daughter, sir."

The judge was looking "awfully severe," but I thought I saw a merry twinkle in his eye.

"Are you in earnest, sir? Did you not—"

"Did I not what, sir? Become a married man?"

"What is the necessity of an explanation, my dear, when you know that you are a married man?"

Then there was a mingling of masculine groans and feminine screams, and I forgot my "retired gentleman in the parlor" entirely. Ah! yes; there had been a trespass committed on my property, but Lizzie had committed a greater trespass on my heart.

After this I often paid an evening visit to the judge's, and to say truth, my own matters were drifting. He would sit chatting awhile always after my arrival, and then, like a good old soul, he would head off to his library or bed, and leave Lizzie and I to ourselves.

That was a pleasant time, that courtship of mine. It was a courtship of two months, long enough. Lizzie's society was a world to me, and an evening not passed in her company seemed like a blank in my existence. I was in love with her with a devotion of my ardent nature, and well I knew that she returned it "measure for measure." Ours was not like the love of two strangers who meet by accident, become mutually affected, and from which springs a spontaneous love at first sight. No, it was deeper, holier; it was the love of two friends who met in early manhood. I proposed marriage I was not accepted on account of wealth; it was out of pure love, and Lizzie told me so in words as unaffected, sincere, and sweet. I pressed her to my heart, and—well, I hardly remember how many times I kissed her.

Of course I was aware that the judge would offer no objection to my suit, and nevertheless it was necessary that I should ask his consent, and this bothered me not a little. Many an off-handed speech we would have addressed to each other in a trice, and took it all as a matter of business; but I—ah, well, I had some of my backwardness left, and when I proposed to Lizzie I stuttered, and stammered, and when I tried to unbosom myself to the judge, Lizzie was in the parlor on my arrival, but she knew the interview was to take place before away. My legal adviser was in one of his best humors, and I immediately went to business.

"Sit down, sit down, Mr. Judge, to—to tell you that I have, or at least I would like to—to know if there could by any possibility be a flaw in the lease you had drawn up for my tenant, yesterday?"

"Oh, certainly not, sir; certainly not. One of my best clerks drew it up, and I examined it myself."

"Well, there is another matter I wish to speak about—how to say you the affair—you know, sir? But—as I was saying—you know, sir, in the course of human events it often becomes necessary for a man to—to—of course you understand me?"

"Perfectly, my dear boy, perfectly."

But that "perfectly" seemed to me as a matter of course, for in place of saying "God bless you, my boy," and asking which was the happy day, he kept silence, and I was just a little confused.

"Well, sir, you know that affair which must fall to our lot. You understand—"

"Oh, yes, perfectly. You object to a fair being held in your lot, and you desire me to—"

"No, no, sir; I was going to ask you for a—"

"You were about to remark that—a—"

"I was going to say—a—"

"Yes, Mr. Dimple—be cool, my boy—you were going to say—"

"Yes, I was going to remark that—"

"That you were about to—to—eh?"

"Eh? yes, that's—that's—I mean—a—"

"Ah, my dear friend, that is it exactly. I have proposed to Lizzie, and we await your consent."

I got the sentence out at last, and the judge laid back in his chair and laughed loudly; and when he recovered himself and tried to speak he relapsed into another fit, and laughed louder and longer, while I looking very sheepish. But the dear old fellow came to my rescue.

"Not over your backwardness yet, Charley? I thought you had acquired a good deal of assurance by this time, still I suppose you only acted as a great many do in like instances. Quite natural, perhaps, and very human nature. You wish my consent; you have it, my boy, and always had it. Nay, it gives me pleasure to know that I am consigning Lizzie to your care, and I feel a load lifted off my heart; for my years are beginning to weigh me down, Charley, and I might be called away at any moment. Yes, I will find it hard to part with her who has been the light of my home so long, but an old man must not be selfish. No, no, an old man must not be selfish—take her, and know that you are getting one who has never been spoiled by the affectations of society, and who knows how to make home happy."

The day we appointed for the wedding soon drew near, and as we were sitting chatting in the judge's parlor one evening about two weeks before the day, the judge proposed that, as I might get confused during the performance of the ceremony, he would put down in writing the marriage form, so as to give me a slight idea as to how I should act. To this we agreed; a servant was called as witness, and the document was drawn up, executed, certificate signed, &c., and the judge pronounced me perfect. The day following I went to New York on business, and returned in the evening bringing with me a handsome piece of white satin for Lizzie's wedding dress. I was unfolding it to her admiring gaze when the judge entered.

"This is for the dress, sir," said I.

"What dress do you refer to, Charley?"

"Why, for the wedding—when we get married, you know."

"No man shall ever marry you to my daughter, sir."

The judge was looking "awfully severe," but I thought I saw a merry twinkle in his eye.

"Are you in earnest, sir? Did you not—"

"Did I not what, sir? Become a married man?"

"What is the necessity of an explanation, my dear, when you know that you are a married man?"

Then there was a mingling of masculine groans and feminine screams, and I forgot my "retired gentleman in the parlor" entirely.

"How dare you, presume, sir," said I, "to encourage my attentions to—"

"Encourage your—you—boy," interrupted the judge, his frown giving way to smiles, "pray do not get into a passion. Every word that I said was true. You are married—in imagination—and I am justice of the peace, you know, and can take a minister's duties—in the matrimonial way—upon myself. As to your medical joke, my children."

A light broke over me.

"And that mock ceremony was—"

"Was the real one," said he, both gave your consent to everything, and committed matrimony unwittingly."

Lizzie and I looked at each other; to be married four days and know nothing about it was—well, it was too bad; the joke was altogether too practical. But after all it was a lucky dog. Could it not been for "that little affair of the trespass" I should never have found my treasure; and the judge's way of marrying us without any fuss, was the best. It was a hit, and saved us from a sea of blunders. So I took Lizzie home, and soon after that the judge sold his property, and then he and mother and Lizzie and I all lived together at The Willows.

NATCHITOCHES.

NATCHITOCHES takes its name from an Indian tribe that once flourished on the banks of Red river, which empties into the Mississippi. The French, who succeeded to them, reared their little village on the high bluff, which is the first land met with, and was about 3,670.

It was an important place for the rebels, and for it and Shreveport they will make great inroads. Natchitoches was occupied by Gen. Banks on March 31st, after a brisk but short skirmish, in which he routed the rebels under Taylor.

Our Art ist, who entered with Banks's army, sends the faithful sketch which we publish.

Crossing Cane River.

We give, moreover, two views by our Special Artist of the crossing of Cane river, on the 31st, by Gen. Lee's cavalry, by fording, and in part by the bridges, which the retreating enemy had not time to destroy completely; and also of the Army of the Gulf, under Gen. Franklin, crossing by bridges and pontoons on the same day. The point sketched is about 56 miles above Alexandria.

We give last week a sketch of the action at Crump's hill, which followed, and will give hereafter views taken on the spot by our Special Artist of the terrible engagement which has made Pleasant hill a sad misnomer.

THE VIOLETS.

BY JULIE LEONARD.

Down where the river and little brook meet,
Under a tuft of bright green grass,
Hidden away from the wandering feet
Of any who chanced to pass,
Nestled a knot of violets blue,
That bathed in the sun and drank in the dew,
And saw in the river their own rare hue
Reflected as in a glass.

They bloomed in the sunlight, so warm and gay,
And smilingly welcomed each passing shower;
They laughed at the brook as it ran away
And past their little bower.
They loved the soft breath of the balmy air,
And breathed out their fragrance free and rare,
So subtle it was—and it was not there—
In the heart of each sweet flower.

No rude hand plucked them from out their place,
Away from that cool and shady spot,
But the soft wind kissed them with soft embrace,
To show they were not forgot;
And day after day the sweet song of the bird
And the cry of the chirping cricket were heard,
And the heart of each blossom with joy was stirred,
And blessed its quiet lot.

Which was the Guilty Cousin?

A MONSIEUR DE BOUGAINVILLE, who commanded a frigate at the siege of Toulon in August, 1793, in consequence of ruinous losses at play, left an only child, Julie de Bougainville, in a state but little removed from destitution. The young lady was in her seventeenth year; not at all attractive in person; and the only resource left her was to embrace the profession of a nun. These morally enough disposed, she resigned herself with reluctance to a life for which she had no vocation; but ultimately, yielded to the necessity, entered the Ursuline convent, near Paris, the regular confessor of which establishment was Father Etienne Lafont, an aged venerable priest, who had been by his celebrated at the church of Notre Dame. Julie de Bougainville believed herself to have no relative nearer than a far-off cousin, M. Dupré, a notary in active practice, through whose influence she obtained admittance amongst the Ursuline sisterhood. Her father's brother, Alexis de Bougainville, had emigrated when quite a young man, though a widower, to the Brazils, where he had risen to a high rank from, he was concluded to be dead. His first wife had a boy-child when he espoused her—Alphonse Bertin, who was now a clerk in the notary's office. His Alphonse Bertin's cousin, Eugène Le Gros, the only son of the first Madame Alexis Bougainville's sister, had reached the age of twenty-four when he left Paris. He had served with some distinction, in Amerîes, under Lafayette. To each of these young men M. Alexis Bougainville had forwarded splendid presents, though never such costly ones as those he forwarded to his niece Julie. Bertin and Le Gros were both on very friendly terms with Mademoiselle de Bougainville, whom they had accustomed themselves to address as "Ma Cousine."

The young Bertin was left in the keeping of M. Dupré; and an acquaintance which he had formed with a very pretty, very clever, very designing woman, and daughter of a modiste, Josephine Ramon, gave the notary much uneasiness. He had often, and warmly, expostulated with the infatuated youth on the point; but Alphonse was obstinate, inflexible, and there appeared no doubt that, sooner or later, he would consummate his folly. Eugène Le Gros was an admirer of the fascinating modiste, though not to the extent of desiring to share with her affections and stave upon his lieutenant's pay. M. Dupré had always manifested what Alphonse Bertin deemed an unreasonable antipathy towards Le Gros. The notary knew more of the lieutenant than his cousin did.

Such was the state of things in general, when some twelve months after Julie de Bougainville came out of the Ursuline convent, and, of course, many more before it would have been possible for her to take the irrevocable vow, a letter arrived M. Dupré, from Brazil, which at once entirely changed the aspect of affairs. It was a communication, from a Brazilian lawyer, announcing the death, in Lisbon, of the previous, of Alexis de Bougainville. He had died wifeless—childless. Madame Bougainville and their offspring, two girls, had been carried off by fever within a few days of each other. The suddenness of the stroke completely broke down the already failing health of the husband and father, who survived his family a few weeks only. He had some time before realised his property, with a view to investment in France or elsewhere, to the unspeakable joy of which, amounting to over six hundred thousand francs ($120,000), was devised by his latest testament in succession to Julie de Bougainville, his niece, with the exception of twenty thousand francs ($4,000), which were to be equally divided between Alphonse Bertin and Eugène Le Gros, who stood as cold and unfettered legatee. The Brazilian lawyer concluded by requesting instructions as to the channel by which the legacy should be transmitted to Paris, &c.

Over this letter M. Dupré must have pondered long and anxiously; since, according to his own sworn testimony, it was not till a week after receiving it that he disclosed the important intelligence to Alphonse Bertin, and to Alphonse Bertin only. To neither Julie de Bougainville nor to Le Gros did he let fall a hint of the matter.

The notary, as already stated, felt a strong affection for Alphonse—could scarcely have loved him better had he been his own son; and he finally determined upon a scheme for breaking off the young man's connection with Josephine Ramon, and marrying him to Mademoiselle de Bougainville. A long conference with his protégé resulted in a promise on the part of Alphonse to give up the modiste and marry Julie de Bougainville, who was to be kept in ignorance of the league till some time after wedlock. At first it was settled that, as Julie de Bougainville had only taken the veil M. Dupré should take the necessary steps for withdrawing her from the convent, and she consenting, of which no doubt seems to have been entertained, celebrate the marriage openly. Two or three days afterwards Alphonse Bertin, who, meanwhile, had seen Josephine, objected to such hasty proceedings. He himself required time for reflection—say a fortnight. Finding the young man had taken his resolution, the notary yielded, and advanced him a considerable sum of money, soon after receiving which, Bertin, "who was much flurried and excited," quitted the house. A few lines, traced in pencil upon a scrap of paper and left upon a table in his bedroom, apprised M. Dupré that he should not return till the fortnight's grace agreed upon had expired.

Two days after that period had elapsed Alphonse returned to the notary's late at night, on foot, and in a very strange condition; his clothes were torn and soiled, his face scratched and bloody. He was much agitated—said, in a confused, incoherent manner, that he had been assaulted and robbed by a woman and a man. He could describe neither of them; and upon being asked where, or near where, the assault and robbery had taken place, replied, after a hesitating pause:

"Near, or at least about a quarter of a league from a cabaret called Le Lion d'Or, where I passed the evening."

The next morning he informed the notary that he had finally decided upon marrying Mademoiselle de Bougainville, and it would be well that the affair should be put in train at once, lest he might change his mind. M. Dupré, much pleased, declared that he would set off for the Ursuline Convent within an hour at latest. When the notary was about to depart the vacillating young man solicited a short delay, and being refused, for M. Dupré would be trifled with no longer, he turned pale as paper (pâle comme du papier), and but for a glass of brandy given him by the notary's wife, as the latter exerpe thought, have fainted outright. I should have before stated that Alphonse Bertin was a young man of an unusually sensitive, excitable temperament.

M. Dupré's cabriolet was not long in conveying him to the Ursuline Convent. The porter at the gate, one Juice Bart, who looked like a vieille moustache that had once belonged to a regiment recruited exclusively from the ranks of the refuse of Paris, received him with an impudent grin, and the remark, in an undertone, as M. Dupré passed on, that the mother superior would hear news of her stray lamb sooner than she expected.

Utterly confounding news greeted M. Dupré from the mother superior. Mademoiselle de Bougainville—Sister Marie Agnes—had surreptitiously left the convent the previous evening, and had not since been heard of. A messenger was at that moment on the way to inform the notary of his ward's inexplicable, disgraceful flight.

Those words were scarcely uttered when a commissary of gendarmes was announced, and entered the apartment.

"Our search," said he, in a sad, feeling tone, "has been successful—too successful. We found the dead body of Mademoiselle de Bougainville in a wet ditch, about a mile away. She has been cruelly murdered. Upon the unfortunate's person, concealed under her clothes, our search officer holding his auditors dumb—" upon the unfortunate's person I found this paper; and near the spot this ivory-torn-off fragment of cloth. They may assist in tracing the assassin. Your name," added the officer, addressing M. Dupré, "is mentioned in the paper."

"My name!"

"Your name. I may not part with the note for an instant; but I will read it to you. The hand is evidently a disguised one:

"MADEMOISELLE DE BOUGAINVILLE—You are intended to be the victim of an infamous plan arranged and the chief parts filled up, by the mother superior, the notary Dupré, and his favorite, Alphonse Bertin. The object is to ensure said Bertin amongst them an immense fortune bequeathed to you by M. Alexis de Bougainville, your late lamented uncle. According to the terms of the will, you will forfeit the last stipend you have become possessed now—pure uncle, though you may not know it, having a rooted aversion to conventual institutions. The money—over a million—then goes to Alphonse Bertin. He has entered into it equally with the number superior (who through some indiscretion, got scent of the secret) and the notary Dupré. It has been only by a providential chance that I have discovered it. I, you know, was a friend of your father, and will see justice done to his daughter. Come to see this evening. You know the way to the Château d'Aix. It is long and solitary, but you will see a man in a green blouse, and wearing a gilded round hat, before you have gone far. He will safely escort you. Say not one word to a living soul; I will acquaint you with every reason why you must not, till you are safe with me; act openly."

"MARIE COULANGES."

"The infamous calumniator! the vile assassin! the lying impostor!" exclaimed the mother superior. "Madame Coulanges died more than a month since, and the Château d'Aix is untenanted. That, however, was not likely to be known here."

"True," said the commissary; "and the handwriting, though, as I have said, disguised, is evidently that of a man. Don't you think so, M. Dupré? And this fragment of cloth has been evidently torn from a man's coat; the color is a peculiar one."

"Great God!" exclaimed the notary with a shudder. "Alphonse Bertin is the murderer!"

The commissary and his aids did not find Alphonse Bertin at the notary's. He went out, the concierge said, soon after M. Dupré, and had not since returned. But they found the young man's soiled and torn coat, from which the piece of cloth found near the corpse had unquestionably been torn. This proof of Bertin's guilt seemed conclusive, irrefragable.

A few hours later he was discovered in a state of semi-inebriation at a low tavern called the Faubourg Saint Marcel, seized and presently lodged in prison.

The trial was a mere formality. The accused, when at first had declined, in reply to the interrogatories of the judges, that he had not mentioned M. Alexis de Bougainville's legacy or legacies to any one, subsequently declared that he had told Josephine Ramon, to whom he was madly attached, in the hope that she would consent to share the wealth as his mistress, which he could only obtain by espousing Mademoiselle de Bougainville. He also stoutly averred that it was in compliance with a message delivered by a person unknown to him, and said by that person to be from Mademoiselle Ramon, that he had gone to the place where he was assaulted and robbed, expecting to meet her there. He also strenuously denied all knowledge of the letter found upon the murdered girl's person, or that he was the man who had given it to her. Josephine Ramon, however, to deliver any letter or message to Mademoiselle de Bougainville. All these assertions were flatly contradicted by the mistress of the accused, who had never spoken to her of M. de Bougainville's legacy, though he had importuned her with improper overtures. But just then the trial took a turn between them. As to her having sent him a message to meet her on the evening the murder was committed, that was a falsehood, which, from all the experts, but M. Dupré himself, reluctantly gave his opinion that the note purporting to be signed by Marie Coulanges was a forgery. Josephine, piously disgusted, of the accused, and Jules Bart roundly swore that he was the man calling himself Monsieur Maillard, whom, at the Faubourg, and privately to place a note in Mademoiselle de Bougainville's hand. He had once before seen the prisoner, and heard his name mentioned, and consequently knew, though the prisoner suspected it not, that M. Maillard was M. Bertin. Finally, the prisoner was convicted of homicide with premeditation, and condemned to the galleys.

Father Etienne Lafont, confessor of the Ursuline Convent, was a very anxious auditor of the trial. He had been called to express an opinion, from his ion that the handwriting of the letter subscribed Marie Coulanges was not the handwriting of Alphonse Bertin, but a disguised hand. He could, however, bring an expert, he was not allowed to give that opinion upon oath in open court. He had also declared (having been present at the arrest of the prisoner, he, at his own instance, had several interviews in his character of priest, with Bertin, between the sentence and the execution) in favor of the late man's innocence. Lafont had intimate relations with several highly influential personages, and it was by his exertions that commutation of the sentence was at length obtained—the galleys for life being substituted for death on the scaffold. Eugène Le Gros was also supposed to have been absent at Amiens at the time of the murder—reported only to have been there—eagerly corroborated, as he had been, by the prisoner, to save his cousin's life. This did not involve any great sacrifice on his part; the civil death of Bertin would have left the lieutenant to M. Alexis Bougainville's wealth.

The Bertin-Bougainville affair was fast dying out of public memory when it was revived by the marriage of Eugène Le Gros with Josephine Ramon. So strange a union excited much remark, and especially gave color and consistence to the vague suspicions which, since the trial, had haunted Lafont. He was bold enough, imprudent enough if you will, to endeavor to induce the public prosecutor to reniff the whole of the circumstances. This, however, was refused, but the attempt, and also the offensive reasoning by which it was supported, must have greatly exasperated Eugène Le Gros and his wife. Father Lafont was quite aware that he had made a mortal enemy of the homme modiste and his spouse, and consequently for several times remarked to his friends that he felt sure he was watched whenever he left the Ursuline Convent, where, strange to say, at his earnest solicitation, Juice Bart still officiated as porter. Shortly after the above date his previous internal complaint which of late had rapidly developed, and Lafont was anxious not to lose sight of him, as he feared that the approaches of death might terrify him into making a revelation that would be serviceable to Alphonse Bertin. The man, however, lingered on, giving no sign, much longer than had been declared possible by the medical attendant. At last the summons came, and Lafont, after the usual extreme unction having taken place, he had but a few hours at the most to live. The terrified wretch implored Lafont that the mother superior might instantly send for Father Lafont. This was done, and Juice Bart expired in a few moments after the priest's arrival. Lafont, the mother superior appeared to be strangely agitated when leaving the death-chamber, spoke a few hurried words to the mother superior, the purport of which was, that the departed sinner had made important disclosures—not under the seal of confession, which, in fulfilment of the merciful's own request, he should communicate without delay to the criminal authorities. Bart had also warned him that he was constantly watched, and that as soon as the employers of those who dogged his steps knew, which they soon would, that he had been with him (Bart) in his last moments, the priest's life would be in imminent danger. Father Lafont said he believed that to be true, and he would therefore hasten at once back to Paris, so as to reach it before evening had quite closed in. The good father then left, walking at his fastest pace. I may here add, it was discovered that Juice Bart, or whatever his real name might be, was an escaped convict. His right ear had been lopped on his shoulder. The fact was known by the surgeon before Lafont was sent for, and Bart, perceiving his avowal was discovered, muttered a malediction upon Eugène somebody—the surname was not caught by the hearer—who knew that too, and long ago.

Father Lafont never returned to the cathedral of Notre Dame. Rigorous inquiries were instituted, but without any result, no trace of him could be found. The Revolution was fast hashing itself into frenzy of rage, especially against priests, and it was thought probable that he had been massacred in the streets, as on the same evening two other persons were. The objection to that surmise was that the body could not be found.

Another year rolled away; the population of Paris was drunk with blood, and amidst those fumes, from among many, I am aware at all, was strung up à la lanterne, was M. Eugène Le Gros. His wife was seized at the same moment, and with her husband was dragged to the Abbaye, but she was recognised by an influential ruffian, and declared by him to be, instead of a bloated aristocrate, a most patriotic female, and was released. She was released, and reached home in safety, but never recovered the shock sustained by her nervous system during the scenes of the day. Her house, survived the fall of Robespierre a few months, but for long previous to death her mind was completely deranged by terrific visions, which in her sleeping and waking dreams she often gave shrieking utterance. Those distempered ravings were overheard by the physician, but attended her, and who knew nothing of her antecedents, solely to the effect of extreme nervous terror; her talk—demons, vampires, and skeletons, were topics—to a nurse possessing her at such times that she was still struggling with the sanguinary ruffians from whom a mad stone—a paving-stone—had saved her.

Shortly before her death, and when it was evident to Dr. Petit that the end was very close at hand, that gentleman brought him that the mysterious lady was at length permitted by the rulers who had succeeded Robespierre, might help to calm her troubled spirit. "I accordingly," states Dr. Petit, "went to the house called the Abbaye, who, as it chanced, had once lodged at Madame Ramon's for a short time. He perfectly remembered Josephine, a very sprightly Josephine, but, having been several years absent from Paris, had never heard of her marriage. He was somewhat surprised at the title of mistress of the mansion to which I conducted him was Madame Ramon's daughter.

"I found the lady dying, dying," said Dr. Petit, "when I and the abbé entered the apartment, where she lay reclined upon a luxurious couch. She was dressed with the greatest taste, in order that she might be informed I had taken the liberty to bring a priest to speak with her gently, tenderly. As I approached she opened her eyes, and, awaking in much calmer mood than usual. Her glance first rested upon me, and a faint, and easily recognised smile, played over her features. Presently she noticed the abbé, and a slight scream escaped her; and half rising from the couch, she started with frightful excitement in his face, while muttering to herself, 'I know—I remember—the Abbé Delmar—the good Abbé Delmar. That was when she knew me not. Hush! Hush! she cried. Hark!' she suddenly exclaimed, breaking off abruptly. 'Hark! he is coming upstairs. You must not see him, must not, must not. You are a priest also. Drive him away!' she added, falling back, shaking in every limb with terror, and covering her face with the pillows. This fancy of some one ascending the stairs to drag her away was a frequent one, and when I happened to be present I always quieted her by going outside the door, and peremptorily forbidding the intruder's approach. I did so upon the present occasion. 'Hush!' she said, 'the wretched woman—Juice—He is going back. But he will come again when you are gone. Ah!' she continued, speaking with real eagerness, and she had drawn a priest, and could sprinkle the dars, damp grave with holy water, so that he could never come out of it again. Go, go, at once! Get yourself to the priest; you stay with me. Go—the cellar, that farthest off. Ah, the door is strongly barred; yet he can pass through; and why not you? Oh, go, go!'

"She spoke in a manner that I was obliged to comply with her behest. She sat listening intently for a while; but before he returned closed her eyes, as if commencing her attendant, we left. That night she died.

"The strange fancy which so constantly haunted her that some one was coming upstairs, always out of the cellar, to drag her away, struck me as so very odd that I at once asked the servant if there was a strong door to the cellar. She said there was. I mentioned the reply to the abbé, and he, who had quickly ferreted out all about the De Bougainville mystery, spoke of it to a commissary of police, that functionary to the officer of gendarmes who discovered the corpse of the murdered Julie, and who, of course knew all about the mysterious disappearance of Father Lafont, with whose opinion of M. and Mme. Le Gros he was moreover well acquainted. The zealous officer broke his way into the cellar, found it empty, and set his men to work digging up the floor. A grave was found in which a human being, an aged man, had been buried. Quicklime had been thrown upon the corpse, which was probably interred in a naked state, and only a few bones were left!

"The next of kin to Eugène and Madame Le Gros divided amongst themselves the large sum which had been invested in the names of the wife as well as the husband, and threatened with the penalties of the law any and every one who should dare question the perfect innocence of their deceased relatives. As to Alphonse Bertin, to convince the Directory or the Consulate that the conviction in his case was wrong proved to be impossible. Probably neither of those exalted personages ever took the trouble of giving the memorials upon the subject forwarded to their mightinesses a conscientious, careful perusal. However that may have been, Bertin left his cave; Alphonse Bertin escaped from the Bagne, and ultimately from France, during the last year of the Consulate, I suppose, sought refuge and peace in the New World."

GOLD IN NEW YORK.

THE rise and fall of gold during the war has been a problem, and to enable some future investigator to study the reasons and causes, an enterprising man has got up a chart like a meteorological table, showing its variations. A black diagonal ruled with straight lines, and one single line—evidently not under the influence of gravity—making a queer zigzag across, is not a very attractive picture. We chronicle the gold fever in our way, by giving illustrations of scenes that have taken place in the auriferous region run riot as it has lately done.

Gold had been coming up, up, up. But there came a crash. The precious metal which had reached the perilous height of 169, came down to 171, and on its way down it created a panic, real and corresponding dismay in Wall street and filling it with lame ducks. Then after matters had stagnated, long vacillation ensued, all was eagerness and excitement. Our Artist has drawn for us the scene of confusion at the Gold Room, the bidding, the offers of more in the street, on wagons, and the swindle of counterfeit bids. It is an amusing sufficing yet the ocean depths of the Brokers' Board. Nothing could be more different from the privacy of the outside world.

How completely the spirit of speculation has invaded all else we may be seen in the fact that ladies have taken to speculating specimens, which naturally met daily in one of our hotels, to discuss the stock in the last arrival by the steamer, and the young brokers who attended regularly for the purpose. The matter with which the fair views and daughters of wealthy merchants embarked in the perilous traffic was crushed coal, which, however, in the immediate future is known.

On the meanwhile a new fever arose among merchants. To secure the gold certificates issued by the government, they had to pay a deposit—bullion. The impatient seekers formed a long queue with extended arms—"Gold in—Mon. Hill, right to secure an early place. Others sought to buy; some to sell, and many to exchange. The crowd was loud, but making a fair day's work.

Our sketch is not only the building and these scenes, but the consequences. The miser, the gold speculator in luck, the ruined, the Jew, the Arab, with the divine's reproving glance at all the vanity.

WEIGHING ARM RATIONS.

ARMY rations! In all the reports of armies, camps, marches and sieges that our readers often reflect on the hard fare to which, for three years and more, over a million of men have endured—the hard biscuit, the salt meat, weighed out with scrupulous fidelity, as though too precious to be wasted. One picture, true to life, we have carefully studied, which we give to-day from our Artist with the Army of the Potomac, whose sketches of camp will hereafter appreciate. There is nothing very attractive in the fare or in the daily routine, nothing very alluring or appetising. Yet it is life, and as such will well repay the study and hereof reflection.

THE U. S. 10-40 LOAN.—Instructions to the National Banks acting as agents for same are issued from the Treasury at Washington until March 15th. The banks are not generally begin to receive subscriptions until one week later, and in distant parts of the country not until two weeks later, but the subscription does not close until to the Treasury on a week's notice, which is not given until the sum actually subscribed but not yet reported at that date is of sufficient amount. The instructions to agents parties to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to close the list of interest on the loan before a fully fixed. The experience of the last few weeks gives us every reason to believe that all the power the Treasury desires to borrow, can be obtained for five per cent. interest.

BROOKS'S PATENT WRITING, WORK AND ROLLER CASE COMBINED.—This is what has long been wanted, and is now manufactured in such a form as to small compass than any one of the time it is light, compact and of good, and combines in the ladies' secretary or a soldier and traveller, as well as being very useful in a family. For all who live in country villages it is invaluable.

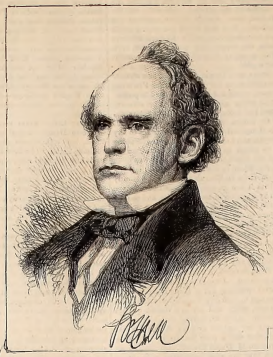
ONCE upon a time there dwelt in the village of [illegible] a man who was known as Pete. He was noted for knowing everything that happened between any two men.

One day being in the village lawyers—a favorite resort with him, for he could always learn some there to listen to his big yarns—a gentleman there spoke of a lost pocket-book, and asked if he would:

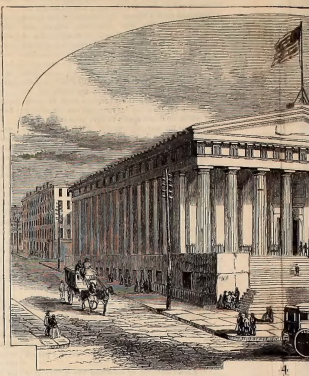
"Why, didn't you ever see one of 'em, Mr. Brown, in the days of Way down South, when I was several years ago, they don't raise any other kind; and I've seen a sight of 'em, and I've had forty pockets of wool!"

AN IRISHMAN, who had borrowed some money of a friend, a resident of our village, came one day to his office to pay it. After it was paid he wanted the lawyer to do a little business.

"What do you want with a receipt?" said I, "you have got the money back from me, and the affair was filled with loungers.



"Why, I want to see that when I die, and go up to Heaven and knocks at the gate, and one of the saints comes out and asks me what I want, I can say, 'Who's there?' I'll say. 'Pat Murphy, plase yer reverence.' Then he'll say, 'What do you want, Pat?' Then I'll tell him I've been in Lima. Then he'll say, 'Have you any receipt?' Then I'll say, 'Yes, I have.' Then he'll say, 'Let me see that,' and I'll have to go back to hell for want of a receipt."

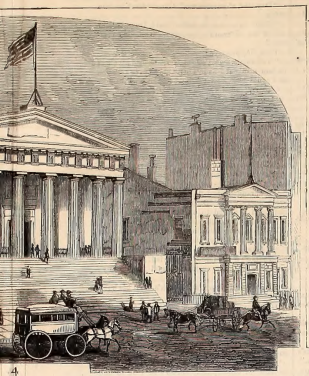


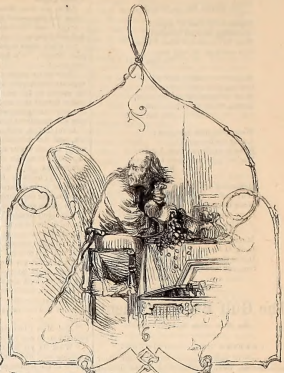
The "receipt" was given as soon as the laughter subsided.

"A FROG," says Professor Bump, "is an amphibious animal, whi it leaves on cold water, and once quaintly invented the musical society. He always walks with a jump, he does; and when he sits down has to stand up. Being a lover of native melodies, he gives free concerts every night, he does, himself. He provides music for the million, which has been so called because it usually is heard in a millinood. He is a warmint what eats, so bad when broiled on a gridiron."

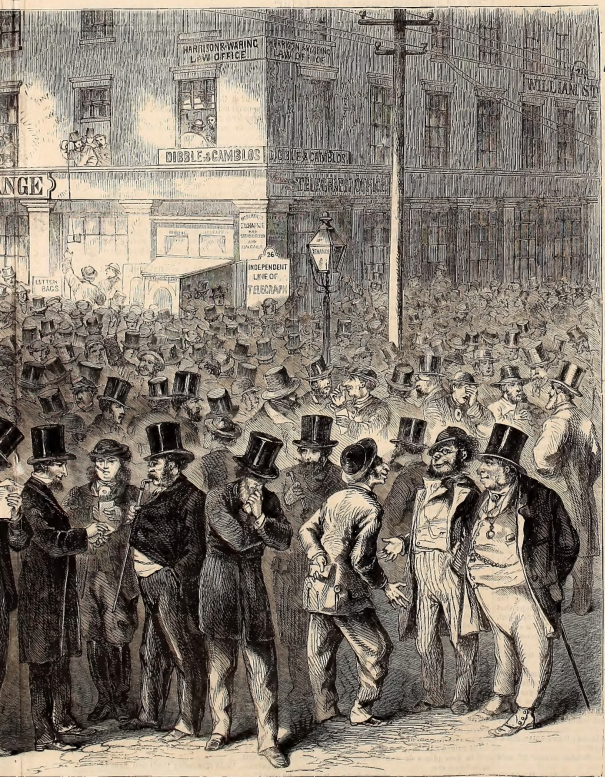
1

2



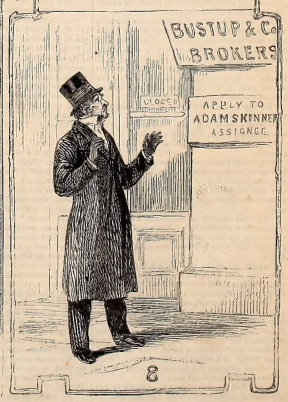


3



1. Lady Speculators in Session. 2. Sold to a Profit. 3. Selling a Place in the Line for Gold Certificates. 4. Treas

THE GOLD FEVER IN NEW YORK—THE EXCITEMENT AMONG THE SPECULATORS AND BROK



4. Treasury Building. 5. Scene in Exchange Place. 6. Miser. 7. The Man that Lost. 8. "Burst."
BROKERS, THE RUSH ON THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT FOR GOLD CERTIFICATES.—SEE PAGE 103.

"OUT OF THE DEPTHS."

BY GRACE DE LA VERITE.

Measuring time by agony!
Quivering, pierced humanity!
None to soothe me when I weep,
Nor one hour of vigil keep;
No, not one!

Measuring time by agony!
Chilling looks are cast on me;
None to touch my aching brow,
Loving words to whisper low;
No, not one!

Measuring time by agony!
Agony for harmony!
None to cheer me when I grieve,
Nor the light with dark to weave;
No, not one!

Measuring time by agony!
Why unfold my misery?
None but strangers pass this way,
None who care with me to stay;
No, not one!

Measuring time by agony!
Look, O Jesus! where I lie!
Day is turned to night for me,
Sun, nor moon, nor star I see;
No, not one!

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

CHAPTER XXX—CONTINUED.

THE pair of sable retainers went on with their conversation, totally unconscious of the listener they had had, and whose every interest connected with the scene had culminated diverging to themes more intimately connected with their own affairs.

One of the chief desires of Dolph's soul was to find out exactly how much money Clorinda had in the bank, but he had never been able, with all his arts, to bring her to that point of confidence when she would make him a partner in that dearest secret of her life.

The other servants and her friends in the neighborhood gave very contradictory accounts concerning the amount, and Victoria openly avowed her belief that—

"Dat one ting was just gammon—didn't 'believe she had no money no-bar—she know'd she was so old that it was her only chance of ketchin' a beau, on the ebb side of six."

But Dolph was too wise to be influenced by Victoria's sneers, and he had lately become convinced that the sum was a larger one than he had at first supposed. In that case Dolph felt the extreme folly of allowing his fancy to stand in the way of his interest. Already he had incurred Clorinda's serious displeasure by his behavior on different occasions; it had required a vast amount of eloquence to reconcile matters after his indiscretion with the strange young woman at old Mother Hopkins's, and his flirtations with Victoria were a constant bone of contention between them.

Dolph felt certain that if he only came directly to the point and made Clorinda a bona-fide offer of his hand with his heart in it, she would melt like honey candy in the sun, but it required a good deal of resolution to make up his mind to that step.

Clorinda was not prepossessing in her appearance, but her most partial friends would have been forced to admit; probably even in her youth she might have passed for an ugly young dowdy as could easily have been found, and now that years and avarice and a not very patient temper had worn their furrows in her face, it really required all the glitter of her reported wealth to make her endurable in Dolph's mercenary eyes.

Then her mind and her finest locks at which Victoria sneered so openly—that was a tender point with Dolph—he had the true contempt for the jetty hue which our Creator seems to find among those of his bronze complexion.

Dolph stood there looking at Clorinda and revolving all these things in his mind, while she washed away at her vegetables and made herself busy as possible at the kitchen dresses.

"Dis life is full of myst'riousness, Miss Clorindy," he said in a meditative tone.

Clorinda snipped off the tops from the carrots she was preparing for the soup and assented.

"Dar ain't much wuth livin' for," she said gloomily.

Dolph was frightened at once; when Clo got into one of her desponding humors she became very religious without delay; unless he could get her off that track he would most certainly be condemned to Methodist hymns and a prayer-meeting that very night.

"Don't say dat, fair Miss Clorindy, now don't!" he exclaimed, pathetically. "You'a de light ob too many eyes for sich renumerations—de luminary dat lights der hearts as de sun does de sky at noonday."

Clorinda simpered; with all her firmness and numerous other grim virtues, she was a thorough woman at heart, and never could withstand flattery thus adroitly administered.

Clo "long with your pesky nonsense," said she, giving a coquettish toss to her head that made the little frizzed knobs below her gorgeous bandanna flutter about as if suddenly electrified. "Go 'way wid sich, I say."

"Don't call it nonsense, sweet Miss Clorindy," urged Dolph, in a more insinuating tone; "when a gemman dispuses the tenderest feelins' of his bussom at your feet, don't jist at 'em."

To be called by such endearing epithets in two consecutive sentences softened Clorinda greatly; this time something uncommon must be coming—Dolph certainly was in earnest.

"I don't see nothin' at my feet," said she, with a little giggle.

"Yes, yer does, Miss Clorindy," pleaded Dolph; "yes, yer does—now don't deny it."

"I s!" said Clorinda, with another giggle full of delightful flurry, "you mean is so confusin."

"I d—n't mean to be confusin', Miss Clorindy," said Dolph; "it's far from my wishes—leastways wid you."

There was a tender emphasis on the concluding pronoun which quite upset Clorinda. She allowed the carrots to fall back in the pan of water, and seated herself on a stool near by—if anything serious was coming she would receive it with the dignity she considered befitting the occasion.

Artful Dolph, profound in the knowledge of the sex, read her thoughts without the slightest difficulty, and his vanity chuckled inwardly to see how impossible it was for any female heart to resist his fascinations. Still he was in a condition of great perplexity; he had no intention of committing himself until he had learned the exact price Clorinda could pay for the article, and he was prepared to make of his youth and good-looks. On the other hand, he was sorely puzzled how to acquire the information he desired without laying his heart at her feet; he had tried various plans and they had all signally failed; in that respect Clorinda was astute enough to be fully his match.

But he must say something; in a moment more Clorinda might flounce off in one of her tempers, and Dolph could not afford to lose time in misunderstandings, particularly as he had lately discovered that the sable parson whose meetings she attended was becoming quite devoted in his attentions.

"Ah! Miss Clorindy," said he, "de sect is all resemblence in one leetle particlar."

"What do yer mean?" inquired Clo, in a languishing way, which she thought becoming in response to the tenderness of Dolph.

"In yer cruelty," said Dolph, "yer cruelty, Miss Clorindy."

"Lawd, nebby ebber said I was cruel," returned the matter-of-fact Clo. "I wrings de necks o' de chickens and skins de eels alive, 'cause it's a cook's lookout, but I hain't got a speck of cruelty in me."

Dolph shook his head, then dropped it on one side with an air which he had found very killing in former flirtations, and replied:

"In course yo'll deny it—it's de way ob de sect, but de fact is dat—"

"I don't know what yer mean," said Clorinda, beginning to resume a little of her usual rigidity; "if yer ain't a talkin' Spanish now, it's jist as bad."

"I alludes to de coquettations in which you all indulge."

"I d—n't," said Clo; "I leaves all sich foolishnesses to silly things like dat Vic—I hain't no patience wid 'em."

"Oh! Miss Clorindy, Miss Clorindy!"

"Dat's my name, fact 'nuff; yer needn't go shouting it out dat aways."

"When I'se seed wid my own eyes," said Dolph.

"What has yer seen? Jis' 'ticlaries—I has nebber seatin' round de bush."

Clo began to simper again; she really believed that Dolph was getting jealous; the bare idea filled her with a delicious tremor, although in a short were sufficiently rare in her experience to be exceedingly precious.

"But I don't know what yer mean," she went on, "no more's de man in de moon."

"Dar it is!" said Dolph. "Why, I 'lieves dat ef I only could get de sect looks at de moon, 'cause dar's a man in it."

"Oh, he's too far off," returned Clo, with a prolonged chuckle at her own wit; "'too far off by a long-shot."

"Berry good," said Dolph, "very good indeed! Yer's in de right 'rection, Miss Clorindy."

Here he sighed dolefully.

"Wal," said Clo, "if I be, 'taint no reason for you to be spunking dat 'ere engine."

"Oh, yes, I 'replied Dolph.

He certainly was in earnest this time—Clo felt assured of that. He possessed soup, and still tried to look more bewitching in his eyes.

"I don' see why," she said, in sweet confusion.

"But say how yer didn't prove nothin' 'bout my bein' coquettious."

"Dar it is!" cried Dolph. "It all goes to-gether."

"Oh, laws," cried Clo, lightly, "as ef dat ar would set you a sighin'; I knows a heap better'n dat, fair Mister Dolph."

"Yer don't do me justice, Clorindy," said Dolph, seriously, putting on an injured look; "yer don't know her done me justice."

"Why, what have I done now?" demanded Clo, beginning to play with her apron string.

"Yer know why," said Dolph, prolonging the situation as much as possible, in the hope that some bright thought would strike him by which the conversation might be turned to the subject uppermost in his worldly mind; "yer knows very well."

"Why, yer's making me out quite a monster," said Clo.

"No, Miss Clorindy, no; don't say dem keerless t'ings—don't! I ain't a makin' you nothin', only de most charmin' and de most cruel of yer sect."

If Clo did not think it was only because nature had endowed her of the dangerous privilege, but she fell into a state of sweet confusion that was truly beautiful to behold.

"But yer go agin," said she; "now quit a-callin' me cruel, or else say why?"

"Didn't I see you a Sunday evenin' ?" said Dolph.

"In course ye did; we was to Mrs. Hopkins's arter de meetin'."

"And wasn't Elder Spott dar, too?"

"In course he was; yer knows it well enough."

"I knows it too well," said Dolph, in a tragic voice.

"Law sakes, what has he done to you, Mr. Dolph?"

"Dar's whar de coquettations comes in," continued Dolph; "dat's jist de subject I'm 'proachin' yer wid."

"Me!" cried Clo, in delightful innocence. "Laws, I didn't know yer even looked at me; I tought ye was fascinated wid dat Vic."

"I'se nebber too busy to reserve you, Miss Clorindy," said Dolph; "wherever I may be, whatever my ockipation, I'se eyes for you."

"Oh, laws!" sighed Clo. "Oh, lawsy me!"

And I need not have warned Dolph; "I see'd de elder a bending over ye, a whisperin' in yer ear."

"Oh, git out!" cried Clo. "He didn't do no sich."

"Oh, yes, he did, Miss Clorindy: dese eyes seen it."

"Wal, he wa'n't a-takin' me if I was gwine to come to meetin more reglar dan I had ob late."

"It took him a great while to ax," said Dolph, in the same gloomy tone.

Clo laughed a little rambling laugh.

"He's a berry pleasant man, de elder," said she; "berry pleasant."

"Dey say he wants a wife," observed Dolph.

"Do dey! Mebby he do; I sin't in his secrets."

"But yer will be, Clorindy, yer will be."

"Me! Takin no ways likely; don' 'spect I shall."

"Oh, yes, yer will," insisted Dolph.

He was serious, and Clo began to grow dizzy at the thoughtsof so many conquests crowding upon her.

"I jis' b'lieve he's a sarpint in disguise," said Dolph, with great energy; "one ob de wust kind of old he ones."

"Laws, Mr. Dolph, don't say sich things; he's quite a shinin' light in de sanctuary, I'se certain."

"It's a light I'd like to squinch," cried Dolph.

"And if he pokes himself into my monshine I'll do it."

Clo gave a shrill squeal, and caught his arm, as if in the excitement he were going to rush forth in search of the elder, and put his menace into instant execution.

"Don't kick up a muss wid him," she pleaded: "why should yer?"

"It 'pends on yer, Miss Clorindy."

"Laws, how?"

"Yer know; de 'couragement yer've ben a givin' him is 'nuff to drive yer admirers out o' der senses."

"Oh, dear me, I neber heerd sich nonsense!" said Clo.

"It's true," answered Dolph, 'an' yer knows it. But yer received in dat man, Miss Clorindy, yer is! He's got both eyes fixed on de glitterin' dross. I've heerd him talk 'bout de fortin yer had, an' how it was all a-waitin for us, an' what good he might do wid it 'mong de heathen."

Clo gave another scream, but this time it was a little of a hysterical nature.

"Spend my money 'mong de heathen!" she cried. "I'd like to see him do it! comes bout me I'll quit his old work for him, I will."

Dolph smiled at the success of his falsehood, and made ready to clinch the nail after driving it in.

"Dat's what he t'inks anyhow. Why, Miss Clorindy, he was a tryin' to find out jist how much yer was wuth."

"That nobody's business but my own," cried Clo, angrily, "folks needn't be a pumpin' me; 'taint no use.

"Jis' what I've allers said," remarked Dolph, with great earnestness; "sich secrets, says I, is Miss Clorindy's own."

"Yes, dat's what I said Clo, holding on to the sides of her stool as tightly as if it had been the box which contained her treasures.

"I've said sometimes," continued Dolph, "dat if de day shud ever come when dat parathon ob her sex made up her mind to gib her lubly hand to some true bosom dat lobed her, she'd probably whisper dat secret in his ear de secret she has kept from all de wuld."

Clo was divided between the tenderness awakened by his words and his vigilance with which she always guarded the outposts leading to her cherished secret.

"Ain't dat sense, Miss Clorindy?" he demanded.

"I hain't said it warn't," she replied.

"Dis world is full o' mercenary men," Dolph went on, "searchin' for de filty lucre; I'se glad I nebber was one ob dem. I allers has 'spised de dross; gib me a lubly, sunny face wid de fair heart to it my choice, and I asks no more."

Clo played with her apron string again, and looked modestly down; he was going to speak now.

But Dolph did not know exactly what to say next without committing himself more deeply than he intended; indeed, he had been led on now considerably farther than he could wish, but that was unavoidable.

Now, what was it he desired, he said, "cause in die world people must lib."

Clo assented gently to that self-evident proposition.

"Do yer know what I'se often tought, Miss Clorindy?" said Dolph, seizing on a new tack.

"Spect I don't," said Clo.

"I'se wished many a time, more lately 'n I used to, dat I could take some fair cretur I lobed to my heart, an' dat 'tween us we had money 'nuff to start a restauration or somet'in' of dat sort."

Clo sniffed a little.

"In dem places de wuk all comes on de woman," said she.

Dolph was quite aware of that fact; it was the one thing which made him contemplate the idea with favor.

"Oh, not at all," he said, "de cookin's a trifle; tink ob de 'counts; my head's good at figures."

"Dey kind o' puzzles me," Clo confided to him softly.

"Taint 'spected in de ladies," said Dolph; "dey nebber ort to trouble 'emselves 'bout sich matters."

Then Dolph sighed.

"Yer wonders what's de matter," he said; "I was jis lamentin' dat I hadn't ben able to save as much as I could wish, so dat I could realise my dream."

"Laws," cried Clo, so agitated and confused that she was about to speak the words he so longed to hear; "how much wud it take? Does yer tink dat it's a woman had—"

"I say yer Clo, where be yer?"

The interruption was a cruel one to both the darkeys, though from different reasons; the voice was Victoria's, and it proceeded from the kitchen.

"Clo!" she called again, in considerable wrath, "jis' you answer now, else I'll tell missus of yer tricks."

Clo sprang up and flew at her vegetables with great energy, and Dolph mounted a couple of steps and appeared to be diligently searching for something in a closet.

Victoria opened the door, looked out and tossed her head angrily when she saw the pair.

"I 'spose I might a split my throat callin', and yer wouldn't a answered," she cried.

"I'se 'bout my business," said Clo, grimly "jis' mind yours."

"Oh, laws! I 'spose Mr. Dolph's 'bout his business, too," retorted Vic.

Dolph turned round from the closet and asked sweetly,

"Did yer speak to me, Miss Victory ?"

"No, I didn't," said she; "but marster was askin' for ye, and he'll raise hot if yer stays here a gossipin'!"

"Who's a gossipin'?" cried Clo; "if he wants somet'in' in the cuppard, mustn't he look to find it?"

"Don't be snappin' my head off as if yer was an old turtle," cried Vic, belligerently, "'cause I warn't to blame. Marster's got a gemman here, an' he wants lunch."

"Wal, it's your place to get de lunch," said Clo.

"Taint," cried Vic; "it's Mr. 'Dolph a."

"I'se comin', ladies," he exclaimed; "I'se at yer service."

He winked at Clo, out of one eye, smiled at Vic out of the other corner of his mouth, and did his best to keep both propitiated.

"I want to know what dem cold ducks is," said Vic.

"Look what dey be and ye'll find 'em," replied Clo, spanking her carrots about in the pan.

"If they hain't gone down dat ol' preacher's throat it's lucky," cried Vic; "but ye'll ketch it if they have."

"Don't 'cuse me of none o' yer own tricks," retorted Clo.

"It 'ain't 'em, den," said Vic, "or I'll go up to missus."

You may go to old scratch, for all I care," said Clo, too much enraged to think of having been cheated out of an offer to be careful of language or consequences.

"Dat's pooty talk for a meetin'-goer," cried Vic. "I'll see what de elder tinks of sich."

Clo turned furiously upon her, but a violent ringing of the library bell checked her quarrel in the bud. They all knew that Mr. Mellen was growing impatient, and did not venture on another moment's delay.

CHAPTER XXXI.

THE day was wearing slowly away; a day more terrible in its moral darkness and suspense than perhaps had ever before descended upon the old house.

Mr. Mellen was engaged with a succession of visitors on business, with whom he remained about up in the library; Elisa took refuge at first in her own chamber, but either nervousness or a desire to talk drove her again to Elizabeth's room. Their dressing-rooms were separated by Elizabeth's chamber, so Elsie flung the door open and ran into her sister's room, exclaiming:

"You need not stay; I can't be alone."

Elizabeth only replied by a gesture; she was walking slowly up and down the floor as she had been during all the morning; Elisa was conscious of her power to accept one instant of physical rest. She left the door open and extended her promenade through the suite between her own and Elsie's, and then back, pacing to and fro till she looked absolutely exhausted, but never once pausing for repose.

They were unfortunate, except when one of the servants knocked at the door for orders, and at each request for admittance Elsie would give a nervous little cry.

"Tell them not to come any more," said she.

"They must have their orders," Elizabeth replied; "some must stay, everything must go on as usual to the last moment."

Elsie shivered down among her cushions and was silent. Elizabeth sat on a sofa drawn to the hearth, gathered a pile of novels about her and sat there trying her best to be comfortable in her feeble way.

"If you would only sit down," she exclaimed, at length.

"I cannot," replied Elizabeth; and resumed her dreary walk.

Then there came more interruptions, and Victoria reported that they would have luncheon.

"Marster's got it in de library wid dem men—'spect misses don't want to go down."

"What is she talking about?" groaned Elsie, from her sofa.

"Luncheon," said Elizabeth; "will you have it up here?"

"As if one could eat—"

A warning gesture from Elizabeth checked her.

"You may bring the luncheon up here," Elizabeth said to the girl.

Victoria went out and closed the door.

"I believe they would come if we were dying to know if we would stop to eat," cried Elsie.

"Everything must go on as usual," was Elizabeth's answer.

"How can you stand there and talk so calmly to them!" cried Elsie. "It's enough to drive one frantic."

"It is too late now to be anything but quiet," she said.

Elsie began some shuddering complaints, but Elizabeth did not wait to hear them; she had resumed her promenade, walking with the same sort of eager haste, with her eyes seeming to look afar off and unable to fix themselves upon any object in the rooms.

"There is another knock," cried Elsie. "Oh, they'll drive me mad!"

"Come in," Elizabeth said.

It was Victoria with the luncheon tray, and it seemed as if she never would be done arranging it to her satisfaction.

"I brung you some apricot jelly, Miss Elsie," she said; "I knowed you had one of yer headaches."

But Elsie only moaned—perhaps at the misfortune of possessing no appetite when apricot jelly was at hand.

"Da's only cold chicken and dat meat pie," said Vic; "I 'spects I do duckie in for marster."

"There is quite enough," said Elizabeth; "you needn't wait."

"Yes, miss," returned Vic. "I hain't had no time yet to sweep de room Miss Harrison had—Clo's, she's ugly as Cain, to day."

"It makes no difference," said Elizabeth, while Elsie threw open her book in feverish impatience.

"Yes, miss, but 'taint pleasant," returned Vic, with her most elegant curtsey. "I likes to do my work reg'lar and in time, miseus knows dat, but when Clo gets into one o' her tantrums she sets shoving topsy-turvy."

"Then get out of the kitchen," cried Elsie. "I don't be quarreling."

"Laws, Miss Elsie," said Victoria, with all the injured resignation of suffering innocence; "I neber quar'l's wid nobody, but I defy an angel to git along wid Clo! She's jest de most aggrewatin piece dat ever walk dis leather! She's a mad 'cause she's gettin' ole dat she hates a young girl was nice person, so she does."

Vic was now fairly started on the subject of her wrongs, and hurried on before Elsie could stop her with all the energy of a belated steam engine. Elizabeth had walked into the other room, and Victoria, standing much less in awe of Elsie than her, took that opportunity to pour out her sorrows with the utmost freedom.

"Miss Elsie, sometimes I tinks I can't stand it I wouldn't, nohow, if twarn't for my affection for you—you an' Miss Lizzie." Victoria hastened to add, deferentially, fearful that her mistress might be within hearing and that the omission would be turned to her disadvantage. "Clo, she gits me gravatiner chery dey, and sence Dolph come back she's wuss'n a bear wid a sore head."

"Oh, my head—my head!" cried Elsie.

"Laws, miss, I wouldn't 'fer de worl'."

"Then go along, and let me sleep, if I can."

"Sartin, miss; but let me do somefin' for yer head," said Victoria, out of the goodness of her heart.

"No, no; I only want to be let alone."

"If yer'd let me bathe it wid eologney," persisted Vic.

"I don't want it bathed," fretted Elsie.

"Laws, miss, it does a heap o' good! Penny royal tea's good—"

Oh, do go away!" groaned Elsie.

"In course I will, miss; but I'd like to do something fur ye"—her looks real sick."

"Then just go away, and don't come up again for the next two hours."

"Yes, miss, I'll jest—"

"Go out!" shrieked Elsie.

"I 'se all fur yer cushins," said Vic. "Dear me, Miss Elsie, yer allers says I'm hard handy when yer has dem headaches."

"I wish to heav anybody to-day."

"Dear me, sin't it's pity! Now, miss, I knows what 'ud be good for yer—"

"Elizabeth," groaned Elsie, "do come and send this dreadful creature away!"

This time Victoria deemed it most prudent to make a hasty retreat, for she stood in a good deal of awe where her mistress was concerned. She went out, reiterating her desire to be useful, and really very full of sympathy, for she was kindhearted as people, except where her enemy, Clorinda, was in the question.

"They'll kill me, I know they will!" moaned Elsie.

But as Elizabeth did not pay the slightest attention to her querulous cries, she relapsed into silence. Finally, her eye was caught by the luncheon-tray; the apricot jelly looked like a great oval-shaped wedge of amber, the cold chicken was arranged in the daintiest of slices, and there was custard-cake, Elsie's special favorite.

She made an effort to fancy herself disgusted at the bare sight of food, and turned away her head, but it was only to encounter the fragrant odor from the tempting dish. Victoria had set upon the hearth.

"Could you eat anything, Elizabeth?" she said, dejectedly.

"No, no; I am not hungry."

"But you never touched a morsel of breakfast, and you ate nothing all yesterday."

"I can't eat now—indeed I can't," was Elizabeth's reply.

"Oh, nor I!" moaned Elsie. "I feel as if a single mouthful would choke me."

She glanced again towards the tray, and began to moan and weep.

"Oh, dear me! This day never will be over!

Oh, I wish I were dead,—I do truly! Do say something, Bessie; don't set so."

But Elizabeth only kept up her incessant march, and Elsie was forced to quiet herself.

She rose from the sofa at last, stood by the window a few moments, but some magnetism drew her near the luncheon-tray again. She took up a spoon and tasted the apricot jelly.

"I want things to look as if we had eaten something," she said, as Elizabeth entered again.

"You had better try some," said her sister.

"One ought, I suppose," observed Elsie. "I think I will try and drink a cup of tea—won't you have some?"

Elizabeth shook her head, and with renewed sighs Elsie poured herself out a dish of tea and sat down at the table.

"Oh, this wretched day! I'd rather be dead and buried! Oh, dear! oh, dear!"

In an absent way she turned her spoon into the apricot jelly again and stopped her moans for a second with the translucent compound.

"I will, I could eat; but I can't."

She put a fragment of chicken on her plate, made a strong effort and actually succeeded in eating it, while Elizabeth was walking through the other rooms.

"I've tried to eat, she said, when her sister appeared in the doorway again, "but I can't."

She drank her tea greedily.

"I am so thirsty; I believe I've got a fever."

But Elizabeth never heard her, and Elsie sat staring at the paté—a magnificent affair, she knew it was—one of Maillard's best, full of truffles and all sorts of delicious things. She felt something in her throat, which might have been hunger or it might have been weakness; she chose to think it the latter.

"I feel so weak," she said, when Elizabeth returned on her round; "such a sinking here," and she put her hand to the region where her heart might be supposed to lie.

"You had better lie down," her sister said, blandly.

That was not the advice Elsie wanted or expected, and she cried out, spasmodically:

"How can I keep still? Oh, I wish I had some drops or something to take!"

She moaned so loudly that it disturbed Elizabeth.

"Drink your tea," she said, "and eat something; you cannot go without food."

"Oh, I will try," said Elsie, resignedly. "I wish you'd come and sit down and have a cup; maybe I could eat then."

"Not now," replied Elizabeth.

The sight of food was loathsome to her. She had hardly touched a morsel for two days.

After a good deal more hesitation and moaning Elsie started the sofa, and the jelly, and the pickles, and the custard-cake, and some crisp little wafers, and, finally, made an excellent meal; all the while declaring that she did not eat, that every mouthful choked her, that she believed she was dying. To all these complaints Elizabeth paid as decidedly slight attention as if Elsie were not making.

Elsie went back to her sofa, feeling somewhat comforted, and prepared to take a brighter view of things. It appeared possible now for her to live an hour or two longer—a little while before she had believed that her death might be expected any moment.

"Do come and sit down, Bessie," she said, as Elizabeth entered, for about the hundredth time. "I'll give you the sofa; you must be tired out."

"No; I am not tired—I like to walk."

"Well, I am sure you have been on your feet hours march—march! Do sit down."

Elizabeth only turned away in silence, but Elsie was much relieved after her exertion to comforts, that she could not forbear attempting to inspire her sister with a little of the hope which had begun to spring up in her own weak heart.

"Oh, Bessie," she cried, "I feel as if this would get over somehow, I do indeed."

"Oh! how?" said Elizabeth.

"Oh, I can't tell; but there'll be some way, there always is; nothing ever does happen, you know."

Elizabeth did not know. She was thinking of the books she had read, in which women's ruin and disgrace were depicted; of the accounts in almost every day's paper of families broken up, their holiest secrets made a public jest; of terrible discoveries which had been made, shaking a whole community with the excitement, and dragging all that seemed before the eyes of the whole world. Yet Elsie could say:

"Nothing ever does happen!"

But the thinking that perhaps in a few hours that quiet house might be agitated by a discovery, mysterious and full of horror as any of the occurrences in the novels she was recalling; only a few hours and she might be driven forth to a fate terrible as that of the unhappy women whose names she had almost ceased to be unaccustomed.

Not for one instant did she delude herself with hope. She knew that the crisis was at hand, and that it was rapidly, very rapidly, approaching for weeks. This time there would be no loophole of escape—this last respite was all that would be granted her; and yet now that she had gained that much, there seemed every hour less probability of her being able to turn it to advantage.

She looked at her sister, as the idea had to do, a work at which the stoutest man's heart might have quailed, alone in the dead of night, with the fear of the civil powers rising up weird and solemn, she heard the low shiver of its branches as they swayed to and fro; she saw the earth laid bare, and——

The picture became too terrible, she could endure no more, and with a shuddering cry she sank upon her knees in the centre of the room:

"God help me! God help me!"

Elsie sprang off the couch and ran towards her with a succession of strangled shrieks.

"What is the matter? What ails you? Oh, oh! You frighten me so. Are you sick—did you see something? Is he going that way?"

But the woman neither saw nor heard, her eyes were fixed on heaven's sky, and the pallid look on her haggard face, which might well have startled stronger nerves than those of the girl by her side.

"Elizabeth Lorrell," she shrieked Elsie, in a genuine terror which there was no mistaking.

"I must do it," muttered the woman; "I must do it! Alone—I must go alone! And all no use—no use—I tell you, no use!"

"Oh, Bessie, dear Bessie! Get up! Don't look so! Oh, for heaven's sake! Bessie, Bessie!"

Elsie threw herself upon the floor beside her sister, crying and shrieking, clinging to her, and hiding her face in her dress, all fearful that some terrible object would peep before her gaze. Her agitation and wild terror recalled Elizabeth to her senses. She disengaged herself from Elsie's arms and staggered to her feet.

"It's over now," she said, feebly, with the weariness of a person exhausted by some violent exertion; "I am better—better now."

"Oh, you frightened me so."

"I won't again. Don't cry; I am strong now."

"What was the matter? Did you see anything?"

"No, no. I was only thinking; it all came up so real before me—how horrible."

"But it may be made all safe yet," urged Elsie. "If you can escape this time—only this once."

She did not venture to speak with the trouble which might befall her sister. Even in that moment of anguish her craft and her selfishness made her remember to be present in Elizabeth's mind the promise she had made.

"Only this once," she repeated.

"It is to be my fate," returned Elizabeth. "I told you the day would come—it is here!"

"But he can't discover anything, Bessie, when everything is gone!"

"Have you thought what I must do?" she broke in. "The horror is almost worse to bear than exposure and ruin would be."

Elsie wrung her hands.

"Don't give way now. You have borne up so long; don't give way when a little courage may save everything."

"I shall not give way; I shall go through with it. But, Elsie, it will all be useless; the end has come."

"Oh, don't say that, don't think it! Think how many secrets are kept for ever. It needs so little now to make us secure; only don't give way, Bessie dear; don't give way."

"Be quiet, child; I shall not fail!"

Elizabeth walked away and left her crouched upon the floor, and began to pace about in her self. The rouge Elsie had rubbed on her cheeks burned there like two hectic spots, making the deathly pallor of the rest of her face ghastly; her eyes were sunken and gleamed out so full of agony and fear that she turned away with a shudder. Her dress, in the disorder, showed wildly disheveled hair and her shoulders. She bound it up again, arranged her dress and recommenced her restless walk.

"Get up, Elsie," she said; "some one may come in."

Elsie took refuge on her sofa, and sobbed herself into a semi-unconsciousness, lying in her haggard anxiety, moved and yet drown, horrified by terrible reflections, which wrung her soul and left it dumb, with a sense of humiliation, born rather of desperation than endurance.

At last she caught sight of Elsie lying asleep upon the sofa. She approached and bent over her. Her hatred to her sister in her crisis took from her face, and they fell over the cushions in rich luxuriance, a feverish color was on her cheeks, lighting up her features, but her whole appearance was so pretty, so singularly childlike, as she lay there, that it seemed impossible, even then, that any crime could be laid to common with the awful trouble that oppressed Elizabeth.

Elizabeth stood for a long time regarding her, and then stooped down over her face as she did so, but they all settled into a look of settled determination, and she turned away. Whatever was to be the issue of her present course; she would keep her promise to the very letter. If ruin and disgrace came they should fall on her alone. Why attempt to involve those who were dear to her in it?

She went to a cabinet in the corner of the room, opened a little drawer and took out a package of letters. They were those her husband had written to her during his long absence.

She drew an easy-chair near to the sofa and sat down, for her limbs trembled under her, untied one or two of the epistles and read passages from them. One of the pages she read ran thus:

"Whatever may happen, no matter how long my absence may be prepared for, I know that you will take care of Elsie. If the worst should happen—if death should surprise me in this far-off land, I know that you will not fail me now I made my dying mother and be a parent to that desolate girl.

"Forgive me if I pain you by writing so sadly. I do not believe that any misfortune will happen to me; something tells me that I shall reach home in safety, and find love and happiness once more awaiting me there."

"But the charge I have in Elsie's future is always present to my mind. I never can forget the words that my dying mother spoke; they are with me night and day, and have been since the hour when they were whispered from her pallid lips.

"I rejoice my heart to think how different from most girls our little Elsie is. If any harm were to come to her I think I should go mad; disgrace to one whose blood was kindred to that in my veins would kill me. You may think this pride a weakness, but it is too deeply rooted in my nature ever to be eradicated. When I look about the world and see girls disgracing themselves by improper marriages, elopements, often worse shames, which must blight their lives and those of all connected with them, I think what I should do under such circumstances.

"Elizabeth, I could not endure it. You are my wife; I love you more deeply than you are aware; but I tell you that I could rather incur wrong which came to me through my wife than through the weakness or dishonor of one who claimed my name by right of birth. It is an inherited pride which has, I know, come down from father to son, and will go with me through life.

"But Elsie—in your hands quite safe. I rest upon that thought. I remember her loveliness, her innocence, her sweet childish ways, and I am at peace again."

That was the letter Granthey Mellen had written during his long exile, and there his wife sat reading it in the presence of that sleeping girl.

After a time Elizabeth folded up the letters, kissed them passionately, and laid them away.

"Perhaps it is the last time," she murmured. "The last time! I won't think—I won't think! Let the day pass!"

She began walking up and down the room again, treading softly so that she might not disturb Elsie's slumber, and trying to build up a hope in her desolation, only the next moment to be swept aside by the black wave of her agony and fear of ruin.

"He will not feel it so very much when it is only me on whom disgrace falls," she thought, with mournful self-abasement. "For her it would have done my best. I have struggled so hard to keep the fair creature he loves so much from harm. When I am gone—when I am in my cell, Heaven cloud that had no silver lining for him, he will be happy with her. I ought to be comforted by this. Yet, O merciful God! this thought alone makes the worst of my misery. They will be so happy, and without me!"

BOOK NOTICES.

LIFE OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN. Philadelphia: J. B. Peterson & Brothers.

GEN. MCCLELLAN'S LIFE AND REPORTS. Philadelphia: J. B. Peterson & Brothers.

The entering house gives, in a popular and cheap form, the "Life of President Lincoln," embracing his Speeches, Proclamations, Letters, Messages, &c.," and forms, in a handsome octavo of 500 pages, extremely useful for reference, and at a remarkably low price.

A "Life of Gen. McClellan," with a full history of the battles in which he took part, and his reports, in like style, is also offered, and cannot fail to meet an extended sale although there are many competitors.

THE SCHOOLGIRL'S GARLAND. Parts I. and II. By Mrs. C. M. KIRKLAND. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

Simultaneously with the death of Mrs. Kirkland appears the first number of her "Schoolgirl's Garland." The circumstances would disarm criticism were there a field for it, but there is none. It would seem to be easy to make a good selection of poetry for the young; but in reality it is one of the most difficult tasks a really good one. True poets have failed in this apparently simple task.

Mrs. Kirkland took up the subject as one accustomed to watch the fluctuating minds of young girls, and her selections are graduated, beginning with the simple verses that they can read to the little mates of four years old, seated upon your knee, and finishing at an active literary age, when they can use the noblest poems in the language. The pieces chosen are gems, and treated as such. The two little volumes, in type, workmanship and paper, are of unexceptionable simple beauty. The volumes have no associations but the girl's main tasks and schoolbooks. They cannot but be favorites and exercise a most beneficial influence.

THE CHAPLAINS AND CLERGY OF THE REVOLUTION, By J. T. HEADLEY, Author of "Washington and his Generals," "Napoleon and his Marshals," &c., &c. New York: Scribner, 1864, 12mo., 400pp.

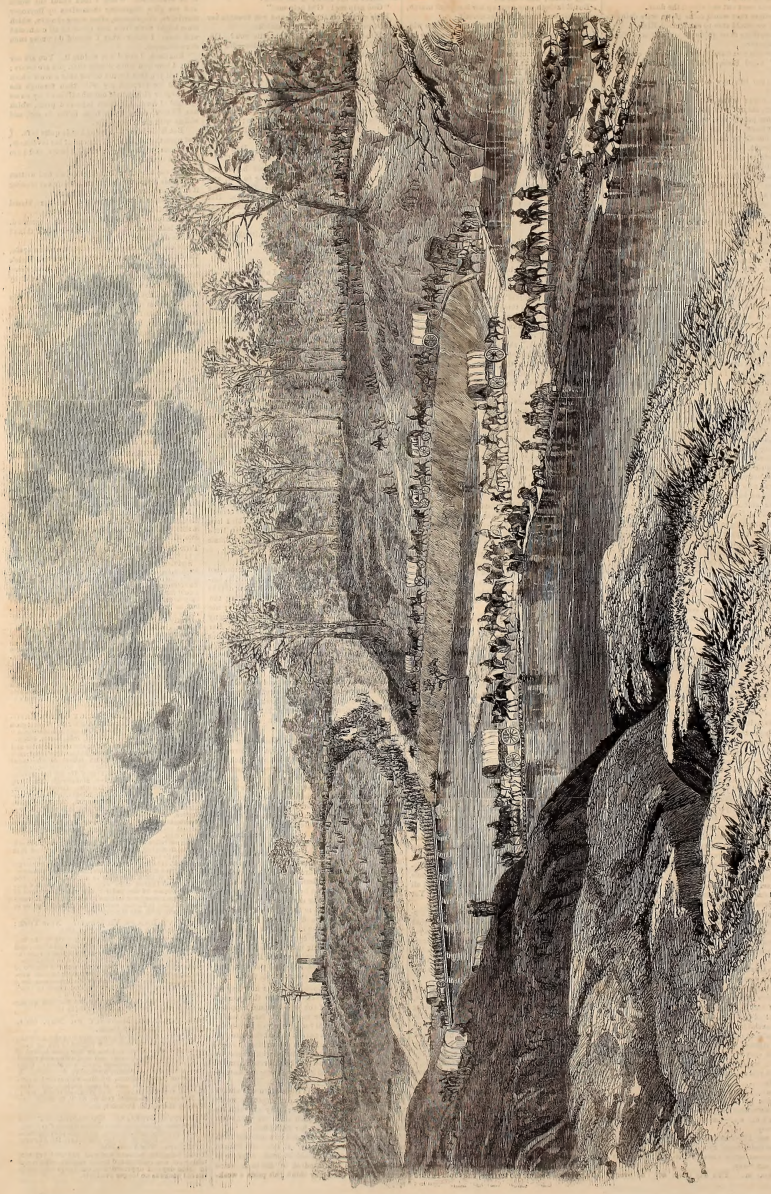
Mr. Headley's name stands among our most popular and graphic writers, has here brought together biographical sketches of the lives and labors of the most eminent chaplains and clergy of the Revolution: Jonas Clark, Samuel Cooper, Dudley Pope, Peters, Bennett, Muhlenberg, Allen, Rossbugh Benedict, Bishop White, Rodgers, Dwight, Witherspoon, Styles, Burlow, Caldwell, Trumbull, Kirkland, Gano, Cumming, Hazlett, Dr. Wilkinson, Gray, Brown, Smith, Champion, McWhorter, Allen, Pomeroy, Hunter, Hubbard, and others, forming a new, forever, Archbishop Carroll, whose services in his mission to Canada entitle him to a place in the list of patriotic clergymen.

The sketches are carefully prepared, not so much for the historical student as for the public, and it is needless to say they are of interest and value.

As Mr. Headley remarks, the influence of the clergy in the great struggle for liberty was immense, and yet in written histories is almost ignored. The French and Indian wars were stepping-stones to the subsequent appeals of the people; the patriot sermons of Whitefield and Davies prepared the people for revolution, and the influence exerted by that body prior to the general outbreak was notorious.

MY CAVE LIFE IN VICKSBURG. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1864, 12mo., 198p.

We have not met a more interesting book on the war than the sketches of a lady caught in Vicksburg, and there during the siege. Our readers cannot forget the letters in the shells of the bill, many little incidents to escape from shells. The writer was the inmate of caves, and records the daily life of the parents' subterranean abodes, their hardships, their miseries, their fears, their hopes, and occasionally a smile in every shape.



It is the work of a lady, and we purpose giving extracts, to enable our readers to enjoy it.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY for May, 1864. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

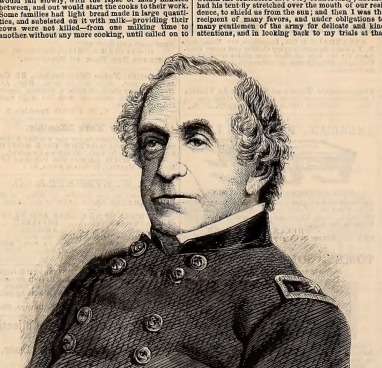
We may well be proud of a magazine like the Atlantic, which stands, as we may regard it, as the purest news of some of the articles, is the embodiment of the best, the most pure, purest and best-cultured talent in the country. The present number contains: Gold Foil, a Country Town, Poems by Robert Browning; A Cruise on Lake Ladoga, by Bayard Taylor; a continuation of Harriet Beecher Stowe; Wit and Humor, by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe; Wet Weather Work, by L. E. Mayer; the Reaper's Dream, by T. B. Read; the Rim, by Harriet E. Prescott, &c.

PHILLIPS'S STERLING EXCHANGE, for the Reduction of Sterling into United States Currency, and Currency into Sterling at Rates varying from 1 per cent. From 2½ to 100 per cent. By ALFRED PHILLIPS. New York, 1864.

These valuable, because accurate and well printed, tables we can recommend to our readers, who must in these days of unprecedented exchanges cast aside the old books as no longer available.

THE WAR IN LOUISIANA—BANKS'S ARMY, IN THE ADVANCE ON SHREVEPORT, CROSSING CANE RIVER, MARCH 31.—SKETCHED BY OUR ARTIST, C. E. H. BOUTELLE.

THE WAR IN THE SOUTH—NEGRO RECRUITS TAKING THE CARS FOR MURFREESBORO.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. HILLEN.



NEGRO RECRUITS.

THE sketch of negro recruits taking the cars to Murfreesboro' comes in sad contrast with the scenes at Fort Pillow. The negroes enter the service of the Government, under an implied promise of protection. But in spite of their voluntary enlistment, in spite of their heroism at Millikin's bend and Fort Wagner, they are butchered in cold blood, and scarcely a word of indignation or sympathy is expressed, and Government is as inert to retaliate as though it were of no importance.

BRIG.-GEN. J. G. TOTTEN, U. S. A.

BRIG.-GEN. JOSEPH GILBERT TOTTEN was at the head of the corps of Engineers, the most thorough branch of the service, to which only the most accomplished graduates of the military are assigned. He was a veteran and a man of high attainments. He was born in Connecticut, in 1788, and entered the Military Academy on the 6th November, 1802, receiving his first commission, that of 2d Lieutenant of Engineers, on the 1st July, 1805, nearly 60 years ago. He became 1st Lieutenant in 1810, Paymaster and Captain in 1812, was Chief Engineer in the campaign on the Niagara in 1813, won a brevet of Major for his gallantry at Fort George, and of Lieutenant-Colonel for his conduct at the battle of Plattsburg, in 1814, for he was here, too, Chief Engineer. He received a Major's commission in 1818, a Lieutenant-Colonel's in 1824. Ten years after he was made Colonel and Principal Engineer. During the Mexican war his services were called into requisition; he was Scott's Chief Engineer at Vera Cruz, where he won the brevet of Brigadier-General, and in the third war of the country stood at the head of his important department, having been commissioned a Brigadier-General, March 30, 1863. He died at Washington on Saturday, the 23d of April, 1864.

The War Department has ordered appropriate honors to be paid to his memory. During the 32 years that he was at the head of the Engineer Department he administered with untiring devotion, spotless integrity and signal ability the varied duties, the financial responsibilities and professional labors of that arm of the service. Our extended line of coast and lake defences are enduring monuments to his memory.

THE LATE BRIG.-GEN. JOSEPH G. TOTTEN, U. S. A.

THE CAVES AT VICKSBURG.

OUR readers will recollect the caves in which the inhabitants of Vicksburg took refuge during the siege, which we so graphically illustrated.

A Southern lady has just published a work entitled "My Cave Life at Vicksburg" (Appleton, New York), which gives a thrilling account of them and life in them. Speaking of the running of the batteries, she says:

"Some of the gentlemen urged the ladies to go down into the cave at the back of the house, and insisted on my going, if alone. While I hesitated, fearing to remain, yet wishing still to witness the termination of the engagement, a shell exploded near the side of the house. Fear instantly decided me, and I ran, guided by one of the ladies, who pointed down the steep slope of the hill, and I quickly ran back for a shawl. While I was considering the best way of descending the hill another shell exploded near the first, and causing to hesitate, I flew down, half sliding and running. Before I had reached the mouth of the cave two more exploded on the side of the hill near me. Breathless and terrified, I found the entrance and ran in, having left one of my slippers on the hillside.

"The dining, breakfasting and supper hours were quite irregular. When the shells were falling fast the servants came in for safety, and our meals waited for completion some little length of time; again they would fall slowly, with the lapse of many minutes between, and out would start the cooks to their work. Some families had light bread made in large quantities, and subsisted on it with milk—providing their cows were not killed—from one milking time to another without any more cooking, until called on to replenish. Though most of us lived on corn bread and bacon, served three times a day, the only luxury of the meal consisting in its warmth; I had some flour and frequently had some hard, tough biscuit made from it, there being no soda or yeast to be procured. At this time we could also procure beef. A gentleman friend was kind enough to offer me his camp bed, a narrow spring mattress, which fitted within the contracted cave very comfortably; another had his tent-fly stretched over the mouth of our residence, to shield us from the sun; and then I was the recipient of many favors, and under obligations to many gentlemen of the army for delicate and kind attentions, and in looking back to my trials at that time, I shall ever remember with gratitude the kindness with which they strove to ward off every deprivation. And so I went regularly to work, keeping house under ground. Our new habitation was an excavation made in the earth, and branching six feet from the entrance, forming a care in the shape of a T. In one of the wings my bed fitted; the other I used as a kind of dressing-room; in this the earth had been cut down a foot or two below the floor of the main cave; I could stand erect here, and when tired of sitting in other portions of my residence I lowered myself into it and stood impassively resting at full length—one of the variations in the still shell experiment life.

"Caves were the fashion, the rage, over besieged Vicksburg. Negroes, who understood their business, hired themselves out to dig them at from $30 to $50, according to the size. Many persons considering different localities unsafe, would sell them to others who had been less fortunate or less provident, and so great was the demand for cave workmen that a new branch of industry sprang up and became popular, particularly as the personal safety of the workmen was secured, and money withal."

Mrs. Fry on Umbrellas.

"AH!" said Mrs. Pry, "umbrellas have a good deal of character, after all. They express themselves very well; much better than their owners sometimes. I can tell, sitting at a window of a cloudy day, just where every passing umbrella comes from. People can deceive you by assuming false expression, but umbrellas can't.

"That thin, black, genteel, silk umbrella, coming up the street, can't be more than a month old. It's a young umbrella, bought in a dry season, and only used out for the first time. If it was older, or had been seen by many friends, it wouldn't look as it does now; it would have been borrowed and smashed.

"That blue thing, now, with a hole in the top and stray bones sticking out of it, is the umbrella a friend lent you. It has the look. I'd know it anywhere. You were caught there in the rain, and she said: 'It's a shame to spoil that sweet bonnet; I'll try to find an umbrella!' and you know of two black silks, a gingham and an alpaca, and hope for one. But no; the thing was the product of her researches. It is an umbrella kept to lend a friend. That is bad enough.

"But a neighbor's loan of an umbrella is always worse. Only two of the points are fastened to the whalebone; the top has been fastened on with a piece of old wire. The string, of course, is of; and when the rain comes shining on and you want to shut it down, it forms a bulgy bag, at which people stare and grin. And no wonder—it is full of holes! The handle is broken short in the middle; and I have had one that had a long, sharp nail in it to hold it by! That was lent me by my landlady, a Jewess.

"The umbrella that has been stolen might as well have pickpocket plastered upon it. It is always shabby-genteel. People watch their umbrellas well in the first gloss of newness, and stolen umbrellas are not cared for as they have been, because they cost their owners nothing but a prick of conscience, and conscience doesn't amount to much in 1864.

It generally has a white ivory handle—perhaps the handle is the temptation—and the present possessor is always very careful to put it in dark corners, or sit before it; lest, unawares, the owner should enter. Sometimes the stolen umbrella has a silver plate on the handle, from which the name has been carefully scraped with a penknife.

"Some people never lose their umbrellas, because they always carry them rain or shine, and choose each old ones that they could be sworn to anywhere after a passing glance. Your Quaker aunt, from Philadelphia, has a sad-colored one, shaped like the half of a cantelope, with a large white ring instead of a hook. She has had it twenty years, and is never seen without it. The umbrella is as much a Quaker se your respected aunt.

"Then there is an old bachelor umbrella—umbrellas which never could stand side by side with feminine umbrellas, with ornamental handles. Where bachelors find them we don't know; no man ever has one before he is fifty. These umbrellas are very tall. They are of olive-green silk, thick to richness; they have a ribbed border about them, and a large crook and a sharp metal ferule. The elastic confining them when in repose has a polished tag as large as a pea, and the owner's name is stamped in white on the black handle. It never leaves the old bachelor's hand. Some one tells it under the pillow when he retires to rest, and one of my acquaintances does hook his on the back of his chair at breakfast as a regular thing.

"It is only equalled by the traveling missionary's umbrella in tenacity of life; but that, poor thing, is a brown cotton, with a handle like a broomstick, a button instead of a ferule, and big white blotches where it has been darned on.

"Oh, don't tell me," continued Mrs. Pry, "I know the character of an umbrella wherever I meet it as well as Mr. Fowler knows a man's disposition by his tongue—and a great deal better."

GOURAUD'S
Italian Medicated Soap

It is well known—cures Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Eruptions, Prickly Heat, Sallowness, Salt Rheum, Chaps, Chafes and all cuticular deformities.

Gouraud's Poudre Subtile uproots hair from low foreheads or any part of the body, warranted $1.

Gouraud's Italy for fleshed red faces.

Gouraud's Liquid Vegetable Rouge.

Gouraud's Rose Dye and numerous toilet accessories, found at the old established Depot of

DR. FELIX GOURAUD,

453 Broadway.

Also of Bates, Boston; Upham, Chicago; Philadelphia; Keyser, Pittsburg, and druggists generally.

BROOKS'S PATENT WRITING
Work and Toilet Case Combined.

Completely furnished with Writing, Work and Toilet Articles,

FOR MILITARY, NAVAL & TRAVELLERS USE

Light, compact and elegant; easily carried in the coat pocket; rain or dampness does not affect it.

From Senator Wilson, Chairman Military Committee, U. S. Senate:

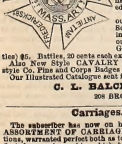
"It gives me pleasure to bear testimony to the ingenuity of its construction. I should be glad to see it in general use."

From Gov. Pierpont, of West Virginia:

"I consider it an excellent invention indeed. I do not see how an officer or soldier can have a complete outfit without it."

From Brig.-Gen. Hagner, of Army of Potomac:

"It is the most convenient and portable article for use in the field which I have ever seen."



Price $2. Send stamp for our illustrated Circular Liberal terms to dealers.

D. B. BROOKS & BROTHER, Salem, Mass.

Excelsior Music Book, No. 4, for Violin, Piano or Cornet, 32 pages mailed. Contains latest popular songs, such as "Fenet March," "Finigan's Ball," "Wind Up Polka," "Lilac Days of Prospect," "Jone Gallop," "No Irish Need Apply." "Soono, I think of You." "Limerick Races," etc. Musical Instruments of every description. Price list sent on receipt of stamp.

FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery, N. Y.

Artillery Badges.

Annexed is a fac simile design of our Newest Style ARTILLERY BADGES Sent free to any address on receipt of price, with Name, Co. and Regiment handsomely Engraved thereon.

Solid Silver (without button) $1. 80.

Solid Silver, letters in Gold Relief (without button) $2. 50.

Gold (without button) $5. Rifles, 20 cents each extra.

Also New Style CAVALRY BADGE, and every style Co. Fins and Corps Badges worn by the Army. Our Illustrated Catalogue sent free. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO.,

208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Carriages.

The subscriber has now on hand a SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF CARRIAGES of all descriptions, warranted perfect both as to style, material and first-class workmanship, which he offers on reasonable terms. C. WITTY, 566 Broadway and 60 Crosby Street, N. Y. 444 8

DISTILLED DEW

For Beautifying and Improving the Skin and Complexion. Sold by Druggists generally.

Conjuring:—Containing full directions for performing 150 of the most Wonderful and Astounding Feats of Horse Power, Magic, Sleight-of-Hand, Ventriloquism and Legerdemain. 72 Pages; profusely Illustrated. Price 30 cents. Sent free by mail.

Address M. M. SANBORN, Stanhope, N. J.

$75 A MONTH.—Agents wanted to sell Sewing Machines.—We will give a commission on all Machines sold, or employ Agents who will work for the above wages and all expenses paid. Address

D. B. HERRINTON & CO., Detroit, Mich. 448-05

FURNITURE,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),
No. 87 Bowery, New York.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.

TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each.

Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

MADAME BENEDICT'S
Millinery & Dressmaking Establishment,
Is now replete with
Every Imported Novelty of the Season.
181 Waverley Place, New York. 000

5,000 AGENTS WANTED
TO INTRODUCE OUR
NEW GOLD PEN.

This Gold Pen is something entirely new and is now offered to the public for the first time, and it is made by an entirely new process, enabling us to offer them very cheap. Every Pen is WARRANTED one year, and to be genuine Diamond pointed, and to possess all the elasticity and writing qualities of the highest priced gold pen made. Single Pens sent by mail on receipt of the following prices:

With Silver Mounted Holders and Morocco Case.

No. 2 Medium Pen and Holder..... 90
No. 3 Large Pen and Holder..... 1 00
No. 4 Engraving Pen and Holder..... 1 50

Great inducements to Agents and the Trade. Send for our Circular.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Sole Manufacturers, 181 Broadway, N. Y.

Fountain Pen.—No Inkstand Required. One filling will write 12 hours. Also, all other styles of Gold Pens. Send stamp for Circular.

G. P. HAWKES, Manufacturer,
66 Nassau street, N. Y.

$75 A MONTH!—I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
459-52 S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

The Great Money-Making Article.
Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 36 cents. Address
000 E. H. MARVIN Hinsdale, N. H.

New Army Watches.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers, 212 Broadway, N. Y., want Agents in every County and every Regiment, for the sale of their new style of Watches. Unusually liberal terms are offered to Agents. Send for Circular.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different Subjects. Send for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELAFO, 82 Nassau St., N. Y.

AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1863. The best and only Billiard Table manufactured. Balls, Cues, and every article relating to Billiards, for sale by

PHELAN & COLLENDER,
634-7 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN
6 Maiden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fire Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fishing Tackle," Pistols, Knives, Razors, Meerschaum Pipes, etc., etc.

Military and Navy Equipments in every variety.

A large assortment of

RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS.

Constantly on hand. 34-7o

Legal Tender, Stationery, Music and Jewelry Casket.—New Series.

We now offer new inducements to all who sell STATIONERY PACKAGES. Send for our free Circular.

WEIR & CO., 305 Chestnut St., Phila.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office
FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.
Merchants, Bankers, Teachers Amateurs, etc., etc.,
And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular
J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds, purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. For it known, then, that while all the diff-erent stimulants in the Liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing acid of fusel oil, a morbid poison. HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, anti-bilious and aperient herbs and plants; and that a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands be-yond the world's power of a rival or competitor. The sales to day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Bitters advertised in the United States, and we certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, Pittsburg, Pa.
Depot for the City, 58 Park Row, N. Y.

Beautiful False Moustaches, 55 Cents and $1 a pair. Sent free by mail. Wigs, Ladies' Head-Dresses, Curls, Whiskers, Goatee, Imperials and every article in the Hair line. Send for a Circular.

C. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

New York Monthly.

An elegant premium to any one sending $1 for one year's subscription to the NEW YORK MONTHLY. 3 cents per copy by mail. 23 cents a Sung-bird.

MANLY & WOLD, Editors and Publishers of the New York Monthly, 83 Nassau street, N. Y.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FOR THE LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY; STATESMEN,
DIVINES,
ACTORS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.

20 cents each, $1 per dozen. Price list mailed. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1614 New York city. Send for circular.

$10 A DAY—GOLD! GOLD! THE GREAT Money-Making article. Everybody needs it. Agents can make $10 a day—male or female. Instructions how to make the article sent by mail for 25 cents. Address

J. C. FEETER, Bremen, Ohio.

The Most Attractive Collection of Pianoforte Songs, Ballads, Duets, QUARTETS, etc.,
The Silver Chord.

An elegant volume of 200 pages. Price, plain binding, $2; cloth, gilt, $2. 50; full gilt, $3. Mailed, post-paid. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Samples and Catalogue sent for 15 cents. Excites an envelope with your own name and address.
469-51 D. HEMMETTE, 501 Liberty street, N. Y.

Whiskers! Whiskers!

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Warranted in every case. Price 25 cents, or six packages for $1, by mail. Address Dr. FRANKLIN, Calhoun, Ill.

French False Moustaches.

The best in market. Cannot be detected when worn. Price one dollar each. Sent free by mail. Address D. C. SPARROW, New York P. O.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!
100,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.
WORTH $500,000,

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; which the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, of which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

Six Certificates can be ordered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $15.

Address F. DEFFAUT & CO.,
286 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of AMERICAN PEOPLE,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes our Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Fail not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician and Consulting Surgeon of the New York Throat and Lungs, No. 56 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 449-61

GREAT TRIUMPH.

STEINWAY & SONS, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker Street, N. Y., were awarded a FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were one hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.

The London Journal Committee of the New York Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker." 000c

Lieut.-Gen. U. S. Grant Package.

Copyright secured. AGENTS Send Orders and for Circulars Early, to

J. L. G. PIERPONT, 37 and 39 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence and respect of any one they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, secured to them by this book, by mail, for 25 cts., or two for 40 cts., together with a guide to dreams, and fortune telling, by cards, or an entertaining book, of great interest. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. H. ALLEN, M. D., 300 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address 12 White Street, New York.

50 FIRST PREMIUMS in 1863

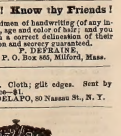
GROVER & BAKER'S
CELEBRATED ELASTIC STITCH

Sewing Machines

Were awarded the Highest Premiums over all competitors at the State Fairs of New York, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Oregon, and at every respectable Institute and County Fair held in 1863.

Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, N. Y.

Know Thyself! Know thy Friends!



Enclose $1 and specimen of handwriting (of any individual), stating sex, age and color of hair; and you will receive in return a correct delineation of their character. Satisfaction and secrecy guaranteed.

Address P. DEFFAUT & CO.,
448-9 P. O. Box 865, Milford, Mass.

A New Book.

Physiology of Love. Cloth; gilt edges. Sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.

000 VICTOR DELAFO, 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

Royal Havana Lottery.

$5 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Pencils, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. On receipt of a Certificate, which will inform you what you are to have for $1, and at the same time enclosing our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

VETERAN

D.C. HENRY. C.P.C. 23 '59 P.A.V.

VETERAN Soldiers!

We are now prepared to furnish all Kinds of Veteran Pins for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field at $1 50 each; also, all the various Army Badges worn by the different armies, by the single one, 100 or 1,000. Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE, Manufacturing Jewellers,
208 Broadway, N.Y.
Solid 18 K. Gold, $6 50. Solid Silver, $1 50.

Stereoscopic Views. Cartes de Visites—New Goods. Book Catalogue. C. B. HARRISON, P. O. Box 2,111, Boston, Mass. 445-52

E. W. BENICKEY.
At his well-known
PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY,
No. 2 New Chambers Street,

Has now increased facilities to take Cartes de Visite as well as other Photographs, in the best style. Notwithstanding the increase in price of different materials, the charges are the same and i. e quality the best.

Card Pictures $1 50 per doz.—8 for $1.
Card Vignettes $3 per doz.
Large Size Photographs, 2 for $1.
All other Photographs up to life size colored in oil or water at the most reasonable prices.

☞ Particular attention given to Copying Cards of Ambrotypes into Large Photographs. The smallest or most defaced picture can be, by the aid of his superior and experienced artiste, copied into a handsome photograph. Every attention paid to visitors wishing to examine the specimens.

Swords, Sashes, Belts.
Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords. 481-96 B. KITTRIDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Broker's Stock of unredeemed goods for sale at $1 for each article, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable goods worth from 75 cents to $500 each. Circulars giving full particulars sent to any address. Any person sending 50 cents will receive, free of charge, a sample article, and will receive, giving a description of the same, with the price at which we sell. Any article ordered, if it does not prove as described, we will return the money. For further particulars address H. B. ANDREWS & CO., 108 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass. 448-9

"Diphtheria."
A certain preventive, and sure, safe and simple remedy for this terrible and dangerous disease, may be had by addressing (enclosing stamp for reply)
DR. OTIS C. LUDLUM, 12 Astor Place, N. Y.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New! Burglar-Proof Traveller's Look. Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, Magic Razor Strop, and 30 more Novel and Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.
S. W. RICH & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

If you want to Know
A little of everything relating to the human system, diet, air, marriage, etc., etc., read revised and enlarged edition of

Medical Common Sense.

Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Fever and Ague, Philosophy of Digestion, Constipation, Nervous Self-Abuse, Loss of Manhood, Paralysis, Diseases of the Heart, Neuralgia, How to Recover the Sight and throw away Spectacles, Philosophy of Marriage Questions of Health, Philosophy of Elopements, Philosophy of Childmarking, a Chapter for Females, Hair, and a Treatise on the Nature and Duties of the married and single never written before, making a handsome, curious and interesting volume of 300 pages, and a good book for every one. 400 pages; 150 illustrations. Bound in cloth tables sent free by mail to all applicants. Price $1, or book forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1. Address
Address E. S. FOOTE, 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Funny. The most desirable Cards ever published. Including the French Dancing Girl; Venus Sporting with Love; Bathing; Romancing; Charleston Belle Making the 200; etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 15 choice cards.
G. W. T. MILNSON, Publisher,
21 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

The "Star" No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps and Lanterns, gives a brilliant light, free from smoke or smell, and needs NO chimney. We are now prepared to supply the increasing demand for this superior Burner, which every where gives satisfaction. Sample sent, postpaid, for 38 cents.

Agents wanted. Send for Circular.
P. SELIG & CO., Manufacturers,
2 Platt Street, N. Y.

CHICKERING & SONS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Grand, Square and Upright Pianofortes.

THALBERG'S CERTIFICATE

"Since my arrival in America I have constantly used the Pianos of Messrs. Chickering & Sons, and I can only repeat that which I have so often said before: The instruments are the best I have seen in the United States, and will compare favorably with any I have ever known. S. THALBERG."

Warerooms, 652 Broadway, N. Y., 246 Washington Street, Boston

Remington's
Army and Navy
REVOLVER!
Approved by the Government.
Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Revolving Rifles for the Trade generally.
438-50 E. REMINGTON & SONS, Ilion, N. Y.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
PIERRE BIBON 35 Ann St., N. Y.
000

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, Illustrated. Containing the Experience of Finis Fairy showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and speedily marry the one they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 25 cents and two red stamps. Address
E. D. LUCKE & CO., Box 1525, Portland, Me.
449-52

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative—
Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.
HOYT'S MINNEHAHA HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled in dressing the hair.
HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM
dyes and colors the hair at the same time; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.
HOYT'S EXCELSIOR BOTTLE POWDER
imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and prevents vexatious chapping of the hands.
Sold everywhere.
N.B.—Ladies' French Hairdresser in attendance to apply the Hiawatha.
JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning—and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc., supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a stamped addressed envelope, Single Copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings county, N. Y. 000

WEDDING CARDS.
Ornamental French Note Papers, Seals and Stamps. Wedding Envelopes, with Cards, Seals and Stamps. Fine Note Paper, Envelopes, &c. For Specimens by mail, send 32 cents.
000

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant.—Each pot is warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Ongouent and finding it not as represented can return the pot of the Ongouent to their agent and have it returned to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money.
Address A. CLARK, P. O. Drawer 118,
445-57 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address in the world.
R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

Baker's Rheumatic Balm,

BAKER'S FEVER COOLER.
BAKER'S COUGH MIXTURE
are four remedies which no family should be ever without. Sold by druggists.
BAKER'S LIVER AND GRAVEL REMEDIES, which are invaluable.
Principal Depot—No. 164 TENTH STREET, next Fourth avenue. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price. 439-51

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enameler. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 41 South Seventh Street and 41 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

WATCHES.

A handsome Heavy Hunting Cased Silver Composite Watch, Fine Movements, handsome white Dial and steel polished hand; elegant finish in every respect, and in perfect running order. These Watches are composed of two metals, the outer one being the finest quality of silver, and will bear engraving of every description, and has the appearance of Sterling Silver in every respect. Sold only by the case, at $75. Sample Watches sent free on receipt of $14 each.

$14 $14

The great English Army Watch, in Heavy Gold Composite Hunting Cases, the name of the British Army Watch. These Cases are beautifully finished, and the movements first-class and partially jewelled, and warranted good timekeepers. These cases will wear a great length, being genuine Oride. Sold only by the case, at $75. Sample Watch sent free on receipt of $15.

$15 $15

The Great New Army Watch. Full Jewelled, 18 rubies, in heavy and beautifully finished Solid Silver Hunting Cases. Genuine Lever movements, Ruby Jewelled, Engraved, Engine-turned, or plain cases; warranted as represented, and a perfect timekeeper, only $18.

$18 $18

A Lady's new Heavy English Court Watch, in very small, Gold Hunting Cases. Magic Spring and sunk seconds, and a perfect timekeeper, only $16.

$16 $16

Officers' Watch—Extra Heavy American Lever Watch, in Double Bottom, Dust Proof Hunting Case, full jewelled. — Trademark Wm. Ellery. $25.

$35 $35

A very handsome Double Time Duplex Stop Watch, New York and London Dials, sweep seconds, Jewelled in every action, Gold Hunting Cases, Heavy Stering Silver Hunting Cases.

$35 $35

The Movements are Beautifully Engraved and have the patent adjusted stop, only $35.

WARRANTED.

All our Watches are sent out in perfect running order, and are warranted as represented or the money refunded. A written warrantee given if Required.

We offer great inducements to Agents. Send for our Circular. Constantly on hand Watches of every description.

Postage on Watches, by the case, $2 00. Regarding 50 cents. Sample Watches sent free.

GEO. A. ELY & CO.,
IMPORTERS,
181 (late 208) Broadway, N. Y.

U. S. 10-40 BONDS.

These Bonds are issued under the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1864, which provides that in lieu of so much of the loan authorized by the Act of March 3d, 1863, to which this is supplementary, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow from time to time, on the credit of the United States, not exceeding

Two Hundred Million Dollars

during the current fiscal year, and to prepare and issue therefor Coupons and Registered Bonds of the United States; and Bonds issued under this Act shall be

Exempt from Taxation

by or under any State or municipal authority. Subscriptions to these Bonds are received in United States notes or notes of National Banks. They are

To be Redeemed in Coin,

at the pleasure of the Government, at any period not less than ten nor more than forty years from their date, and until their redemption

Five per Cent. Interest will be paid in Coin, on Bonds of not over one hundred dollars annually, and on all other Bonds semi-annually.

The interest is payable on the first days of March and September in each year, The semi-annual Coupons are payable at those dates, and the annual Coupons on the three and 100 dollar Bonds are payable on the first of March.

Subscribers will receive either Registered or Coupon Bonds, as they may prefer. Registered Bonds are recorded on the books of the U. S. Treasurer, and can be transferred only on the owner's order. Coupon Bonds are payable to bearer, and are more convenient for commercial uses.

Registered Bonds will be issued of the denominations of Fifty Dollars ($50), One Hundred Dollars ($100), Five Hundred Dollars ($500), One Thousand Dollars ($1,000), Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000), and Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000); and Coupon Bonds of the denominations of Fifty Dollars ($50), One Hundred Dollars ($100), Five Hundred Dollars ($500), and One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.)

Subscribers to this loan will have the option of having their Bonds draw interest from March 1st, by paying the accrued interest in coin—(or in United States notes, or the notes of National Banks, adding the premium on gold)—and receive from them the interest from the date of subscription and deposit.

As these Bonds are exempt from municipal or State taxation, they are worth, compared (as we have given per cent. per annum, according to the rate of tax levies in various parts of the country.

At the present rate of premium on gold they pay over eight per cent. interest in currency, and are of equal convenience as a permanent or temporary investment.

It is believed that no securities offer so great inducements to lenders as the various descriptions of U. S. Bonds. In all other forms of indebtedness, the faith or ability of private parties or stock companies or separate communities only is pledged for payment, while for the debts of the United States the whole property of the country is holden to secure the payment of both principal and interest in coin.

These Bonds may be subscribed for in sums of $50 up to any magnitude, on the same terms, and are thus made equally available to the smallest lender and the largest capitalist. They can be converted into money at any moment, and the holder will have the benefit of the interest.

The fact that all duties on imports are payable in specie furnishes a fund for like payment of interest on all Government Bonds largely in excess of the wants of the Treasury for this purpose.

Upon the receipt of subscriptions a certificate of deposit therefor, in duplicate, will be issued, one original of which will be forwarded by the receiver to the Secretary of the Treasury, at Washington, with a letter stating the amount (registered or coupon) and the denominations of bonds required.

Upon the receipt of the original certificates at the Treasury Department, the bonds subscribed for will be transmitted to the subscribers respectively.

Subscriptions will be received by the Treasurer of the United States at Washington, and the Assistant Treasurer at New York, Boston and Philadelphia, and by the

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF New York, No. 4 Wall St.
SECOND " " " " 234 St. & 3d Ave.
FOURTH " " " " The Street.
SIXTH " " " " 6th Av. & 8th St.
TENTH " " " " 53d St. & 3d Ave.
NATIONAL EXCHANGE BANK 184 Greenwich St.
First National Bank of Portland, Me.
Second National Bank of Boston, Mass.
First National Bank of Providence, R. I.
First National Bank of Hartford, Conn.
First National Bank of Albany, N. Y.
First National Bank of Buffalo, N. Y.
First National Bank of Philadelphia, Pa.
First National Bank of Baltimore, Md.
First National Bank of Washington, D. C.
First National Bank of Cincinnati, O.
First National Bank of Chicago, Ill.
First National Bank of Milwaukie, Wis.
First National Bank of St. Louis, Mo.
First National Bank of New Orleans, La.

And by all National Banks which are depositaries public money. All respectable banks and bankers throughout the country will furnish further information on application, and afford every facility to subscribers.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

Have now been before the public for nearly a year. They are universally pronounced the neatest and best collar ever worn.

The upper edge presents a perfect curve, free from the angles noticeable in other collars.

The cravat cannot be puckere on the inside of the turn-down collar—they are AS SMOOTH INSIDE AS OUTSIDE—and therefore perfectly free and easy on the neck.

The Garotte collar has a smooth and evenly finished edge all round.

These Collars are not simply flat pieces of paper cut in the form of a collar, but are MOLDED AND SHAPED TO FIT THE NECK.

They are made in "Norway" (or turn-down style), in every half size from 12 to 17 inches, and in "Eureka" (or Garotte), from 13 to 17 inches; and packed in solid sizes in neat blue cartons, containing a half dozen of one size each—the latter a very handy package for Travellers, Army and Navy Officers.

☞ EVERY COLLAR is stamped

"Gray's Patent Molded Collar."

Sold by all dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The Trade supplied by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
81 Devonshire St. Boston.

J. B. Lowrey & Co., 37 Warren St., New York; Van Deusen, Boehmer & Co., 527 Chesnut St., Philadelphia; Rodgers Bros., 33 Hanover St., Baltimore, Md.; Wall, Stephens & Co., 322 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; Leavitt & Bevis, cor. Fifth and Vine Sts., Cincinnati; J. Van Winkle & Co., 434 Main Street, Louisville, Ky.; A. Trautschold & Bro., 6 North Main Street, St. Louis, Mo.; Bradford Bros., Milwaukie, Wis.; Wood, Winters & Co., 7 to 13 Tehoupitoulas Street, New Orleans. 444-52

Do you want a good Magazine?
If so, subscribe to the

Atlantic Monthly

which is praised by literary journals in America and Europe as the best American Magazine ever published. It is thoroughly national in tone, and its literary character is the highest possible. The best American writers contribute regularly.

Terms $3 a year, postage paid by the publishers. Liberal reduction to clubs. A specimen copy sent on receipt of 25 cents. Address

TICKNOR & FIELDS,
135 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Is it possible that any Soldier

Can be so foolish as to leave the city without a supply of HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS? Whoever does so will deeply regret it. These medicines are the only certain cure for Bowel Complaints, Fevers, Sores and Scurvy. 36 casts, 88 cents, and $1 90 per box or pot.

$50 AMERICAN $50 LEVERS.

Trade Mark, P. S. Bartlett, Waltham, Mass., Full Jewelled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $50.

Also, every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in six drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs etc., etc.
E. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining instruction with Amusement, is mailed, post paid, for $2 25, or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by

CRAIG & CRAIG,
335 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, postpaid, the Bridle-rein, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all eyes, for $1; with 12 assorted views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

American, Swiss and English Watches

in sup- for styles and quality of cases. Orders from the Trade or Army (large or small) promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 26 years, 000 Y. R. BYNNER, 175 Broadway, N. Y.

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to C. H. WELLING, 96 Pine St., N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in the Army or with Sores—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Great Chance to Make Money!

Agents can make $10 to $20 a day selling our celebrated FREE STATIONERY PACKETS. We have every variety. Call the dates of all; retail for 25 cents each. A Splendid GOLD OR SILVER WATCH presented free to each Agent. $1 deposit only required to obtain 100 Packages and a fine Silver Watch. Also, SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Send for Circulars. Mailed free.

C. S. HASKINS & CO.,
Prize Package and Engraving Warehouse,
No. 5 and 30 Beekman street, N. Y.

Agents Wanted

To sell our new picture of GEN. GRANT. $5 per day can be made. Send for letter of Agency.
JONES & CLARK, 83 Nassau St. N. Y.

Use of Tobacco, to all its forms, CURED and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address $40 510 JAY & SON, New Haven, Conn.

Buchley's Melodist.

A collection of about 100 of the most popular Songs of the day, Words and Music, bound in cloth. Among the contents are: When Johnny comes marching Home." "Break it gently to my Mother." "Send me a Letter from Home." "Rock me to sleep, Mother." "Her bright Smile haunts me still." "How can I leave thee?" "Long weary Day." "Mother is the battle over?" "Look me to sleep, Mother." "Brave Willie." "Black Brigade." "The Cave." "Tenting To-night." "Go away, Black Man." "Glory Hallelujah." "Invalid Corps." "Jeff. Davis's Friends." "Murder accomplished." "Sally, come up." "That will you do, Love?" etc. Copies mailed, postpaid, on receipt of 25 cents.

HENRY TOLMAN & CO., Publishers, 291 Washington Street, Boston. For sale by the AMERICAN NEWS COMPANY, New York.

See advertisement on page 116 Send stamp for Illustrated Circular.
D. S. BROOKS & CO., Salem, Mass.

STAMMERING

And Stuttering permanently cured by Bates's Patent Price Scientific Appliances. For (New Edition 60) Pamphlets and Drawings describing the same, address
H. C. L. BEARS, 277 West 23d St., N. Y.

THE UNPROTECTED OLD FEMALE IN A DILEMMA.

MRS. VIC—" Oh, goodness gracious me, was there ever a poor old lady in such a quandary! I really don't know which stage to get into. Oh, dear!"

GOLD WATCH FREE!
AND
$15 Per Day Easy $15

Made by acting as our Agent for the sale of the GREAT ORIGINAL and only Genuine RICHARDS'S COMBINATION PRIZE PACKAGES. Each of those Wonderful, Large and Useful Packages contains Large quantities of Fine Writing Paper, Envelopes, Steel Pens, Pen Holders, Lead Pencils, Blotters, Pen Engravings, Ladies New Fashion Plates, Designs for Needle Work, Beautiful Emblems, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Compositions, Parlor, Toilet, Kitchen and Garden Guide, Evening Amusements, Letter Writers Instructors, Rare Old Recipes, Many Ways to Get Rich, Miniature Calendars for 1864, Tender Notions, Likenesses of Military Heroes, Camp Companions, with Pay, Bounties, Rations, Allowances, Pensions, &c., Games, Rich Presents of Fine Jewellery, &c., the whole worth, if Bought Separate, Many Dollars, Price, Each Package, only 25 cts. Wholesale Rates to Agents very Low, from 100 to 5000 per cent. profit made. One hundred packages, with presents of Jewelry and gift of a superb Watch, silver bills and sole right for a town or county sent anywhere on receipt of $15. SMART AGENTS sell 100 Packages in a FEW HOURS.

We present each person who acts as Agent for us with a Beautiful GOLD OR SILVER HUNTING CASE LEVER WATCH, Genuine English Movements. Full Jewelled, Warranted one year.

Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium inducements FREE.

S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 29 Beekman St., N. Y., Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

Shults' Oxguent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

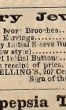
Veneration.

Its location, function and cultivation. By Rev. H. W. Beecher. Reverence for Age, for Persons and Positions, Reverence of Development—Why Deficient in America—Weakness not Wickedness—Politeness—Different Forms of Worship—Remedy for Irreverence, and how to Cultivate it in Children and Adults.

"REREVERD IN CHURCH"—Its Causes and Cure—Sunday Dinners—Ventilating Churches—Duty of the Congregation, Pastor, Trustees, &c., &c., &c., in THE ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for May, 15 cents, or 75 a Year.
$40-350 FOWLER & WELLS, Broadway, N. Y.

The Bowen Microscope,

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 35 cents. Four of different powers for $1.
Address F. B. BOWEN, Box 220,
000 Boston, Mass.



Ivory Jewelry!

Fine Ivory Brooches.....$1 50
Full Ivory Sets.....$4 50
Ivory Initial Slave Buttons,
(new style).....75
Pearl Initial Buttons.....$1 00
Sent free, on receipt of price. A full variety on hand, at WELLING'S, 907 Centre St., N. Y.
Sign of the Golden Elephant.

Dyspepsia Tablets.

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by C. W. LYON, 414 Grand St., and for sale by Druggists generally. 50 cents per box; sent free on the receipt of 63 cents. Depot, 307 Canal Street, second floor. 0000

INFANTRY PIN FOR THE SOLDIER

IN COIN SILVER, for $1 50, including the Engraving of the Name, Co. and Regiment. 0000
THE NATIONAL BATTLE PIN, CAVALRY AND ARTILLERY PIN, MONITOR, ENGINEER AND SIGNAL CORPS PINS,
LOUIS PHILIP & CO., 2 Murray St., N. Y.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE ARMY!

Hereafter we will send, postpaid, any of our PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS ordered by soldiers for themselves or friends, giving an Album of the full value of the money sent.

Our Albums have the reputation of being superior to all others in beauty and durability, and range in price from 50 cents to $50. Our Catalogue of

Card Photographs

now embraces about 5,000 Officers' Army and Navy, Statesmen, Actors, copies of Works of Art, &c. Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.

Our assortment of them is very extensive, including a great variety of views of the present war. Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway, New York.
448-510 Manufacturers of Photographic Materials.

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or other fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

USE
STERLING'S AMBROSIA
IT WILL MAKE YOUR HAIR
GROW THICK AND LONG.

Who Shall it Be?

Agents wanted everywhere. Take your choice and send us $1, and we will send you a New Battle Pin with the likeness of either General in the army.

Also, for $1, we will send you a Solid Silver Shield (pure coin) or other Army Corps. Division or Co. Pin, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely engraved thereon. And for $1 00 we will send you a new Cavalry, Artillery, or Battery, or Engineer, or Pontooner's Pin, engraved as above.

Also, Headquarters for Watches, Lockets, Chains, Gold Pens and Pencils, Rings, Pins, etc., etc.

Send for wholesale illustrated Circular.

S. M. WARD & CO.,
MANUFACTURING JEWELLERS,
208 Broadway, New York.

The Human Hand.

Its Physiognomy, Anatomy and Physiology, with all its signs of Character and how to read them. Hands Large, Small, Thick, Slender, Right and Left. Significance of Shaking Hands. Is the hand warm and oozy, or cold and clammy? Is it magnetic and electrical, or is it inert and lifeless? Hands of distinguished persons. The "ring finger." What we can do with the hand.

PHRENOLOGY—Skulls of the Races. Egyptian Mummies. Assyrian, Hindoo, Arabs. A Jewish Mummy. Fellahs, Phœnicians, Sioux Indians, etc. Portrait and Character of Mr. E. Morrison, Gen. Butler and Hon. Owen Lovejoy, in MAY No. ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. 15 cents, or $1 00 a Year.
448-500 FOWLER & WELLS, Broadway, N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Cut, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands. "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, sent free, by mail, in neat case, only $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, single one, by mail, $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper $15

ON COMPASS WATCH.

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD PLATED" engraved or engine-turned hunting Case Watch—Made by Sprung—Genuine English Jewelled or Nickel Movements—M. J. TOBIAS,—Superintended three years by Mr. Tobias—the NEW MINIATURE COMPASS sunk in the cap and attached to the movements—making it a correct Guide for the Soldier or Traveller—a perfect Timekeeper—" Warranted one year," will send safe, sealed in Perfect Imitation of a $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $16.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper," "It is a novelty here, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British Army officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Illustrated News says, "Correct timepieces, and for beauty and fine finish they are equal to anything in the gold watches."

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,
No. 37 Broadway, Up a Few Street, N. Y.

Marked Characters.

See Portraits, with descriptions, of Gen. B. F. Butler and Hon Owen Lovejoy—with interesting articles on Broad Hemmed Hankerchiefs—Wayside Reflections on "Our Social Relations"—Love Affairs, Ought Parents to Interfere? A Word to Love Folks, and How to become Stout—Light, its Necessity—Pyrchology—The Soul Immortal—A Real Visit—Description of Clairvoyance—Riches, etc., in MAY No. ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. 15 cents. Address
$40-350 FOWLER & WELLS, Broadway, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

READY-MADE OR TO MEASURE, at $18, $12, $10 per doz.

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50—all cut one yard long. A single Shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 38 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in King and for the last one years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travelers they are invaluable. Price 75 cents each; postage prepaid to any part of the Union on the receipt of 90 cents.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newbern, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Ballots Charged low rates.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED

NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 450—VOL. XVIII.] NEW YORK, MAY 14, 1864. [TERMS: $5.00 YEARLY, 14 WEEKS $1.00.

The War in Virginia—The Prospect a Short and Decisive Campaign.

We are on the verge of the most momentous struggle of the war. Before this article shall have passed into the hands of our readers the chosen battle-ground of old Virginia, if not precipitately evacuated by the enemy, may be baptised anew in a deluge of blood, and her ancient hills may be shaken as by the throes of an earthquake. We believe that from the smoke of the conflict the flag of the Union will be advanced to the high places of the rebel capital; that the armies which Gen. Grant has summoned around him cannot be successfully resisted; that his plans and combinations are adapted to meet all possible emergencies; that he has the enemy within his powerful grasp; that the campaign will be "short, sharp and decisive," and that the fatal hour to the rebellion is near at hand.

We have not forgotten our disappointments resulting from each of the Virginia campaigns of 1861, '62 and '63. But all those reverses may be traced to that one grand mistake of scattering instead of concentrating our forces, and if the dearly purchased victories of our Potomac Army have been without substantial fruits, it has been in consequence of wasting delays in following up the enemy. This was the Austrian system of warfare against the little Corsican. The opposite or Napoleonic system of concentration and activity, which has reclaimed an Empire in the

SUGARHOUSE OF EX-GOVERNOR MOUTON, AT VERMILION, LA.—FROM A SKETCH BY LIEUT. S. S. DAVID.—SEE PAGE 116.

1. Major C. Von Hermann. 2. First Lieut. Charles E. Sargent. 3. Col. James Grant Wilson. 4. Col. Horace B Sargent. 5. Lieut.-Col. William S. Abert. 6. Col. E. G. Beckwith. 7. Brig. Gen. Charles P. Stone. 8. Col. John S. Clark. 9. Major-Gen. N. P. Banks. 10. Col. S. B. Holabird. 11. Brig.-Gen. Richard Arnold. 12 Captain J. S. Crosby. 13 Brig.-Gen. A. S. Lee. 14. Capt. Wm. B. Hoe. 15. Lieut-Col. George W. Sapp. 16. Major G. Norman Lieber. 17. Major R. H. Alexander. 18. Captain Charles L. Bulkley.

MAJOR-GENERAL BANKS AND STAFF.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY E. JACOBS, NEW ORLEANS.—SEE PAGE 119.

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS—Three men and one woman, each over eight feet high; two Dwarfs, each less than two feet high—besides a host of other Novelties. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album.

The gift of a copy of this Album to newspapers advertising it is withdrawn for the present, in consequence of the great demand for the unique and popular collection of Photographs. Costs only $3. Sent free by mail, on receipt of price.

N. B.—To prevent counterfeiting, each package is guaranteed by the proprietor's own autograph in four different languages, viz: Turkish, Armenian, Greek and English. C. OSCANYAN, New York.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, MAY 14, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 538 Pearl street, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE P. BEMIS & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 190 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 50
Two copies " to one address	6 00
Four "	12 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00
Paper, 16 weeks	1 00

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

One Dollar a line on the outside or last page. Sixty Cents a line on the 16th and 15th pages.

NOTICE.

THE Office of this Paper is removed to No. 537 Pearl Street, a few doors from Broadway.

To Correspondents.

DECLINED.—Patrick Henry—Decline—Old Age—Some thing New—Serenade—Drover's Leap—Any Haste wood—The Fisherman.

Poetry, sketches of character, poems, and sketches for comic illustration are thankfully received. They will be carefully and promptly considered and returned. Care should be taken to write legibly, and give the address especially with all distinctness.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

A cavalry skirmish occurred recently near Strasburg, Va., between 100 of the 1st New York and 300 rebels.

The Union troops recently entered, and, it is said, burned Madison Court House.

NORTH CAROLINA.

A flag of truce was sent to Plymouth, but was not received.

Gen. Wessells and his little band of 1,500 fought like heroes for four days and nights, and the rebels admit the loss of 1,700.

A Union or "Buffalo" camp near Windsor was attacked and captured by the 624 Georgia, about the middle of April, and Capt. Hoggard, the commander, killed.

The Fort Jackson, Capt. B. F. Sands, with the Niphon, the Howard, the Sonoma, the Stepping Stone, Wilmington, and destroyed valuable waterworks belonging to the rebel Government.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The suspension of hostilities here has been followed by the withdrawal of troops. Beauregard has proceeded to Virginia, as he did three years ago. He passed through Wilmington on Monday.

The shelling of the city is kept up at intervals, and a broadside given to Fort Sumter.

LOUISIANA.

Our army is at Grand Ecore, fortifying. The large boats are above, but the smaller ones are below. Several of the boats have been hotly attacked by guerrillas on the banks of the river. The Bisckhawk had quite an adventure with them.

Gen. Steele is said to have captured Shreveport, and Banks has advanced on the 22d to meet the enemy.

Gen. Stone has been superseded by Gen. Dwight. A small Union force had gone up the Washita River, and a cavalry action had taken place there on the north bank of Red river, near Alexandria, by Gen. Grover.

The rebels, under Jumel, have made a raid on Plaquemine, destroying a large stock of cotton.

TENNESSEE.

Our pickets near Nickajack gap were attacked on the 23d and five killed, seven wounded and 15 taken by the rebels.

ARKANSAS.

Gen. Thayer joined Gen. Steele at Elkin's ferry, on the Little Missouri river, where the rebels were driven from their breastworks. The enemy then made a stand at Prairie de Anne, fortified by rifle-pits and epaulements, but Steele flanked their position, and Price retreated towards Washington. Steele then dashed on Camden, which Price endeavored in vain to reach before him. From Camden Steele moved on Shreveport.

MISSISSIPPI.

Forrest is retreating towards Alabama, followed by Gen. Grierson, who had a fight with him on the 21st near Hudsonville, Miss., and captured a number of prisoners, wagons, horses and mules.

KANSAS.

Quantrell is reported to have crossed the Arkansas and Verdigris rivers, on his way to Kansas. Gen. Blunt has been ordered to Kansas for service.

MISSOURI.

A detachment of Rogers's Union troops at Charleston had a fight with guerillas, on the 19th and 20th inst., in which they killed 12 of them. Six more were killed by the State Militia.

KENTUCKY.

A detachment of the 45th Kentucky, under Capt. Adams, attacked the rebels in Brent Hill county, killing and capturing 20; he then pursued Everett's command, whom he also defeated, killing two officers and taking seven.

FLORIDA.

A party of refugees ascended Wetappoe river some 20 miles to White bluffs, and destroyed 2,000 bushels of salt. They captured a valuable barge. Some of the crew of the Restless destroyed another Government saltwork on East bay.

NAVAL.

Commander Fox, of the Potomac flotilla, recently ran up the Rappahannock and destroyed two ferries, seven large lighters, three pontoon boats, 22 large skiffs, white oak ready to build a sloop of war, 22 large boats.

The blockade-runner Mary Sorley, from Galveston, was captured off the 12th of April.

The rebels continue their torpedo attacks. The Wabash in Charleston harbor was recently attacked, but escaped.

Admiral Dahlgren has gone back to the command of Charleston harbor.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 26th of April, a bill providing that no soldier shall be retired until the age of 62, and whose name shall not have been borne upon the navy register 45 years after the age of 16, was referred to the Naval Committee. The rest of the proceedings were unimportant and preliminary.

On the 27th, the consideration of the Tax bill was resumed in Committee of the Whole. An amendment that incomes derived from the interest of notes, bonds or coupons issued by the United States shall be included in the estimate of incomes was adopted. An amendment, that persons with incomes exceeding $600 and not more than $10,000, a tax of 5 per cent. shall be imposed; on incomes of $10,000 and not exceeding $50,000, of 7½ per cent. shall be imposed; and on incomes of over $35,000, a tax of 10 per centum shall be imposed, agreed to by a vote of 29 against 35. A proposition to tax the salaries of Members of Congress 10 per cent. was voted down by a large majority. The evening session a number of bills giving away a large quantity of the public lands for Western railroads and other purposes were passed.

In the Senate, on the 27th, the National Currency bill was taken up and debated at length, but no conclusion was reached. Several bills of commercial interest were passed, and petitions presented from the wives, widows, mothers and sisters of soldiers, praying for an increase of the soldier's pay.

In the House, the Tax bill was taken up and considered vigorously, progress being made to the 19th section. The joint resolution from the Senate appropriating $35,000 000 for the expenses of the 100 day troops was passed.

In the Senate, on the 28th, after the transaction of some unimportant business, Mr. Fessenden reported from the Finance Committee, increasing the duties on foreign imports temporarily 50 per cent., with an amendment making the internal revenue, and all stamping goods in bond and in transit. A spirited debate followed the consideration of this amendment, and after considerable manœuvering the House bill was finally passed over the President's veto by a vote of 30 to 8, whereupon the Senate adjourned.

In the House, the Internal Revenue bill occupied the larger part of the day. A spirited debate ensued upon a motion to tax the circulation of all other than National Banks 1 per cent. per month, but the amendment was finally adopted by the close vote of 74 to 73. An amendment proposed by Mr. Fernando Wood repealing the act of March last, which gives to a tax upon income on hand, and Mr. Washburne moved, as a substitute, to tax dormant income. This amendment was adopted by 76 to 65.

In the Senate, on the 29th inst., Mr. Sumner presented a joint resolution authorizing every road operated by steam to construct a postal car, and requiring to carry the mails at such compensation as the Government may deem just. A long disagreement on the Montana question came up, and was discussed at length, finally going over to the next day.

The House sessions, both day and evening, where principally occupied with the Tax bill, and considerable progress was made.

In the Senate, on the 30th of April, Mr. Sumner offered a resolution requesting the President to communicate to the Senate the opinion of Attorney-General as to the right of the Government to seize, in the and elsewhere, but Mr. Powell objected, and the matter was laid over.

In the House, a resolution for a Special Committee to investigate the contracts made by the Treasury Department was accepted, and Messrs. Garfield, Winslow, Harding, Pendleton, Brooks, Spaulding, and Brodhead-stewart, Dawson and Steele, Opposition, were appointed said Committee. Some progress in the consideration bill was then taken up, the question being on agreeing to the Senate's amendment thereto. The amendment placing covered troops on an equality, as regards pay, rations and clothing, with the regular army, created a long and lively discussion, but finally the amendment was adopted by a vote of 81 against 69.

FOREIGN NEWS.

MAXIMILIAN accepted the crown from the Mexican deputation at Miramar on the 10th of April. The formality was conducted with great pomp. The new Emperor made a speech in reply to the deputation, stating that he was convinced that the throne was voted by a great majority of the Mexican people. After this he was addressed as Emperor and the Archduchess as Empress. The Mexican flag was hoisted at the castle of Miramar and saluted with 21 guns. The Emperor commissioned ministers to the courts of Rome, Vienna and Paris, and made quite a number of appointments for his staff and household. On the 21st near Hudsonville, Miss., and captured a 11th of April Maximilian was seized with a low fever, so that his departure was again delayed. It was thought he would set out on the 16th instant for Rome, where he goes to receive the benediction of the Pope, of which he, as he states himself, stands in great need. The Archbishop, his wife, after some very difficult negotiation in Vienna, and after renouncing her right to the throne of Austria and her income from the State, brought the Archduke Francis Joseph to Miramar to sign the great Imperial State paper of Mexico.

Duppel was still besieged and vigorously bombarded by the Germans. Its fortified works were almost silenced, but still the garrison defended the ruins with vigor. The Danes made a vigorous sortie on the Prussians, but were repulsed. The Armistice had not yet assembled in London. The English House of Commons expressed some doubts of the prudence of permitting the English Delegate to the Conference to pledge the nation to any strict course of policy on the Dane-German question without the consent of the Parliament.

Garibaldi had entered London. He had a popular reception of the most enthusiastic description. The crowd in the streets was about equal to that which received the Princess of Wales. Mr. Mazzini was endorsed by the working men in their address to Garibaldi. The General had private audiences with Lord Palmerston and Earl Russell. He was afterwards entertained at a banquet given by the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland. The city Corporation have been to continue some days.

Lord Cowley had gone on a private mission to Paris. It is said that he was to endeavor to allay an "irritation" which had sprung up in Napoleon's mind towards England since the Mirandola affair.

Twelve vessels, from Matamoras, Nassau and Bermuda, laden for the most part with cotton from the rebel States, reached Liverpool in two days.

The City of New York remained fast on Daunt's rock.

TOWN GOSSIP.

About May Time.

"Pity the sorrows of a poor"—landlordridden city.

In no other part of this wealth-bestridden land does such a disagreeable custom exist as that of making all renting and leasing terminate on a certain day and that day the most uncertain of the year. To New York city alone belongs the inhuman edict that could only have been derived from the King of Dahomey, whereby the household opportunities and goods of mankind through the streets upon a set day, and inviting all the world to look upon his poverty or his wealth. We say, therefore, doing the modern municipal monarch injustice in attributing to him so disgusting a fashion, when we remember that it is essentially "custom," as it is called, or holiday of "Parading the King's Wealth," is confined to his own property, which, in the month of May, is turned into the palace and borne by an army of his slaves through the streets of the city of his property, and there exposed to his old quarters. In this "custom" the King merely parades his household utensils, but, wiser than barbarian whites, does not attempt to change their place of deposit. His civilization extends further than that of New York, a solitary exception to the human spin his loving subjects a following of his "custom."

While in the country the day is ushered in

With bud and bee and flowers and hours,
And birds in gladsome singing;
With locks of steam and sweet dreams,
And winds their perfumes flinging;
With inviting eyes and liquor blue,
Through field and homestead ringing,
To talking up the life's first page
In mesmeried beauty bringing.

In the city, as though intended to illustrate the old saying that "man made the country and man made the town, it comes:

With smash and crash, and tearing dash
Our household goods are flying,
And dryman's screams, the music seems
Of mourning and of crying.
With careworn face and hurrying pace
Each Jack and Jill are bringing,
His weary limbs, wherever built whims
Of landlords and their kinsfolk.

The country rises in ruin, so utterly at variance with the small rise in the value of labor, how this year opens an immense per centage of New Yorkers to a change of domicile. Those who have been accustomed to pay $12 per month for rooms, themselves charged $20, and have, consequently, sought here some portable quarters, find that they can rent the old price for a somewhat poorer flat. The same rule applies all the way up in the scale, and all classes suffer alike. There is one thing in connection with the present state of affairs we never fail to wonder, and that is why capitalists do not extend to the city, while by so doing, enormous building on a large scale, and other inducements in men of small means and mechanics to live in Country Houses.

To show how this could be done, let us enter upon a financial estimate.

Within half an hour's travel of the city by rail and steamboat upon Long Island, the Passaic river, the Hudson, the East river, and a number of other places, there is plenty of good ground that can be bought for $200 an acre. We'll say to put this handy cut into acre or half acre plots, the first with a house costing $1,000, and including all the modern fixings, with one of $750 and four rooms, and rented to artisans! We say practically we say so, that these houses can be contracted for and well finished for that price, and allowing a fair 10 per centum, rented for 10 per cent. on the entire cost, which would be $200 and $100. We know the working of such a plan to perfection it must have the co-operation of the railroads and steamboats, and that they would have a liberal rate of commutation and swift time to make it possible. But the benefits would be mutual. The people, and be at his city arbor as the cultivator, it will eventually succeed. Let a thousand houses of this class be done by an outlay of $35 per annum to the family or tenant, and the money consumed in paying the rural home will not be longer for the clerk and workingman than now in Jenkins' Row, Cliff Hall Row, Sixth street, time that in the cars or on the boats can be employed in reading or resting, or playing games or something else.

This is no dreamer's scheme, but only wants the action of a few persons to be carried into reality.

What is wanted is a Peabody and a Stuyvesant, or our Lenox, Astor, Ely, Blunts, and all the rich merchant princes, thus out of pocket, to erect over populated and increasing more city—to stamp the infamous tenant-house system, in which property we feel sure that none but Shylocks and money grinders ever invest.

Posthumous Record of the Fair.

With the young days of the sun on the third week of its existence the sanitary Fair went out, and the glories of its career ended. Failure became among the things that were. Delight effort was made to keep the Union Square Department open for a few days at a tax of 50 cents per head for those who same, but the attempt was a failure, and scarce 100 visitors visited the "banquet hall deserted." On that day, that time sanitions have been the order of the day, and the goods have gone at fascinating prices, much to the chagrin of the Jews.

Since the sober second thought has set in, or for the grand scheme, our business men and shopkeepers are coming up the coast, and the epidemic is generally arrested so that the great Fair has been a financial success, and the commercial interests of the city of Boston have largely gained. Over a million and a quarter of money been raised and preserved to the Sanitary Commission, by the agency of the Fair. No doubt this may be true, but the cost of the interest to the city is not calculated, but there where would then be all the fun, dissipation, matrimony, misery, slaughter, misery and general happiness created by it.

The Last Come Down

is that of Broadway stages, a triumph of the public in which we believe they really rejoiced. The attempt of the drivers' fares of omnibus to raise their fare to 10 cents—even though it may have been warranted by increased rates of labor and produce—has failed in the most signal rebuke that has ever been administered to any public wrong within our recollection. The public have contented themselves with letting the charge, and have taken to locomotion and decreased overcrowding of the cars. The result has been that a Broadway stage became solitude personified, and the fact of an individual hailing one of them almost terrified the deserted John out of his wits, and proclaimed the hailer a countryman just arrived, or a citizen who rode once a year, did not read the papers, and dared the expense.

The Events of the Week, in a dramatic way, are, firstly, the debut of Miss Jane Coombs, at Wallack's, as Lydia Thorpe, in which she made a pleasant impression, though somewhat leaking the life and vigor that should be put into the part by a wife of the old Sir Peter.

Secondly, the production, by Avonia Jones, at the Winter Garden, of a new drama, entitled "The Sorceress" the history of which is that of a mother, Lady Janet, the sorceress, having had her son stolen in infancy, and that the secret of the mystery is only known only to Miron, the King's physician, who refuses to reveal the secret. Attempting to wring the hereoit on Miron, she plots a fearful death for the unconscious Prince Edward, but discovers that the young man is her son time enough to save him.

Thirdly, the production of the hands of the assassin, and secondly, by rescue from an insanction, in which the assassin saves her own life. The piece is sensitively sensational, and brings down the house. The coming week is devoted to Edwin Booth at the house, where he opens in "Hamlet."

The Olympic is running "Loyalina" on its fourth week.

Barnum announces the last week of "Cuelo's Cave," and a magnificent spectacular drama to follow.

Wood's has no more opera, perhaps, not until fall, in consequence of Maretzek's rebellion against the extravagance of the chorus, who, not content with all the profit, want a bonus extra.

Another Sensation

for sightseers during the week has been the doings of the Davenport Brothers, at the Cooper Institute. These savages must have an outraged sense of common sense, and quiet outrages of probability and judgment, that we are forced to confess to a feeling of indignation not belief in anything. The manner in which they—or he by proxy—is released from the cords and manacles legs from the strongest binding, done by such eminent binders as Jaggers Wesley, who has bound over a good many Jersey men, is somewhat amazing. What they do is indescribable, and will sound like a catching when described; but so far has puzzled all the wisdom and acumen of the police force, and defied even a Houdini. We shall wait in patient hope for the debut of Simmons, who makes his first appearance in New York, the New Broadway Theatre, Wallack's old house, which has been entirely remodeled by Mr. Geo. Wood, late of Wood's, and who promises the public that he will do the same thing as the Davenports, and expose the trick. Do hurry up, Simmons!

BOOK NOTICES.

LIFE OF EDWARD LIVINGSTON. By CHARLES HAYNES FOSTER. With an Introduction by GEORGE BANCROFT. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1864. 8vo., 468pp.

We are in the new era of good books, well printed on good paper, with liberal margins. This "Life" is a very interesting, complete, and in a racy, interesting, comprehensive life of a truly great man, who, though as much appreciated in Europe as in his own country, has not been appreciated by them in his own country. We gladly find for this field, will do much to make Americans at our day acquainted with the immense learning, practical sense, sound judgment and sterling patriotism of the great legist, Edward Livingston.

PLASTER OF PARIS FOR PAINT.—A writer in the Reports of Rural Affairs recommends the use of plaster of ground gypsum, instead of white lead, to mix with oil for paint for outside work. If, as he says, it is equally as fast, more durable than white lead or zinc white, it deserves to be widely known, as the plaster is very cheap and easily obtained. Two equal parts of the plaster and white lead with oil enough to make the consistence of cream, are to be put it through a paint mill. This will have a good body and be very extensible. For inside work, as in dwellings, the plaster and oil are a good purpose, as it is harmless, and when rain water is colored by cisterns, it will be found to be purer than when it comes in contact with lead. Plaster is generally found ground very coarse, and it should therefore be run through a paint mill before it is used.

—Dr. Riggs, of Mitchell, Lawrence county, Ind., sold a mare six months ago, about twenty years old, who, being admitted to a private room, locked the door, and proceeded to weep, told him they had a warrant issued against him for having counterfeit money, but if he would give them $1,000 they would release him. He gave them $900 in cash and a note for the remainder, at sixty days. By virtue of his note the action was taken until a few days since, when one of the men returned to settle the note, when he was arrested and made to give bail in $1,500, to appear at the Circuit Court. The trial over, the mare was was at U. S. detective, showed a warrant to arrest Dr. B., and the mare and him to Indianapolis for trial.

—A few years ago a physician of Georgetown, West Indies, examined the body of a dead trash, or the fibrous residue of the canes, and found it to be a mummy, untinct to rot, and was cried up like a mummy. He did not at the time proclaim his discovery, but immediately instituted experiments with dead animals, which completely confirmed his observations. The convinced first by the preservation of fresh meat, and finally by placing the wards and the supply cane-trash to be placed in the wards and the supply to be removed at intervals. In a short time the atmosphere of the hospital was purified, the contagion entirely ceased.

If a man has nothing to say, he is sure to take much time and use many words in saying it.

JESSAMINE LEAVES.

SPRING in absolute earnest at last. Blue skies, balmy breezes and open windows; strawberries if you like to pay 50 cents a dozen for them, and other delicacies intended evidently either for Lilliputian appetites or bewildering ones. Bonnets—sparkling bonnets, with a spring in them—bonnets which should be called Excelsior! The millinery interests of the city of New York were last year, but the lace and roses and Arthur grass, and indescribable ornamentation of bonnets, and the bewildering tall sprouts certain an altitude calculated to strike the beholder with amazement, I have remarked them in church—don't groan and say "shocking"! I was attending to the words of the Rev. Creamcheese—but ours is a fashionable church, and as I looked down the aisle, I couldn't see anything but my neighbors' bonnets. I dodged one way, and was met by a nodding by a maize-colored plume; another, and blue silk cap crowns baffled me. I stretched my neck, but that was useless, I saw no plaster; so I gave up the effort in despair, and naturally forgot theology in millinery.

A Man of Wax.

Flowers and fruit are very popular in wax, and we presume massive members of society of tender years adding wax beauties who turn about and wheel about in the fashionable promenade. Wax widows who simpper behind "grief-bordered" kerchiefs in mourning coaches, and wax heroes of from men of wax! Whoever conceived the idea of moulding the counterfeit presentment of a military hero, forthright, with his martial bearing, pattin' on his head a little wig, dressing him in uniform, hanging by his side a real sword, and putting him in a showcase in our fair! So he sold for $150 or so. There is something awful in it. We are told that the great Napoleon had a wax effigy made. The poor young soldier has gone where it is impossible for him to redress his wrongs, and there is no fear he would be anxious to tear down this monstrously pretty likeness as s/he was to uproot the rebel flag. If it were a good likeness, and the hero a live man gentleman could, if he pleased, take the presentation sword—a beautiful gold one, I presume, and run some one's bowels liv vains on the Fair. But a dead hero is helpless, and Ellsworth in wax is sufficient to make a woman faint. Poor Ellsworth! He is a hero, let ladies innocently and horribly perpetuate me in wax!

Two Cent Pieces.

Congress is considering the propriety of giving us two cent pieces. The description is glowing. "They are composed of bronze, and are intended to supply the dispatch; "on one side is a wheat-wreath; on the other, the words, 'two cents.'"

Do not feel elated, however; we don't believe any brilliant dream on the subject will be realized. Government cannot afford to confer such an mysterious days that is not disgusting, that has not from the bow's pocket and pocketbook. Nickel cents were charming, and the plague-wagging people could not resist the fact that we gave them the "gold-resembling" twopenny pieces will cap the climax of the "cents" by issuing "two cents" in "two bricks," white pebbles or tenpenny nails before long, unless Peace makes her appearance on the stage. Then we shall smash in one land and a bag of gold and silver in the other.

The Crisis.

People who are wise in such matters predict an early bull market, when everything will be blown to atoms. Everybody will be bankrupt. Every body will be ruined. Every man will be up to the snuff of a candle. Millionaires will retire to bark attics, and make brooms for a living. Actors and actresses will be reduced to the necessity of vending pins and shoestrings in baskets from door to door. Persons now earning $5 a day will scrape a living over the world with hurdygurdies and hand-organs, receiving pennies to go away; and thousands will pull be glad of bread and cheese and cast-off calicoes. At first we were alarmed, but on calm consideration we remember such things, and are perfectly sure that, we can remember anything, and are perfectly sure that, even during the worst crisis, everybody had as much to eat and to wear as they could. Nevertheless consequently we do not believe in the approach of famine and rags, and expect that there will remain a good deal of splendor for years to come, and that jewellery will glitter, and palatial residences will continue to grow, even in the midst of the hardest times.

Broadway Policemen.

Broadway policemen are not impartial; we regret to say it, but it is so. Of course no one can be stands like the statue of Napoleon, on a corner, conscious of the fact that unenlightened and unsympathetic "Paddies" he knows that well enough, but it is a matter of no importance to him. A carriage is stopped, and only the middle of the road, and recedes back with majestic scorn from the fact of sundry impatient ladies and gentlemen behind it. Then a cry of old women seem to want to get run over; why can't you look out, old tabby?

Proceeding to his corner and the Napoleon attitude, he waits again until a bevy of maids and matrons shall wish to cross the corner. He sees them critically; very respectable, good sort of folks out shopping or paying calls, and he condescends to the girl with the curls; rather bewitching.

This decides him. He forsakes the Napoleon attitude, and with the gallantry of a Chesterfield, crosses the street—advances to the girl with curls—clutches her by the arm, and, with a "Come along, miss, you now"—and escorts the trembling bevy to the other side, leading them into rather more than a trot, and the girl with the curls; rather bewitching.

Again, after a parting nip of the young lady's arm, the policeman resumes himself in his Napoleon attitude, and behold a matron—portly and tall—competent to subdue any number of horses and omnibus drivers—grim and obstinate, and strong-minded. She will be taken care of—not that she needs protection, but on principle—the officer must do his duty—and he does it, fiercely. Now he drags her through the mud—on the double quick—charging on vehicles as that they retreat in turn.

Ah! it is grand—we don't know who will be Commander-in-Chief of the Union army by the time this appears, but whoever it is couldn't do it better. The strong-minded lady clutches the nearest lamp-post and gasps for want of breath.

But behold! Somebody—something—in a tight lace and bugles—in sky-blue silk, with as silk can be —with lace and velvet tacked on everywhere—with a scarlet scarf tied under one ear—with gloves of canary color—with a parasol—a jockey hat and sweeping plume—and dotted veil and rose-tinted cheeks—treading on the heels of the man, which (since purchased at the hairdresser's) will escape—and with a parasol, with tartan silk—and scarce here—she passes—but a moment—he of the brass buttons flies to her rescue—he embraces her with one arm—he bears her from the fray—he presuming dirties—he kicks an infant sweep importuning for a penny—and deposits her safely on the pavement—safely on the sidewalk and turns to gaze after her while aunt Jemimas and grandma Smiths vainly beseech his attention—and cannot win favor in his sight. Yes, policemen are partial, there's no denying that.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK

Domestic.—The proceeding instituted by Judge Barnard against Mayor Opdyke for "contempt" was brought to a close on the 28th ult., by the Mayor's counsel declining to answer further interrogatories about his editorship and proprietorship of the Tribune, on the ground that it was not the jurisdiction of the Court. Subsequently the same question was put to Mr. Greeley, who, as the responsible editor of the Tribune, declared his willingness to take the consequence of whatever contempt had been shown in the case. Judge Barnard, on the 30th ult., decided that the ends of the proceedings was to correct the growing evil of libels upon individuals, and was by no means satisfied with which they differed in politics, expressing himself willing to punish the Mayor for his refusal to his interrogatories, and ordered him to be discharged.

Tailors working on custom work are liable to pay the tax of three per cent. on their earnings, by a decision lately given in the United States District Court. The decision in this case is highly important, as the principle covers a number of other occupations where the labor is performed on and exempt from taxation.

The net proceeds of the Cincinnati Sanitary Fair are officially stated at $334,850.

—Shirt collars of linen, cotton, paper and steel, are now manufactured, and we now to be added shirt collars made from vulcanized India rubber, which will be cheaper than linen, cotton or paper.

It is rumored in Washington that Postmaster-General Blair will be made Secretary of War, Mr. Watson, a radical Republican clerk in his department, to be placed at the head of the Post-office, and not Mr. Chase's friends.

The Rev. Dr. Todd, in a communication to Congress, states that Gen. Blair is a Major-General in the service of the United States, and on active duty, and standing with Gen. Blair and Gen. Schenck, last fall. Gen. Blair's rank and their places in the army by taking their seats in Congress.

—The Pennsylvania Convention assembled last week in Harrisburg, and elected Simon Cameron and a strong Lincoln delegation to the Baltimore Convention. A resolution was adopted in favor against the adjournment of the Convention and in favor of the immediate nomination.

—The stage fares on certain city routes were reduced to five cents on the 2d inst. The fare was also reduced to the former rate of six cents on Monday, May 2, 3, 4, and 5, when empty stages is not a paying business, as the proprietors have found out. The Fifteen of Jackson's colored regiments, with their entire suites be appointed to inquire into the expediency of giving them a chance to show their fighting propensities in omnibusses or coaches in this city. Thus looks like retaliation.

The school district of Moscow, Wisconsin, containing 31 districts, with a levy half of them under 15 years of age, has sent 26 men to the war, some of whom will be reduced to the necessity of a second a good deal of land will have to go uncultivated.

—The fifty-seventh census of New York vet. eran regiments were deposited in the Bureau of Military Statistics, in the Capitol, on the 29th, 30th, 31th, 13th, 16th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 20th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, 31st, 32d, 33d, 34th, 35th, 51st, 66th, 76th, 77th, 80th, 81st, 85th, 87th, 104th, 130th, 165th, 177th, 74 Artillery, 7th Battery N. Y. V., 11th Battery N. Y. V.

—The annual meeting of the Religious Society of Friends was held in the city of New York, Wednesday, near Hammonton, Chester county, Pa., on Thursday, June 2nd instead of the 1st of June. The meeting will probably continue for three days.

—Mayor Henry, of Philadelphia, has ordered the staging of the State House bell on every fire to be discontinued. The bell is connected with every telegraph only and the new method is said to answer exactly well.

The police of Portland, Maine, have been very active in recovering from several much property stolen from the vaults of the Bohemian. Among other goods was a large stock of jewellery, which was found in a house in one cave, hence, forward to be called Jewellery Cave. Most of it was supplied by the Jews.

Western.—There is considerable uneasiness in Missouri, in consequence of the coming campaign —several of the leading editors evidently having had their "fingers burnt" in the fiery furnace of treason events in the South-West. One says: "We have lost all faith in the Democratic party of a Government which leaves Kentucky at the mercy of a rebel raider with impunity."

Southern.—The prices in Georgia and Alabama are—gold, $30 for $1; corn meal, $5 per bushel; flour, $100 per barrel; bacon, $5 per pound; rice, $1 per quart; flour, $100 per barrel; coffee, $25 per pound; tea, $100 per pound; and every thing else in proportion. If the purchaser has a note of either of these articles he is a rich man. Gold watches, silver knives, forks, spoons, cups of all kinds, are not to be had.

—The Richmond Whig has a jubilant over the recent disasters to our arms in Florida, Red river and North Carolina. The editor of that paper evidently begins to infer that the rebel leaders have received upon some defeat which they will not recall, will bring on a decisive campaign. Their journals make many allusions to the "great battle coming," since the 20th inst., implying that they have been busy in building ramsand gunboats. The recent proclamation of Governor Vance indicates considerable countenance.

Military.—Adjt.-Gen. Schouler, of Massachusetts, reports that the State has furnished 49,625 three years' volunteers; 17,764 nine months' men; 1,031 two years' men, since the 15th April, 1861, to the war. Total, 91,976.

—Surgeon-Gen. Calvin Webster, sentenced to 10 years imprisonment for enticing slaves from Kentucky, and who had served 12 years of the time, has been pardoned by Lieut.-Gov. Jacobs.

Mrs. Gen. Fremont is at the Revere House, Boston. She is on a visit, with her children, to her many friends in that vicinity.

—King Victor Emanuel, who is a great friend of the stage, has received 30 stags from California. They cost, voyage and all, little less than fifty a-piece.

—Gen. Halleck is said to be an applicant for Chief of the Engineer Bureau, made vacant by the death of Gen. Totten.

The golden wedding of Mr. Joel and Mrs Abigail Converse, of Lyme, Conn., was celebrated on Monday, April 11, in the presence of a large array of relatives and friends. Many elegant and valuable presents were bestowed upon the venerable people, and the occasion was a very happy one.

Obituary.—James Hillhouse, the well-known special agent of the Post-Office Department, died at Brooklyn, Conn., on the 30th April, of typhoid fever.

Mr. Edward D. Riley, Chief of Police of Jersey City, died at his residence, in Montgomery street, on the 5th April, of consumption, after an illness of nearly four months. Mr. Riley was a native of Jersey City, and at the age, and was an upright and highly esteemed citizen. In 1861 he was elected a member of the Common Council, in the 3d ward, and for years he was elected to the Legislature; and in the following year was elected Chief of Police, which office he held at the time of his death.

—Commodore William D. Porter died on Sunday last, at his house in New York, aged 70 years. Commodore Porter was a native of the State of Massachusetts, and entered the U. S. Navy, in 1812, as midshipman duty, over 8 years shore duty, and was 30 years unemployed. He was between 60 and 70 years of age at the time of his death. He leaves a wife, who was with him at the time of his death, and daughter, who is in Richmond, and two sons, who are in the Confederate service.

—Com. Charles W. Flusser, who was recently killed in such a peculiar manner in the fight with the rebel ram Albemarle, was a native of Pittsburg. He was one of the most promising young officers of the navy, possessing the stern accomplishments of high moral character and elegance of manner, he was one of the most popular officers in the service that we ever met with. His gallantry was always conspicuous. He was appointed to the navy from the city of Pittsburg. Ore Perry with him, at the furious bombardment of Fort Sumter, when the rebels opened fire on the fleet. He was Judge Advocate-General on the staff of Gove. Young during the Mexican campaign, and was Clerk of Surrogate of the county and also to the Assembly of 1854, 55, 56. He was also Clerk of the Board of Aldermen in the city of New York. When the war broke out he was commissioned as Lieut.-Col. of the 79th regiment, Excelsior Brigade, which regiment he served with until the Peninsular campaign, shared its earlier hardships, and fought from the first battle of Bull Run until he was captured. He was taken to Richmond, where, and at Salisbury, N. C., he was confined in prison. At Concord, Winona, etc. After an imprisonment of several months he was exchanged, and in 1863 (only seven month after his exchange), he was commissioned Colonel of the 120th regiment, Excelsior Brigade. In October the regiment proceeded to New Orleans. In January, 1864, Col. Flusser resigned his regiment, and in that capacity was actively employed, rendering important services to the Navy Department at Washington, where he was conspicuous in most of the terrible battles during the campaign of 1864. He was present in the fearful slaughter of June 18, and when it was found impossible to take the rebel works by storm, commanded of the 3d battalion, selected to serve as the storming party.

Accidents and Offences.—A married woman, named Lucretia Hall, residing in Troy, N. Y., with a young man and $13,000 in certificates of deposit in the German Savings Bank, has left her husband to be in her name, but belonging to her husband. She is supposed to have gone to Canada.

—A boat containing five persons has been drawn over the upper dam at Little Falls, N. Y., and all drowned. Their names are not given. The upside and not having been found. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Hall, and a young man named McEnery and Carr.

—The Rev. Mr. Sanford, who succeeded in marrying a Palmyra, N. Y., girl, she supposing that he was a Mr. Sawyer, who was already married, and by letter alone, turns out to have had other wives already. It is thought he has given up the military to be civil authorities.

—Two vessels this year have been lost from the Gloucester Sailing fleet, valued at $46,000; 78 men have perished with them, leaving 81 widows and 93 fatherless children.

—Lieut. Burns, who absconded from Louisville with $13,000, was arrested in Canada, and has been arrested at Montreal, C. W.

—Governor Sullan has appointed two Christians members of the Grand Council, and others have been promoted to high offices. The chief Liberal tendency on his part is a mark of progress, which others should imitate.

—The Italian brigade Re Galantcomo, which recently sailed from this port, and which was originally known as a band of organized stealing outfitters, is not lost, as was reported, but has arrived safely at Rio, one of the Azores, where their gruns were thrown overboard during the bad weather which prevailed on the voyage.

Art, Science and Literature.—Mr. Sprague has been appointed by the Governor of Rhode Island and Commissioner of Vienna, recommending the purchase by the Government of the Crystal Palace, and the Superintendent of the Imperial paper mills and printing establishment, and the Director of the Imperial Academies of corn husks and leaves.

—A woman has, for the first time in England, passed a Medical examination. She has applied to the University of London and to the Universities of Edinburgh, and has passed the examinations and Medicine and Midwifery to the College of Physicians. She has studied for five years, and has had to solve refused to allow her to graduate. Her object is to practice Medicine. Have her to complete her qualification to labor in the cure of human ills, and to be examined in Surgery, Chemistry, Botany, and has been examined in anatomy, physiology, chemistry, botany, and has been examined in Surgery, and studied for the prescribes five years—was successful in passing the examination, and has received her degree, and is entitled, when, if proved duly qualified, she will receive her diploma.

Quiz-Chat.—A little daughter of the owner of a coal mine in Pennsylvania was recently asked by a friend how much coal her father represented it to be a large gulf of fire. "Why," she replied, "sometimes he says he can't get coal enough you get the devil to buy coal of you!" He's been trying to get you."

—A Newburyport sugar merchant heard a few days since that sugar had gone up two cents, and telling no one what he was going to do, immediately rushed off and bought the whole stock of another merchant at 21 cents. He was so delighted with the operation that he treated the clerks all round on his return, and then learned that a man in a clever mood had sold bought all his stock at 20 cents while he was away.

THE SHAKESPEAREAN TERCENTENARY—LAYING THE CORNER STONE OF A STATUE OF SHAKESPEARE AT THE CENTRAL PARK, NEW YORK, APRIL 23d.

THE SHAKESPEARE TERCENTENARY.

AMERICA claims Shakespeare as part of the great English-speaking race, and has ever shown her reverence for the memory of the great poet. Yet we may look in vain for any testimonial that gives evidence of this feeling.

The tercentenary of Shakespeare's birth naturally aroused enthusiasm here as well as in England. The erection of a statue in the Central Park was soon suggested, and Saturday, April 23d, witnessed the interesting event of laying the corner-stone of a monument to the memory of Shakespeare.

The Century Club, which initiated the movement, yielded the direction of the affair to Mr. Hackett, the well-known actor.

The weather lent its pleasantest countenance to the scene. The Park wore its heightened and gayest look, and was still more beautiful by the presence of charming women. We noticed, among others, Mrs. Fremont, Mrs. Judge Daly, Mrs. John Wood, Vining, Davenport, Miss Rose Eytinge. The male portion were represented by the Rev. Dr. Osgood, Father Hecker, Judge Daly, Herstatt, the artist, Lant Thompson, the sculptor, to whom rumor points as likely to be selected to execute the statue, the Hon. Henry J. Raymond, C. B. Seymour and Nicholson, of the Press, Stoddard, the poet, Augustus Saln, the author, Managers Wheatley, of Niblo's, Stuart, of Winter Garden, and Grover, of Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Messrs. W. H. Davidge, &c. In the evening benefits were given at Niblo's and Winter Garden for this object, Mr. Wheatley and Mrs. Hackett playing Falstaff and Prince Hal in "Henry IV." at the former, and Mr. Edwin Booth, Miss Jones and Mr. Edwin James playing Romeo and Juliet and Friar Laurence at the latter. The receipts at Niblo's were $1,250, and at the Winter Garden, $1,546, the largest amount ever received on one night at that house.

It is intended to organize similar benefits in every town throughout the country, and doubtless when raised is estimated at $30,000—the cost of the statue in Washington on Union Square. About $4,000 is already raised.

The site of the proposed statue is at the south end of the Park, one of the most attractive and delightful within the limits of the ground's. A space staked off and surrounded with ropes protects the excavations, in which rest an oblong block of granite, bearing the following inscription:

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
April 23, 1864.

At 12 o'clock the ceremony commenced with a performance by the band, after which Mr. A. H. Green read the act of authorization. Judge Daly then delivered an appropriate address, and Mr. Hackett then laid the stone. This closing scene is sketched by our Artist. We trust that before many months it will be our pleasing task to present a view of the inauguration of the statue itself.

RESIDENCE OF EX-GOVERNOR ALEX. MOUTON, VERMILLION BAYOU, LA.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BONWILL.

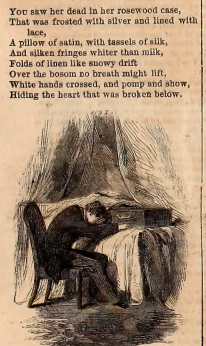
RESIDENCE AND SUGAR MILL

Of Ex-Governor Mouton.

As additional illustrations of the scenes of operations in Louisiana, we give two pleasing sketches of the residence and sugar mill of Ex-Gov Alexander Mouton, of Louisiana, the same we believe who, as the rebel Gen. Mouton, was killed in the recent battle with Gen. Banks. His fine estates are situated on Vermilion Bayou, on a rich and highly-productive tract, one of the richest sugar regions in the South.

A GENTLEMAN went with a friend to the Opera, and arrived before the doors were open. While waiting in the crowd standing behind his friend, he amused himself by picking the pocket of the latter, abstracting therefrom a handkerchief. Hardly had he done so when he was tapped on the shoulder, and on turning round he saw a gentlemanly-looking individual who handed him his own snuff-box, with a polite bow, observing that he never knowingly "operated on a brother professional, and was sorry that he had made such a mistake."

THE WAR IN NORTH CAROLINA—PLYMOUTH.—FROM A SKETCH BY MR. VON GRIEFF.—SEE PAGE 119.



VIEW FROM PATTERSON PARK, ON LOUDENSLAGER'S HILL, BALTIMORE, MD.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, F. H. SCHELL.—SEE PAGE 119.

WHY.

BY JENNIE K. GRIFFITH.

You saw her dead in her rosewood case,
That was frosted with silver and lined with lace,
A pillow of satin, with tassels of silk,
And silken fringes whiter than milk,
Folds of linen like snowy drift
Over the bosom no breath might lift,
White hands crossed, and pomp and show,
Hiding the heart that was broken below.

Had I but known that the little hands
Held fateful dower of gold and lands,
I could have worshipped and walked aside,
Content in loving, my love to hide—
For their palms had touched me, and ever-more
Life would have brimmed with the extacy o'er,
As the Nile's love-valleys, caressed from sleep,
With tropical fervors the memory keep.

As star answers star in the twilight of earth,
So a love in her bosom like my love had birth.
I kneel to recall it, the love of that girl—
For the gift was an ominous, sad sea-pearl;
All of the wealth of her womanly soul,
Of her tenderness all, of her life the whole;
For how could they give her to such as I?
So my darling is dead, and that is why.

ENIGMAS.

By Miss L. M. Alcott.

I BOUGHT my roll that day of the quiet woman who kept the bakeshop near my poor lodging. I liked her ways; she always folded my purchase in a tidy paper, received my three cents with a little bow and a softly-spoken "Thank you," which dignified the paltry transaction and cost my pride no pang. At the corner I paused to decide where I should dine. A simple process, one would fancy, for the bread composed my meal. But, not being a Franklin, I objected to consuming the roll in public, and had two free dining-rooms to choose from—the Park in fine weather, a certain reading-room in stormy. A drop of rain decided me, and I strolled leisurely away to the latter refuge, for hunger had not yet reached its unendurable stage.

The room was deserted by all occupants but the librarian and one old gentleman, consulting a file of foreign newspapers. I slipped into an alcove devoured my dinner behind a book, and then fell to brooding moodily over the desperate state of my finances and prospects, the first consisting of a single dollar, the last of slow starvation or manual labor, if I could bring myself to it. An abrupt exclamation from the old gentleman roused me, for it had a hopeful sound.

"Page, who copied this? I'd like to secure such a penman."

"Don't know, I'm sure, sir," responded Page. "Among so many clerks it's impossible to tell. I'll inquire if you like."

"No; I couldn't have him, if you did. But if you happen to hear of any good copyist who, for a moderate sum, would do a job for me, let me know, Page."

"I will, sir."

The old gentleman put down the list of newly-arrived books which he had been examining, and drew on his gloves. As he approached my alcove a sudden impulse prompted me to step out and address him.

"Pardon me, sir, but necessarily overhearing your request, I venture to offer myself for trial."

"Have you any references or recommendations to offer, eh?" asked the old gentleman, pausing.

I had an excellent one which I had vainly offered to many persons for the last month. He read the very flattering letter from a well-known scholar whom I had served as secretary for a year, and seemed inclined to try me.

"Hum—quite correct—very satisfactory. Give me a sample of your writing; here's pen and paper."

I obeyed, and laying a sheet of paper upon the open book I had been reading, dashed off my signature in several different styles.

"Very good; the plainest suits me best. What's this? So you understand Italian, do you?"

"Yes, sir; perfectly, I believe."

The old gentleman meditated, and while doing so scanned my face with a pair of keen eyes, in which I could discover nothing but curiosity. I gratified it by saying briefly:

"Mine is the old story, sir. I am a gentleman's son, poor, proud and friendless now, in want of employment, and ready to do anything for my daily bread."

"Anything, young man?" asked the old gentleman, almost startling me with the energy of his emphasis on that first word.

"Anything but crime, sir. I am in a strait where one does not hesitate long between almost any humiliation and absolute want."

I spoke as forcibly as he had done; it seemed to please him, for the stony immobility of his face relaxed, and a curious expression of satisfaction crept over it.

"Come to me to-morrow at ten. There is my address."

And, thrusting a card into my hand, the old gentleman walked away.

